NEW FILM JABS REICH JEW BIAS

By ELVIRA T. MARQUIS

East Berlin, July 9.

Free West Berlin has recently had its annual Film Festival, always something of a thorn in the flesh of Red-controlled East Berlin, where the efforts to counteract continue each summer. This time the so-called East Berlin Club, whose membership includes screen actors and technicians, set up various come-ons. Included were the screening of eight films shot at the DEFA studio.

The atmosphere at the various gatherings remained amicable and cordial, despite some of the taunting remarks and prying, vexatious questions posed by Western visitors, and occasional propaganda barbs coming from the hosts. Harry Hindemith, club president, and Albert Wilkening, managing director of the DEFA studios, supplied data, although not all their answers were conclusive and complete.

It was stated that East Berlin like other satellites has swerved from former emphasis on party line. New goal is "entertainment" instead. Indeed DEFA is filming its first musical comedy right now, a color production to cost two million East Marks. Its present title is "Meine Frau macht Musik" (My wife makes music). From this film visitors saw rushes of the Brazillian Ballet (engaged for the picture during its recent European tour), some popular, not ineffective song numbers, and several scenes spiced with wit and jargon, reminiscent of the everyday dialogue of the Berliner of pre-Hitler days.

Of the eight released pictures unreeled for guests, "Incident in Benderath" aroused perhaps the widest interest. Its plot coincides with the increasing cases of anti-Semitism reported in the West German Press in past months. This feature will be shown during the Edinburgh Festival later this summer—is based on Curt Corrinth's play, the "Trojaner," which had a marked success throughout Germany from 1927 until 1933 when Hitler forbade its performance.

It's tale of a highschool boy, the only Jewish kid in his class, who is subjected to malicious discrimination by one of his teachers. Boy rebels and demands a public apology from the teacher. His friends stand behind him and are able to effect the dismissal of the teacher from this particular school.

Author's Big Fee

But in the end the story shows that neither the real cause behind the "incident" nor the fear of the Jewish boy and his family have been removed.

The play was adopted for the screen after its 1955-56 legit run in one of the East-Berlin theatres. Curt Corrinth, its author, rewrote the plot to suit it to present day conditions in West Germany. He has kept screenplay more objective than most writers who have supplied the arid East-German playmarket with propaganda serving material.

Corrinth received a 6,000 marks premium after the film was finished. For the screen rights and his work on the scenario, Corrinth got all told 40,000 East German marks, according to his own statement.

During one visit to Babelsberg, DEFA president Albert Wilkening discussed with his guests some of the reasons for the fluctuating production chart at the studio. An exodus of dramatists, film actors and technicians from East Germany after 1947 had left a disastrous lack of talent.

A very exciting co-production possibility between West and East Germany now depends upon approval from Bonn. It concerns the filming of the novel by Thomas Mann, "The Buddenbrooks." A clause in the late author's last will directs the trustees of his estate to sell the film rights to the book only if such co-production can be arranged. If it does, it will be the first of its kind.

The official buyer of foreign films for East Germany, Frau Schlotter, was on hand to explain that she would like to buy more U.S. pictures but finds the rentals asked by most of the American film companies too high for her budget.

She also complained bitterly about "Chaplin's unreasonablness" for "Limelight," Chaplin is asking a million dollars and will discuss no other figure.

He told Communists, so Mrs. Schlotter reported, that he cannot possibly accept a lower price because of his tremendous expenses, which include besides his present wife and family—the support of several ex-wives, and their children and the upkeep of his huge estate in Switzerland. He also mentioned taxes, Frau Schlotter said, and future production plans.

Zurich June Fest Offers Multi-Lingual Panorama of European Legit, Opera

By GEORGE MEZOEFI

Zurich, July 16.

This year's Zurich June Festival at Stadttheatre (opera, ballet), Schauspielhaus (legit) and Tonhalle (concerts), May 31-July 7, offered this Swiss metropolis its most spectacular roundup in many years. It also illustrated again, that though the Swiss themselves have relatively little to offer theatrically their multi-lingual character makes them a warm audience.

This Festival was impressive indeed. It included: seven straight plays in German, French, English and Italian; one Shakespeare recital by Sir John Gielgud; four operas, of which one was a scenic world preem and one a European preem; ten single ballets; four symphony concerts with such artists as Menuhin, Ormandy, Curzon, Schuricht, Klemperer, plus a series of puppet shows and several top-grade art exhibitions among which the first all-out exhibition of Le Corbusier as an architect, painter and sculptor.

Boxoffice ran from good to smash. Financial toppers were: the first scenic performance of Arnold Schoenberg's controversial opera "Moses and Aron" with three advance sellouts which, however, could not prevent a heavy deficit despite municipal subsidies, due to the production's exorbitant staging costs which included hundreds of orchestra and choir rehearsals at Stadttheatre. Also in the winners' category, at the same house, was the European preem of a Japanese opera by Ikuma Dan, "The Twilight Heron," coupled with two ballets, Swiss composer Nico Kaufmann's "Le Prisme" and Bela Bartok's "Miraculous Mandarin."

Schauspielhaus hit the jackpot with two of its own productions, a revival of Schiller's German classic "Don Carlos" and German-language preem of Thornton Wilder's "A Life in the Sun," tagged here "The Alcestiad." Both clicked solidly. Three imports from Paris were strictly SRO: The Theatre National Populaire's productions of Racine's "Phedre" with Maria Casares and Moliere's "L'Etourdi," staged by and starring Daniel Sorano; and Jean-Louis Barrault's one-man drama "Le personnage combattant" by Jean Vauthier.

The initial Swiss appearance of the Sadler's Wells Theatre Ballet at Stadttheatre (six performances) did not live up to expectations coin-wise. Artistically, only one of the two programs presented, including predominantly modern choreographies, was up to this troupe's high reputation.

Two operas with an all-Italian cast, orch and choir, Verdi's "Masked Ball" and Puccini's rarely performed "Gifi of the Golden West," also failed to make the grade—undeservedly so, at least with "Girl" which marked a stunning assemblance of great voices combined with top acting. Soprano Gigliola Farzzoni in the title role rates strong attention. Having appeared at the Milan Scala, the Opera of Rome and Naples' San Carlo, she seems set for a bright future. "Masked Ball," despite good voices, suffered from an incredibly naive and outdated mise-en-scene.

Low-point of the Festival came from London's Theatre Workshop with Joan Littlewood's production of a modernized "Macbeth."

Nervi Ballet Sked

Genoa, July 16.

A varied international program has been set for the third annual Ballet Festival of Nervi, which opens Sat. (20) in the nearby resort town on the Italian Riviera. Site, as in other years, is the Teatro del Parchi, an elaborate alfresco setup which permits spacious stagings.

First on the slate, July 20 and 21, is a program entitled "Homage to the Italian 19th Century," in which Alicia Markowa, Yvette Chauvire, Magrethe Schanne, and Carla Fracci will execute a series of pas de quatres in the style of onetime greats Maria Taglioni, Carlotta Grisis, Lucille Grahn, and Fanny Cerito.

In for two programs, July 24-25, is the Marquis de Cuevas Ballet Company, followed by Luisillo and his Spanish troupe, also for two evenings (July 27-28). Festival winds in three evenings (July 31, Aug. 1-2) by the Paris Opera Ballet under the direction of Serge Lifar.

Mex Craft Unions Hardly Plutocrats —Says Palomino

Mexico City, July 16.

Felipe Palomino, secretary-general of the technical-manual locals within the Picture Workers Union (STPC, in the Spanish abbreviation) throws the calcium light of realism on "real wages" in the film studios of Mexico. It sounds great when all the supposed rights and privileges are listed but the typical studio worker seldom works 35 weeks a year and often for as little as $11.84 a week.

The producers in their propaganda against the current demand are making Mexican craft union members sound like plutocrats, and Palomino's message is "don't you believe it."

Palomino asserted that pay hike and other economic demands his union is making upon producers, in the biennial revision of collective labor pacts, are not excessive. He is doing his utmost to make talks about the pacts "as cordial as possible." He intimated that a strike is unlikely as, practically, producers see the union's viewpoint.

The trade sees the labor situation becoming either (a) more complicated, or (b) less tangled, if Palomino's locals merge with the National Cinematographic Industry Workers Union (STIC).

Spain's Top Stars Bursting Bounds Of the Economy

Madrid, July 16.

Government film authorities are apprehensively aware that mounting salaries now being paid top Spanish stars, directors and technicians may be the beginning of an inflationary surge.

Film industry legislation now has the Sindicato Nacional del Espectaculo guaranteeing that actors' salaries up to 500,000 peseats ($12,000) per film will be paid, but stars like Carmen Sevilla, Jorge Mistral and Francisco Rabal have been getting 1,000,000 pesetas per picture in exclusive pacts with local producers. It's believed that Sarita Montiel has a four-picture deal with Benito Perojo at over 1,500,000 per picture.

Government is worried that fancy payments will unbalance the present official production aid system, now pegged at a maximum pic rebate of 3,000,000 pesetas to producers.

Producers are already pressuring for more money on two fronts; they want the aid maximum increased and are asking the government to subsidize Uniepsana (producer association) in its efforts to sell Spanish film product on the world market.

With continued producer failure to turn out quality pix, there is little evidence the government will yield to latter pressure.

Mrs. Edward J. Wall, wife of Paramount's advertising and publicity director in the Albany and Buffalo districts, is working as group sales representative for Mike Todd's "Around the World in 80 Days," which opens a run at the Ritz July 24.

LONDON'S NEW STUDIO

St. John's Wood Breaks Ice With Roc Starrer

London, July 16.

A new film studio has opened in London. It's known as the St. John's Wood Studios, and its first feature is in production. The picture, being produced by The Film Storytellers, a unit within Film Workshop Ltd., is titled "The House In The Woods," and will be distributed by Archway Film Distributors. It stars Patricia Roc, Ronald Howard and Michael Gough.

The building, erected in the early 1800's as a church, has two stages.

Guild Films Prexy Grabs British Sunday Paper's Secret Agent Series

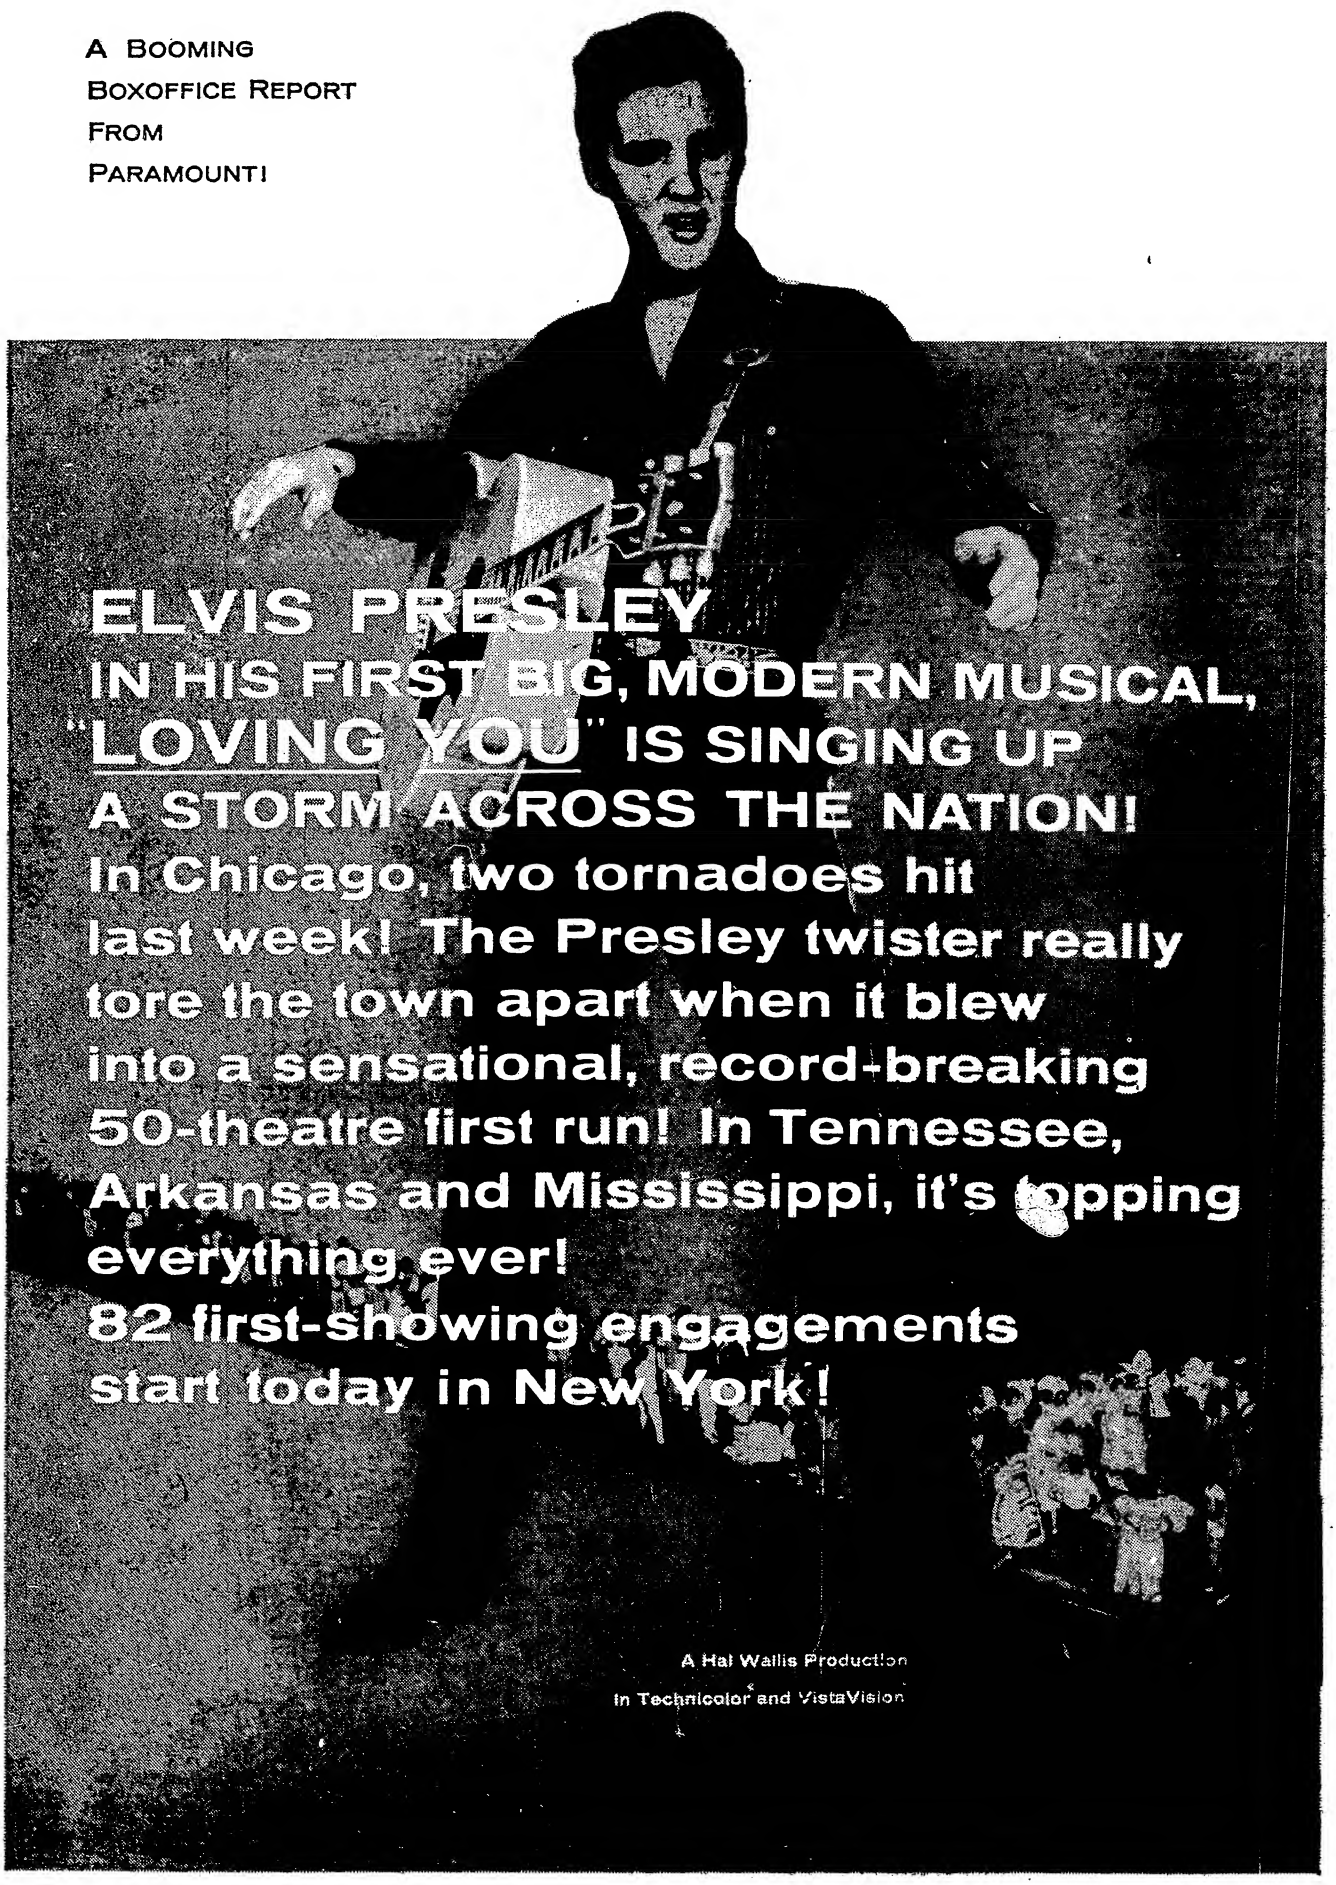
London, July 16.

Ruben Kaufman, Guild Films prexy, was negotiating a production deal in London last week for "Sabotage," a book by Leslie Bell, now being serialized in the Sunday Empire News, and due for publication in the Fall. Kaufman came to London to acquire the property, after reading the first nine chapters in galley proof form.

The book describes the adventures of war-time secret agents who, every day penetrated into enemy territory. Kaufman said last week that he thought the skein would comprise either 39 half-hour features or 26 hour long programs.

Guild Films were willing to take care of financing of the series and would, of course, handle distribution world wide. They were sending over a staff writer to work with Leslie Bell on the treatments and screenplays.

ECONOMY STRIKES



Top Publicists Exit Metro's London Office

London, July 16.

As a result of an economy campaign at Metro's British h.q., there has been a clean sweep of the top brass in their publicity department.

Among the top echelon pinkslipped last week were J. Leslie Williams, their long-time director of publicity and advertising, and Ernest Betts, in charge of press relations. As a result of the reorganization, Ronald A. Lee has been named as publicity department topper.

Goldwyn Vs. California Status Quo of 1950

[MUCH INSIDE STUFF REVEALED]

San Francisco, July 16.

Sam Goldwyn appeared to have scored a major point in the first week of his $1,755,000 antitrust suit against 20th-Fox, National Theatres, Fox West Coast and Fox West Coast Agency Corp.

Arthur B. Dunne, Frisco Fox attorney, had asked Federal Judge Edward P. Murphy, who's trying the seven-year-old suit without a jury, to limit the scope of evidence and testimony to the six Western film exchanges. Judge deferred ruling on Dunne's request immediately, and also on disagreements between Dunne and Goldwyn attorney Joseph Alioto on how far back in time some evidence can go. But at week's end the judge opened the trial to the debatable exhibits and testimony Alioto had introduced earlier and remarked:

"I'm going to try this case if it takes until Christmas."

Evidence Alioto had sought to introduce concerned the complex Fox corporate structure with its five subsidiary circuits, overlapping directorates and territorial pools.

In opening statements the lawyers drew diametrically opposite portraits of Goldwyn. Alioto portrayed his client as a little man trapped by a film production-distribution-exhibition octopus. But Dunne accused Goldwyn of "second guessing," of wanting Judge Murphy "to renegotiate upward transactions with which he was satisfied at the time."

Statements centered on the value of seven films produced by Goldwyn between 1947 and 1950. Alioto said Goldwyn lost a total of $1,513,000 on these "quality" pictures and, interesting enough, listed "the direct cost, not counting studio overhead or maintenance of the New York office" for each film. The figures:

"Best Years of Our Lives"—$2,300,000;
"Secret Life of Walter Mitty"—$2,984,000;
"Bishop's Wife"—$2,995,000;
"Song Is Born"—$2,800,000;
"Enchantment"—$1,392,000;
"Roseanna McCoy"—$1,760,000;
"My Foolish Heart"—$987,000.

The heavy loss Alioto blamed on "the predatory, monopolistic practices in the industry" and insisted the defendants were "prime movers" in these practices.

Pooling Arrangements

The lawyer leaned heavily on 20th-Fox-National pooling arrangements which he said effectively cut out independent exhibitors in a "nationwide conspiracy." He particularly attacked sliding-scale percentage rentals with "everything but the kitchen sink" loaded into theatre overhead, claimed municipalities and labor unions were recruited to "scare off" competition and cited the Skouras brothers' 'income pool" as one reason for the continuation of "collusive collaboration."

Altogether, he said, about 675 theatres were involved directly in the "conspiracy"—about 100 of them were McNeil-Naify houses in Northern California (the McNeil-Naify interests will be tried separately, later, under a ruling handed down by Federal Judge Michael Roche many months ago: treble damages sought by Goldwyn is the same).

But Alioto accused Fox and McNeil-Naify of "buying for a great number of theatres they had no interest in" so as to freeze the territorial "pockets of monopoly."

"An important personality," said the lawyer, was Joe Schenck, who was "a principal figure in the United Artists circuit" and had also been 20th-Fox's board chairman.

Alioto traced "the interlocking arrangements on Michael Naify's side" to the smaller Nasser, Blumenfeld and Mann circuits and on the Fox side said there was "a basic arrangement between Naify and the Skouras brothers and Schenck."

He dwelled at length on the income pool of the Skouras brothers, saying Spyros got 37½% of the total take, the late Charles got 37½% and George got 25%.

Who Got What

Alioto claimed Charles Skouras, Elmer Rhoden, Harold Fitzgerald and F. H. Ricketson arranged purchase of 40 shares of National Theatres stock in 1944 for $565,000, thanks to "a secret letter" they held. Two years later, the lawyer claimed, the four resold the stock to National for a profit of $6,850,000, on which they paid a 25% capital gains tax. The breakdown:

	Shares	1944 Cost	1946 Profit
Charles Skouras	25	$353,125	$4,281,250
Rhoden	6	84,750	1,027,500
Fitzgerald	3	42,375	513,750
Ricketson	6	84,750	1,027,500

Said Alioto:

"A stockholders' suit forced them to disgorge some profits later, but on the basis of waiving salary which was subject to a 90 per cent income tax bracket."

Independent exhibitors were frozen out by a variety of methods, the lawyer claimed, and cited a case where Goldwyn had to hire a dance hall in Reno to get a date. Goldwyn, said Alioto, fought 'the best he could, not very successfully, but he fought anyway," and he had to deal with the defendants because of their power.

Naify's 'Tight Monopoly'

The lawyer claimed Naify's Golden State chain held the "tightest" monopoly in the country and that Federal divorcement orders were "completely frustrated" by such techniques as drawing by lot for films.

"In fact," claimed Alioto, "they're still doing it here on Market Street on Wednesday afternoons—drawing pictures out of Fred Dixon's hat."

(Dixon is Golden State's film buyer.)

To all of this Dunne replied in effect, balderdash.

He declared:

"I think the case boils down to Goldwyn's attitude of being dissatisfied with everything . . . there's no place in the U. S., with one or two minor exceptions, where Goldwyn was paid what he thinks he should have been paid."

Dunne detailed the industry's economics, noted the variability of product quality and boxoffice appeal and claimed his evidence would show "the treatment given Goldwyn pictures was as good or better than other pictures."

Indeed, said Dunne, Goldwyn was "treated better than he was entitled . . . far from being an orphan (he) actually had a close relationship with one of the major distributors; RKO. . . ."

Dunne claimed Alioto's "vilifications and wild generalizations will not fit any particular part of this curious industry. . . . We are dealing with a series of variable . . . the principal problem is to be assured of a steady flow of product. . . . The cost of positive prints is prohibitive to have simultaneous showings throughout the U.S. . . ."

Dunne noted, too, that since 1940 the whole industry had been under close surveillance from both the FBI and Justice Dept., and was "in a sense operating in a fishbowl."

First witness Alioto called was John B. Bertero, Los Angeles counsel for the defendants and also a National-Fox West Coast vice-president.

Through Bertero, Alioto pounded on the point that Fox West Coast lent Naify $230,000 in mid-August, 1947, to enable Naify to buy McNeil's and Eugene Emmick's stock in the United California chain and thus shut out an independent competitor identified only as "the Reynolds offer." Naify had an option on the McNeil-Emmick stock dating back to 1932.

Other Angles

Alioto brought out that Joe Schenck, then UA boss, was a party to the three-day negotiations and got Bertero to testify that Schenck was present because he was "a suitable person (to buy the United California stock for UA) in case we were turned down."

As it turned out, the Justice Dept. rejected Fox West Coast's acquisition of the United California stock six weeks after Fox's loan to Naify had enabled Naify to exercise his option. By then, according to Alioto, the threat of independent competition had been eliminated.

The lawyer then noted that George Skouras eventually became UA chief, succeeding Schenck. But the lawyer sarcastically added that George Skouras "scrupulously" avoided being paid by UA until the Justice Dept. had broken up the Skouras brothers' income pool late in 1950.

Alioto's point, of course, was that, though George Skouras was working for UA, he was being paid by 20th-Fox through the income pool.

Bertero testified "there was a time when we explored 100% purchase of Golden State and T & D Jr. (another Naify interest) circuits" and Alioto introduced 1942 documents showing deal had reached contractual stage. Bertero felt the reason the deal wasn't consummated was "because they couldn't agree on price and couldn't get court approval," to which Alioto amended, "the latter was the real reason, wasn't it?"

When Bertero was asked if buying for the Naify chain was part of Fox West Coast buyer Eddie Zabel's job, Bertero said "that wasn't part of his duties." Whereupon Alioto introduced evidence tending to show that Zabel had, in fact, helped buy for Naify theatres.

(Zabel is now an independent producer.)

Associated with Alioto, legally, are Goldwyn's attorney, George Slaff, and Maxwell Keith. James Mulvey, president of Goldwyn Enterprises, sat in on trial last week, too.

Associated with Dunne are Fred Pride and Bennett Priest, of 20th's New York law firm, the Los Angeles firm of O'Melveny and Meyer, and Theodore Rosenak and Ed Keil, of Frisco.

Goldwyn was not present for opening sessions, but is expected to come in from Hollywood this week to testify.

Booz Report Echoes Sid Kent, 1924

While no decisions have been made on the Booz, Allen & Hamilton recommendations for industry economies, and none are expected for some time, some highly-placed execs this week said they anticipate a substantial segment of distribution will go along with the idea of collective operation of non-selling activities. Shipping and backroom work will be included.

One homeoffice v.p. said there's nothing new about the idea—"I remember Sidney Kent suggesting it in 1924; that shows how long it is before the patient takes the cure." But the Booz report is the kind that provokes action because it deals in specific dollars and cents, outlining exact amounts that can be saved, how and where, according to the exec.

Consolidation

Companies would save an average of $830,000 annually with the consolidation of physical print handling, centralized billings and accounting and modification of credit and collection practices, according to Booz, Allen.

Major rub though is that top efficiency and economy can be reached only via unanimous distributor participation, stated the study. And last week's VARIETY quoted a top company president as saying he's against adoption of the management consultants' proposals. Unless he has a change of heart, or simply yields to the pressure of other outfits seeking that unanimity, the majority but not all will get together in the consolidation plan, according to early prognostications.

There have been no formal meetings at the Motion Picture Assn. of America regarding the subject yet. These are not likely to begin for at least several weeks.

On another aspect of proposed economies there appears unanimity of opinion. This holds that there cannot be any concerted action on the part of the distribs in the way of shutting branch offices. Any agreements on closings would mean moving in on the area of competitive sales and this in turn would mean antitrust problems. Just about every film company exec has had his share of the a-t migraine; anything that might invite Department of Justice investigation is carefully eschewed.

Lancaster Stars in Two For Metro Separate From 4 H-H-L Routes That Way

Hollywood, July 16.

Burt Lancaster will star in "Ben Hur," and "The Wreck of the Mary Deare" for Metro as part of a new deal under which Hecht-Hill-Lancaster will produce four films for Metro release, beginning in 1958. Neither "Hur" nor "Deare" are included in the quartet; both are Metro production.

H-H-L deal with Metro gets underway after the indie completes three films for United Artists release under its present commitment, "Run Silent, Run Deep," "Separate Tables" and "The Catbird Seat." For Metro, the firm will turn out "Lucy Crown," "Bandoola," "The Devil's Disciple" and "The Rabbit Trap." Lancaster will star in the latter and H-H-L is dickering with Bing Crosby to co-star.

Meanwhile, indie has signed a new releasing deal with United Artists, calling for five additional films.

UA on Big Board 12 Weeks After 'Going Public'

United Artists has made it, the corporation's common stock having been admitted to trading on the New York Stock Exchange beginning today (Wed.). Big board listing, approved in rapid time by the Securities Exchange Commission, comes exactly 12 weeks after the first public offering of the stock was made on an over-the-counter basis.

Event will be marked with a ceremony on the floor of the Exchange with participants including Exchange head Keith Funston and UA's Robert S. Benjamin and Arthur B. Krim, chairman and president, respectively.

UA common issue has been trading at slightly over the $20 level.

PAR EXECS' SERVICE SEPARATE & UNEQUAL

Regular Paramount board meeting had to be postponed a day, until Friday (12), because Barney Balaban found himself grounded twice while en route back to New York from the Coast. The president and veep Paul Raibourn, left Los Angeles at the same time but on different planes, as per Balaban's dictate against key execs traveling via air together.

Raibourn arrived in Gotham at 7:30 Thursday morning but it wasn't until late into the night that Balaban's cross-country hop was completed. Motor trouble caused a four-hour grounding in Las Vegas and nearly half the day in Chicago.

Restrained Rapture As to Films' Future

Standard & Poor's Study Dramatizes 90,000 Overseas Houses Vs. 19,000 in U.S.-Canada

Further improvement in the picture business is possible but don't do any handsprings in joyous anticipation. Too much depends on the public's response to new pictures and this is a "very unpredictable factor."

This is the conclusion drawn by Standard & Poor's, which has concluded an industry survey. A boost in operating earnings is expected for most companies, particularly those which have sizeable interests in television. Non-operating income will decline, obviously, for those outfits which already have sold their backlogs to television and have collected for same.

Upbeat

Upbeat factor noted is the continued steady advance in foreign revenues. In 1957 Yank producers' rentals from abroad on an average should equal domestic money. This is not surprising, says S&P's, since there are 90,000 foreign theatres against 19,000 domestic.

While the big circuits have no libraries to peddle, they have taken to unloading marginal theatres and investing the proceeds in non-theatre activities as a means of bolstering profits.

Study sizes up the various companies and offers some stock-investment advice. American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres' common issue should be held; the preferred provides a good yield. Higher production costs may cause a slight decline in Columbia earnings but the 30c cash quarterly dividend and some stock extras expectedly will continue.

List Industries (RKO Theatres) appears headed for a slight earnings rise and its shares may be held on a speculative basis. Modest increase is seen for Loew's whose stock is worth holding for speculative purposes and corporation's large asset value.

National Theatres is dropping unproductive houses, is entering production and considering diversification into new businesses—adding up to an uncertain situation for the investor. Paramount is well spread out in show business, has strong finances and its shares are worth holding.

Republic

Republic has never paid common stock dividends and hasn't been able to develop more than small earning power. Benefits accruing from increased tv and laboratory work but the common stock nonetheless is too speculative for the average account. Earnings rise is in view for Stanley Warner, this due to expansion of its International Latex subsidiary.

Active on various fronts, 20th-Fox is now benefitting from oil and gas wells at its studio; speculative investments may be held. Release of the backlog should have an important effect on Universal's earnings; common stock bought on speculation may be held.

Expanding tv operations are promising for Warners but this company still remains a highly speculative situation.

Ideal of Theatre Comfort Achieved?

Colonial Williamsburg (Rockefeller) Initiates Unique Twin Operations

Williamsburg, Va., July 16.

What may be the world's most modern theatre is the twin operation located in Colonial Williamsburg's new Information Center.

Two identical theatres on either side of the building are linked in the upper story of the building by a double projection booth with duplicate equipment. The theatres are each 71 by 81 feet and each with only 250 seats. Each screen is a continuous flow into an outbulging side-wall. The result is a screen 26 feet high and with an uninterrupted length of 120 feet, although the picture is projected on only the central 50 feet. It bleeds off to the sidewalls.

The distance between seat-rows is four feet, providing more than enough room to stretch one's legs. And you don't have to stand to let someone get by.

The seat-rows are in sharp one-foot elevations. In front of each row is a three-feet high aluminum barrier. This prevents a seated person from seeing the head of the person in front of him. Thus, the request, "Will you please remove your hat" becomes superfluous.

Because of the barrier before each row, it is impossible to see the bottom of the screen. This, and the large size of the images, give a definite illusion that the picture is three-dimensional and within touching distance.

Illusion is heightened by the Paramount Vista-Vision process used for the historic orientation film shown—"Williamsburg—The Story of a Patriot." The sense of depth is further helped by Todd-AO 6-channel stereophonic sound.

The twin theatres operate on a staggered system, one always beginning the 35-minute color film while the other is about half-way through it.

Indiana Chain Seeks Local OK For Cable Video

Muncie, Ind., July 16.

The Y & W Management Corp., which operates a chain of theatres in Indiana, has petitioned the Muncie City Council for authorization to wire homes in the city for home-toll tv. Request of the theatre circuit is similar to those being made in other cities whereby theatres would pipe first-run films directly into homes.

Marc Wolf, an official of the theatre chain, estimates that would cost $200,000 to $250,000 to put the system in operation in Muncie. As part of its petition, the firm has suggested that the city receive a fee of one half of 1% of the gross receipts.

Y & R does not plan to launch its project until it studies the results of tests being made in other sections of the country. The company, however, has petitioned for similar authorization in other Indiana cities where the chain operates. These include Gary, Terre Haute, Bloomington, Bedford, New Castle and Indianapolis.

'80 Days' Printdowns Match Todd-AO B.O.

Unimportant to '80 Days'?

It doesn't seem to matter whether "80 Days Around the World" plays in the Todd-AO version or in print-down 35m gauge. This is the conclusion drawn from initial runs of the picture in conventional widescreen.

Mike Todd production (standard exhibition) is in its fourth week at the Esquire Theatre, St. Louis, and the grosses have been consistently comparable with other dates where the AO process is utilized. Film in 35m also has been running in London and Paris and the business is on par with the AO outings elsewhere.

This brings up the question of why present the picture in the expensive AO way if it doesn't have any noticeable effect on the b.o. It was Todd himself who insisted on the special presentations at the start, feeling this to be an extra special cinematic and merchandising value.

Now, though, United Artists, distributor of the picture, is offering exhibitors their choice; they can play it in regulation form or AO. Some are going for the extra equipment so as to be prepared for future releases in this process due from other companies.

Everybody Else Staging 'Fairs,' Hollywood Oughta Get Wise: Unit Managers Guild Advice

Hollywood, July 16.

Let's go to the Fair.

That's the suggestion of the Unit Production Managers Guild as its contribution to the continuing debate on how best to publicize Hollywood and regain some of the lost interest and glamor. It's an idea born out of five years of research into what has become the world's biggest business - boosting medium—county, state and national fairs—and one which, thus far, Hollywood has largely ignored.

Unit men point out that in the last three years, the U. S. Government has underwritten official American exhibits at foreign fairs and some 3,000 Yankee firms have signed up millions of dollars in sales through exhibits that symbolize both American production and the American way of life. Available statistics indicate that exhibits in 27 foreign countries have attracted more than 40,000,000 visitors and helped immeasurably in building good will.

"If tractors can do it for Uncle Sam," the report contends, "glamor can do it for Hollywood."

Organization's "Fair Plan," however is not limited to foreign exhibits only. There are approximately 2,500 county and state fairs held annually in the U. S. and they attract better than 75,000,000 Americans. Fair managers throughout the country have indicated they would welcome a Hollywood exhibit and would cooperate to the fullest. Some have even suggested that a Hollywood tent would probably be the most popular on the fair grounds.

Managers Guild first became interested in the Fair setup back in 1951 when "Operations Worldwide" was launched by the Guild. Its primary purpose was to provide an advance information service to assist producers planning productions anywhere in the world. As a part of this activity, it is in constant communication with Fair officials.

Cost of an exhibit, states Ed Ralph, secretary of the "Operations Worldwide" service, would be minimal to the industry. Wall Street Journal recently calculated, he reported, that exhibit space generally runs about $1.25 per square foot since the fairs are run by State or County agricultural societies on a non-profit basis.

For this figure, Ralph estimates, the industry could easily afford to construct a regular exhibit which could be toured from place to place. One such exhibit was attemped in 1951 when a motion picture tent was set up at the Ohio State Fair. The exhibit was furnished mostly by Universal and the "glamour" by Marjorie Main. The tent drew 250,000 visitors and then was moved to the Indiana State Fair where it had a similar success.

Ralph suggests that some of the revenue recently set aside for a publicity and promotion campaign be earmarked for the Fair Plan, with the exhibit to include interesting items from such crafts as makeup, hairdress, art, camera, wardrobe, etc. and featuring stills from memorable pix. Exhibits could be packed in special cases that would open up to become display tables, the exhibits to be manned by volunteer workers from local exhibition and distribution ranks. In each case, a producer representative familiar with all phases of motion picture production could accompany the exhibit to answer all questions.

In addition, unit execs believe that Hollywood's message could be conveyed by utilizing some of the most interesting reels of "The Movies and You," either in 35m or 16m, looped for continuous running. Appearances of film stars would, of course, be an added plus factor but not necessarily vital to the success of the scheme.

Noting Bob O'Donnell's success with treks, Ralph believes that the "Hollywood at the Fair" plan could also become "a great vehicle to bring Hollywood's young, new talent to the millions of Americans who still love movies and could once again be induced to make a regular habit of going to see them."

BRITISH 'GRAF SPEE' B.O. WOW IN REICH

Hamburg, July 16.

"The Battle of the River Plate," last year's Royal Command selection, now on release throughout Europe under the title "The Graf Spee," is shaping as Western Germany's top grosser of the year. It's likely to take around 10,000,000 marks (approximately $2,500,000) at the box office, of which the distributor's share will be in the region of 3,000,000 marks ($750,000).

The Rank release, produced by Powell and Pressburger, is the first British war pic to make a b.o. mark in Western Germany, probably due to the fact that the German naval commander, played by Peter Finch, emerged as the most sympathetic character in the film—a factor that contributed to some adverse reaction when the film was preemed in London.

U.S. Companies In France Roll Pix

Paris, July 16.

Metro's "Gigi" starts this week starring Leslie Caron, Maurice Chevalier and Irene Dunne. It is to be a musical version of the Colette opus by Alan Jay Lerner and Fritz Loewe and Vincent Minelli directs. It will be made here and in Hollywood, and songs, since the principals are bilingual, will be done in French and English to try to beat the musical film jinx here.

Due here from Norway is the crew and cast of "The Vikings" (UA) which will continue the adventures of 10th century blonde terrors along the Atlantic coast of France. Kirk Douglas, Tony Curtis and Ernest Borgnine star and Richard Fleischer directs this one.

"Paris Holiday" (UA) winds here this week and the Bob Hope-Fernandel starrer may be two and a half hours long. Hope, who also produced, is thinking of roadshowing it which may be a first for a film comedy.

Otto Preminger has started shooting the Francoise Sagan novel, "Bonjour Tristesse" (Col) and another adaptation of a Sagan book "A Certain Smile" (20th) is due in soon.

TAMPA THREATS SHRINK; 6 PICKET 20TH'S 'ISLAND'

Tampa, July 16.

Tampa is the nation's first community to experience adverse reaction to the film, "Island in the Sun." Despite demonstrators, however, the picture is racking up good grosses at the Park Theatre where manager Jack Fink says it's doing "the biggest business since before television."

House is being picketed, and Fink has received threats on his life.

Before the picture opened, Fink received a phonecall informing him that 200 demonstrators would show up in front of his house. Came the appointed day, and all of four men appeared. Their number eventually increased to six, when police asked the pickets to show up only two-strong.

They carried placards and handpainted signs reading: "Don't Buy a Ticket to White Race Destruction." "Intermarriage a Pattern for Our Children?," "God's Plan?" and "White Race Protests This Filth." They also handed out tearsheets of a scandal mag about Joan Fontaine and Harry Belafonte.

Fink received personal threats, including a call hinting that his car starter was wired for a bomb. There were anonymous calls on opening day about a bomb in the theatre. They all proved false. Policeman is stationed in front of the theatre.

Critic Rash

focussed. N.Y. Herald Tribune review by William Zinsser of Warners' "Band of Angels" also took trade's breath away.

In the case of that tough-to-handle property, "Island in The Sun," 20th-Fox by dint of astute sales strategy has overcome many of the difficulties and even lined up a lot of playdates in Dixie, which it was feared might be a dead loss. All this could be a matter of honest relief and showmanly satisfaction but during the anguishing interim of getting the picture launched the critics inflamed tender tissues by some jabs at the picture's scripting and masterminding which Darryl Zanuck resented.

Change of status opened Stanley Kramer to unkind thrusts at his last two releases, both boxoffice hits, because he presented himself as his own director. Both "Not As A Stranger" and "The Pride and the Passion" suffered certain letdowns in the department of artistic kudos. That the films were big earners did not smother all criticism of critics at United Artists.

Mood Variables

Those not themselves in a tizzy against the critics question that the film industry would ever, or could ever, unite against all critics. To do so would penalize the friends of the medium out of pique at certain individual reviewers, whose initials frequently turn out to be B.C. Perhaps not coincidentally the New York dailies are definitely tougher of late, partly because they've been encouraged by certain segments of the industry to improve the quality of their film reviews. VARIETY has mentioned the changes at the Mirror and Journal-American especially. At least five of the daily reviewers in New York (the ones the producers read in their hotel suites) are among the bluntest in the nation.

Posed in opposition to any united action against critics is the obvious truth that a policy adopted in anger and antagonism is hard to enforce under the expansive geniality of the next hit. There is the further practical fact that publishers are often quite as sensitive as their critics about "freedom of the press" where pressure takes drastic forms. In this connection there would be the conspicuous irony of the industry encouraging and inviting closer cooperation from publishers and managing editors while mounting a campaign against reviewers.

try bumpkins go to the city—in the holiday and vacation periods. The visitors obviously don't want to spend all their time in town at the showcases. They select the limited few super clicks; the respectacle (but not super) offerings are given the brush. Art-house and inexpensive productions don't require epic boxoffice money to come out on top; the good "A" though usually represents a sizeable budget and needs the showcase loot.

Checked by telephone in Detroit (he was on a stopover en route to San Francisco), market researcher Albert Sindlinger said he found July 4th weekend business to have been off 5% to 6% from last year. Drive-in revenue was slightly better, but there were more drive-ins this year than last.

One factor that must be considered is the hot spell that hit most of the country over the holiday this year. In 1956, rain fell on July 4 and this obviously discouraged the treks to the beaches.

But rain or shine, the basic consideration is that the climb from the May-June slump materialized this year but not so impressively as in previous years. The upsurge of 1957 should have been far greater to be consistent with the preponderance of great-expectations pictures which the companies had held back for release.

Crosby, Other Stars Rap H'wood Scripts; Frank Nugent Answers: Bing Wouldn't Even Dig Bard

By DAVE KAUFMAN

Hollywood, July 16.

Top Hollywood stars and screenwriters have tangled over the question of quality of screenplays, with the scriptwriters angrily rebutting charges by the stars there is a lack of qualitative scripts these days. Among stars complaining they can't find good screenplays are Bing Crosby, Joan Crawford, Van Heflin, Gregory Peck, Frank Sinatra and Cary Grant. They beef that while there is no dearth of story material, what they read leaves much to be desired

Screenwriters answered by questioning the wisdom of the stars in their selection of scripts, also emphasizing there is always a shortage in quality—even in stars. And there is more work creating a fine screenplay than a star, they added stingingly.

Frank Nugent, prexy of the Screen Writers branch of Writers Guild of America West, declared in reply to Bing Crosby's remark he had read 100 scripts without finding one he likes, " it does not automatically follow that what Bing wanted was good script quality and what the writers offered was not. Shakespeare would have peddled in vain to der Bingle; so would Shaw, O'Casey, and probably, Tennessee Williams," said Nugent, who screenplayed "The Rising of the Moon," and more recently, "The Last Hurrah."

But more important, noted the screenwriter, is that "no one should be surprised at the dearth of quality scripts. There is always a shortage of quality, whether it be of scripts, of books, or plays, or for that matter, actors. It is unquestionably much simpler to create a star than it is to create a fine screenplay. Stars have been plucked from behind drugstore counters and from beauty contests; one of our current male idols has attained stardom by gyrating his pelvis while playing his guitar, and starring qualifications for some of our current leading ladies can be summarized briefly as 38-22-38. Good writing is no such accident. It cannot be tape-measured nor weighed; nor created by UNIVAC, nor mass-produced by General Motors. For that reason there will always be a shortage of quality. Year after year screenplays of first rate quality have been and are being written in Hollywood.

"I ask Mr. Crosby and the others not to stop looking; or better still, to hire a good story editor or producer. Who knows, they may find something the boys have overlooked," commented Nugent.

Daniel Taradash, who screenplayed "From Here to Eternity," and now writing the screenplay of "Andersonville" at Columbia, remarked: "My hunch is most of the actors are looking not for good scripts, but for good parts, and there's quite a difference. I would like to ask how many of them would like to cut their astronomical salaries and take a character role in a fine script. In England, extraordinarily good actors take the second or third part because they're good scripts. But this is rare here. These stars may be thinking of parts rather than of scripts."

Screenwriter Irwin Gielgud commented "the writers don't write original material because they feel such stories won't get much of a reception at the major studios. 'Around the World in 80 Days' would have been turned down by every major; but Mike Todd made it, and today it's the top money maker.

"I doubt if these stars read 100 screenplays; they probably read a good many treatments. The practice of writing treatments was begun years ago. A treatment is neither a story nor a screenplay; it's an in-between form, like a blueprint for a project. But the stars don't realize that. And the stars don't take the time to get into a creative session with the writers to work it out. And there are other ramifications. For example, Bing Crosby liked 'On My Honor,' the screenplay Gwen Bagni and I did from a MacKinlay Kantor story for RKO. But then nothing happened because RKO got into a situation where there was no production," he said.

Crosby had remarked "I've read a hundred scripts, but can't find one I want." There is a possibility he may take a starring role in "The Rabbit Trap," H-H-L film also starring Burt Lancaster, but final decision must await a rewritten script. There is also the possibility he may make a film for producer Henry Ginsberg, but Crosby wouldn't commit himself at this point. The groaner personally picked his last story, "Man on Fire," after seeing it on television.

Other stars who gripe about the scarcity of story material these days include Frank Sinatra, Gregory Peck, Cary Grant, Joan Crawford and Van Heflin.

Studios' answer to these gripes is, in many instances, remakes but the stars don't care for these as a rule. As an illustration of the extent to which remakes have been overdone, Crosby starred in the remake of his own 20-year-old film, "Anything Goes," at Paramount.

Sinatra said recently "I will never do another picture unless it's on a participation basis," then added quickly "Unless it's a script I like very much," emphasizing the importance stars give a good story. Sinatra once complained, too, that he had poured over more than 100 yarns without finding a suitable one.

Gregory Peck also has groused that following formation of his indie he read many, many stories but couldn't find much of interest or originality among them. Same has been said by Miss Crawford and Heflin, the latter remarking he's nixed over 100 scripts the past year because of their mediocre or format quality.

General tenor of the stars' beefs, in fact, is that stories submitted are too routinish, are carbons of films which have been done often in the past. Comedies with sophisticated tone are particularly absent among the submissions, they say.

194 U.S. Releases To India in '56

The United States was by far the largest importer of films into India during 1956, according to a U. S. Government report. The Americans brought in 194 features last year as against 180 in 1955.

At the same time, film imports by the Soviets and their satellites dropped in '56. Whereas the Russians imported 18 last year, they had shipped 34 films into India in 1955. Red China last year brought in nine, against 15 the year before.

All countries are affected by the current Indian import ban on a variety of hard-currency goods, including films. The Indians will decide in September on their import policy for the six months starting in October.

India makes a large number of films herself, and their distribution by far outdistances any imports. Only other country sending films into India in any substantial number is Britain, which imported 30 last year. France brought in four and Italy six.

Camp Tamiment as Site Of 'Morningstar' Feature

Stroudsburg, Pa., July 16.

Camp Tamiment in the Poconos is being considered as the site for the filming of "Marjorie Morningstar," it has been learned. Edward G. Robinson will star in the film to be produced by Milton Sperling for Warner Bros.

A large part of Wouk's book takes place at a mountain resort resembling Tamiment, a well known vacation spot.

Warner technicians have made preliminary studies of the location. Still photographers and cameramen have visited the camp.

STARS LOVE THOSE TV SUNDAY PLUGS BUT SHUN SULLIVAN-ALLEN CROSSFIRE

Television prestige tug o'war between Ed Sullivan and Steve Allen has placed the major film companies in the awkward position of having to decide which potentate to satisfy. With both Sunday night shows battling aggressively for picture names to bolster their ratings, N. Y. film publicists are in a quandary.

When Sullivan was undisputed king of Sunday night, the question did not arise. He automatically got the top stars when they visited Gotham if he wanted them. However, as things stand Allen cannot be sloughed off. Both shows represent important exploitation for pictures.

Some performers prefer Sullivan; others choose Allen. Frequently the actor triggers the choice. Straight actors, it's claimed, are moving toward Allen because they feel that can be shown in a better light via integration into a scene or a sketch. On the Sullivan show, they argue, they'll merely rate some banter with Sullivan or a bow. Singers have no preference.

There's been some indication that the film companies were leaning over backwards towards Allen. The latter, a few claim, may get the edge in the power fight because he pays a handsome fee to the performer and delivers a good plug at the same time. A new discount against Sullivan arose when he linked plugs for four different pictures on his show last week—a combination of film clips and live plugs for "The Prince and the Showgirl" (WB), "Island in the Sun" (20th), "Fire Down Below" (Col) and "The Pride and the Passion" (UA)—there was a general feeling in the Broadway homeoffices that none of the pictures came off satisfactorily. Pressed, Sullivan neglected to give the proper credits relating to color and CinemaScope.

Despite this particular incident—which most filmites regard as accidental—and inadvertent—Sullivan is still regarded as the longtime good friend of the motion picture industry. He has repeatedly cooperated in filming special interviews and has devoted considerable time on his show to plugging pictures. As a result, his bitter rap of Paramount's "Beau James" in his recent N. Y. Daily News column came as a surprise to industryites, especially since the film received a favorable review by News film critic Dorothy Masters. Some filmites were inclined to charge ulterior motives. Bob Hope, star of "Beau James," intimated in an interview on the "Tex & Jinx" show that Sullivan's resentment may have been motivated by the fact that Walter Winchell provided the narration for the film.

Generally showmen try to hold a neutral position in the rivalry between Sullivan and Allen. It's pretty serious. The Allen group has charged the Sullivan team with unethically listing the presence of film stars on his shows when they appear in a filmed scene from an upcoming picture or merely take a bow out of the audience.

Hackneyed Stuff Acceptable on TV, Can't Peddle at Boxoffice—Rackin

Audiences will accept second-rate material on television where it's for nothing, but they "smell out" and attend the good pictures, producer Milton Rackin said in Gotham last week. He added that, in his opinion, the public's twelve year old mentality is "just a myth."

Rackin opined that Hollywood had made a serious mistake in latching on to so many tv scripts. "Television is basically different from the movies," he held. "We can take a thing out and expand it." He said that, with the exception of "Marty" and "Dragnet," he knew of no tv property that had been successfully converted to the big screen.

Speaking of Warner Brothers, where he has completed "The Helen Morgan Story," "The Deep Six" and "Darby's Rangers," Rackin said the studio was now wholly committed to "flagship" pictures. "We don't go in for remakes," he declared. "We'll only make important films, the ones that count with the public. We can do that because our studio is so well geared, we don't have any tremendous overhead. We don't have to worry what assignments we can give next to a large number of directors, writers, etc."

Asked whether the concentration on fewer but bigger films didn't increase the risk, Rackin said: "If you throw the dice, you might as well throw for a seven." He noted that WB would continue to purchase smaller and exploitation films from independents.

Exhibs Fatalism

The producer, who was a writer for 16 years, deplored the let-it-go attitude of exhibitors. "Exhibitors used to hustle," he exclaimed. "The neighborhood exhibitors really knew his neighborhood. Now, the theatremen don't protect their investment. The worst thing that could have happened was divorcement. Before that, exhibitors were really showmen."

Rackin noted that few pictures today cost less than $500,000. "An exhibitor will play two of those, and night after night he is playing a $1,000,000 product. That's something to go out and sell," he said.

Producer was in New York for huddles with Pearl Buck, whose new book, "Letter from Peking," he'll make into a film, with John Lee Mahon scripting. Studio paid a basic $200,000 for the book. Deal has an escalator clause based on the sale of the novel.

Rackin said he wasn't worried about the effects of the Helen Morgan Story on tv. His picture stars Ann Blyth. "People who've seen the show will only be more eager to see the picture," he held. He said the show was a "whitewash" of the singer's life.

Federal Judge Sanctions New Loew Hardtopper In Miami Despite Protests

N. Y. Federal Judge Edmund L. Palmieri last week signed an order granting Loew's the right to acquire a new conventional theatre in the Sunny Isle section of Miami, Florida. Court ruled Loew's had shown to its satisfaction that such acquisition would not unduly restrain competition.

Opposing the Loew's petition, which was filed under the name of the Miami Beach Theatre Corp., were Wometco Television & Theatre Co. and the E. M. Loew circuit. These two independent chains intervened as friends of the court. The Dept. of Justice, through attorney Maurice Silverman, stated its position on the matter was neutral.

Sunny Isle house, now under construction, is the second Florida theatre to be acquired by Loew's with permission of the Federal Court. Last year it won court approval to take over the Riviera Theatre, Coral Gabels. Petition at that time also was opposed by the Wometco loop which owns and operates more than 20 theatres in the Miami area.

CBS-TV MAY FILM OWN SHOWS

They're Just Wild About Frankie

Hollywood, July 16.

Frank Sinatra's new ABC-TV series has sponsors begging to share the ride with Chesterfield, in a rare instance of an untried and untested show being "oversubscribed." Liggett & Myers originally bought the entire series of 13 musicals, 23 dramas and two specs, but later decided to sell off portions and spread tv coin around.

Bulova, out of same ad agency (McCann-Erickson) as Chesterfield, first got wind of sharing plan and struck deal to bankroll nine shows—five full shows this year, around holidays, and four next year with Chesterfield on major-minor basis. Max Factor, which shares NBC-TV "Panic" with Chesterfield, also put in an order, but too late. Factor is now shopping around for another network show.

CBS-TV's 2-Month Daytime Harvest, $16,500,000 New Biz on 9 Shows

The upsurge in daytime ratings and sponsors by NBC-TV, resulting in recent months in a dramatic change for the web from an also-ran to a healthy competitor to CBS-TV, has benefitted both webs. Columbia, though now in the position of having to fight for every viewer and sponsor, has nonetheless pulled in an astonishing $16,500,000 in new business over the past two months and moreover has filled in some vital spots in its daytime schedule.

Though it hasn't examined the books, CBS-TV is probably in a better daytime position for the fall than it was a year ago at this time, while NBC undoubtedly is far ahead of last year. In the case of CBS, the web has made a remarkable recovery in closing out a couple of big gaps left from a Procter & Gamble daytime cutback a couple of months ago and in filling up the sponsorship ranks on some brand-new and recent program entries, with all this in the face of stiff NBC competition.

As an example, the web has sold out "Edge of Night," the half-hour soap strip which P&G entirely

Chrysler-Dodge's 'Climax' Wholehog

Start of the new fall season will bring a change in the sponsorship status of the hourlong Thursday night "Climax" series on CBS-TV.

Until now the show, representing a $7,000,000 time-and-program investment, has been underwritten exclusively by the corporate Chrysler outfit on behalf of all its cars. Beginning in September, however, the parent company will turn over two weeks out of every four to the Dodge and Chrysler car divisions, with Chrysler Corp. getting the benefit of the remaining plugs.

For some time the corporate chieftains have been exploring ways and means of building up both the Dodge and Chrysler car campaigns, weighing the possibility of separate programming (Dodge already has the two Lawrence Welk shows on ABC-TV while Chrysler car has been completely out of the tv picture), as against giving them half a stake in the "Climax" series. It was decided in favor of the latter course.

CBS RADIO PLANNING 30TH ANNI HOOPLA

CBS Radio is contemplating a radio spectacular commemorating its own 30th anni on Sept. 18. Project is still in the iffy stage, with network officials at this point concerned with examining the idea and possible formats before coming to a definite decision as to whether to do the show at all.

project is expected next week.

Understood CBS-TV has turned down the idea of a tv spectacular devoted to the web's history, but the radio network is interested in the possibilities. One thing militating against a radio version is the fact that in dealing with CBS, it would have to get into the story of television, a line it isn't too happy about pursuing.

Love Her, Hate Hat

Lawrence E. Spivak, interviewed on reverse "Meet the Press" at Kent State U. campus, polled packed auditorium whether they preferred May Craig appearing as often as she does.

Audience overwhelmingly approved, and then responded they wished she'd get a new hat. Spivak promised to ask Miss Craig to so do.

Seaton Fights For Industry Coin To Sponsor 'Oscars'

Hollywood, July 16.

A meeting has been tentatively scheduled between the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences and the Motion Picture Association of America, to discuss industry sponsorship of next year's Academy Awards on television.

Session will probably be held the first week in September, Academy prexy George Seaton disclosed.

"I hope the climate will be better this year for such sponsorship of the Awards presentation," commented Seaton. Industry has first refusal on such sponsorship, with Oldsmobile standing in line to latch onto the event if the industry doesn't. Show, on NBC-TV, would cost the industry approximately $475,000, Seaton said.

Leopold (& Loeb) Nixes TV Interviews, Fearing It'll Jeopardize Parole

Chicago, July 16.

Nathan Leopold, hot copy again now that he's appealing for a commutation of sentence, cancelled a pair of scheduled network interviews for reasons that the tv inquisitions might jeopardize his chances of leaving Statesville Penitentiary this December. "For you it's only a program," he told one of the interviewers, "but for me it's my life."

He was to have appeared on Irv Kupcinet's segment of NBC-TV's "Tonight" last Thursday (11) and was to have filmed an interview with ABC's Mike Wallace. Although both Kupcinet and Wallace vowed not to probe him about his parole appeal, Leopold, who has served 33 years to date for his part in the sensational thrill killing of Bobby Franks, apologized and said, "I can't afford to take any chances." He did, however, promise Kupcinet first crack at him after a decision in handed down, one way or the other.

Wallace, who flew back to Gotham empty-handed late last week, managed to turn his trip to Chi to publicity advantage, taking a dose of his own medicine on seven local radio and tv shows.

TV CITY ANNEX LINKED TO PLANS

CBS-TV, which has a multi-million stake in the farming out of all its filmed programming to various studios, (Desilu, McCadden, Filmaster, et al), is mulling the possibility of filming its own shows.

All told, CBS-TV has 18 hours of filmed shows weekly. About 50% of this represents Columbia-owned properties, all of which are brought in via outside facilities. A thorough study of the whole future pattern of network programming (live vs. film vs. tape) is currently being undertaken by CBS and one of the major objectives will be to determine whether it would make economic sense to go into film production on its own or continue the present arrangement of farming out all its celluloid shows to outside studios.

That's one of the reasons why CBS has called a sudden halt to construction of the $7,000,000 addition to CBS Television City on the Coast. Eventually the network will proceed with construction, but it may be along entirely different lines, based on the exhaustive survey being undertaken in association with the management consulting firm of Robert Heller & Associates, of Cleveland.

The new CBS Television City addition, for one thing, was geared to estimates arrived at some 18 months ago. A lot of things have happened since then, notably (1) the network's increased stake in filmed programming and (2) the emergence of tape as a major program facet. Primarily because of these two factors CBS is anxious to proceed with caution and certainty to achieve maximum use of the new facilities.

As of now, jurisdictional snafus prevent CBS-TV from doing any filming within the confines of its Television City. The same, of course, would apply to the annex. But should the network decide in favor of doing its own filming, measures will be taken to eradicate the ban and utilize the TV City floor space for film as well as live.

Howard Meighan, v.p. in charge of Coast operations for CBS-TV, is currently in New York for high command powwows concerning the temporary shutdown order.

AFTRA Won't Let Bing Use Cuffo Talent For All-Star Charity TVcast

Hollywood, July 16.

Beef last week by Theatre Authority and American Federation of TV and Radio Artists brought prompt assurance by producers of proposed Bing Crosby all-star charity telecast, that all names will be paid "standard compensation." Gonzaga U. of Spokane, Bing's alma mater, is packaging show and would benefit from both tv sponsorship and seat sales. Rosenberg-Coryell agency is repping Gonzaga in deal, with CBS-TV reported on inside track in bidding.

Claude McCue, exec secretary of Hollywood AFTRA, last week disclosed that both union and TA had "expressed concern about original plans, in which Crosby and guest names would appear cuffo. TV and AFTRA advised producers that "standard compensation must be paid to all stars on commercial programs." In turn, producers assured both groups that this point would be met.

Chas. Isaacs to NBC

Hollywood, July 16.

Charles Isaacs, producer-creator-head writer of last season's CBS-TV "Hey Jeannie" show, has been assigned producer-head writer [illegible] on NBC-TV "Gisele MacKenzie Show" next fall.

Musical-variety show is a Saturday night entry.

ABC's Got Its Problems: Half-Sale Status on 'Colt 45,' 'Sugarfoot,' 'Bowie,' Mitchell Could Hit Profits

Tip on a Live Jockey

Washington, July 16.

Macy's may not tell Gimbels.

But when Steve Allison moved his nightly radio disk jockey-interview from Philadelphia over to Washington's WWDC, Philadelphia merchant sponsors told Washington merchants.

A Quaker City Chevrolet agency recommended the show to a D. C. Chevy Agency, which bought time. A Philly men's clothing store told a Washington ditto, which also bought a piece of the two-and-one-half-hour late show. A third Washington sponsor signed up because a relative in Philadelphia recommended the program as good listening.

Finally, a motel owner, near Atlantic City N.J., who had been a sponsor of the Philadelphia program, has continued his sponsorship in Washington.

ABC-TV is more troubled by failure to sell completely "Colt 45," "Jim Bowie," "Sugarfoot" and Guy Mitchell than it is by the lack of sponsors for those nine fully available half-hours between 7:30 and 10:30 every week.

Unless those partially sold tv programs are able to hang out the SRO sign by fall, the ABC-TV net profit for 1957 is expected to suffer hard. A good part of the web's income will be shot paying for those shows.

At very best, it is thought ABC can break even on "Colt," "Bowie" and "Sugarfoot" if no further sales in their behalf are made. But there is also the belief that a sales standstill now will cut deeply into the full-company profit ABC might have realized from its otherwise improved 1957 sales position.

On the greater sales volume this season over last, ABC was able to project a 1957 gross of over $100,000,000. This is several millions more than the 1956 gross, but the figure is deemed virtually meaningless in light of the "half sell" problem. Though it is unsubstantiated by the network, one opinion put forth by a qualified observer was that 1957 net could amount to less than 1956's; if the sponsor chill toward these four shows continues.

Biggest complication for ABC is that the season for selling network shows is considered by most of the trade to be virtually over. The season for bargain buys has about set in. So that any further sales of any of the nine uncommitted half-hour segs will probably be only to make the outward picture look better, but the sales are not expected to allay the budget problems on the half sold shows.

ABC is guaranteeing full production costs to Warners, maker of "Colt" and "Sugarfoot." Same goes for Lou Edelman, maker of "Bowie." Though "Sugarfoot"

Set Sponsors For 3 Vegas TV Specs 'Command' Series

Henry Jaffe's new Coronet Productions operation, which centres his various television packaging efforts into one organization, is beginning to pile on momentum. Coronet this week sold two specpackages via NBC-TV for next season, three shows to Exquisite and a series to Texaco in the "Command Appearance" format.

The Exquisite Form deal, plugging the film's foundation garments, calls for the first of the three Las Vegas specs to be telecast Nov. 16 in the Perry Como 8 to 9 slot, with the second scheduled for March and the third in May. Talent, format and even origination site aren't set yet, but William Phillipson of Coronet will act as exec producer. There's a strong possibility that a Vegas cafe will be utilized as the origination point.

Second deal, with Texaco, is for the "Texaco Command Appearance," to be produced by Coronet is association with American Theatre Wing and Saluting different single performers. First will be an hour entry on Sept. 19 in the "Lux Video" 10 to 14 period. Deal was set via Cunningham & Walsh and represents Texaco's first major network splurge in years. Texaco will sponsor several "Command" shows, with exact number not yet determined.

Beyond the specials, Coronet has the 16 Shirley Temple fairy tales in preparation for Breck Shampoo, Sealtest and Hill Bros. next winter, and the 52-hour "Chevy Show" for the fall, with Dinah Shore set for 20 of them and talent still to be signed for the remaining 32.

ROSEMARY CLOONEY AS TV LUX ENTRY

Hollywood, July 16.

Rosemary Clooney has reached agreement to head up a half-hour musical variety show next season on NBC-TV, as a replacement for departing "Lux Video Theatre." However, contracts have not been inked yet.

Half-hour format will be logged "The Rosemary Clooney Show," marking end of a quarter-century of Lux identification in title. Program will air in Thursday, 10 p.m., time slot.

LaRosa & Dean To Share Sat. TV Slot

Julius LaRosa may take over part of NBC-TV's Saturday at 9 musical offering next fall. Network has offered LaRosa to Liggett & Myers and Max Factor, the spot's sponsors, for an unspecified number of shows. Dean Martin had previously been set to do about half of the shows in the spot.

LaRosa is currently serving as summer replacement for Perry Como, and NBC apparently is pleased at the way he's developed as a personality as well as a singer and how he's handled the assignment this year. He's got the full summer spread this season, whereas last year he only did four Como replacement shows.

WEAVER TO 'DIRECT' KAISER'S TV ADV.

Pat Weaver has been retained by Kaiser Industries (aluminum, steel, cement, Willys Motors, gypsum, et al.) the direct all the company's television advertising. Direction will take the form of coordination of all advertising and publicity relating to the ABC-TV "Maverick" stanza which Kaiser will sponsor starting Sept. 22 handling commercial production and coordinating among Kaiser, ABC, Young & Rubicam and Warner Bros.

Deal goes beyond a straight consultancy since Weaver will be directly responsible for the specific tasks to which he's detailed. Deal is highly unusual, since much of the work Weaver will handle is ordinarily covered by the ad agency.

Coast Group Buying Mutual Web For $3,000,000, But Sans RKO Stations

Thomas O'Neil is expected today (Wed.) to complete negotiations to sell Mutual Broadcasting System to Coast interests headed by Paul Roberts. Sale by O'Neill, for reportedly under $3,000,000 was motivated in part by internal strife and also because, ironically enough, the 500-station radio network, while not a winning operation, was apparently not losing enough to justify keeping it taxwise as part of RKO Teleradio.

Roberts was identified as a Los Angeles FM station operator. He and his group bought only the goodwill, few sponsor contracts, contract talent and the affiliates that go with Mutual. O'Neil is also promising him that the owned & operated stations of General Teleradio Division of RKO Tele-radio will continue as affiliates of Mutual.

Vaguely defined furor at Mutual's top level, among prexy Jack Poor, RKO boss O'Neil and Washington news boss Robert F. Hurleigh, reportedly helped precipitate the sale, which O'Neil has been mulling intensively for several weeks. For a year previously, he had been toying with the idea of discarding Mutual. He could not disband Mutual entirely, it is contended, since the web has some sponsorship pacts for its new newsmusic formula.

In the last 12 months, O'Neil has slowly been buying out the various stations which were share-

Now Regional TV Web?

Now that he's getting out of the national network radio biz, Tom O'Neil, it was rumored yesterday (Tues.), is thinking of forming a regional television web. Using his WOR-TV, New York, as the key station, a feed to several Pennsylvania operations is envisioned.

O'Neil reportedly is not going completely out of the network radio field, since he is retaining his interest in the regional Don Lee and Yankee webs.

NBC-TV has signed its first pair of sponsors for the new Jack Paar edition of "Tonight." Polaroid, via Doyle, Dane, Bernbach agency, signed for 20 particlpations over the period from July 29 to Dec. 20, while RCA, via Kenyon & Eckhardt, pacted for eight spots from July 29 through Sept. 20.

Current version of "Tonight," which Paar replaces on July 29, has virtually no sponsors, with local stations doing the business via sale of adjacencies.

ABC Snares Lotsa TV Kid Strip Coin

ABC-TV is all but SRO on that 5 to 5:30 kid strip for next season. Sweets Corp. of America has inked for three of the daily half-hours on an alternate-week schedule to Kelloggs, leaving only one skip-week slot still open for sponsorship. Sweets also pacted for alternate Saturdays of "Tales of the Texas Rangers."

Sweets, according to the network, bought "Superman" on Mondays, "Wild Bill Hickok" on Wednesdays and "Buccaneers" on Friday. Kellogg owns all the alternate slots and every week of the Thursday "Woody Woodpecker," being produced for first run by Universal-International. Only half of the Tuesday "Sir Launcelot" remains.

"Rangers" goes from 5 to 5:30 on Saturdays.

Shriner Sez He's In No Hurry to Reenter TV: 'Nothing to Prove'

Minneapolis, July 16.

Absent from television the past fall and winter, Herb Shriner said here that he'll wait before returning "until the tv mortality among comedians has declined somewhat."

Shriner said he's in no hurry to reenter the field and he'll sit back with some plans he has formulated for a while yet.

"Judging by what's taking place with other comedians, there's nothing you can prove in tv right now," asserted Shriner.

"I was on steadily from 1948 and it always was lucrative. But I've always considered tv as an offshoot of my regular business of entertaining in theatres and night clubs.

"Right now tv is in a saloon fight, and the less you're on the fewer your chances of getting shot."

Max Factor's Summer Ride on 'Masquerade'

NBC-TV picked up some extra summer coin last week by pacting Max Factor to alternate-week sponsorship of "Masquerade Party," web's Wednesday at 8 entry which runs in the slot through Sept. 4 before giving way to "Wagon Train."

Cosmetic outfit, which will share the show with Associated Products, was repped by the Anderson-McConnell agency in the deal.

'What's It For' As Sat. NBC-TV Entry

Pharmaceuticals Inc. has finally made its Saturday program choice on NBC-TV. It's "What's It For," the new Entertainment Productions Inc. (EPI) panel entry based on new inventions filed with the U. S. Patent Office. Show, previously titled "What's the Use," goes into the Saturday at 10 spot for Pharmaceuticals comes the fall.

NBC is still dickering for Speidel to move into the Saturday period as an alternate-week sponsor with Pharmaceuticals on "What's It For." Speidel is looking at the show before making its decision. In the event Speidel decides to move, it will drop "Price Is Right" in the Monday at 7:30 period, to which it had been committed for alternate weeks. NBC will then move "Price" out of the lineup and replace it with "My Friend Flicka," even though it has no sponsor prospects on "Flicka" yet.

PRESTONE FIRMS UP DEAN MARTIN SPEC

Prestone antifreeze has firmed up its commitment for full sponsorship of the first Dean Martin special of the season, on Saturday, Oct. 5. Prestone had wavered between half-sponsorship of two Martin specs or full sponsorship of one, and decided on the latter course. William Esty agency is now scanning other network tv buys and is arranging a saturation campaign in network and spot radio.

Previous VARIETY story on the Prestone negotiations for the Martin spec erratumed in identifying Prestone as a product of E. I. du-Pont. Actually ,Prestone is made and sold by the National Carbon Co., a division of Union Carbide.

CBS Woos PanAm For 'Small World' As Tues. TV Entry

"Small World," the new Ed Murrow-Fred Friendly package starring Eric Sevareid as host of a filmed transatlantic interview series, is CBS-TV's hottest candidate for its still-vacant Tuesday at 10:30 spot in the fall. Web is currently dickering with Pan American World Airways to take on the sponsorship, but even if a deal doesn't jell, CBS may very well go ahead and sustain "World" in the spot.

Pan American is currently sponsoring "See It Now" on CBS, but its pact on that runs out at the beginning of December. There's little likelihood that Murrow and Friendly would object to Pan American's shifting its billing from "See It Now" to "Small World" if a sponsorship deal would help the new package get off the ground.

Tuesday period is currently occupied by Spike Jones, but he's due to exit in late August after having received a last -minute reprieve in June. Unlikely that Liggett & Myers, Jones' sponsor, will stay with the Tuesday time after Jones goes off.

'Club 60' Proves Its Point—Stays

Chicago, July 16.

Terrific mail pull of "Club 60"—over 100,000 viewer letters in two weeks—has convinced NBC-TV brass that the mild ratings could be deceiving, and the web has renewed the daytimer for next season, again on a co-op basis. Until recent mail campaign, the Chi origination had a dubious future.

Show, however, will be hosted by Chi deejay Howard Miller starting Aug. 19 with the same cast as helmed by Dennis James. Latter leaves out of choice, preferring to work out of New York for family reasons.

5 News Shows in Radio Top 10

Revealing commentary on the patterns of network radio listening is the fact that the latest Nielsen Top 10 multi-week radio list for nighttime gives newscasts five of the 10 slots. Toprated of the nighttime strips is NBC's "News of the World," with three other NBC newscasts in the Top 10, joined by CBS' Lowell Thomas. A sixth news-type offering is Herman Hickman's CBS sports show. Only other entries are "Amos 'n' Andy," with three listings due to different commercial setups, and NBC's "One Man's Family." Ratings cover the two weeks ended June 8.

N.Y. TV FILM LABS' SLOWDOWN

It's SRO for Location Sites

Hollywood, July 16.

With so many oater telepix galloping across the telescreens next season, 21 at last count, outdoor-western locales near Hollywood are booked solid. Over weekend, Four Star Films leased Hertz-Topanga Ranch on an exclusive basis for a year, to get some place to shoot its "Zane Grey Theatre" series. Deal also provides options for two more years.

Company plans to build additional ranch houses, barns and corrals, besides two western streets currently standing. Also, Four Star will sub-lease property to other production outfits. Besides "Zane Grey," Four Star will use the property for other series, starting with a "Mr. Adams & Eve" segment lensing Thursday.

CNP's Two for the Show

'Boots & Saddles' and 'Union Pacific' Segs to Roll Simultaneously

California National Productions, the NBC vidpix subsidiary, is taking the unusual step of ordering fullscale production simultaneously on two new syndicated series. CNP has given the go-ahead on production of 39 episodes in each of "Boots & Saddles" and "Union Pacific" at the same time, with the former being filmed on location in Utah and the latter at Metro.

CNP is offering only "Boots" for sale at the moment, and is putting "Pacific" on the shelf indefinitely, though it will have 39 in the can. Reasoning is that it doesn't make sense to sell two shows in the syndicated market at the same time, and "Pacific" won't become available until after "Boots" is pretty well sold out. Reason for the simultaneous shooting, however, is the fact that CNP doesn't want to get caught without any new product after "Boots" is sold, as was the case just recently when its "Silent Service" had a quicker sales success than was anticipated.

WGN-TV Grabs Off 337 WB Cartoons

Chicago, July 16.

WGN-TV, beating the local NBC station to the punch, grabbed off Associated Artists Productions, package of 337 Warner Bros. cartoons last week and forced WNBQ again to revise its noontime strategy.

The NBC o&o had received permission from New York a few weeks ago to drop the "Tex and Jinx" show, which reaches Chicago at noon, in favor of a moppet strip. Station has planned to build one around the WB cartoons. Having lost the package, WNBQ is retaining "Tex and Jinx" temporarily until it can device a new show to compete with WGN-TV's high-rated "Lunchtime Little Theatre" and WBKB's "Uncle Johnny Coons."

35,000 ACRES LEASED FOR 'AFRICAN PATROL'

Second production unit has been set up by Kenya Productions Ltd., at Rumurui, 150 miles northwest of Nairobi, East Africa, to lens new "African Patrol" series, according to Gross-Krasne exec v.p. Phil Krasné, currently on scene.

Main base of operation remains at Nairobi, but permanent location base has been set up, complete with airstrip, on 35,000 acres leased from rancher Carr Hartley.

'Official Detective' To Roll at Desilu

"Official Detective," the new half-hour syndication being handled by National Telefilm Associates, goes into reproduction on the Desilu lot within a fortnight. NTA reports it has 27 markets signed for the show.

Mort Briskin, who produced "Sheriff of Cochise" for NTA at Desilu, will also handle "OD." Lee Sholem will derect.

Eva Wolas Exits SG For Jane Wyman Show

Hollywood, Jluy 16.

Eva Wolas has exited Screen Gems where she produced the "Playhouse 90" vidfilms, and will produce the new Jane Wyman telepix series on NBC-TV.

Miss Wolas supervised production of the "90" telepix for CBS-TV at SG. Wyman series will be shot at Revue Productions, headquartered at Republic. Actress will be hostess of the series and star in some segments.

Film 'Big Story' For Syndication; $1,500,000 Budget

After seven years on NBC-TV as a live program, "The Big Story" will be filmed and syndicated next season. Pyramid Productions, package's owner, and Official Films have teamed to do 39 half-hours starring Burgess Meredith as host-narrator.

Production budget for 39 black-and-white shows is $1,500,000, Official reports. Official has already closed with WABD, New York, and WTTG, Washington, both DuMont stations, for lease of the package. Another deal was closed with KTLA, L. A., the Paramount station, which until recently was operated by DuMont.

The three orders in advance of production brought $250,000 into the Pyramid-Official till, Official said.

Pall Mall sponsored "Big Story" as a network entry from the day it began, only recently selling off to other national bankrollers. Show held down Friday slots on NBC-TV.

Other Official syndicated entries for next season are "Vagabond" and "Sword of Freedom," the Edmond Purdom show.

Cal Nat's Kinnies For Businessmen, Training Films, Et Al

NBC's telefilm subsidiary, California National Productions, is developing a new source of business via the sale of kinescope services to businessmen. CNP is calling the process "Calnatron" and offering it as an inexpensive and quick way of providing training films, sales messages and similar film services to industry.

Process is no more than the shooting of a kinnie, but it has the advantage of costing about half as much as regular 16m filming. Theodore H. Marcovic, manager of NBC-TV's Film Service Sales, will head up Calnatron operations, reporting to CNP v.p. H. Weller (Jake) Keever. Kinnies will be shot at network and o&o studio facilities and

DEADLOCK ON NEW CONTRACT

The New York telefilm industry is being seriously affected by a slowdown of many of the city's 2,300 laboratory technicians. Large-scale shift of work to the Coast is considered imminent unless the situation ends.

Telefilm distributors are beginning to have difficulty getting out prints, and one or two of them have already shifted operations to the Coast. Worst hit, it seems, are the producers of tv film commercials in New York, since rapid service is invariably demanded by ad agencies, and the producers can't readily deliver.

Over 20 film laboratories here and local 702 of the Laboratory Technicians of IATSE are deadlocked over a new contract. Work slowdown reportedly began a month ago, within a few days after the old contract between the labs and the union expired. Renegotiation began nearly two months earlier.

Union originally asked for a 32-hour work week. The labs refused to consent to shorten the week eight hours, and the union shifted its demands to a 25% package increase, it was reported, though particulars were not made known to the employer group.

Production Falloff

Falloff in production, and the ensuing problems for the entire industry, is being blamed on the fact that the technicians are not working weekends as they normally do. Moreover, one report has it, the union called a roll call meeting recently, which took men off the job in the middle of the day. Other employers report that a few technicians at a time have not showed up for work since the new negotiations began.

An official spokesman for the employers did not believe that a solution was to be found immediately. Unofficially, a reliable source figured that if there was to be an agreement it would not come before mid-August.

Distribs of both features and half-hours, who normally do their processing in New York, are falling behind in deliveries. Average life of a half-hour print is 10 showings, it is generally thought, and the big turnover of reorders is not being met. Neither, it is said, are first printings on telefilm shows, although one producer, who has most of his stuff done on the Coast, said he got a New York print in two hours the other day.

An unsubstantiated guess is that film processing in New York has fallen off 50% in the past two weeks alone.

The affect on the commercial makers, not fully felt yet, is critical, some tradesters feel. Commercial production lately picked up, after a long period of little or no business. And, of constant worry to New York producers, is the fear of losing more business to Coast competitors, which is already happening because of the delay caused by the union problem. Some New York labs have reportedly rejected commercial orders because of the overnight delivery needs of agencies.

One distrib said, "Prints and negatives are piling up. I'm going out of my mind."

Management spokesman said he offered the union a 10 cents an hour increase several days ago, but the union negotiators rejected the proposal.

Geo. Sidney Asks Showdown On TV Jumping Gun on Film Projects, Assails CBS' Andersonville Tale

By DAVE KAUFMAN

Hollywood, July 16.

Television's industry's "piracy" of motion picture ideas and projects has been assailed by producer-director George Sidney, who asks for a meeting between the two industries to discuss the problems and put an end to tv's jumping the gun on upcoming film projects. TV may be within its legal rights in such actions, but ethically it's way off base, declares Sidney, prexy of the Screen Directors Guild.

Sidney, producer-director of Columbia's upcoming "Andersonville," based on MacKinlay Kantor's best-seller, didn't attempt to conceal his bitterness at CBS-TV's "Climax" recently telecasting "The Trial of Captain Wirz, the Andersonville Jailer," which also dealt with the Civil War prison camp.

"We are planning a $6,000,000 project, and it's jeopardized by a pretty bad tv version. If the people who saw that tv play think that's what the picture will be like, then that's pretty bad. We have rape and prostitution in our picture, for example; our film deals mainly with the camp itself, whereas the tv play dealt with the trial of its commander. (The censorship code is becoming broader and broader, and I don't think we'll have any difficulty with our picture in that respect.)

"First the major studios supplied tv with its old films; then with new tv films. You can't say we're not partners. The movies paid television for the stories they got from tv, although except for 'Marty' I'm sorry they made them. The movies have not operated on a piracy basis, but tv has. TV grabs off material which we have invested a lot of money in. They did this to Warner Bros. when 'Playhouse 90' carried 'The Helen Morgan Story' on CBS, even though Warners had finished a picture about the singer.

A Borrowed Format

Boston, July 16.

TV advertising for films are using the radio-tv pages giving the appearance of ads for actual picture houses. Side by side were ads for "Laura" on WNAC-TV's Late Show, and "Dodge City" on WBZ-TV's Pleasure Playhouse in the Boston Globe.

Both ads used top and bottom lines for station and time, with the typical Hollywood packaged format ad in between. WNAC-TV billed "Laura" as "first Boston telecast." Both ads featured names of the actors: Gene Tierney, Dana Andrews, Clifton Webb, in "Laura"; Errol Flynn, Olivia DeHavilland, Ann Sheridan, in "Dodge City."

It was the first use of regulation picture advertising in the battle of tv films late at night which has broken out in the Boston-Providence territory.

Sutton Reverts To Topdog Status In MCA-TV Shifts

Command of MCA-TV Ltd. has shifted in the past several months. Since Wynn Nathan moved the syndication company's headquarters from Hollywood to New York last fall, he has clearly ended his reign over sales and has been giving up administrative command generally to concentrate on selling in New York.

Functioning command of the company seems to have reverted to David Sutton, who has always had the title of vicepresident with actual command over national telefilm sales and theoretical command over syndication and Nathan. Nathan's sales responsibilities outside of New York were turned over to veep Ray Wild. Wild moved to Chi when Nathan moved to New York, and became head of the field sales force.

Despite the lensing of a new half-hour series, based on Mickey Spillane, the syndication department has shrunk in importance at MCA, it is felt. There is a belief that Nathan, who came to MCA two years ago, when United Television Programs was assimilated by the agency, will eventually move out of syndication, and either concentrate on national sales entirely or move up into the company's category of "freewheeling" executives, who have no definite areas of responsibility.

Col. Barney Oldfield As Host-Narrator On 'War Correspondent'

Hollywood, July 16.

New series, "War Correspondent," has been set by Don Barry as part of his recent telepix lineup with Batjac Productions. Barry will produce-direct and has been promised Defense Dept. cooperation, he reports. Col. Barney Oldfield has been set as host-narrator for series, and initial stanza, "The Ousted Lion," was penned by Oldfield, former Warner flack, and Air Force PRO now stationed in Colorado.

Meanwhile, completed print on "Calamity Jane," another Barry-Batjac project, left over weekend for N. Y. selling rounds, accom-

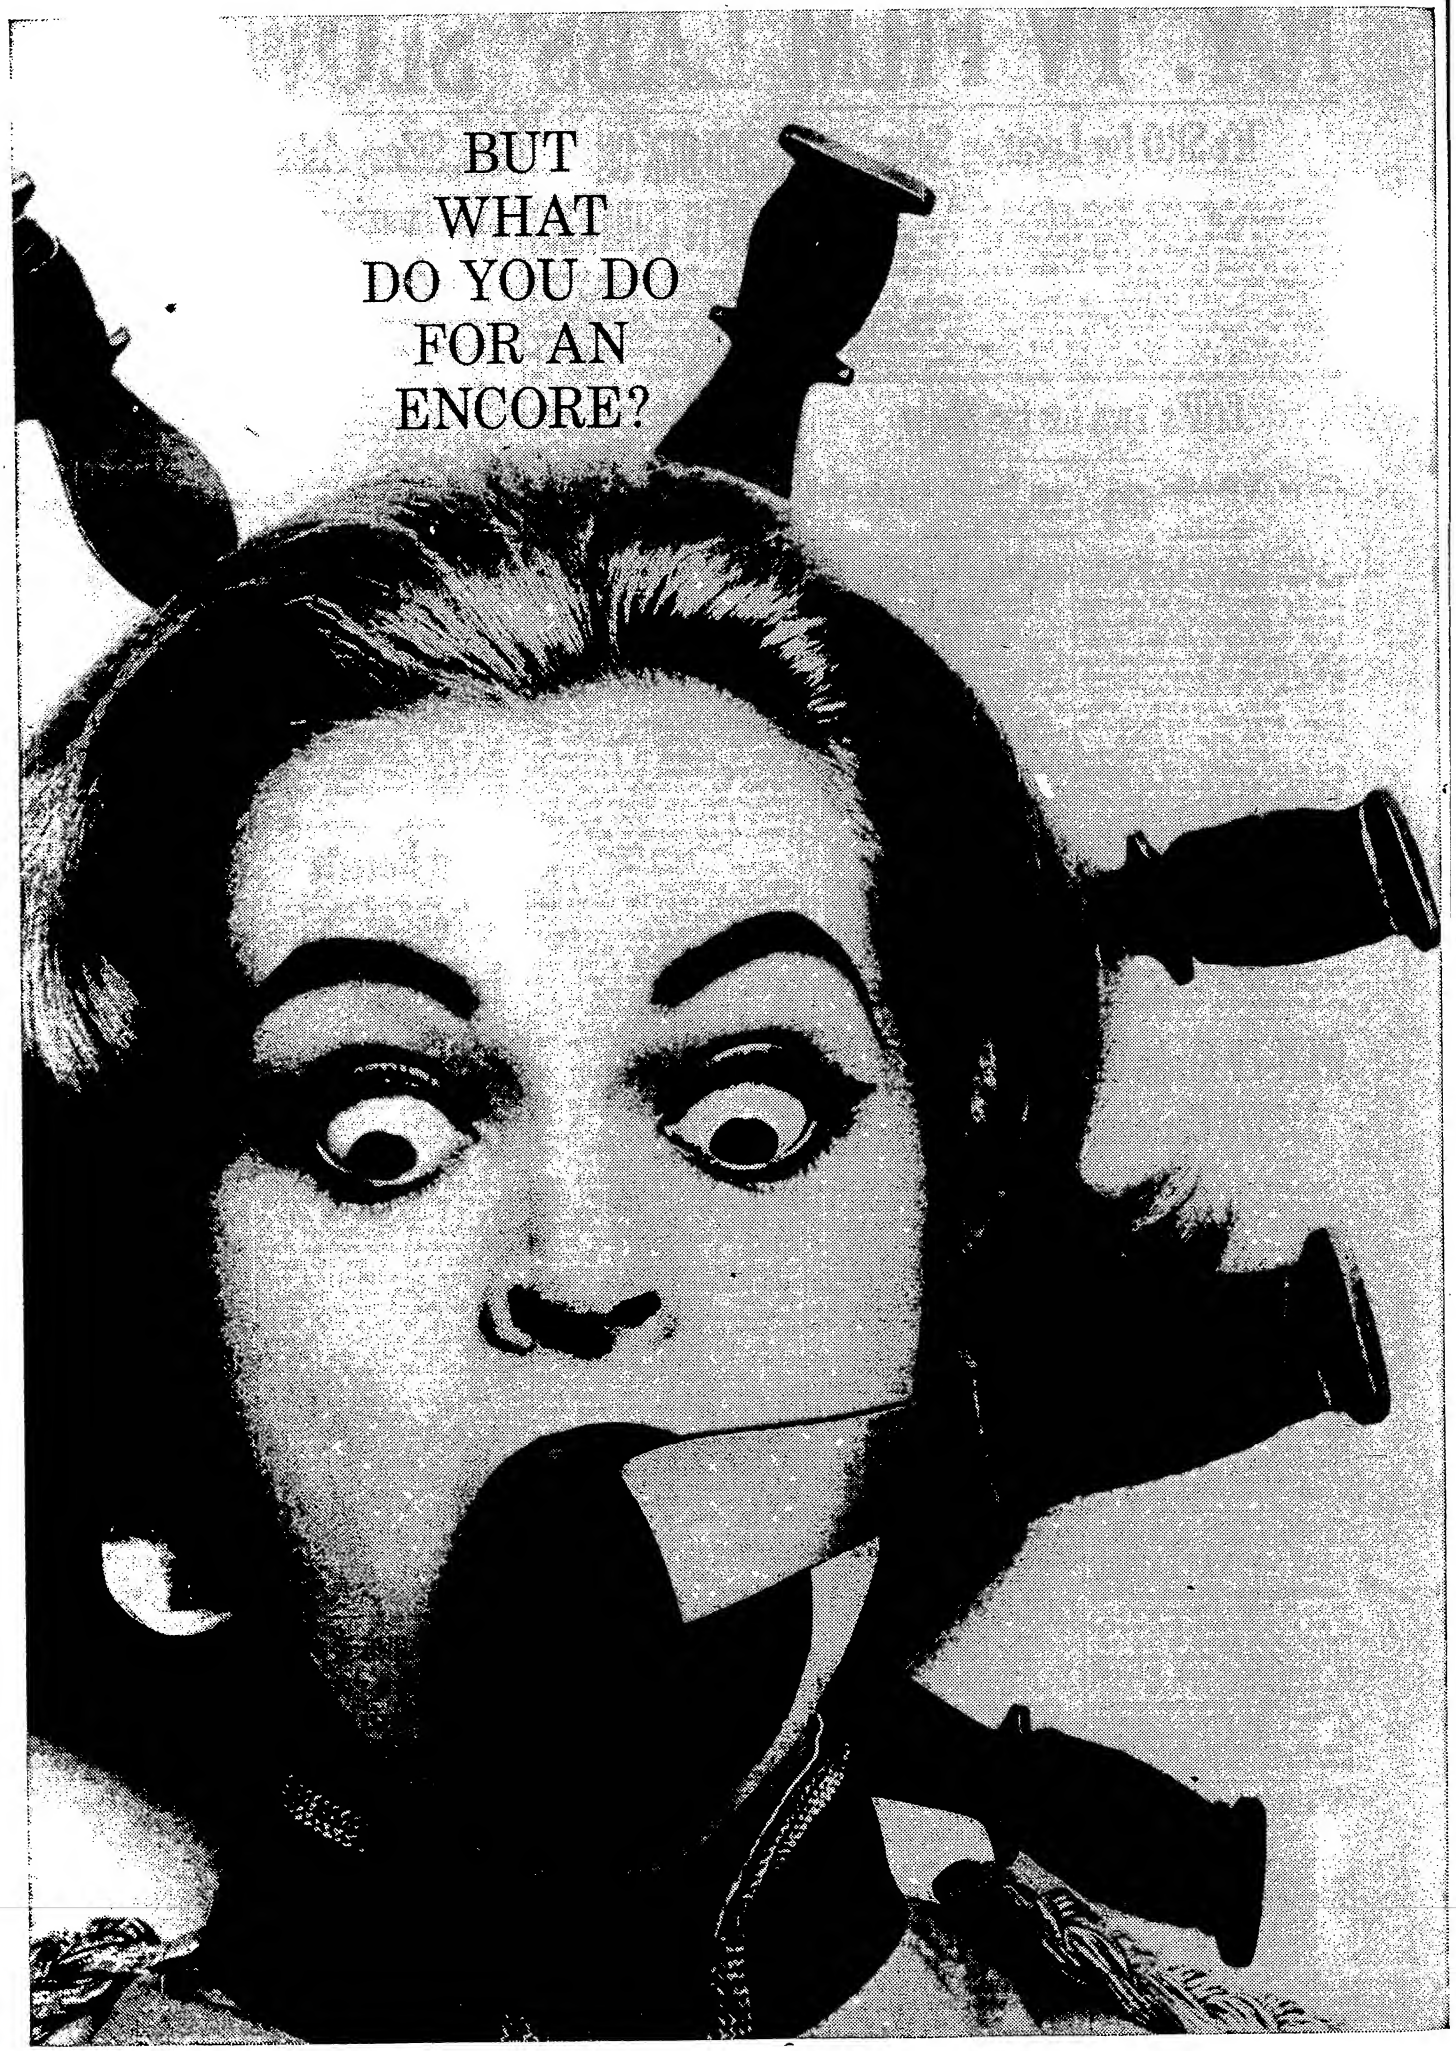
C&C Spinoff Up To Stockholders

C&C plans a spinoff of all beverage, food and manufacturing interests from the television distribution arm, offering stockholders a share in the new wholly owned manufacturing subsidiary for every two owned in C&C as it stands. A proposal to stockholders asked that all non-tv interest be turned over to National Phoenix Industries Inc. and that C&C Super Corp., the current holding operation, have its name changed to C&C Television Corp.



There are 8,178,715 shares outstanding in C&C Super at present. Presently, the company's tv operations, sale of RKO pre-1956 features, is carried on by Matty Fox through Western Television, a C&C division. Other tv subsids in foreign sales.

The soft drink company used Western in the first place to place its own tv advertising, which C&C got in barter for the old pix. Stockholders will meet and vote at the end of July in Delaware.

Herman Rush Exits OF, To Set Up His Own Biz

Herman Rush has quit Official Films after seven years to enter business for himself. Rush, an officer of the distributing company since 1951, the year after he joined it, will not disclose his plans publicly, but it is beleived he intends to set up his own packaging-production company in television.

Resignation becomes effective Aug. 1. Rush is a veep and board member at Official.

ENCORE?

In show business, it's considered one of the tougher propositions. How, for instance, do you follow up a series like "The Silent Service?" Very simple. You produce "Boots and Saddles – the Story of the Fifth Cavalry." It's set in the 1870's, when Indians and Yankees played for keeps instead of pennants. It won't solve a single world problem. It will entertain.

VARIETY - ARB City-By-City Syndicated Film Chart

VARIETY'S weekly chart of city-by-city ratings of syndicated and national spot film covers 40 to 60 cities reported by American Research Bureau on a monthly basis. Cities will be rotated each week, with the 10 top-rated film shows listed in each case, and their competition shown opposite. All ratings are furnished by ARB, based on the latest reports.

This VARIETY chart represents a gathering of all pertinent information about film in each market, which can be used by distributors, agencies, stations and clients as an aid in determining the effectiveness of a filmed show in the specific market. Attention should be paid to time—day and time factors, since sets-in-use and audience composition vary according to time slot, i.e., a Saturday afternoon children's show, with a low rating, may have a large share and an audience composed largely of children, with corresponding results for the sponsor aiming at the children's market. Abbreviations and symbols are as follows: (Adv), adventure; (Ch), children's; (Co), comedy; (Dr), drama; (Doc), documentary; (Mus), musical; (Myst), mystery; (Q), quiz; (Sp), sports; (W), western; (Wom), women's. Numbered symbols next to station call letters represent the station's channel; all channels above 13 are UHF. Those ad agencies listed as distributors rep the national sponsor from whom the film is aired.

The WW (Wallace & Wingate) Circuit

It was inevitable that Diana Barrymore would be subjected to the Mike Wallace "shock treatment" on his Sunday night ABC-TV interview show. As one of the notorious "problem children" of the 20th Century, and with her controversial "Too Much Too Soon" autobiography as the come-on, her appearance was a "natural" as these in-depth closeup interviews go. It's to Miss Barrymore's credit that she handled herself with a finesse that evoked considerable audience sympathy.

Since Miss Barrymore has figuratively washed her dirty linen in public and beat her breasts in confession many times before, it wasn't to be expected that Wallace would find a nonplussed interviewee on his hands or for that matter extract deeper motivations than had prompted her previous outpourings. It was all a thrice-told tale, particularly to the readers of her "sensational" opus, as the whole sordid past of alcoholism, immoralities and three ill-fated marriages were dug up and "dissected," yet it was the manner in which Miss Barrymore comported herself and met the stinging challenges that won for her a clear-cut victory with the viewing public. As her exhibition of eyeblinking and occasional facial ticks suggested adequate evidence of her physical and emotional strains, it was equally apparent that her battle isn't won by a long shot. She's got herself a considerable cheering section.

Meanwhile on Wallace's ex-WABD "Nightbeat" turn, John Wingate is turning in a facile carbon-copy job. He's very positive, at ease and self-confident, with a personal approach that resembles Wallace in both manner and voice. Without being diffident he appears more cognizant of the sensitivities of his subjects. With added practice there's no doubt he'll develop a more personalized and more individual approach.

Last Friday's brace of interviewees included the expert on Exurbia, A. C. Spectorsky, and Lester Velie, billed as reporter, editor and investigator in the field of magazine journalism as well as an expert on labor. Neither of them could be called controversial subjects. In the case of Spectorsky, he was in his element when discussing his theories on Exurbia, but this is by now a well-hashed subject. There's little more of a provocative nature to tell. When Wingate tried to put him on the spot on his associate publisher status for Playboy mag, Spectorsky's replies were cagy although the inferences to be drawn by his lack of rebuttal were rather telling.

As for reporter Velie, familiar especially to Reader's Digest fans, it was just a case of an able, highly-regarded craftsman giving adequate evidence why no publication has ever lost a libel suit resulting from his bylined product. If Wingate thought he could stir up any sensationalism, he chose the wrong target. Rose.

Foreign TV Reviews

PERSONAL APPEARANCE
With Alan Young, Guylaine Guy, The Peter Knight Singers and Orchestra, others Director: Philip Jones
30 Mins.; Tues., 8:30
Granada TV, from Manchester

There's been a general outcry in the British press about the number of films and artists imported from the States to appear on tv, but Alan Young, returned to the country of his birth after many years to fill a regular 30-minute weekly spot on commercial tv, has a brand of humor that cannot be typed to any one nationality. Granada TV, the originating programmers, have, in the past, run several situation comedy type shows, but this one promises to beat the lot.

From his first tv airing, Young put himself into the category of artist that takes his time to build up a reputation as a funny man. His gimmick of strongly under playing makes him a slow starter with British audiences.

Pattern for the show was built round a sketch on the events of Young's air trip to England, with a break for a guest artist spot, which, on this occasion, was filled by French recording star Guylaine Guy. The sketch opened in the New York air terminal, where Young, about to make his first flight, got involved with an airport clerk about take off time, and then went into a funny routine involving a coffee vending machine that wouldn't stop working. The plot progressed onto the plane where normal takeoff procedure supplied a vast amount of comedy for Young who did everything wrong. Capers with annoyed passengers, especially a harrassed business man in the next seat during dinner, were in a high class comedy bracket.

Miss Guy, a vivacious brunet with a sizzling personality, came over well with a rendering of "That's What Makes Paris Paree," strongly supported by the Peter Knight Singers and orch. From the first airing of this show it appears that the future guests spots will only supply an incidental break for Young to recover his breath.

TURNABOUT
With Roy Ward Dickson, Pamela Russell, others
Director: Audrey Starrett.
30 Mins., Thurs., 8 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion from London.

The popularity of quiz games on commercial tv, where, unlike their counterparts on the state web, there's money at stake, has proved to be a major audience draw, and with four new programs of this type ushered in for the summer schedule, programmers are assuring themselves of regular viewers.

But this Associated-Rediffusion version of a Canadian quiz show, had better pull something out of the bag pretty quickly if it wants to offer any competition to the others. Quizmaster Roy Ward Dickson, a fast talking Canadian, had his work cut out to smooth over production faults which should never have occurred. It was the production that stopped the show from making any impact on its first airing, though the game itself has some interesting and amusing potentials.

Contestants were shown photographs of places which they had to identify, and were awarded small cash prizes for every correct answer. If they successfully answered 50% of the questions, they were allowed to choose two words from a dictionary for Dickson to spell. His spelling prowess was stumped on only one occasion and the winning contestant was allowed to dip her hand into a jar of silver coins, each worth 35 cents, and pull out as many as she could at one time. The actual amount was never disclosed, and was obviously an opportunity missed to start another competition among jackpot winners. Top prize won by any contestant, apart from the jackpot, was $42. Dickson as a high powered emcee did his job well despite the hitches which put wrong photographs on the screen and listed words he had not been asked to spell. Pamela Russell provided an attractive break as the girl with the dictionary. Bary.

CRISS CROSS QUIZ
With Jeremy Hawk, others
Director: David Main
30 Mins., Mon., Wed., Thurs., 8 p.m.
Granada TV, from Manchester

"Criss Cross Quiz" is the British version of "Tic Tac Dough." It's a show with a great deal of appeal, so much so, that Granada TV is airing it three times a week and attracting large audiences. The British public is still comparatively new to quiz shows which involve fairly large amounts of money, and this one has the lure of no upper limit.

The program is good light entertainment, with Jeremy Hawk doing a commendable job as emcee. Basic ingredients of the game are that two contestants compete against each other to complete a line diagonally, vertically or horizontally, with either noughts or crosses by answering questions on subjects of their own choice which are set out in nine squares. The winner of one game is challenged by a new competitor. If the new contestant wins, his prize money is deducted from the total of the other. Most won so far has been just under $1,750.

The game creates a fair amount of tension with players battling to stop one another from completing a line. Bary.

With Gordon Sinclair, Tobi Robins, Alex Barris, Scott Young; moderator, Winston Barron Writer: John Aylesworth
30 Mins., Mon. 9:30 p.m.
LEVER BROS.
CBC-TV, from Toronto
(Young & Rubicam)

Though it's reminiscent of Ken Murray's weekly "Where Were You?" series, complete with narrator's chair for on-screen newsreel shots of the period, "Front Page Challenge" tees off as a good summer quiz show which should have the viewers guessing as to what Canadian news story—in the past half-century—held the interest of international newspaper readers. Series will be sent across the Dominion for full tv network treatment in the ensuing 13 weeks by the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. There will also be some 200 in the Toronto studio audience.

Panel consists of hearty extrovert Gordon Sinclair; the quiet but discerning Scott Young; Alex Barris for the ad libs; Tobi Robins for her good looks and off-the-shoulder evening gown. The moderator is Winston Barron, off-screen voice of Paramount News for the past 15 years, and publicity manager for Paramount Pictures in Canada. The three men on the panel are staffers on three separate Toronto dailies.

On fine physical buildup on tiers, with visiting participants in the news story perched behind the panel, stories on opening "Front Page Challenge" ranged from the Moose River gold-mine cave-in of 1936 to the birth of the Dionne quints in 1934 and the recent vice-probe in Montreal which saw the election of a new mayor and the tossing out of the chief of police and his henchmen. Present as participants in the trio of newspaper events—but behind the panel for questioning — were Alfred Scadding, sole survivor of the Maritimes mines disaster; Mme. Alex Legros, midwife deliverer of the first three of the Dionne quints before Dr. Alan Dafoe arrived; and Mayor John Drapeau of Montreal, who won the reform election in Montreal. (Each got $100 and expenses).

Only question to viewers was why the panel was puzzled when some of the panel members had, themselves, worked on the news stories; but "Front Page Challenge" starts off as exciting to the trans-Canada newspaper reader McStay.

OUR NATION'S ROOTS
With Profs. Ormond J. Drake, Thomas Robinson; Don Horan, Fritz Kraft
Producer: Nazaret Cherkezian
Director: Neal Finn
30 Mins., Sat.; 2 p.m.
Sustaining
WCBS-TV, N. Y.

Second 13-week series of this instructive half-hour presented by WCBS-TV's public affairs dept. in cooperation with New York U. and the Educational Television and Radio Center, Ann Arbor, Mich., went before the cameras Saturday afternoon (13) to relate a fresh episode in the growth of America through contributions of its immigrants.

As with the initial 13-week cycle, "Our Nation's Roots" still has a strong classroomish atmosphere which may discourage attention of some viewers. This was most evident in the narration of Prof. Ormond J. Drake who acted as guide in the subject at hand, "The Immigrant Serves His Country—The Civil War." He recited a bushel of historical facts which took the immigrant all the way from the War Between the States to World War II.

An effort at dramatization was made through use of Don Horan, as an Irish soldier, and Fritz Kraft, who portrayed a German, in the Union forces. But unfortunately the small sets hampered their movements and the actors' contribution was largely limited to monologs in which each expounded on individual philosophies, why they were fighting, etc.

It would appear that the inability of the producers of "Our Nation's Roots" to make their brainchild more colorful and dramatic stems from a limited budget. But while no viewer expects the Battle of Bull Run or Sherman's March Through Georgia to be re-created in the studio, there's no reason why an occasional film could not be utilized to illustrate a point more graphically.

This series, incidentally, is done live in New York, and is distributed later via tv film recordings to educational tv stations throughout the country. Project is partially financed by the Educational Television and Radio Center. Regulars on the program are Profs. Drake and Thomas Robinson. Gilb.

THE BIG BEAT
With Alan Freed, Ferlin Huskey, Billy Williams Quartet, Don Rondo, Everly Bros. (2), Johnnie & Joe, Connie Francis, Sunny Gale, Sam (The Man) Taylor, Big Al Sears.
Producer: Frederick Heider
Director: Cort Steen
30 Mins.; Fri., 10 p.m.
Sustaining
ABC-TV from New York

Rock 'n' Roll which got its great impetus through radio and diskings, has now gone into the world of video, with the great white father of the moment, Alan Freed, helming a weekly half-hour on ABC. In his initial venture as a steady show, Freed has collected an unusually large group for a 30-minute session. It's one number and off for most of the act, with the mode of selection governed generally by the amount of disk sales.

Thus the Everly Bros. became the stars of the initial show. These youngsters are a pair of hillbillies who clicked with their recording of "Bye Bye Love" and at the end were presented a gold disk denoting a million in record sales, for which they did an extra tune.

This seems to be the keystone of this show. Because of the tremendous disk sale, these kids are stars before they are performers. Of course, there are so few places for them to get sufficient seasoning, and naturally, to put them on before network audiences is neither the place nor the time to give these kids the necessary experience.

Everly Bros., like so many of their colleagues in the hillbilly, rock 'n' roll, and the disk biz in general, have something different to offer as disembodied sounds on wax, but in the flesh, they are from Major Bowes.

The same applies to some others on this show, namely Don Rondo, Johnnie & Joe and Connie Francis. Johnnie & Joe are a pleasantly sounding Negro boy and girl team, and the others offer little that's vital. Ferlin Huskey is another matter, although working like an amateur, there's a lot of interest in both his voice and his rendition. The professionals on this show are Sunny Gale, who shows some knowhow of what to do in front of an audience, and the Billy Williams Quartet, who know their business from way back.

The orchestra, with Sam (The Man) Taylor and Big Al Sears, in their spot, show interesting musical patterns.

According to accepted forms of show biz, there's lots and lots wrong with this show. The repetition of sounds, lack of relief from any other form of entertainment, the camera crews picking up the wrong faces in the audience are all drawbacks that should make a show-wise network exec cringe. But this show is appealing to the juve tastes, and at the moment this is what they are buying.

And as for Freed, he works like the juveniles' answer to Ed Sullican. Jose.

CONCEPT
With Marciarose
30 Mins.; Sat. 1:30 p.m.
WRCV-TV, Philadelphia

New educational session is produced in cooperation with the U. of Pennsylvania to show the workings of a university, presumably to non-grads. The hostess, billed simply as "Marciarose" with one eye on the TelePrompter explained the self-conscious title "Concept" as the intent "to explore the world of ideas." The first half was given over to two doctors from the Veterinary School and their four-footed friends, against an awkwardly conceived set.

Marcia and a vet sat on a wooden park bench while some doelike creatures were sandwiched between them and the backdrop drapes. The guest explained the animals were ruminants—a word which curiously bewildered the former "Jr. Press Conference" panelist. Following the definition she settled back and listened to the prof talk briefly on one of the school's research programs—the transmission of diseases from animals to man. Of interest was the demonstration of the use of an oxygen tent for relief of heat prostration in animals. "Miss Marcia," as she is sometimes called, is a looker who seems more at ease than her guests.

Second half, according to the hostess," brings "a change of pace as we switch to the Civil War." Dr. Roy Nichols, Pulitzer-prize winning historian, could certainly have delivered his theories on the Civil War without extraneous prodding. The War Between the States has become again a subject of mounting interest. It could more profitably be discussed by experts of equal caliber and information under such conditions would rate a series. Gagh.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

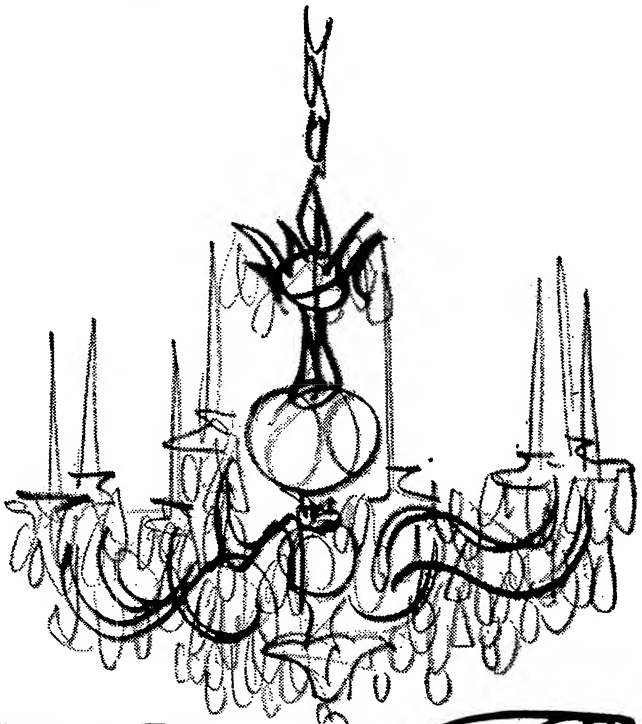
Studio One

Good farce, for some reason, is one of the toughest nuts for television writers to crack, but a gent with the improbable name of Romeo Muller came up with a nifty script in "Love Me to Pieces" Monday (15) on CBS-TV's "Studio One." Though only mildly diverting for the first two acts, the play had a madcap finale that rivaled in pacing and zaniness anything the best of bedroom farce has to offer—and "Love Me" even used a bathroom.

A takeoff on the rock 'n' roll music business, "Love Me" concerned a teenager who writes a song that somehow lands a recording deal, but with the proviso that the teenager arrange and sing the number. When she and her businesslike brother get poison ivy, the session is held in their home.

That's where that finale comes in, with an instrumental group (including a harpsichord installed in the bathroom to achieve the echo chamber effect), the girl and a vocal combo downstairs in the livingroom, a distraught and bewildered mother wandering around, a father just returned from out-of-town popping up in the middle, and assorted and sundry characters all over the joint. Withal, Muller was able to get in some choice lines, as when the recording director yells upstairs to turn the bathroom faucet off and one of the musicians shouts back, "You mean we gotta drink this stuff straight?"

Producer Norman Felton and director James MacAllen dressed the show up with a topflight cast. Bennye Gatteys had just the right touch of wacky adolescence as the girl, while William Hickey, as the business-minded brother, showed a proper devotion to the coin of the realm. Jerome Cowan and Parker McCormack were excellent as the helpless parents; Cliff Norton and Ned Glass were fine as a pair of hapless music publishers; Woodrow Parfrey was topflight as an effeminate arranger-conductor and Norman Feld, Ralph Stantley and Rene Riano were picturesque minor characters. The Upbeats played the vocal combo.



Script is written around a real rock 'n' roller, "Love Me to Pieces," recorded on Columbia by Jill Corey. Show should help the disk, which curiously enough is a catchy tune, as rock 'n' roll tunes go. Chan.

Goodyear Playhouse

"Backwoods Cinderella" was the name given the faulty attempt at laughter on "Goodyear Playhouse" last Sunday (14). Be reminded that this is what they call "summertime television," but author Peggy Lamson works in the winter, too-so-do Martha Scott and director Paul Stanley.

Looks like Miss Lamson picked up the discarded negatives of "Funny Face," the recent Fred Astaire-Audrey Hepburn flick, and turned them into a songless, danceless, charmless hour of mirthless tv. Miss Scott, who is more used to getting her teeth into a wintertime role, wasn't very comfortable as the summery fashion mag editor who was "inspired" to convert a dumpy Kentuck teenager into a delirious and attractive Cinderella. Abigail Kellogg, unfortunately for the advancement of the theme, was the same girl before and after. She and her Ky. kinfolk, Peg Hillias, Crahan Denton, Michael Allen, Tuesday Weld, William Traylor and her dodo boyfriend, Larry Hagman, all northern trained types, slid in and out of some of the most shoddy backwoods accents heard in many a season—including summer. But dialects apart, there was not a one of Miss Lamson's characters with enough breadth to make do on an early evening summer juve show.

In short the show was terrible, and to make it complete somebody dug up a thoroughly grating guitar arrangement which persisted in the background of the story. Network, which didn't have the musical credits readily available, volunteered that the regular musical director was on vacation. Art.

BRA

VO!

A few weeks ago, the curtain came down on the last of this season's television performances by the NBC Opera Company. The season was a triumph for viewers, music lovers, and for television itself. Four operas-in-English brought millions of new fans into direct and delightful contact with the operatic form.

From critics all across the country came a chorus of rave reviews. Here is just a sampling:

Variety: "The Opera Company has set a standard of what television can accomplish in the way of pioneering new avenues of entertainment and enlightenment . . . easily (TV's) Sunday best."

Albert Goldberg, Los Angeles Times: (La Traviata) "It is hard to understand how an English-speaking audience could ever again be content to listen to this work in a foreign language, or for that matter, be satisfied with the traditional methods of operatic staging."

Howard Taubman, New York Times: (La Grande Breteche) "...an impressive production ...cast was chosen with customary high standards . . . singing and acting merged indivisibly."

Time, January 21, 1957: (War and Peace) "A major musical event...a notable achievement."

Paul Hume, Washington Post: (War and Peace) "...a vastly commendable piece of work in every way, and a credit to its performers, to NBC, and to the television industry today."

Ben Gross, New York Daily News: "Put down 'War and Peace' as one of the memorable events on television."

Daily Variety, Hollywood: (La Boheme) "A brilliant slice of coaxial culture . . . prime entertainment . . . color never looked better."

The acclaim came not for the TV performances alone. This was the year that NBC made the unprecedented move of sending full-scale opera-in-English on tour*—over 100 artists visiting 47 cities. The tour, too, was a triumph!

The NBC Opera Company will return this Fall with even greater opportunities for Americans to know and enjoy opera. The Company's tour will be expanded to 57 cities. Already scheduled for the new television season is the world TV premiere of Francis Poulenc's "Dialogues of the Carmelites." NBC's operas-in-English will continue to bring the country new excitement and new high standards for musical entertainment.

Trendex Top 10

Evidence of the summer shift in shows and viewing habits is in evidence in the Trendex Top 10 for July. Top three shows are late-hour entries—after 10 p.m., while the only show in the group to air earlier than 9 is Ed Sullivan. "I Love Lucy" is missing from the group because it's off for the summer. CBS, incidentally, took nine out of 10. Survey covers the week of July 1-7.

NBC Board Names Kintner & Sacks

Bob Kintner, NBC-TV exec v.p. over programs & sales, and Manie Sacks, the web's v.p. in charge of network programs, were elected to the NBC board of directors at the board's monthly meeting last Friday (12).

At the same time, Coca-Cola topper William E. Robinson resigned both from the NBC board and the RCA board due to the pressure of his duties at the soft drink company. Charles M. Odorizzi, RCA exec v.p. for sales and services, will succeed Robinson on the RCA board.

No Summer Doldrums For Ashley-Steiner On Scripting Deals

Traffic on the Ashley-Steiner agenting front seems to be running against the force of summer gravity, particularly on setting scripting assignments for tv dramatic vehicles. All of which takes a bit of doing at a time when dramatic entries are going one way—downward.

Activity is particularly strong on the NBC-TV "Matinee" front, where a flock of A-S writers are currently roosting, as witness: Bill Altman's "Forbidden Search," Lee Pogostin's "Freedom Comes Later"; Abby Mann's "The President's Child Bride"; Frank Barton's "Night Train to Chicago," Harry Junkin's "Boys Will Be Men," Tony Spinner's "The Ivy Curtain" and "The Iceman," Frank de Felitta's "The Fable of Honest Harry," Alvin Boretz's "The Last Hour" and "Heed the Falling Sparrow," Dick Berg's "Long and Terrible Day" and Bob Dozier's "Finchley's Fan Club."

Set for the Wednesday night Kraft dramatics are Harry Junkin's "Smart Boy," Alfred Brenner's "The Hawthorne School," Don Ettlinger's 'Sing A Song of Sixpence" and Abby Mann's "Tuesdays and Thursdays"

Set for U.S. Steel's Theatre Guild stanza are Irving Gaynor's "Never Know the End" and Alfred

FEDDERSON'S 'WIFE' AS DAYTIME STRIP

Hollywood, July 16.

Don Fedderson has firmed a deal with ABC-TV for five half-hours weekly daytime of "Do You Trust Your Wife?" He's also negotiating with the network for a nighttime series of the show with Edgar Bergen resuming as emcee.

Latter would not appear in the daytime strip, Fedderson now screening candidates.

Wm. Morris, Framer Tie

William Morris office has signed to represent Walt Framer for four of his new packages, "Winabuck," "Million Dollar Family," "Calling on America" and "Behind Closed Doors." All are quiz formats, with two of them involving home viewers as contestants as well as studio audience.

Framer roster currently comprises "Strike It Rich" in its 11th year, "Big Payoff" in its sixth, and "Lady Luck" due to start in the fall on ABC-TV.

Max Factor Buys Mon. ABC-TV Time

Max Factor has taken 8 to 8:30 Mondays over ABC-TV, replacing R. J. Reynolds which also had an order in for the time period. Meantime, Reynolds is eyeing 8:30 to 9:30 Sundays on the same web.

The cig house, after innumerable flashes of hot and cold over Don Sharpe's filmed "Wire Service," is said to be considering retention of the stanza in its 60-minute form, to insert behind Kaiser Aluminum's "Maverick." Idea is to back to back two adventure programs, with "Service" shifting more along the lines of a modern-dress actioner, alternating as stars Dane Clark and Brian Kieth.

Max Factor, unable to get a half-hour edition of "Service" due to the renewed interest of Reynolds, had already been considering "Do You Trust Your Wife?" or "Those Whiting Girls" as its regular fall ABC entry. However, the network reports, those shows are not necessarily the final choices.

Ideal Toy's Parade Coin

Ideal Toy Co. is returning to NBC-TV for the third successive year as sponsor of the web's coverage of the Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade on Nov. 28. Ideal will sponsor half the one-hour remote.

'WAY OUT IN FRONT!

Oldtime steamboat races along our Ohio River Valley were often close, and hazardous to put your money on. Quite different from today's audience race among TV stations. When you put your money on WSAZ-TV, you've picked THE winner. Survey after survey gives the title to this 69-county giant — and the latest Nielsen is no exception. Consider these WSAZ-TV margins over the next-best station:

95,670 more homes per month
99,430 more homes per week
101,130 more daytime homes, weekdays
100,580 more nighttime homes, weekdays

WSAZ-TV steams with comparable popularity across a four-state domain wherein almost $4,000,000,000 buying power awaits advertisers who like to ride with the winner. The gangway is down at any Katz office.

Inside Stuff—TV Films

Telefilm publicists have come into their own. They are now members of a fraternal order called the "156 Market Club," (a self-ribbing title at the number of markets touted to have bought every skein), and have initiated monthly luncheon meetings.

The charter gives each member the title of senior veepee, with Jerry Franken, of Television Programs of America, going under the moniker of "hog-caller" as the loosely-knit organization's topper. Plans call for the printing of a trade paper in which any rejected stories get printed, the production of an 8m pilot film, a western with the press agent as the hero and a composite tv editor as the heavy. Awards will be given for the worst live tv show monthly, perhaps daily, and the best swindle sheet for the month.

The recent review in VARIETY of an Overseas Press Club telefilm show out of Birmingham, England, credited Frank Jerome as the correspondent from whose file the story was taken. Correct name is Frank Jerome Riley, then with the European News Service of the New York Times and now with the American Weekly.

Desilu Leasing Space For Winchell Series

Hollywood, July 16.

In deal set last week, Desilu Productions is leasing space at Paramount Sunset lot, with Desilu's "The Walter Winchell File" to go before cameras there this week. Additionally, Desilu is dickering with 20th Fox for space on Fox Western Ave. lot, but what series would go there isn't known yet.

It'sunderstood that as part of deal with Paramount Sunset, Desilu will get use of parent Paramount lot on Marathon St. for exteriors, and will use Par Sunset only for interiors.

Bert Granet produces "Winchell"; Jerry Thorpe directs.

KTTV'S 2-A-NIGHT GRIND ON METRO PIX

Hollywood, July 16.

Twice-a-night grind policy on backlog of old Metro pix has been instituted on KTTV. New policy is part of programming shakeup, which finds Jackson Wheeler, post-midnight pic jockey since station's start in 1949, moving over to afternoon spot, vice departed Norma Gilchrist.

In new evening lineup, first showing of the Metro feature will start about 10 p.m. and will run unhosted. Del Moore assumes hosting chores for second run, slated after midnight. Moore will emphasize entertainment personality interviews as part of his format.

'Bush Pilot' 3d Telefilm Series Set for Canada

Third telefilm series for the U.S. market is about to go into production in Canada. Bernard Van Marken, a Canadian producer, starts "Bush Pilot" in August. Television Programs of America started "Tugboat Annie' there Monday (15) and Budge Crawley is about to start on his "Royal Canadian Mounted Police" series.

Evidently, excellent location availabilities and a desire to come as near as possible to assuring sales in both the U.S. and Canada has offset what were reportedly poor production facilities in Canada. Word of an equipment shortage hit New York when "Last of the Mohicans" was being lensed north of the border.

Van Marken has hired a 75-mile tract—apparently at a song—on which to shoot his series. Larry Doheny will direct it.

Van Marken is in the U.S. to cast his leads. "Annie" is being shot outside Toronto.

Huge Metro Lot Resources Lend Class to Enders' Satevepost Series

Hollywood, July 16.

Robert J. Enders org, currently in fifth week of shooting on "Best of the Post" teleseries, on MGM lot, is tying in background shooting for series with firms commitment to make some 60 documentary and industrial films this year. "Post" producer Robert Friend and assistant Lew Ciannelli disclose that within next few weeks, two crews departing for Europe to lens a documentary for the Air Force will also shoot color background footage for the series. Process has been going on since series started to roll, according to Friend, with Enders crew shooting background stuff in East for use in telepix.

Sidelight on current shooting at Metro finds thet telepix outfit suffering almost an embarrassment of riches. With huge resources of Metro lot available to Enders outfit, last week unit used 18 "major" sets in a 25-minute telepic. Next week unit will use huge backdrop from "Something of Value" for another segment.

Series is a 50-50 proposition between Enders outfit, which shifted over from pioneer live video into the documentary-industrial field several years back, and the Saturday Evening Post. Post supplies story material from its files and Enders org is color filming, with view to a net sale next season. Show is budgeted roughly in the $45,00 per-segment class, with color adding about $7,500 to each half-hour telefilm. Thirty-nine episodes are slated, on a one-day rehearsal, three-day shooting schedule.

Metro has no piece of the deal; only rents below-line facilities.

High proportion of budget goes into adaptation, with such scripters as Lew Meltzer (who adapted "Man With the Golden Arm" for the screen), S. S. Schweitzer, John Dunkel, Gabrielle Upton, Leo Lieberman, George Lefferts, and Max Wilk assigned to various segments. Much of writing is done in East, to be shot here, according to Friend.

Hub's WHDH-TV Eyes Bundle of Par Features

Boston, July 16.

More tv feature films for Hub area are on the horizon with new Channel 5, WHDH, expected on the air before the year's end, contracted for ABC and undoubtedly a Paramount film package to go with the deal. With Channel 5 on ABC; WNAC-TV, CBS; and WBZ-TV, NBC, everything looks even steven with the three Hub tv stations busy setting up promosh deals for the three-way competish now upcoming.

In the meantime, WMUR-TV, Channel 9, Manchester, N.H., ABC-TV affiliation, is expected to win its request to FCC to move its transmitter closer to Boston. Odds are the N.H. station will then drop its ABC-TV affiliation, become an indie operation with films and locally live shows.

SG's World Rights On Hellinger Pix

Screen Gems has purchased world television rights to two pictures produced by the late Mark Hellinger, "Brute Force" and "The Naked City." Deal was set through Hellinger's estate. Both films were distributed via Universal-International, but with ownership reverting to Hellinger.

"Brute Force," released in 1947, starred Burt Lancaster and Hume Cronyn, while "Naked City," released in 1948 and starring Barry Fitzgerald, was a double Academy Award winner. Screen Gems will make the films available it its next feature package. Deal was negotiated by Jerry Hyams, Screen Gems director of syndication sales.

Monsanto Returns to TV With Ambitious CBS Science Series

Monsanto Chemical Co. is re-entering television next fall with sponsorship of "Conquest," a new CBS-TV series of hourlong specials on science. Monsanto has committed for 10 of the hour shows to be spaced over two seasons, with four next season starting in October and six in the 1958-59 season.

Programs, to be produced by the web's public affairs department, will be slotted in the Sunday 5 to 6 p.m. period, preempting "Seven Lively Arts." Present schedule calls for one show next October, three more next spring, three in the fall of '58 and three more in the spring of '59, with the possibility of additional shows after that.

Each program will deal with current happenings in science, via a science newsreel, a biographical salute to a leading living scientist, an award to a "junior" scientist and special features. Program is being done in association with the National Academy of Sciences and the American Assn. for the Advancement of Science. Michael Sklar, out of the web's public affairs department, will produce. Host hasn't been decided upon yet.

"Conquest" purchase brings Monsanto back into network television after a year's absence, but on a different basis from before. When the giant chemical outfit was in tv via "Warner Bros. Presents," it was to push its ALL detergent, which since has been sold to Lever Bros. The "Conquest" sponsorship will be strictly of the institutional variety, since Monsanto no longer has a straight consumer product to advertise but wants to continue keeping its name before the public a la duPont and Dow.

"Conquest" will be used as a public relations and scientist recruitment program by Monsanto as well, with part of the sales agreement involving Monsanto's rights to prints of the show after the telecast for exhibition before educational, civic and industrial groups.

Deal was set via Gardner agency of St. Louis.

WGMS' HI-FI SHOW

Washington, July 16.

WGMS, the "Good Music Station," will again stage Washington's High Fidelity Music Show in 1958.

Hi-Fi show is slated for the Shoreham Hotel, March 14-16 next. Last year's show, also at the Shoreham, had 50 exhibitors.

N.Y. Post Dickering Harriet Van Horne As Tuck's Replacement

New York Post is seeking a replacement for Jay Nelson Tuck as its television columnist-critic and has offered the post to Harriet Van Horne, of the N. Y. World-Telegram & Sun. Offer to Miss Van Horne came directly from Post publisher Dorothy Schiff, and includes a deal for syndication to other papers via the Post-Hall Syndicate, which the Post controls.

Miss Horne hasn't made up her mind, yet, and doesn't expect to so until sometime next week. She's discussed the situation with Roy Howard, head of the Scripps-Howard chain, and W-T&S m.e. Lee Wood, and they're working on the possibility of extending her column throughout the S-H chain.

Miss Van Horne has been with the Telegram for 14 years and says she doesn't want to leave, except for the fact that the Post offer is so attractive. Post a couple of years back shifted Tuck from night city editor over to the television beat but now apparently feels it wants Tuck in another spot. Tuck said nobody has said anything to him about it at the Post.

Gallup Re: Radio, TV & the Press

San Francisco, July 16.

Only one out of five adults gets his news exclusively from newspapers today, George Gallup, director of the American Institute of Public Opinion, told the annual convention of the American Society of Newspaper Editors last week.

Gallup was making his first preliminary report on a several-months "Study of Public Attitudes Toward the Press."

During the course of the study, he found:

1) Some 41 million U.S. homes today have TV sets, while 39 million get a daily newspaper—radio has long since surpassed both figures;

2) "Readers were asked, if they had only 15 minutes to get the news, how they would prefer to get it. Television and radio won three to one, because, most said, broadcast news is more understandable";

3) Almost no one wanted advertising on tv and radio, but a large majority said ads were the most useful part of a daily paper.

Gallup pointed out that the dailies, radio and tv are in "a battle for time and attention that never ceases."

He claimed newspapers still reach more searchers for news than either radio or tv, citing these statistics:

a) Only one of 10 persons fails to read the newspaper;
b) Two of 10 fail to see tv on any given day;
c) More than three of 10 fail to listen to the radio on any given day.

But he told the editors a "new editorial conception" is needed to meet increasing competition from radio, tv and magazines.

CBS' 'Kangaroo' Pouch Swelling

Trio of sponsorship deals is giving CBS-TV some hope that its "Captain Kangaroo" stanza may at long last emerge as at least a partially black-ink proposition. "Kangaroo" is one of the all-time trade puzzlers—show has high ratings, critical and parental acclaim and low rates, but has struck a virtual blank these past couple of years on the sponsorship front.

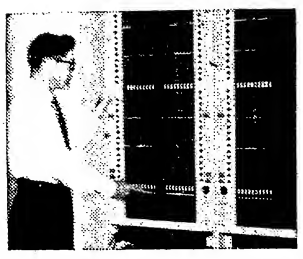
The sponsor problem—due primarily, the web suspects, to a high percentage of moppet viewers and a low adult viewership—has been a major headache to the web, since it feels it can't drop a programming winner yet must find some way of getting some money into the show. Several meetings have been held in the past few weeks to examine the possibility of an all-out research-promotion drive on the show, with the research end concentrating in particular on mail-pull and special sales appeal tests on the show. If these, assuming they prove successful, don't attract sponsors, the feeling was the web would have to make some early-morning changes.

But in the past week, Luden's Candy moved in with a 26-week order, via J. M. Mathes, for a Saturday quarter-hour, and Brown Shoe Co. ordered a special pre-school campaign on the show. Both are repeats from early last season. Gold Seal Co. (Glass Wax), via Campbell-Mithun, is also taking a short ride. So that while the new business is hardly sufficient to put the show on its feet, it has brightened the picture at CBS considerably.

Mike Todd in Mpls. For CBS Film Footage On 'This Is My Home Town'

Minneapolis, July 16.

Mike Todd made his last week's local visit in connection with the opening of his "Around the World in 80 Days" here the occasion too, for the shooting of film for next fall's "This Is my Home Town" tv program which he'll narrate.



Accompanying him here was a CBS video camera crew to do the film shooting in and around Minneapolis.

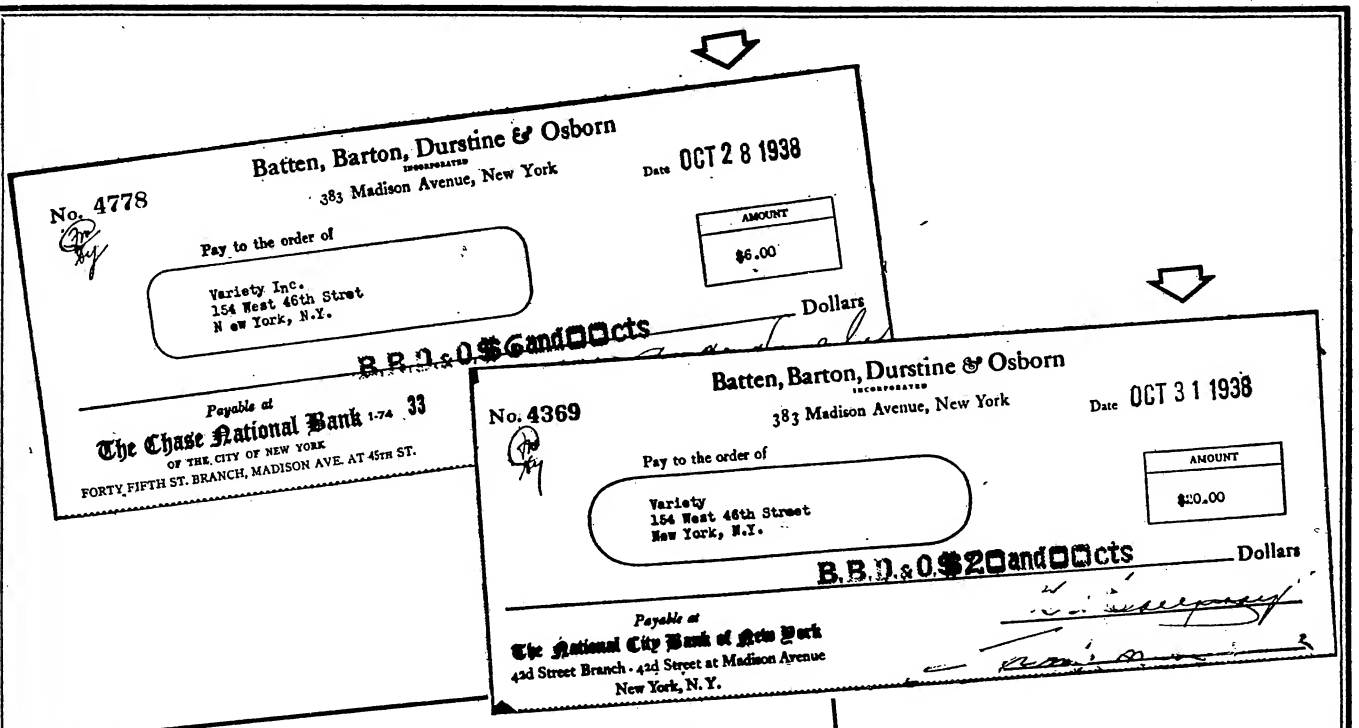
Todd was born in a local suburb and when a youth sold newspapers on the streets here.

His son and press agent, Mike Todd Jr., and Bill Doll, respectively, also flew in with Todd.

Latest Bell System control units speed accurate network switching

New Bell System control unit permits network switches to be set up and double-checked in advance.

Network switches can be set up in advance and double-checked, thanks to new Bell System control units.



Ten or 15 minutes before actual switching time, buttons representing incoming and outgoing circuits are punched on the control panel. Then, at the appointed split second, one master button is pushed and all switches are performed at once.

The first new operating center utilizing the control unit began operation in Chicago during the summer of 1956, followed by similar installations in Los Angeles and New York. In the near future, operating centers will be added in Des Moines, Dallas and Washington, D. C.

This development, which makes switching faster and more accurate, is another example of how the Bell System is constantly finding new and better ways to serve the broadcasting industry.

Stockholders of the TelePrompTer Corp. at a meeting Monday (15) approved a proposal for a two-and-one-half to one split of the company's stock. To meet the new issue, the shareholders also okayed an increase in the company's capitalization from the current 250,000 shares to 1,000,000.

Vote on the proposals was 128,000 for as compared with 270 against. TelePrompTer shares, an over-the-counter security, are presently selling at about $24.

Irving B. Kahn, president of the company, said that as a result of the stockholders' decision the management believes that it will bring about greater investor interest in the common stock of the company and in broader ownership. The increased capital stock, he noted, is required for the company's expansion program now under way. He stressed, however, that no additional financing is contemplated by TelePrompTer at the present time.

NBC-TV Taps 'Panic' For Tues. 7:30 Slot

NBC-TV has made its Tuesday choice for the 7:30-8 kid-adventure strip. Web has tapped "Panic," Al Simon's suspense series, for the spot. Network hasn't signed any sponsors for the show yet.

"Panic" bowed on NBC last January as a Tuesday night replacement for "Noah's Ark" in the 8:30-9 period for Liggett & Myers and Max Factor. Subsequently, the network got L&M and Factor to switch to Saturday nights starting in the fall, and "Panic" was ruled out as a Saturday entry but was promised another slot, with the Tuesday opening providing it.

Flip-Top 10?

American Tobacco has moved in as alternate sponsor with Armstrong Cork on the NBC-TV Tuesday 9:30-10 period as of this week. Armstrong has "Summer Playhouse" in the time period, and American Tobacco, via BBD&O, will sponsor, "Show for a Summer Evening."

Title for the new show is a natural—program consists of half-hour film reruns.

CBS-TV 'Look Up & Live' To Tackle Controversial Race Relations Drama

Television, always extra-sensitive to controversial themes, will handle a hot one next Sunday (21) when the CBS-TV public affairs stanza, "Look Up and Live," presents a live drama on race relations. Show is "No Man Is an Island," yarn by Jim Benjamin adapted from a National Council of Churches film titled "Broken Mask."

Play deals with the story of a young white and a Negro who become buddies in the Army. After discharge, the Negro comes to the white boy's town on a scholarship, and when they try to resume their friendship, the white boy's parents and relatives exert pressures against it. Added to the problem is an invitation by the white boy for the Negro to join his church. Play doesn't offer any answers to the deadlock, but points up the situation.

Networks in the past have avoided plays dealing directly with the Negro question. One well-known case was Reginald Rose's "Thunder on Sycamore St.," in which the lead character—stoned by his neighbors as an "undesirable" new element—was changed by the webs from a Negro to an ex-convict. Webs have taken up the Puerto Rican problem in N.Y. and have touched on relationships between white and Negro ("A Man Is 10 Feet Tall," for example), but haven't dealt directly in terms of the strains of racial prejudice.

Cast will include Frederick O'Neal and Norma Moore. Don Kellerman is producing and Jim McAllen directing. Benjamin, who did the script, won a Robert Sherwood Award last year with his brother Burton (now a CBS public affairs producer) from the Fund for the Republic for a script on civil liberties.

Louisville—Dave Martin, WOHO, Toledo, sports director, joins sports staff of WHAS radio and tv. A 12-year-radio vet, Martin has had nine seasons experience airing baseball and football.

sponsored but cut in half last month, retaining only five quarter hours a week. CBS has since sold the five open segs to Florida citrus, Standard Brands, Pet Milk, Vicks, Pillsbury and French's Mustard. On "As the World Turns," the other P&G show which opened up with five quarter-hours, CBS has sold two and a half of these, leaving the show only one-quarter open.

"Our Miss Brooks," which started slowly, will probably be half sold by fall, with four and a half of the 10 quarter-hour segments already sponsored. "You Are the Jury," the Bob Crosby replacement, has three and a half quarter-hours sold even though it doesn't premiere until August. And "Hotel Cosmopolitan," the "Valiant Lady" replacement, has one-and a half of its five quarter-hours sold, and not only hasn't the show premiered yet but CBS hasn't even set a starting date.

That $16,500,000 in new business over the past couple of months stems from buys on nine daytime shows from no less than 17 sponsors, buying anything from an alternate-week quarter-hour to as many as four quarter-hours a week. They are Vick Chemical, with four weekly segments; Florida Citrus, with two; Dow Chemical; General Foods, with three; Sunshine Biscuit, with three; General Mills, with three; Hoover Vacuum; Armour; Swift with two; Atlantis Sales (French's Mustard, etc.) with four Pillsbury, two; Gerber Baby Foods; Purex; A. E. Stanley; Wine Corp. of America; Pet Milk and Luden's Candy.

Much of the business comes through new "brand buying" techniques under which advertisers gain heavy discounts if they purchase multiple segments for different products. Also a consideration is station hours discounts, under which alternate-week nighttime advertisers like Purex and Wine Corp. can earn 10% discounts on both nighttime and daytime buys by purchasing an alternate-week segment in daytime to give them every-week exposure on the web.

kinnied in N.Y. or the Coast, with a fast print service getting the film to clients.

According to Keever, the service will be useful to industries who have to send execs on sales film substituting for their personal attendance. Some companies are using audio tape because they can't spare the execs, but this isn't always satisfactory. Because of the high cost of film, the new Calnatron service will provide the answer, Keever avers.

Port Arthur, Tex. — The Port Arthur-Beaumont area will have a new tv station in September when KPAC-TV, operating on Channel 4 takes to the air. The station will be an optional affiliate of the NBC-TV network. Julius M. Gordon, prez of the Jefferson Amusement Co. will be general manager.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

NBC Television Affiliates have changed their by-laws and in the future, instead of an executive committee, the governing body will be a 10-man Board of Delegates. Four members of the Board will be officers of the group: a chairman, to be selected from the basic affiliates; a vice-chairman, also from the basics; a vice-chairman representing the optional affiliates and a secretary-treasurer from either group. Delegates will each serve two years, with officers to be elected in odd-numbered years and non-officers in even-numbered years. By-law change, voted by the membership, takes effect with the group's annual meeting to be held in New York Sept. 11-13 at the Waldorf-Astoria.

A national Catholic magazine is sniping at NARTB's Seal of Good Practice, labeling it "a facade for the rankest hypocrisy." Pointing to the code's negation of excessive violence and brutality in tv scripts, the current issue of The Voice of St. Jude listed "Tales of the Texas Rangers," "Roy Rogers," "Sky King," "Captain Midnight," and "Lone Ranger" as kiddie shows that are principal transgressors. "Texas Rangers," the article said, "is perhaps the greatest offender in the matter of excessive violence."

Radio Advertising Bureau makes three executive changes this week. Walter Brown takes over as senior presentation writer for the promotion bureau and Lloyd Cole gets upped from office to production manager with Ralph Durham taking his place.

Brown succeeds Herbert Mayer who ankled last week for a CBS-TV presentation writing post. Plus his office managerial duties, Durham will also assist William Morison, RAB administrative chief.

Plans to open an office soon in New York to promote the operations of the First International Newsreel and TV Assn. were revealed last week by Antonio Angle Diaz of Argentina, head of the organization. Diaz called on Dr. Jose A. Mora, Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, in furtherance of the promotion of cultural ties between the Americas through tv and newsreels.

The Association, which began operations a year ago, has 70 members in the Western Hemisphere, Spain and Portugal. United States members are Telenews and News Up-to-Date. Through those members, U.S. theatres are supplied with films which are rotated among the various members.

First International has no agreement with Hearst Metrotone News whereby Hearst distributes the Association's films to NBC, CBS, Fox and United Press and submits newsreels to Paramount, Universal, Warner, Pathe and Fox Movietone.

Association was organized in Uruguay in April, 1956 as Primera Asociacion Internacional de Noticiarios y TV (PAINT).

National Labor Relations Board has ordered an election of office clerical and janitorial employees of WNHC and WNHC-TV in New Haven, Conn., to determine whether they desire to be organized as a unit of National Assn. of Broadcast Employees and Technicians (NABET).

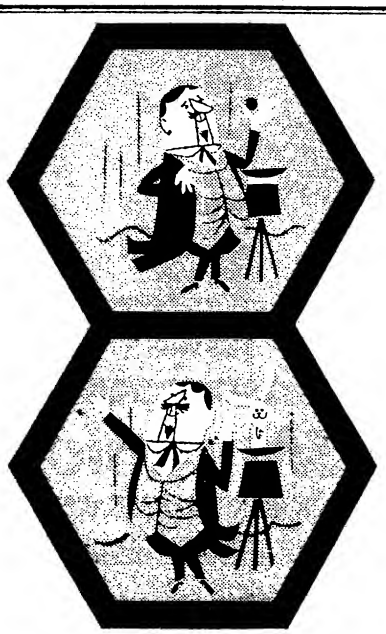
is an hour, it's on alternate weeks and only half of that alternate period is sold. Hence, among the three shows, the other two being half-hours and half sold, the network has three key alternate 30-minute periods to sell. Problem with Mitchell, a live show, is smaller, since only seven of its 15 weeks on the air are unsold.

There is also the problem of selling off "Mickey Mouse," which has a few remaining afternoon segs available. It's understood, though, that the daytime juve strip will break even at the current pace.

Just how much the sale of a full hour every (Sundays) to Kaiser helped alleviate the network's problems is hard to say. ABC was in the hole at least partways on the pilot for Kaiser's show, "Maverick," another Warner western, and this cleared that problem up. But it is thought that the network discount for the time was of such proportions as to minimize any real profit on the show, much less to help out in the half sell setup.

GEO. PUTNAM'S 100G ANNUAL KTTV DEAL

Hollywood, July 16.



In a deal purportedly largest ever involving a local news figure, George Putnam has renegotiated his ticket with KTTV, to pay him upwards of $100,000 annually, for a firm three years.

Bargaining was between KTTV prexy Dick Moore and v.p. Bob Breckner, on one side, and agent Frank Cooper on the other. New pact becomes effective in first week of September, replacing present yearly-option deal.

Chris Schenkel's Entry

WABC-TV, New York flag of ABC-TV, will program Chris Schenkel in a five-minute nightly sportscast as of July 22, following the regular John Cameron Swayze news show from 11 to 11:10. Marlboro, in its first regular program buy in the met area, will be sponsor.

Schenkel's entry will push WABC's "Night Show" back five minutes, to 11:15. Marlboro signed via Leo Burnett.

holders in Mutual until now he is understood to possess the vast majority of the network's stock. It's said that Mutual, with its red-ink operation, made a perfect tax write-off for the rest of O'Neil's holdings. Poor has pared overhead considerably since taking over as prexy a couple of years ago, so that now Mutual is operating closer to break-even than has been the case since network radio's heyday. Moreover, O'Neil two years ago acquired RKO pictures, which is a costly and losing proposition for RKO Teleradio and assumedly a good replacement as a tax write-off.

Go-between for purchaser Roberts is Bert Hauser, former vice-president at Mutual under O'Neil. Meetings went over into last night (Tues.), it was said, in an effort to straighten out details on how payments should be made. Roberts will be taking command of the o&o'less radio network by August 1.

Last-minute bid for the network was entered by Newsweek mag, which has been interested in diversifying into radio and television for some time. Understood, however, that the Newsweek offer came after O'Neil and Roberts had reached a deal.

WINS' phone service was jammed for 20 minutes yesterday morning when some 50,000 listeners called the station in a mad scramble for two tickets to the Broadway hit, "My Fair Lady." Bill Stern had offered the ducats to the first person calling whose telephone number added up to 20. Stern, apparently, hasn't looked at a directory lately. Irate listeners received an on-the-air apology from WINS and the telephone company and a promise adequate facilities would be provided hereafter to cope with calls.

WINS Ballyhoo Ties Up N.Y. Phone Exchange

THE New York Telephone Co., which has been waging a campaign against promotion-minded film companies using telephone exchanges through which to publicize forthcoming films, last week tangled with WINS New York over the same principle. But in this case, WINS was plugging WINS, using "My Fair Lady" as the gimmick.

The station all week, during its early-morning weekday show, Contact, starring former sportscaster Bill Stern, offered two tickets a day to "My Fair Lady" to the first listener calling in whose private telephone number totaled 20 or 36 or some other "magic number." With "MFL" ducats harder to come by than invitations to the White House, WINS figured the stunt would boost Contact's audience to a considerable degree. It did: on Monday, enough people (WINS estimate: 50,000) called to put the Murray Hill 7 exchange as well as several "tandem lines" out of commission because of overloaded circuitry.

STAN FREBERG SHOW
With Peggy Taylor, Jud Conlon & Rhythmaires, June Foray, Daws Butler, Peter Leeds, Marvin Miller, Billy May orch
Producer: Pete Barnum
Director: Freberg
Writers: Barnum, Freberg & Howard Gossage
30 Mins.; Sun., 7:30 p.m.
CBS, from Hollywood

If Stan Freberg doesn't watch out, he may become the Chaplin of the kilocycles. CBS has set him for a summer run cheek-by-jowl with "Sez Who!" new Henry Morgan-headed comedy quiz. In this "Stan Freberg Show" the headman with the "St. George & Dragonet" trademarked identity also operates as director and co-writer, in a protean assignment of splendiferous satire that brings forth an inventiveness, imagination and vigor of which television, in or out of summertime, is so sadly bereft. Freberg could add something to such starved tv, but meantime he is flying the banners for AM with accent on the amplitude thereof.

Freberg instinctively gravitates towards topicals that will best serve his technique. Aside from some quickie capers patently designed as warmups, the whole of Sunday's (14) show was under an umbrella of "Freberg's Fables"—which could well be grabbed as the overall tag. The object d'lampoon was Las Vegas, though thinly disguised as "coincidental." It was a big, beautiful takeoff on the greenfelt country with its Midas talent touch, pitting the El Sodom hotel against the Rancho Gomorrah inre a joust for attractions wherein only such as the Suez Canal and two-a-night Presidential Inauguration layouts were considered big enough "names" for booking.

Betwixt, Freberg & Co., made merry and tuneful with such conceits as "Rock Around Romeo & Juliet" and thematic "International Incident." The clincher, a one-shot pushbutton earthquake, burst into boomerang proportions when a mccoy quake visited the scene.

Freberg is surrounded by a company of versatile characters who fit very snugly into his funmaking designs. But in an acid-dripped show of this sort there's often a tendency to go bloodthirsty to achieve an effect. Of questionable taste was a reference to "booking" Chicago's Valentine Day Massacre "with original cast." A small criticism, perhaps, in a half-hour loaded with hilarity.

How could such a class show not rate a sponsor when almost anything in tv is supported? Tran.

SEZ WHO!
With Henry Morgan, moderator; Joey Adams, Gypsy Rose Lee, John Henry Faulk, panelists; Bobby Breen, guest
Exec Producer: Bill Cooper
Director: Dick Stenta
30 Mins., Sun., 7 p.m.
CBS, from New York

"Sez Who!" isn't a particularly inspiring format—panelists have to identify the voice on a recording—but it's blessed with the daffiest combination of moderator and panelists ever to hit the airwaves. Trick is to ignore the game—as the panelists do themselves most of the time—and to listen just for kicks. And there are plenty of those—the first edition of "Sez Who!" was one of the zaniest and funniest radio shows heard in a long time.

This Frank Cooper package is serving as a summer replacement for the Jack Benny taped show (who ever heard of a summer replacement for tapes?—it's like replacing filmed reruns) in the Sunday spot. Panelists are served up offbeat recordings, like Caruso singing a patriotic song in English, Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig rehearsing a vaude routine (which mercifully, they never got to perform), Bobby Breen in an early air-tape (he appeared in person to say hello and plug his Latin Quarter, N. Y. stint) and Marilyn Monroe singing in a soundtrack clip.

Pretty tame stuff in itself, but that combine of Henry Morgan as moderator and the panel triumvirate of Joey Adams, Gypsy Rose Lee and John Henry Faulk simply ripped into the format and tore it beyond recognition. With Morgan and Adams constantly trying to best each other in the gag department, Miss Lee tossing off some of the most bewildering non-sequiturs and Faulk sitting back and throwing in some beautiful barbs, it was a virtual comedy no-man's-land. And above all, the efforts of Morgan trying to play it straight and keep the gang going in themselves were hilarious. Ever hear a panel show where a panelist decides he doesn't care about the question anymore and digresses into something else, only to have the moderator tell him to "ask a question, will you?"

While madcap in its al fresco, strictly as a panel show it got from-Dixie on certain occasions. A note of unprofessional eager-beaverness also might have been suspected, as for instance Adams' "who read it to you?" and Morgan's deliberately timed "your wife" rejoinder. Show, at this point, was more "Can You Top This?" than "Sez Who!"

If CBS is smart, it will leave the show just as it is. Playing it by the rules would leave the web with just another, but leaving the panel to their own undisciplined resources could make this the sleeper of the season. Chan.

HERB OSCAR ANDERSON SHOW
Director: Stanley Turner
180 Mins., Mon.-thru-Sat., 6 a.m.
Participating
WABC, New York

The "new WABC" is looking around, where none of the other large New York stations has bothered to look, for an early morning radio audience. Against the more urbane talk or humor, at the bottom of the programming on all the other network keys and the town's leading indies,, WABC has decided to fill 6 to 9 ayem with some corn, in the person of Herb Oscar Anderson.

The broad idea behind counterpoint has commercial merit, but whether Anderson's peculiarities best serve the plan is less certain. The jock—that's about all he is—clicked fast in the midwest, according to WABC reports. But Anderson is loud and rapid, and his verbal eccentricities are rather reminiscent of bygone days in radio. He makes third person references to himself with alarming frequency and has a storeroom full of bright sounding but thoroughly unimportant catch phrases.

On Friday (12), fifth day he was on the air over WABC, he went in heavily for rock 'n' roll and country & western music, mixing in an occasional straight pop tune.

A final word from Herb Oscar Anderson: "Every morning we want ya to know that the 770 spot on the dial will miss you if you're not here with me." Art.

With Bill Cullen
25 Mins.; Wed., 10:05 p.m.
NBC, from N. Y.

This new NBC Wednesday night entry is nothing more than a deejay show. The 25-minute stanza is taped and is devoted to recorded pop music. Host Bill Cullen provides a sprinkling of chatter, but that's limited to introing the talent and announcing their individual offerings.

The show is being presented by NBC in cooperation with the Savings Bonds Division of the U.S. Treasury. The latter's participation is quite evident in the frequent bond plugs, which follow practically every number, besides being spotted at the opening and close of the program.

The preem stanza last Wednesday (10) took in two disks each by Rosemary Clooney, Frankie Laine and the Paul Weston Orch. The selections were tasteful, but there really isn't very much to warrant special dialer attention. Jess.

ABC Radio Lops Three Daytimers; 'True Story' To NBC; U.S. Steel Coin

In order to preserve what is to be it's new formula ABC Radio gave up a highly rated, lucrative piece of radio business in "My True Story." The 15-year-old ABC half hour, after owner McFadden Publications, was given notice, switched immediately to NBC, where it will be programmed at exactly the same time, 10 ayem. And the half-hour strip picked up a two-week order from U.S. Steel for a saturation campaign for the program at the end of November.

Stanza, leaving ABC along with other dramas "Whispering Streets" and "When a Girl Marries," begins on NBC in October under a new five-year deal between the net and McFadden. Though the program drew 3.2 on ABC in the latest Nielsen, beating CBS' Arthur Godfrey's 2.2 and 2.3, ABC boss Robert Eastman planned to drop all dramas to make way for live musical programs, of which the ABC network will be entirely built before long.

"Story" is currently bankrolled on ABC by Sterling Drug, Nescafe, Jello, French's Bird Seed and Doan's Pills. NBC hasn't approached any of them yet, but hopes to hold some of them at least when the switch is consummated.

Biographies in Sound

NBC Radio, which previously had distinguished itself with such "biographies in sound" as those of Franklin D. Roosevelt, Helen Hayes and Fred Allen, among others, has come up with a fresh biographical series with the late Alben W. Barkley as the initial subject. Aired over the net last Tuesday evening (9), the 55-minute life story of the late "veep" as told through voices of his close associates was absorbing listening.

Barkley's long and celebrated political career was ably recounted from the days when he campaigned for county attorney in his home state of Kentucky to later years when he scaled the legislative heights as Vice President of the U.S., and his last public office as junior senator from Kentucky. Throughout this taped chronicle of Barkley's public and private life the commentary of NBC's Morgan Beatty dexterously guided the listener.

Perhaps the most striking phrase to be caught by the electronic wizardry of recording was Barkley's last words as he spoke before a meeting at Washington & Lee U. in September, 1956. "I would rather be a servant in the house of the Lord," he said, "than to sit in the seats of the mighty." At that point a crash was heard. This, Beatty explained, came when Barkley collapsed against the microphones on the speaker's rostrum.

Taping strongly intimated that Barkley long cherished the office of the presidency. And the nomination was in his grasp at the 1952 Democratic convention but it eluded him through a tactical error on his part. In probing the Barkley personality, this NBC News production for NBC Radio recalled that he was "utterly irresistible" as a vote getter; moreover, he had a sense of humor and an eye for the ladies.

"There were few women who met Alben," Beatty noted, "Who didn't love him—he never lost his courtliness." In another sequence the veep's femme secretary nostalgically recalled that he had once said, "I think there's something beautiful about every woman." That, she told him, is the secret of your success. His courtship and subsequent marriage to Mrs. Carlton Hadley, a St. Louis widow, was also covered. Frequent excerpts of her voice threw much light on the character and makeup of Barkley the man.

Bio-program wound up with tributes to Barkley from such contemporaries as Sen. Robert Kerr, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, former President Harry S. Truman and Speaker of the House Sam Rayburn. This compilation, which was edited and directed by Chet Hagen, has such obvious historical values that NBC would do well to turn it over to colleague RCA Victor for packaging as an album. Gilb.

The World Tonight

This CBS-Radio 25-minute nightly news wrapup has been doing for some time what other networks are just beginning to do—to cover the news more extensively via tape-recording. Now, "World Tonight" has gone a step further—its weekend shows, instead of following the weeknight spot news and feature coverage, are devoted to in-depth coverage of single stories.

Example was Saturday night's (13) show, devoted entirely to covering the story of the new European common market plan and the Euratom pool. With Ned Calmer holding down the anchor spot, CBS News called on six correspondents for coverage and went beyond that with taped comments or speech excerpts from three statesmen. England's Sir Winston Churchill and Prime Minister Harold MacMillan, and Canada's new Prime Minister John Diefenbaker.

Lou Cioffi from Paris, Ernest Leiser from Bonn, Winston Burdette from Rome, Howard K. Smith from London, D. J. Cutler (N. Y. Herald Trib) from Moscow and Bill Downs from Washington all covered their ends of the story, stating the attitudes of each of their countries towards the plans. Each, too, covered the advantages and disadvantages to each country, citing specific goods which would be traded, specific fears and objections.

In all, as exhaustive a survey of the situation as could be aired in 25 minutes, and probably exhaustive as any survey on the plans yet published or aired for the public. Calmer and acting producer Dan Bloom as well as the correspondents deserve a solid nod on this and other such "World Tonight" efforts. Chan.

AM-TV Spread On Scout Jamboree

Increasingly special events-minded television networks and radio stations are finding a bonanza in the Boy Scout Jamborees like the fourth National Jamboree just concluded in Valley Forge, Pa., where some 53,000 of the youngsters pitched tents for a week. Television networks originated over five hours of programming last week from the site (CBS alone fed out four and three-quarter hours), while some 45 radio stations throughout the country aired shows or news inserts taped on the spot either by correspondents or hometown scouts themselves.

Amount of originations from the Jamboree were in marked contrast to years before. Third National Jamboree in Santa Ana, Calif., in 1953, originated one one-hour show, while the International Jamboree in Canada in '55 did only two. But at last week's shindig, CBS originated the Jimmy Dean morning show there, as well as "Let's Take a Trip," "Big Top" and cutins for the Richard Hottelet morning newscasts. NBC originated "Youth Wants to Know" in nearby Philadelphia, bringing scouts to the show from the campsite, and shot special footage for "Today." CBS used microwave to Washington and Philadelphia, and fed by cable from those points. Only real mishap came when a milktruck hit a telephone pole and knocked out a transformer, with the Dean show losing its video temporarily. After that, no milk deliveries during telecasts.

Television coverage was handled by a communications coordinating committee headed by CBS special events director Paul Levitan and including Bill Hoeft of Time-Life and Jack Tobin of NBC, with the unit handling radio-tv and press. Biggest kick, Levitan said, came from the fact that the scouts themselves did much of the coverage for hometown radio and press, with the youngsters getting invaluable training. Moppets did tapes, filed stories, etc. Pennsylvania Assn. of Broadcasters lent a big hand by providing tape-recording facilities for scouts, and correspondents right on the premises. Levitan expects the next Jamboree, in 1961, to be a major source of television coverage.

vested in 'Ben Hur,' which it plans to do next year. But what's to prevent tv from doing it just before the picture is released? Take a story like 'Gone With the Wind.' It took Margaret Mitchell 10 years to write it, and it became a great picture. But if there had been tv then, one tv show could have hurt that work of 10 years. No one even seemed to know about Andersonville, until MacKinlay Kantor wrote his book about it. We bought the rights to that book, then tv steps in and puts on their own version which is about an element of Andersonville not even in the picture.

"Columbia has a lot of money involved in 'Joseph and His Brethren.' Legally tv can do a show on the subject, but I say this isn't ethical.

"If tv keeps on pirating our product, and refuses to reach an understanding with us, the movies can knock commercial products in pictures and really upset television. Those people are very sensitive about this sort of thing. We could have a character in a picture make cracks about the clutch in a certain car, or a cigaret or a beer.

"We have a potent weapon here. Suppose Rock Hudson or Clark Gable were offered a filtered-tip cigaret in a picture, and refused and at the same time knocked it. Wow! If any advertiser wants tv to continue its pirating, this is what we can do in reply."

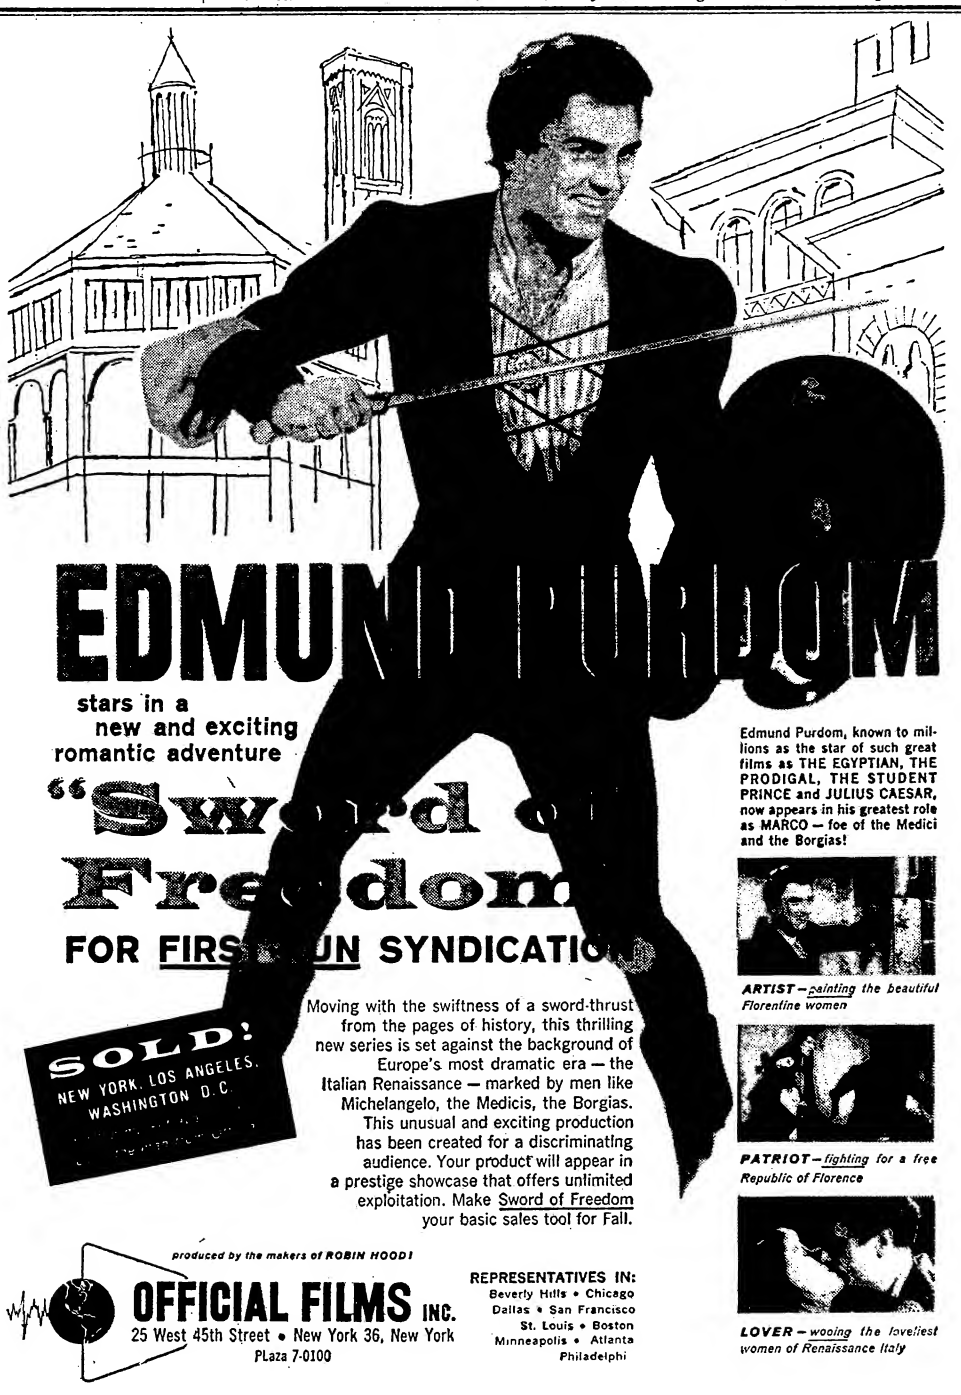
WATV'S NOT FOR SALE: ROSENHAUS

Despite intramural hostilities that originally forced the owners to put Newark tv'er WATV on the block, the metropolitan station has been withdrawn from sale because there were no satisfactory bids. Reportedly best Irving Rosenhaus, station boss, could draw was a combined bid from Pat Weaver and the Mertopolitan Educational Television Alliance, but it was for under $4,000,000.

Rosenhaus announced "business as usual" the other day, after saying negotiations with the several prospects were "discontinued." The formal announcement was evidently made because station salesmen have been running into difficulties along Madison Ave., trying to sell time on a station that was capable of changing managements momentarily.

Initially, there was a difference of opinion over running the station between Rosenhaus and his brother Matthew opposed to the Pollock family, which owned a substantial share of WATV. Rosenhaus said that the "differences have been straightened out." However, it is believed that the Pollocks, who, like the Rosenhauses, have an interest in Pharmaceuticals Inc., are slowly selling off their interests in the drug firm and station.

Churchill, FDR, Ghandi, War, Peace & Love In '20th Century's' Orbit



Bud Benjamin, producer of the upcoming "20th Century" CBS-TV series, which preems Oct. 20 in the Sunday at 6 p.m. period under Prudential sponsorship, has completed blueprinting of the full season's skein of 39 entries (some full hour but most of them running 30 minutes). Upwards of 600,000 feet of film are already "in the shop" with three editors assigned to shifting the footage to complement the on-the-spot filming. All told, there's a staff of 25 comprising the "20th Century" unit, with a budget of $40,000 earmarked for each of the weekly installments.

Series kicks off with a full hour "Churchill Story" spanning five monarchs from Queen Victoria (on which some footage still exists) to Queen Elizabeth. As with all the entries, there will be full-bodied musical backgrounding with live musicians instead of resorting to canned music, and for the Churchill program an original score will be composed by either George Antheil or Virgil Thomson. Scripter on the initial program will be John Davenport, who wrote the Churchill biography brought out by Doubleday.

Second entry will be on guided missiles, with Hanson Baldwin, military expert for the N.Y. Times, scripting the program. Third will be the "FBI Story," which Don Whitehead will script.

Among the other entries are the "MacArthur Story," with E. J. Kahn as the scripter; an installment on the Duke of Windsor and Wally Simpson as the "love affair of the 20th Century" to be titled "The Woman I Love" and which Cleveland Amory is currently preparing. "Story of China" is being written by Bob Chaplin and the "Nuremburg Trials" by Andy Logan. (She covered the trials for the New Yorkers.)

Benjamin is trying to enlist the services of Ernest Hemingway to write the "War In Spain" installment. There will probably be two installments of Franklin D. Roosevelt, one encompassing the first 100 days of his Presidential tenure and the other covering the war years. Other entries: the story of the automobile from the tin lizzie to the era of electronic highways; the story of brainwashing, the D-Day Story (Walter Lord turned this one down because of an upcoming book); atomic radiation, Mahatma Gandhi, and Dr. Jonas Salk and polio vaccine.

Washington, July 16.

Pressure on the Federal Communications Commission to hold off action on subscription tv mounted last week as Chairman Emanuel Celler (D-N.Y.) of the House Judiciary Committee threw his weight behind the opposition forces.

In a strong letter to the agency's new chairman, John C. Doerfer, Celler said the Commission's proposal to conduct tests of television involves such risks for the future of the present tv system that the decision should be left to Congress. Celler has a bill pending to ban subscription but there has been no indication that the House Interstate Commerce Committee, to which it has been referred, is planning to take it up.

Celler told Doerfer that "it is imperative that no expedient be adopted that will impair the traditionally free tv system authorized by Congress."

He said that introduction of subscription, even on an experimental basis, would not only delay solution of allocation and monopoly problems of the industry but may aggravate them. Among other "disastrous consequences," he asserted, the trend toward monopolization of talent would be accelerated, the audience may be divided among economic lines, and "a method of broadcasting will be inaugurated, having such an unparalleled built-in profit potential that it may drive free network tv as we know it from the airwaves."

Celler said the Commission's desire to conduct tests in such a way as to avoid dislocation but at the same time provide the information it needs isn't realistic. "It is entirely proper for the Commission to pursue this happy mean," he said, "but it is necessary to recognize that experimentation on any meaningful scale will inevitably create interests and unleash pressures which, in comparable situations, the Commission has been unable to control.

"Such experimentation must therefore be regarded as potential commitment to a course from which there may be no return. The built-in profit potential of subscription tv, arising from the fact that any charge from program reception would be many times greater that the present per set per program cost of program production, practically guarantees that an experiment that proves at all successful in terms of public acceptance will mean the withdrawal from free tv of the channels and stations employed."

Celler suggested that if the Commission restricts its proposed tests to cities with four or more stations the networks would want to participate. "Should experimental subscription tv be inaugurated in one or more of these cities and prove successful," he asked, "would not the networks become eager applicants for the privilege of using the new technique? Would the Commission have the cacpacity, or even a valid rationale, for denying their applications? Could networking as we know it survive withdrawal of its most profitable stations?"

Albany—Marty Ross has been appointed director of news and special events for WPTR. Ross, who started with WBCA in Schenectady 14 years ago and served with WPTR after it went on the air in 1948, was later on the staff of the Armed Forces Network in Berlin.

Chelf's Challenge

Washington, July 16.

Taking direct issue with Chairman Emanuel Celler on subscription tv, Rep. Frank Chelf (D-KY.) yesterday (Mon.) urged the FCC not to let anybody stop it from going ahead with field tests. Chelf is a member of Celler's House Judiciary Committee.

"At this late hour," Chelf wrote FCC Chairman John C. Doerfer, "do not allow anybody, no matter what position he may hold in or out of the government, to attempt to either pressure or intimidate any of you."

Chelf has told the Commission he has been following the subscription issue closely for several years and has concluded that:

1. "The agency has the full, complete and final authority to permit these very necessary trials before the public."

2. The people "ought to be given an early opportunity to decide if they want any part of subscription tv."

To provide that opportunity, he said, the Commission "must authorize the necessary tests."

NBC-TV Throws in Lot With Fort Worth In Showdown Vs. Dallas

ABC-TV will get a fulltime affiliate for the first time in the Dallas-Ft. Worth market as a result of NBC's decision last week to terminate its split-schedule arrangement with WFAA-TV in Dallas and WBAP-TV in Ft. Worth and take on the Ft. Worth outlet as its fulltime affiliate. ABC will get WFAA-TV on a fulltime basis after having been serviced parttime by both WFAA and WBAP. Some of the reasons for NBC choosing WBAP in preference to WFAA: Fort Worth station was first to heed Gen. Sarnoff's "get into tv"; also embraced NBC's tint expansion.

The NBC move to drop WFAA-TV came after the Dallas Morning News station reportedly told the web it was dissatisfied with the longstanding share-time setup and wanted to carry the full NBC schedule. NBC took the position it was uneconomical for both WFAA-TV and WBAP-TV to carry the same shows at the same time and so notified WFAA of its intention to disaffiliate.

However, the same share-time arrangement will continue in force for NBC Radio, with both WFAA and WBAP continuing their longtime NBC identities. Web doesn't anticipate any change in the radio status. Both WFAA's Alex Keese and WBAP's Harold Hough will continue on the NBC Radio affiliates exec committee, but Hough will have to give up his place on the ABC-TV affiliate exec body.

NEW 'BALLADS FOR AMERICANS'

Cheerful Music Earfuls (Hi-Fi, Etc.) Voiced at NAMM Teeoff in Chicago

Chicago, July 16.

Sales of music instruments and phonograph equipment, which have been climbing steadily for the past few years, are due to rise from 5 to 15% again this year, according to estimates made at the opening of he National Assn. of Music Merchants show at the Palmer House here yesterday (Mon.). But, according to NAMM prexy Paul E. Murphy, the profit margin may be thinner this year. One of the major worries of the music merchants centered around this paradox of expanding grosses and shrinking profits.

The boom in hi-fi phonos, meantime, is continuing at a strong pace. C. J. Hunt, v.p. in charge of distribution for Zenith Radio Corp., estimated that some 6,000,000 hi-fi units would be sold this year, a 50% gain over 1956. Hunt also predicted that there would be a price increase of about 5% in hi-fi equipment in about 60 days. From other sources, total hi-fi sales have been put at about $500,000,000.

Guitar manufacturers at the trade show also reported a sharp rise in sales for this type of instrument. Among the factors leading to the sales uptempo have been such pop styles as rockabilly music, calypso, folk music, etc., in which the guitar is prominently spotlighted. At the same time, sales of bongo drums and other rhythm instruments have also been zooming. Sales of pianos, however, have been maintaining last year's pace although trade execs expect a pickup later this year.

Band instruments also are due for a prosperous future, according to Richard W. Bosse, secretary-treasurer of the National Assn. of Band Instrument Manufacturers. Spreading use of music in schools plus expanding juve populations are laying the ground for steady growth in this field.

Record Industry's First Golf Tourney July 22-27 For Scholarship Fund

The first annual disk industry golf tournament will kick off July 22-27. More than 200 golfers are expected to tee off during the qualifying week. The top golf courses around the country are cooperating for the qualifying play.

The tournament is part of the program set by the Disk Industry Scholarship Corp., a nonprofit org designed to establish scholarships for young people in the industry and encourage cooperation among organizations connected with the disk industry. Fred Waring is chairman of the org. Among other members of the committee are Norm Weinstroer, sales head at Coral, deejay Martin Block, Hirsh de La Viez, jukebox distrib, and William Gard of the NAMM.

700 COL DISTRIBS IN FLA. SALES MEET

More than 700 distributors and dealers will converge on Miami Beach's Americana Hotel July 26-28 for Columbia Records annual sales convention. In addition to unveiling its fall disk program, label also will display its new phonograph line. This conclave marks the first time the disk and phono products will be pitched at the same meet.

As part of the convention program, Col is bringing down a flock of its artists to head an entertainment bill. Among them will be Leonard Bernstein, Frankie Laine, Hi-Lo's, Vic Damone, Erroll Garner, Percy Faith, Paul Weston, Andre Kostelanetz, Marty Robbins, Ray Price and Carl Smith.

All the distribs qualified in Col's "My Fair Lady" contest by meeting sales quotas and are permitted to bring their wives as guests of the company.

Sammy Davis' Biodecca

Something new in biodisks will be essayed by Sammy Davis Jr. for Decca.

Label is readying a two-platter package which will cover Davis' 32 years in showbiz, interspersing anecdotes with material. New twist, however, will be the inclusion of imitations by Davis, the carbonings being keyed to anecdotes about stars with whom he has appeared on the nitery circuit.

Sid Kuller is penning the material for the album which will be cut shortly.

Payola Indictment Of Randy Dixon, Philly Disk Jock

Philadelphia, July 16.

Randy Dixon, local disk jockey, was indicted by a Federal Grand Jury for failing to report payolas for the years 1949 through 1954.

The Internal Revenue Service has been looking into failure to pay income tax on money received under the table for playing records for last two years. Several local disk jockeys and others are expected to be involved.

Indictment on Dixon claims he reported total income for six-year period as $40,675 and total tax due as $4,094. Government claims the actual income for the period was $62,737 and Dixon should have paid $10,084 in taxes.

Dixon has been at WDAS since 1949. Before that he was columnist for the Daily News and at WIP between 1949 and 1952.

On Jan. 10, Dixon was named in a criminal information filed in U.S. District Court here for failure to file returns on an income of $6,821 in 1953 and $6,413 in 1954.

U.S. Attorney Harold K. Wood said that it was not until last year that Dixon completed income tax returns for the years 1950 through 1955.

BESTSELLERS BE-HANGED: RADIO

By HERMAN SCHOENFELD

Radio stations, and disk jockeys, hypnotized for the past couple of years by the so-called "Top-40" listings, are now taking the lead in bringing back a more adult brand of music. According to Mitch Miller, Columbia Records' artists & repertoire chief, the radio outlets are "reasserting their personalities" and are no longer following a set pattern determined by what's selling best in the neighborhood disk store. The stations are learning that they can determine what the bestsellers will be.

Miller, who claims that the present swing to the ballads can be traced to a couple of Johnny Mathis songs, "Wonderful, Wonderful" and "It's Not For Me To Say," contends that too many people think of the pop disk biz as "one kind of thing."

"When rock 'n' roll gets hot, then they do rock 'n' roll 100%. Same goes for calypso. They forget what's right and good for the artist and go all the way in following a cycle," Miller said. He pointed out that even when rock 'n' roll was at its height, Columbia was doing ballads with the Four Lads ("No, Not Much," "Moments To Remember," etc.), Vic Damone ("On The Street Where You Live") and other artists where the song fit the personality.

Victor Latches On

RCA Victor, meantime, is now accenting ballads on all future single releases. From now on, Joe Carlton, pop artists and repertoire chief, plans to couple ballad tunes with beat entries back to back.

The rest of the industry also is beginning to feel the new pop undercurrents. The swing to the ballad idiom is evidenced by the outpouring of new releases from indie and major alike. While the rock 'n' roll sides are still being turned out in large quantities, they no longer cut across the board as they did in the idiom's heyday when virtually every release was stamped with the r 'n' r sound.

As for the publishers, the swing to the ballads is manna from heaven. Not only are sheet sales up, but songs are due to stay around longer than they did when rock 'n' roll was king. Another plus factor for them is that the hit song no longer depends so exclusively upon the performance alone, but now the material counts for something important also.

Payola Pooh-Pooh

Honolulu, July16.

Shades of the infamous old payola!

Jeri Southern is current at the Clouds, Waikiki nitery, and Walt Hall, of Honolulu Electrical Products Co., is sparking Jeri Southern Week on behalf of the Decca-artist.

To any disk jockey spinning her records this week, "preferably on the air, not in the air," Hall offers:

"Six miles of used dental floss or 6,000 cancelled trading stamps if supported by such concrete evidence as 600 Jeri Southern records worn so thin as to be transparent."

The jocks are going along overwhelmingly with the gag.

Lerner-Loewe Vs. Jubilee Label On 'Lady' Lampoons

Alan Jay Lerner and Frederick Loewe finally have gone to court to stop a wax parody of their "My Fair Lady." Action filed in N. Y. Federal Court last week versus Jay-Gee Record Co. (Jubilee Records) was aimed at the album version of "My Fairfax Lady."

The Jubilee album stems from the Billy Gray tab nitery production at the Bandbox in Los Angeles. No action has been taken to stop the "live" production. Gray's attorneys currently are huddling with attorneys for Lerner & Loewe on ironing out the differences over the wax release. Meantime, Morty Palitz, Jubilee veepee, is holding up release of the package.

Suit claims that the Jubilee package infringes on four songs from "My Fair Lady." The tunes are "On The Street Where You Live," "Wouldn't It Be Loverly," "Why Can't the English" and "The Rain in Spain." The action seeks an injunction to enjoin the defendant from distributing and recording the tunes.

RCA Victor's copping of the soundtrack rights to the 20th-Fox filmization of Rodgers & Hammerstein's "South Pacific" has stirred up resentment over at the Columbia Records camp. Col topper Goddard Lieberson is particularly miffed over the fact that none of the previous R&H filmusicals has been nabbed by Col, either.

The soundtrackers from "Oklahoma" and "Carousel" were released by Capitol. Col has the original cast album of "South Pacific" (Mary Martin-Ezio Pinza) which has topped the 1,500,000 sales mark. And Col recently released the R&H musicalization of "Cinderella" which was telecast over CBS-TV. Decca released the original cast sets of "Oklahoma" and "Carousel."

W. W. Bullock, head of Victor's album department, currently is mapping out plans for one of the most extensive promotions to be given a soundtrack package. A full-page ad already is scheduled for Life mag and network and tv plugs are being set on the Perry Como, Eddie Fisher and George Gobel shows over NBC.

The tracker will be released on both LP and 45 rpm extended play records. Pic, which costars Mitzi Gaynor and Rossano Brazzi, is slated for release early next year.

There had been a hot disk industry scramble for the rights to "South Pacific." The Victor grab is part of the diskery's policy to expand its soundtracker line. "We feel that the sales potential for soundtracks of great films is one of the most important factors in the steadily increasing record market," Bullock said. "RCA Victor intends to continue to expand its policy of releasing the best of these soundtracks on records."

Leroy Anderson Stalls British Lyric Treatment Of His 'Forgotten Dreams'

London, July 16.

Leroy Anderson has banned a vocal version of his composition "Forgotten Dreams," after it had been waxed by Muriel Smith for the British Columbia label and Kenneth McKellar for Decca. The tune has just hit the British sheet music bestsellers after three years of solid plugging by the British office of Mills Music. It's now No. 7.

Dick Rowe, a&r manager for Decca, has flown to the U. S. for talks with Anderson in an effort to get a reversal of the "no lyrics" decision. The lyrics were submitted to Jack Mills while Anderson was out of town, and Mills passed them on to London where recording sessions were immediately set up. First intimation of Anderson's ban was a cable to Fred Jackson, general manager for Mills in London which said: "Sorry, Anderson doesn't want any lyrics to his instrumentals. That's final."

Anderson's contract with the publishers has a clause which allows him to decide the treatment given to one of his compositions. It's reported that he thinks the lyrics are "terrible." The London office of Mills feels that the lyrical version could provide both best-selling disks and sheet music.

MONROE, ALEXANDER END 12-YEAR TIE

Vaughn Monroe is ending his agency tie with Willard Alexander Sept. 1. Monroe and Alexander have been linked for the past 12 years.

The singer has not yet set a new agency link. Monroe, who made his legit debut in a summer stock version of "Annie Get Your Gun" last week, will continue in the fall as a single.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By MIKE GROSS

Dick Jacobs Orch: (Coral). "FASCINATION" (Southern*) is piling up lotsa of wax but Dick Jacobs' orch and chorus treatment looks like the stepout version of this entry from the pic, "Love In The Afternoon." "SUMMERTIME IN VENICE" (Pickwick*), a romantic treatment of a lush melody.

The Chordettes: (Cadence). "JUST BETWEEN YOU AND ME" (Winneton†) is a bright and bouncy side that's geared for a big payoff. "SOFT SANDS" (Weiss & Barry†) should gets lots of spinning action, too.

Jimmy Dorsey Orch: (Fraternity). "JUNE NIGHT" (Feist*) shapes as another clicko for the late maestro who scored recently with "So Rare." Tune is slickly pegged for hefty jock and juke returns. "JAY-DEE'S BOOGIE WOOGIE" (Embassy†) has Dorsey working over a zippy boogie beat.

Jimmy Rodgers: (Roulette). "HONEYCOMB" (Hawthorne*) has the kind of a rockabilly flavor that's sure to go far. "THEIR HEARTS WERE FULL OF SPRING" (Fred Raphael*), a neatly fashioned folk ballad that rates attention.

Rover Boys: (Vik). "SOFT SANDS" (Weiss & Barry†) has received a lot of diskery attention and the Rover Boys work it into a fine ballad item for the big spins. "MY BABY'S STEPPIN' OUT" (B. F. Wood*) has an attractive dixieland flavor.

Kenny Bowers: (Columbia). "HOW COME" (Empress*) has the kind of rockin' and wailin' quality which should get Kenny Bowers off to a good start in the disk field. "HALF A MIND" (Teri†), a ballad which he pours out with a lot of emotion.

Dinah Shore: (RCA Victor). "FASCINATION" (Southern*) is pegged just right for Dinah Shore's warm style and will attract deejay spins. "TILL," (Chappell*), another potent ballad effort that shows her off in fine form.

Mark Murphy: (Decca). "GOODBYE BABY" (Calyork†) is a solid blues tune on which Mark Murphy grabs hold for effective results. "THE RIGHT KIND OF WOMAN" (Acorn†) is a simple ballad that should see some deejay play because of Murphy's stylized vocal.

Cyril Stapleton Orch: (London). "FORGOTTEN DREAMS" (Mills*) is a distinctive instrumental headed for strong deejay play. "IT'S NOT FOR ME TO SAY" (Korwin*), a tasty version of a tune that's been clicking for Johnny Mathis on Columbia.

Les Baxter Orch: (Capitol). "MANHATTAN" (Marks†), a new treatment of the Richard Rodgers classic that makes it shine again. "LA PANSE" (Leeds*) is a colorful instrumental that deejays should go for.

Hugo Winterhalter Orch: (RCA Victor). "SWINGING SWEETHEARTS" (Morris*) should pick up plenty of jock & juke spins because of Winterhalter's bright and zingy treatment. "THE HAPPY COBBLER" (Mellin†), a happy slicing pepped up by a brisk choral assist.

McGuire Sisters: (Coral). "INTERLUDE" (Northern*) a neatly modelled ballad which the McGuires turn into a high spinning potential. "AROUND THE WORLD" (Young*), another fine interpretation of this much recorded tune.

Della Reese: (Jubilee). "I CRIED FOR YOU" (Miller*), a rockin' version of the oldie which Della Reese builds for the new market. "AND THAT REMINDS ME" (Symphony House*) is belted out for good spinning chances.

Vic Damone-Jo Stafford: (Columbia). "SILENCE IS GOLDEN" (Morris*) gives the duo a chance to show off some warm harmony blending. "GOOD NITE" (Sun Valley†) has a pleasantable melodic setting which handles with ease.

Lee Kane: (Epic). "FAST SEVENTEEN" (Danby†) rocks in the familiar groove. "NEED YOU" (Moon Mist†), a stylized treatment of a rockin' ballad.

Bill Talapan: (Dot). "THE CRYIN' SIDE OF TOWN" (Trinity†) is a wailing blues item that could pick up strong jock & juke play. "RHYTHM IN MY HEART" (Trinity†), an exuberant side with a hot martial air.

Brook Benton: (Vik) "COME ON BE NICE" (Eden†), the beat here should go over well with the juke trade. "I WANNA DO EVERYTHING FOR YOU" (Raleight†) is a slick rockin' swinger that'll pile up deejay and coinbox play.

Dorothy Collins: (Coral). "SOFT SANDS" (Weiss & Barry†), another entry in the "Soft Sands" competish due for deejay exposure. "SING IT CHILDREN, SING IT" (Gateway*), a lively gospel-styled entry.

Sunny Gale: (Decca). "MY ARMS ARE A HOUSE" (S-B*), a pleasant ballad that gets a simple and forthright delivery. "DON'T WORRY 'BOUT ME" (Mills*), an oldie shouted out for okay results.

Lonnie Sattin: (Capitol). "I'LL NEVER STOP LOVING YOU" (Feist*), a strong ballad with a classy delivery that the deejays should go for. "WHOO-PIE SHOO-PIE" (Studio†), a rousing piece set to a spirited marching beat.

Bibby Ross: (Lyric). "BEACH PARTY TONIGHT" (Zodiac†) is constructed for teenage appeal and Bibby Ross' vocal makes it work. "ENGAGED" (Zodiac†) is par for the rock 'n' roll course.

The Five Playboys: (Dot). "PAGES OF MY SCRAPBOOK" (Fee-Bee†) is an average item in the r'n'r groove. "WHEN WE WERE YOUNG" (Fee-Bee†), fair ballad with the familiar r'n'r overtones.

Buddy Lee Stewart: (Liberty). "I MISS YOUR KISSING" (Brunswick†) blends a romantic crooner with a pleasant ballad setting. "I CAN'T FORGET LAST NIGHT" (Brunswick†) spotlights Stewart's easygoing style which develops the tune into a likeable product.

Album Reviews

Diahann Carroll: "Sings Harold Arlen Songs" (RCA Victor). The music of Harold Arlen and the voice of Diahann Carroll go well together. Her soprano tones hit just the right notes in this Arlen medley and she brings the proper blues, rhythm or jazzy touches to the pices. An important plus for the package is Ralph Burns' arrangements and conducting. Included in the set are "Sleeping Bee" (which she sang in the legituner "House of Flowers"), "Out of This World," "It's Only A Paper Moon," "Hit The Road To Dreamland" and "Come Rain Or Come Shine," among other socko standards.

"Fire Down Below" (Decca). Latest soundtracker out of the Decca shop fits right into the calypso groove. Package, culled from the Columbia release of the Rita Hayworth-Robert Mitchum-Jack Lemmon starrer, hits out with a Trinidad tempo that works into exciting shellac. Title song, by Ned Washington and Lester Lee, gets an excellent reading by Jeri Southern and Jack Lemmon whips up an intriguing harmonica solo on a haunting piece called "Harmonica Theme." Orch is conducted by Muir Mathieson.

Roy Hamilton: "The Golden Boy" (Epic). Power-packed emotional styling of Roy Hamilton gets a nifty display in roundup of current items and standards. His intelligent approach to lyric values enhances the material. Stickout songs in the set are "If I Were A Countryside" and "Somebody Somewhere," latter out of Frank Loesser's "Most Happy Fella."

Stan Kenton: "Kenton With Voices" (Capitol). Always a jazz pioneer, Stan Kenton is using this package, his first with vocals, to introduce the Modern Men, a progressive jazz styled vocal combo. The four boys are out of the mould set by the Four Freshman and the Hi-Lo's, but they've got enough individual styling to come out on their own. In addition to the combo, Kenton gives a couple of vocal chances to thrush Ann Richards who comes through on "Softly," "Women Usually Do" and "Opus in Chartreuse" in top fashion. Arrangements by Kenton are all in the maestro's imaginative jazz groove.

Ted Lewis: "A Million Memories" (RKO Unique). There's a legend on the album cover of Ted Lewis' second package for RKO-Unique that the set was recorded in 1957. Except for the sound reproduction, it could have been grooved decades ago because it faithfully retains Lewis' vintage, schmaltzy way with patter and song. It's a perfect followup to last year's "Me and My Shadow" which did well in the shops. Included are "I've Got A Million Memories," "When You're Smiling," "Be Yourself," "If I Were A Millionaire" and other Lewis familiars.

John Towner: "The John Towner Touch' (Kapp). Dave Kapp, boss of the Kapp label, has come up with another promising pianist in John Towner. (Current keyboard wheel at Kapp is Roger Williams.) Towner has taken a dozen waltz-tempoed compositions and has developed and expanded them into tasty rhythmic items. It's a varied and delightful session at the 88 which, at times, is enhanced by a rhythm group consisting of Jack Sperling (drums), Joe Mondragon (bass) and Howard Roberts (guitar).

Carmen McRae: "After Glow" (Decca). Another set of ASCAP standards has been corralled for a workover by Carmen McRae. With a stylized rhythm combo backing, Miss McRae again displays her torchy tones and her jazz touch to full advantage. Each item, individually, is a gem, but wrapped together in a 12-tune set, the package could have stood some pace-changers.

Ralph Sharon Sextet: "Around The World In Jazz" (Rama). Ralph Sharon has a wry way with jazz—in composition and treatment. The set includes 12 Sharon originals and he gives them an appreciative treatment on his 88 with the aid of a nimble sextet. He girdles the globe with titles such as "Just A Japanese Side-Man," "Hassle in Havana," "Prettily Italy," "Tipperary Fairy" and the like.

Roy Thompson: "Ambassador of Calypso" (Request). This is another worthwhile addition to the calypso shelf. Roy Thompson has an authentic way with the Trinidad tempo and he sends the tunes across the groove with the island spirit. He gets an attractive musical lift from the Cocoanut Vendors orch and chorus. Gros.

National Records Fills Roster, Makes Tie in Can.

Joe Leahy bolstered his National Records roster last week with the pacting of Jo Ann Lear, Kenny Vances, the Bachelors and the Petticoats.

Leahy also has tied in with Phonodisc Ltd., Toronto firm, for the release of National Records in Canada under the Regency label. Meantime, National's sales manager Ray Meinberg is prepping for a European trek next month to set up overseas distribution for the label.

Inside Stuff—Music

N.Y. World-Telegram & Sun staffer Edward Ellis did a feature on "Irving Berlin's New Hit Greets His Old Pal, Sam," having to do with Sam Hoffman, father of columnist Irving Hoffman. The songsmith got together a four-piece combo and not only personally recorded "Sam, Sam (The Man What Am!)" as his valentine to the retired 81-year-old schoolteacher, but journeyed to the 190 Riverside Drive (N.Y.) home to present it personally.

The songsmith was historically nervous, as with every new ditty—"how do you know he'll like it?"—but as the phonograph reproduced the accordion-bass-piano-singer (latter Berlin) version of "Sam, Sam, the man what am, you're as good as new; eighty-one?, you've just begun, to live to a hundred and two, Happy Birthday to you," the old gent stiffened, his eyes moistened as he stuck out his hand, and Berlin knew he had a new hit.

Columbia Records launches a new product this week with the introduction of its first portable radio. Set is a hi-fi transmiter model. Tagged TR-1000, the portable comes complete with leather camera-type case and has a suggested list price of $69.95. Retail price includes both batteries and the carrying case, items conventionally sold as "extras." The Col portable is equipped with tiny transistors supplanting conventional tubes and a four-inch speaker. A special earphone attachment is available to permit private listening.

With more than 1,000 entries already in, the RCA Victor-Cannon Camera album cover photo contest has been extended to Aug. 31. Contest will award $3,000 worth of RCA Victor hi-fi and tv equipment as well as Cannon cameras to photographers who submit the best color transparencies for the cover of a forthcoming RCA Victor album tagged "Hi-Fi In Focus."

Walt Disney is building up his new Mickey Mouse Club label as a kidisk adjunct to the Disneyland Records firm on the Coast. Three of his "Mousketeer" moppets—Cubby O'Brien, Karen Pendleton and Tommy Cole—have been signed to two-year contracts with the Mickey Mouse Club label. A fourth Mouseketeer, Darlene Gillespie, was signed to Disneyland and will also cut sides for Club disks.

Tunes from Allied Artists' "Love In The Afternoon" are getting a hefty wax splurge. "Fascination" already has been etched by Dinah Shore (RCA Victor), Dick Jacobs (Coral), Jane Morgan (Kapp), Bill Snyder (Decca) and David Carroll (Mercury). Jerry Vale cut the title song for Columbia and "Ariane" has been sliced by Frank de Vol (Columbia), Woody Herman (Verve) and David Rose (MGM). Verve is releasing the soundtrack package by Franz Waxman.

OK COL ARTISTS FOR VERVE NEWPORT PKGES.

Norman Granz has received the greenlight from Columbia Records to release some Col artists on his upcoming Verve label packages of the Newport Jazz Festival. Granz taped the festival, which ran at Newport, R. I., July 4-6, for planned five-package presentation.

George Avakian, head of Col's album division, gave Granz the okay on the Don Byrd-Gigi Gryce Jazz Lab Quintet, Kai Winding and Jimmy Rushing. Col artists at the fest who won't be grooved by Verne are Dave Brubeck, Erroll Garner and Mahalia Jackson. For the most part, material presented by Brubeck, Garner and Miss Jackson at Newport already has been etched for the Col label.

It's not yet determined whether Granz will get an okay from Capitol Records on Stan Kenton and George Shearing.

A portion of last year's Newport bash was released by Columbia Records.

Decca's New Pactees

The Flamingos, a rock 'n' roll combo which formerly sliced for the Checker label, has joined the Decca label. First platter will be "The Ladder of Love" and "Let's Make Up."

Sandra Meade, a 17-year-old thrush from Nashville, has also been inked by the label with her disk bow to be "Midnight Blues" and "Ain't Nothing Wrong With That Baby." She is currently singing with Ben Pryor's orch at the Plantation Club in Nashville.

Newport Jazz Fete Gets Too Big For Its Bleachers; 50,000 Buffs Jam Town

By DAVID BITTAN

Newport, July 16.

This staid New England seaside community has come back to normal as the thousands of jazz buffs and the hundreds of musicians they followed to the fourth annual Newport Jazz Festival (July 4-7) headed back to home.

Restaurateurs, inn-keepers and merchants were looking forward to next year. With 50,000 persons crowding into Freebody Park for the four-day jazz binge, business was good.

The Louis L. Lorillards, patron saints of the festival, and George Wein, who runs it for them, were happy. With attendance more than doubled over last year, the festival finally was on sound financial footing.

But the buff who spent four days and nights here asks one question: Has the festival outgrown Newport?

There was a round-the-clock traffic jam in the narrow streets. Utter chaos reigned Saturday night (July 6), when 5,000 were turned away from the thoroughly inadequate athletic field-turned-concert hall. And a record 12,400 were jammed into the stadium.

Hundreds were forced to sleep in their cars because of the lack of rooms. It sometimes took an hour to buy a sandwich. But in spite of these difficulties, the festivalites were a well-behaved lot, except for a few faddists who thought they had to drink beer to enjoy jazz.

Louis Armstrong, 57 years old on July 4, was billed as the festival star. But he was somewhat less than that. In addition to refusing to play with old sidekicks such as Jack Teagarden and Kid Ory, he trotted out his usual repertoire without any consideration that his was a "hip" audience looking for something new.

When the crowd did hear some-

Mercury Hops On Stereo Tape In Major Uptrend

The stereophonic tape movement is getting a boost with the entry of Mercury Records in this market this month. Mercury's initial tape release will comprise 12 reels in the classical and jazz-pop categories.

Since Victor began marketing the stereo tapes about three years ago, several other diskeries, among them, Westminster and Vox Records, have been releasing such packages on a regular basis. Angel Records is expected to hit the counters with stereo tapes shortly, while all the other majors are watching the market for the right moment to enter. Victor, meantime, is stepping up its stereo releases. By the end of this year, it will have 100 stereo tapes in its catalog, as against 44 at the present time.

Mercury's tapes will be on seven-inch reels containing 1,200 feet and running seven and one half inches per second. The tapes will be packaged in full-color boxes with complete information on recording characteristics. Price of the stereo tapes has been pegged at $12.95. The tapes are being sold on a non-returnable basis on all selling levels.

Roulette's Roster Rise

Roulette Records went on a pacting binge last week in line with the expansion plans set by the diskery's artists & repertoire heads Hugo Peretti and Luigi Creatore.

Joining the Roulette roster are Keefe Brasselle, Leo Diamond, Chuck Reed, Shaye Cogan, Larry Storch, Carol Hughes, Jimmie Rodgers, the Mitchell-Ruff Duo, the Herb Pomeroy orch and Jane Harvey. Miss Harvey, incidentally, is the wife of Bob Thiele, a&r chief for Coral Records.

VARIETY DISK JOCKEY POLL

This compilation is designed to indicate those records rising in popularity as well as those on top. Ratings are computed on the basis of ten points for a No. 1 mention, nine for a No. 2, and so on down to one point. Wherever possible, only records with two or more mentions are listed, even though their total points are less in some cases than those which receive only one mention. Cities and jockeys will vary from week to week to present a comprehensive picture of all sectors of the country regionally.

Col, Engineers Come to Terms; IBEW In at Cap

Columbia is back in recording action. Diskery and its recording engineers came to an agreement on a new contract Friday (12) winding up a two-week-old strike which halted Col's recording activities in New York and Chicago.

Terms of the new contract were not revealed but differences between Col and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (AFL-CIO), Local 1212 in N.Y. and Local 1220 in Chicago, concerned wage hikes, overtime pay, vacations and wider jurisdiction over audio tape. The previous pact expired June 30.

Col was not affected on the Coast because it doesn't use its own facilities there.

Washington, July 16.

Local 1710 of IBEW has been designated to represent all production and maintenance workers at the Los Angeles plant of Capitol Records.

National Labor Relations Board upheld IBEW which had earlier won a bargaining election. NLRB rejected objections raised by United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, an independent union which had been defeated in the bargaining election.

Roulette Extends Spin On Cuffo Sets to Aug.

Roulette Records is extending its kickoff album program for an additional 30 days. Plan, which was launched June 1 and scheduled to end July 15, featured a giveaway of two cuffo albums to all distribs and dealers who bought 12 albums in the line. Campaign now winds Aug. 15.

Included in the Roulette album series are Buddy Knox, Jimmy Bowen, Pearl Bailey and Henry Jerome.

thing different—such as the astonishing Farmingdale L.I., High School jazz band—it shouted itself hoarse. A surprising 4,000 turned out for the July 6 afternoon concert, in which the youngsters, averaging 14 years of age, broke things up with their swinging, Basieish sound. The performance—and reception—of this group, conducted by Marshall Brown, was probably the high point of the entire festival.

Gospel Singers On Bill

The July 7 afternoon concert also provided something new—an entire show featuring gospel singing. The incomparable Mahalia Jackson was the headliner, supported by the rhythmic Clara Ward singers; the Drinkhard singers and the Back Home Choir. With 4,000 on hand, this could become an annual event.

On hand recording the finale for his Verve Records was Norman Granz. He recorded most of the festival sessions and hopes to release at least five LP albums. Many of the top performers, including Miss Fitzgerald, already are under contract to Granz.

Also present were several hundred "press radio" people, including reporters from "way-out" publications such as "Salt Water Sportsman" and a motor skooter magazine.

The sportsman reporter posed several musicians with fishing gear to "tie in" jazz with sports.

The Voice of America taped the proceedings for broadcast overseas; NBC's "Monitor," Paris Match and scores of magazines, newspapers and radio stations were represented.

Willis Conover, Voice of America d.j., was emcee for most of the sessions.

Coral's Dual Bill On Film Scores

Hefty sales reaction to singles from motion picture scores has prompted Coral Records to rush into market with the soundtrack album of the tunes. The singles are Debbie Reynolds' etching of "Tammy," from "Tammy and the Bachelor," and the McGuire Sisters' slicing of the title tune from "Interlude."

Coral is giving the package a "double feature" treatment by coupling both scores in one package. Each title gets solo billing on one side of the jacket.

Braille Music Institute Starts Drive for Funds

The Louis Braille Music Institute of America, which furnishes braille versions of standard sheet music, disks and a braille-printed music magazine to blind musicians and music lovers, has launched a drive to underwrite the activities of the organization.

Parish's 2-Way Poems

Irving Mills is prepping a dual book-disk package of the Mitchell Parish poems which have topped Walter Winchell's syndicated column over the past few years. Mills has selected 35 poems for book publication and plans to cull 12 for the LP display.

A composer has not yet been assigned to set the music for the Parish poetry.

Carroll, Phillips to V.I.P.

Jack Carroll and Gary Phillips have joined the indie V.I.P. Records.

Before joining V.I.P., Phillips sang with the Ralph Flanagan, Woody Herman and Johnny Long bands. Carroll formerly etched for RKO-Unique.

Show Bizites Hang Cloud on R. I. Rainmaker Pact as B.O. Damper

Lexington, Mass., July 16.

The rainmaking biz like the policeman's lot, is not always happy. Lexington rainmaker Dr. Wallace E. Howell, meteorologist and a leading pro in the field of cloud-seeding to induce rain, has had his contract with the neighboring state of Rhode Island held up.

It seems that scores of messages from outdoor show biz poured into Gov. Dennis J. Roberts' office when word got out that the state was ready to hire a rainmaker to end the long long drought. Typical was a message from Louis L. Lorillard, prexy of the Newport Jazz Fesival, urging the governor not to hire the rainmaker, and pleading with him not to approve any artificial rainmaking until after end of the recent jazz bash. Rain would have seriously dampened the festivities, Lorillard deadpanned.

Rhode Island farmers have organized for a march on the State House to explain their plight and urge inking of the contract with the rainmaker immediately. The governor and his administration found themselves caught between these conflicting appeals.

The proposal to hire the Lexington rainmaker was initiated by John L. Rego, R. I. state director of agriculture and conservation. He obtained the tentative approval of Gov. Roberts and opened negotiations with Dr. Howell.

Dr. Howell went to Providence prepared to sign a contract with the state and set up his cloud-seeding machines. But at the last minute, objections were raised by Joseph L. Byron, state purchasing agent, whose signature was required on the contract; Byron said further study of the contract was necessary and that further assurance was needed from the attorney general's department that the rainmaking project wouldn't involve the state in lawsuits.

The matter rests there, and while the rainmaker awaits a call to ink the contract, participants in the controversy are bringing more and more pressure to bear at the R. I. State House while the sun continues to shine, the arms in the state continue to parch and the weatherman sees no immediate prospect of rain.

Creditor-Owner of Chain Of Cafes, Arthur Ganger Dies in New York at 71

I. Arthur Ganger, who died in New York Sunday (14) at 71, at one time owned more night clubs than any other individual in the country. As a dealer in bar and restaurant supplies, Ganger was left holding the bag in so many folded cafes that he almost considered personal operation of them at one stage of his careeer. He did go into the straight restaurant biz, however.

During the Prohibition era and immediately afterward, cafe sites were so much in demand that he was able to unload the equipment that he sold to new owners. At one time, he owned the Midnight Sun, but concessionaires and new owners came in to take that one over. During Prohibition, he got around the regulations that would have made his enterprise illegal by labeling all bars as counters. He had extensive dealings with underworld figures, although his operation was legal. He once boasted that he was never stuck for a penny when dealing with the underworld characters. He is said to have told intimates that he had to be on the lookout when dealing with legitimate citizens.

Ganger entered the bar and restaurant business in the '20s. Prior to that he ran steamship excursions, and later sold cash registers when he decided to enlarge his line. Some of the niteries he equipped included the original Stork Club, Paradise, Silver Slipper, Midnight Sun, Central Park Casino, N.Y., and Five O'clock Club, Miami Beach. For a while, he operated a string of ham 'n' egg spots throughout New York. He also owned the Bar Mart, large supplier of bars and gadgets for homes.

Surviving are his wife, Bobbie, who operates the Bar Mart, two daughters, four sons and 10 grandchildren.

L.V.'s Thunderbird Closing In Nov. for 150G Facelift

The Thunderbird Hotel, Las Vegas, is slated to close around November for a wholesale refurbishing of the nitery room. It's anticipated that the alterations will cost around $150,000.

When facelifting is completed, it's expected that the spot will attempt to buy a more expensive line of talent. Generally, the Thunderbird has gone in for modestly budgeted acts, but that may be changed by spring when the heavy traffic in Las Vegas begins.

Don Cherry's Flop $550 In Cleve. 'Dance' Series; Cain Park's Bookings

Cleveland, July 16.

Don Cherry, crooning golfer, started a new policy of recording guestars appearing with Vince Patti's 16-piece band in a "Dance Under the Stars" series at Cain Park Theatre over the weekend (13-14).

Two-night opener in the municipally operated amphitheatre was a red-inked disappointment for the project's backers. They consist of City of Cleveland Heights, its joint recreation and two theatrical advisors, bandmaster Hal Lynn and Dick Jackson, Cleveland booker, who helped work out the summer program of events.

Cherry drew less than 500 persons at $2 top into the 3,000-capacity auditorium in two performances, grossing a dismal $550. With rental coming to $400 plus $800 for singer and $400 for orch the show lost over $1,000 for sponsors.

Licking their wounds they agreed the flop was attributable to three factors: (1) First attraction should have been a stronger drawing card and geared to pull adults instead of dancing youngsters; (2) affair was inadequately publicized; (3) uncertainty of weather probably scared many potential ticket buyers away from open-air theatre.

Bigger, more encouraging advance sale is being registered for next guestar, Roger Williams, pianist of Kapp's waxed "Fabulous 50s" album, appearing Friday (19) in one performance with Patti orch.

Blackpool's 'American Look'

Blackpool, Eng., July 9.

More and more U.S. acts are being seen around this top English summer show biz mecca. Concentration of international vaude talent in the seaside town opens up a market to specialties from both the U.S. and Europe.

In addition, recent trips to the States by Kathleen Williams, femme entertainments executive manager of the wealthy Blackpool Tower Co. Ltd., have resulted in a larger quota of U.S. acts being pacted for current season.

A Tower Company official told VARIETY: "There should be even more U.S. acts in future summer seasons." The 1957 crop are result of a trip by Miss Williams in 1956, and she repeated the Atlantic crossing earlier this year to scout for more talent.

The Blackpool Tower Co. controls major vauderies like the Opera House (a 3,000-seater), Winter Gardens Pavilion, and Palace, plus the famed Tower Circus, an operation (one-ring) using top world acts and running from April to October.

In addition, the indie-owned Queen's Theatre features specialties from the States, the Arnaut Bros. having clicked there last summer. This year's American act is Bob Hammond and his performing White Cockatoos. Although now Paris-based, Hammond hails from Philadelphia, having gone to Europe in 1954.

The plushy Opera House, where George & Alfred Black present the leading show, has two U.S. acts this season in Holger & Dolores, dancing duo, and Nirska, making her U.K. bow with the "Dance of the Butterfly" act. Latter was booked last year from the Canadian National Exhibition at Toronto.

Holger & Dolores are now U.S.-based, though male of the team is Swedish. Distaffer is from California. Act gains solid palming nightly at the Opera House. There is also strong reception for novelty of Nirska.

Although Continental in origin, two acts in the adjacent Winter Gardens Pavilion show are from the U.S. One is the Three Merkys, acro-comedy trio from Munich, Germany, and for past five years in the States. They recently debuted at the London Palladium. Other act is the Three Romanos, all brothers, and third generation of an Italian show biz family. Longtime resident in the U.S., they have played in many N.Y. and Hollywood shows, and were in Britain at the London Casino in 1953.

The Tower Circus features four American-originated acts this summer. One is the aerial trio of the Flying Marilees, a second the three Aerial Chapmans. Also from the U.S. is the cute pooch specialty "Excess Baggage," presented by Alma Michaels. The five members of the Yokoi troupe, with cycling offering, are also here from America.

In addition, Hollywood films are vieing with a galaxy of live shows to draw goodly sections of the 8,000,000 vacationers invading the seaside beach town for the 1957 season. "Teahouse of the August Moon" has followed "War and Peace" at the Princess Cinema; other U.S. first-releases are lined up at various cinemas.

Ella Fitzgerald Attacked by Man With Same Name on A.C. Stage

Atlantic City, July 16.

A frenzied rock 'n' roll fan leaped to the stage of the Warner Theatre here Saturday (13) night and assaulted singer Ella Fitzgerald, appearing at the house with Louis Armstrong and Lionel Hampton.

The assailant,, William E. Fitzgerald, 29, no relation to the singer, gave a local address. After questioning by polce he was held for a medical examination at Ancora State Mental Hospital. Miss Fitzgerald will await results of the sanity test before deciding on what action she will take.

The man got on the stage as Miss Fitzgerald was in her first show of the two staged. He struck the singer in the face with his fists, the attack coming so quickly that the three men in a trio accompanying her could not halt it. They and other musicians in the wings seized the man and held him for police.

Some 2,000 in the theatre witnessed the attack. Singer was not seriously hurt and returned, although shaken, to do her second show.

Photog Was There

Atlantic City, July 16.

Even George A. Hamid, who operates the Warner Theatre here, thought that the hulking gent who came up from the audience onstage and started to push Ella Fitzgerald around was part of a routine. Not so New York news photog Bill Mark, who happened to be in the wings. He finally pulled the over-six-footer away and turned him over to a cop who meantime had arrived.

Miss Fitzgerald was bleeding from a wound in the left elbow and had suffered some bad bumps on her head from the attacker who later was found to have been an inmate of a mental institution.

The incident on the first show Saturday (13) took everyone onstage by such surprise that not until she cried "help" did lenser Mark, who is also almost a 6-footer, jump into action. He was taking candid shots of the show from the wings. Louis Armstrong, the third co-headliner (with Miss Fitzgerald and Lionel Hampton), had not as yet arrived.

The bruises prevented Miss Fitzgerald doing her stint but, upon Hamid's urgency, she came down for the finale and did a couple of songs to an ovation. The impresario lauded her for her "guts."

The gendarmes, after investigation of the assailant's record, told the singer it was not necessary to press charges because of his past history.

Bad Weather, Hassles Hit Okla. Anni Expo; Walters Cancels Finale

Oklahoma City, July 16.

The Oklahoma Semicentennial Exhibition wound up July 6 with more than its share of headaches. There are likely to be some lawsuits and several countersuits as a result of the three shows staged at this event by Lou Walters, operator of the Latin Quarter, N.Y., who produced the layouts here.

The final show of the event didn't go on as a result of a dispute over the payment of monies allegedly due Walters. The State of Oklahoma and Oklahoma City, which sponsored the project in association with American New Frontiers Inc., a local patriotic organization, had informed Walters on the final night that ASCAP had made a claim for royalty payments, and therefore he was holding back the final $10,000 due Walters pending adjudication of the ASCAP claim. Walters held that under all normal show biz operations, the spot where shows are held rightfully pay the ASCAP coin, and therefore the sponsors were violating their contract by refusing to pay off. Walters refused to let the show go on until the payment was made in accordance with the contract.

Also on the final week came another headache. One of the McGuire Sisters failed to show on opening night (July 1) because of the illness of one of the girls. When they came a couple of days later, Nick John Matsuokas, who was in charge of the shows, and who signed Walters as producer, didn't want them to go on. However, an expo official stated that he would sign a separate pact with them and be responsible for their dough. This was done and the girls were paid out of another fund.

The other performers affected by the finale night were paid off by the American Guild of Variety Artists out of certified checks sent over by Walters.

Generally, it's conceded that the sponsors of the show lost a considerable amount of money, although it's reported that at least 1,000,000 admissions were clocked Weather was against the expo throughout. At various times, special holidays were declared by the state and city to enable business houses and government workers to close to stimulate attendance.

LONDON CAFE DE PARIS SHELVES NAME POLICY

London, July 16.

The Cafe de Paris is abandoning its bigleague name policy and is to launch twice nightly shows when it reopens in September. Its current policy will wind after Helen Traubel's season comes to an end the first week in August.

The previously announced decision to reopen in September with Zsa Zsa Gabor has been dropped in consequence of the policy change. Donald Neville-Willing, the cafe's general manager, who had been responsible for talent booking, is leaving the organization.

Over the past years the Cafe de Paris had been London's top spot for international headliners. Among the toppers who had played there in recent times were Sophie Tucker, Marlene Dietrich, Noel Coward, Eartha Kitt and Hermione Gingold. Tallulah Bankhead recently closed a six weeks' run there at a reported $8,400 per week. Her season was, apparently, a financial failure.

Archie Robbins to Aussie

Archie Robbins has been signed for a 20-week tour of the Tivoli circuit in Australia. Comic is slated to start at the Tivoli Theatre, Sydney, Aug. 12.

House Panel OK's 10% Nitery Tax

Washington, July 16.

The drive to reduce the 20% bite on nitery tabs is underway again in Congress.

A House Ways and Means subcommittee voted last week to reduce the tax to 10%. This must now be approved by the full Ways and Means Committee—and probably will, before going to the House floor for a vote. The Treasury Dept. has been opposing any reduction in the levy which now brings in about $43,000,000 annually.

Last year, a similar bill passed the House but bogged down in the Senate. If the present measure clears the House again, there is a chance that the Senate will approve it in 1958 and leave it up to President Eisenhower to make the decision.

This will not necessarily be negative. While the Treasury Dept. is opposed, the Labor Dept. is favorable. It takes the position that halving the cabaret tax will provide more work for musicians, and members of other trade unions. The unions have been urging a complete elimination of the tax.

The Ways and Means subcommittee also approved repealing the 10% manufacturers' excise on children's phonograph records costing 25c or less.

San Antonio, July 16.

Some of the biggest stars in show biz are being approached to appear at San Antonio's first automobile show to be staged Jan. 17-22 at the Bexar County Coliseum. Entertainment will include several names and bands and a variety of network tv acts, one especially for children.

The show will be sponsored by the San Antonio Auto Dealers Assn. with proceeds to Little League baseball in metropolitan San Antonio.

Graves' Book on London's Cafe de Paris, Top Nitery

Charles Graves, who just had his book, "Royal Riviera," published in London, has another scheduled for release next March by Odhams Press. The new one, tagged "Champagne and Chandeliers," is a history of the Cafe de Paris, London, from 1924-1957. Of the top acts that played the spot during that period, 80% were Americans, according to Graves.

Meanwhile, an American edition of "Riviera" is slated for Putnam publication next fall, with a foreword by Bing Crosby.

Reno, July 16.

Miss Nevada, Loni Gravelle, was engaged for the current Riverside show starring Joe E. Lewis this week, and will follow this with date at the Tropicana in Las Vegas.

The talented brunet plays classical piano and was worked into the show to give the Riverside Starlets, the George Moro line, more time to change between numbers. The girls were having to follow immediately after one act since Joe E. Lewis prefers to close a show himself.

ECONOMY MOVE DOWNBEATS JAZZ

By DAVE LEVADI

Chicago, July 16.

Jazz is out and jukeboxes are in along Rush St., Chicago's main cabaret artery, as bonifaces are beginning to tighten their entertainment budgets. Oddly enough, it's happening at a time when New York is growing jazz-happy in the way that Chi clubs did two years ago, when new jazz clubs were breaking out all over town like an epidemic.

As far as Chicago is concerned, modern jazz has lost its Midas touch and most of the clubs that purveyed it during its brief heyday are now either closed, closing or switching to coin machines.

The slump is a twofold affair. The downbeat in jazz interest here is generally acknowledged. Secondly, cabarets in general have been increasingly empty in recent months and the jazzmen, riding high to start, now find they have a greater distance to fall. The most sensitive spot for any such impact is as usual the Rush St. bistro.

Sellouts

Cloister Inn, which came in on the jazz upswing, was recently sold to Skip Krask and Shelly Kasten for an amount approximating the back taxes due on the place. The new owners intend to continue billing small combos and vocalists.

Among the last spots catering chiefly to local talent, the S.R.O. and Easy Street, are precariously situated profitwise. Easy Street has cut its trio to a single pianist

'Five-Past Eight' Revue In Premature Brit. Foldo; Blame Heat, Races, Time

Newcastle, Eng., July 16.

"Five-Past Eight," $45,000 summer revue introduced at Theatre Royal here by Howard & Wyndham from Scotland, folded Saturday (13) after a five-week run. An eight-to-10 week stint was skedded.

Revue featured Jack Radcliffe, with Billy Whitaker, as comedians, and had a guestar singer, David Whitfield, for first three weeks.

Show gained prestige reviews and pleased the customers it drew, but hit a heatwave plus local race-week counter attractions. Customers were also not acclimatized to the sophisticated type of revue.

Although titled "Five-Past Eight," the show, unlike its counterparts at Glasgow and Edinburgh, did not tee-off at titular time but started nightly at 7. Many believe that a later start would have drawn more customers.

Despite setback, Howard & Wyndham hope to revive the idea next summer. They will also stage a Christmas revue at the Opera House, Manchester. Radcliffe, Scot comedian, planes to Canada for concert tour in September.

Cal. State Fair Taps Donn Arden's Revue

Hollywood, July 16.

Current Donn Arden revue at Frank Sennes' Moulin Rouge will play Sacramento next month as the feature attraction of the first six days of the California State Fair. Only the production numbers will be utilized and there will be no headliners for the show.

Revue closes at the Moulin Rouge Aug. 25 and opens in Sacramento Aug. 28. Meanwhile, the nitery will remain dark for rehearsals of the new edition.

Tommy Steele's Tour

London, July 9.

Tommy Steele is to make a tour of the Continent in the fall. It will probably last for about three weeks.

Cities set so far are Copenhagen, Brussels, Paris and Rome or Milan.

Auditoriums O.O. the 'New Audience'; Some See B.O. in 'Touring TV Specs'

Agencies' answer to the shortage of suitable talent for arenas and auditoriums is touring spectaculars taken off the networks so that television can recover some of the gigantic costs of producing these shows. This proposal was made by representatives of the William Morris Agency and Music Corp. of America at the annual convention of the International Assn. of Auditorium Managers, which convened last week at the Henry Hudson Hotel, N.Y.

However, the feeling among many of the auditorium managers and operators is that it is still difficult to sell what has been given away previously. Radio, they say, used to act as a trailer, the public got only one facet of an artist or a show, but were willing to pay for a view of the visual half.

Wooing Stay-at-Homes

Many of the auditorium men feel that the day of video will be waning. As E.M. Racey, of the Will Rogers Memorial Auditorium, Ft. Worth, who presided at the confab, put it, "The old songs like 'Love Letters in the Sand' and others are coming back. Pretty soon audiences will be coming back. They won't stay at home forever."

However, some auditorium men think that television will some day offer the operators a basis for a promotion. The idea that the auds can work hand-in-hand with the networks is promising. The first proposal of that nature almost came off last year, when the Esther Williams Tour was projected following presentation of an NBC-TV spec. However, Miss Williams called off the tour after it was completely booked.

Greatest problem to auditorium ops is the paucity of roadshows. They still feel that touring editions of hit shows are popular around the country and will be supported. There is some beef on terms, but bulk of them can be promoted advantageously.

Femme Prexy

The organization this year, for the first time in its 32-year history selected a femme president. Winifred Corey, of the Kleinhans Auditorium, Buffalo, was named to the top post, succeeding Racey. Charles A. McElravey, of Memphis, was again chosen secretary-treasurer. Vicepresidents of the organization include Santo Panetti, William Stark, Atwood Olson, Louis Gulden, Fred McCalley, Francis Deering, Lindley Luddeke, Ted Droettboom. Delegates at large who will serve on the board of directors are H. N. Nierreugge, Edward Forni, M. E. Thayer and C. W. Van Lopik.

One of the hightlights of the N.Y. convention was the blowout provided for the delegates by "Holiday on Ice" which fed the confab at Toots Shor's, and then took the delegates to "My Fair Lady" on Wednesday (10).

IAAM leadership feels that auditorium construction will continue at an accelerated pace for a few years. There are still many communities without sizable halls. Another problem facing auditorium management stems from the fact that a lot of spots are refurnishing at costs exceeding original construction. They have found it more feasible to renovate and modernize rather than start afresh because of the high costs of property acquisition in suitable locations, and climbing construction tallies.

Hutton's 25G for Tahoe

Hollywood, July 16.

Betty Hutton will draw a record $25,000 for a 10-day stand at Cal-Neva Lodge, Lake Tahoe, opening July 24. She pays the supporting cast of 11 performers out of her share. House is already SRO for the stand.

From Cal-Neva, Miss Hutton goes to the Sahara, Las Vegas, opening Aug. 6.

Reno Holiday's Games & Names

Reno, July 16.

The Holiday Hotel, originally built with the idea of providing a kind of non-gaming oasis in Nevada for sportsmen and tourists, is seeking a gambling license.

A new group takes over the Holiday Aug. 1, headed by Newton Crumley, Elko County senator, and former operator of the Commercial Hotel and Ranch Inn in Elko. Built by Norman Biltz and John Muller, Holiday's original plan was that it would have no gaming or entertainment. A game preserve was the only incentive to sportsmen guests, except, of course, snazzy accommodations.

The new group also intends to begin big name entertainment as soon as its license is approved. The license application will be subjected to the regular investigation of the Nevada Gaming Control Board and tax commission.

Sarah Vaughan, Basie, Others Dated for O'seas

Europe is taking an added interest in the jazz names along with rock 'n' rollers. This type of performer was always big on the Continent, but lately the demand has been greater because of the upbeat in disk sales both in the U.S. and in Europe. Rock 'n' rollers along with the orthodox jazz names have gotten in on the boom.

Recent bookings in Europe include Sarah Vaughan who will play the Olympia Theatre, Paris, in February. Count Basie has been pacted for a tour of the British Isles and will do a date at the Olympia. Other jazz bookings include stands in Britain for Wild Bill Davison, Glenn Miller band, and Kai Winding. Jack Green of the Willard Alexander agency has just returned from a quick trip to Europe to firm up these dates.

AMERICAN ACT INJURED

While Rehearsing Dru & Dijon Fall Into Pit

Aberdeen, Scot., July 16.

Dru & Dijon, billed as "America's Ace Specialty," were rehearsing their dancing act onstage at the Capitol Theatre here two hours before opening night (8) when they crashed from the stage into orch pit.

Both were taken to hospital with head injuries. Their condition was described as "fairly satisfactory."

Duo were going over a point in their act and checking the timing with conductor Jack Bolesworth. Dijon, with his partner above his head, was spinning when he stumbled, and both fell into orch pit. Stage hands and musicians ran to their assistance and found them unconscious, Miss Dru bleeding heavily from a head injury.

Miss Dru, 32, is a Canadian, and Alan Dijon a Lithuanian-born American. They were formerly ice-skaters.

Capitol, normally a cinema, is staging a twice-nightly season of vaude for the vacationers.

Successor to Bolivar at the Reforma hasn't been named as yet. Reason for the resignation wasn't disclosed.

Abbott & Costello

time Costello was managed by Eddie Sherman, while Abbott's affairs were handled by Sam Steifel. When they resumed partnership, Sherman took over. Sherman and Steifel, incidentally, were also partnered in several enterprises including Fays Theatre, Philadelphia.

The pair came up from burlesque and, at one time, while working for Universal Pictures, were the hottest boxoffice property extant. It was at the height of their career when their major quarrel came and Universal stepped in to protect its valuable b.o. asset.

A&C were one of the more long-lived performer partnerships. Team of Dean Martin & Jerry Lewis didn't last as long, but probably had as many fights as A&C. Another famed fueding pair were James McIntyre & Tom Heath, together for 40 years and not talking to each other offstage for nearly that length of time. The most famous feud in history was one between W. S. Gilbert & Sir Arthur Sullivan. Famous collaborators didn't communicate with each other except through a third person or letters. They would exchange manuscripts with insulting remarks to each other.

However, there are partners who can stand each other even after many years. Joe Smith & Charlie Dale, who have been collabbing for 55 years, are still pals off and on stage.

N.O.'S 'STARLIFT' PLANES FOR HURRICANE BENEFIT

New Orleans, July 16.

City of New Orleans is placing two planes at disposal of the American Guild of Variety Artists which will stage a benefit for the victims of the recent Hurrican Audrey. Show will take place at the Municipal Auditorium here next Tuesday (23). Venture is labeled "Operation Starlift."

One of the planes will be stationed in Hollywood and the other in New York to transport volunteer names and acts. Irvin P. Mazzei AGVA topper on the Coast, and Jackie Bright, national administrator in New York, have appealed to talent to participate in the event.

George Kelly's Group

George Kelly, one of the original Yacht Club Boys, who just sold an original to Harry Joe Brown for filming in Hollywood, has gotten together Kelly's Night Owls, a rhythm combo. It comprises four Negro boys (Kelly's name is merely for ownership identification) whom the vet singer is managing.

Kelly's film original is titled "The Last Record," a racetrack story—not phonograph.

Hotel Pierre

the battery of violins would make a bigger floor flash.

The "Monseigneur policy" has been tried before in New York, ranging from Billy Rose's Diamond Horseshoe to the Hotel Biltmore but, as Melba puts it, "it probably has a better chance above 59th St." Chez Vito has proved that. Straight eatery has done big late-hour business with the romantic fiddle pitch.

The Pierre, which is dominantly owned by oil tycoon Paul Getty, who resides in Paris and commutes to the Middle East oil fields, and is in effect an absentee landlord, has a board of directors in New York which controls budgets. It became impatient with the constant agent pitch, "Well, she got so-much in Las Vegas" (or Miami Beach, or Havana), and becoming vexed with "this ratrace of agents' tactics" decided to switch policy completely.

For many years the Cotillion Room was a prime Gotham showcase and even through this past season business was strong, the law of diminishing returns decided the policy shift. Lilo, Marguerite Piazza, Celeste Holm, Jane Morgan, Caterina Valente were notably strong b.o. In fact, Lilo had been booked to reopen the Cotillion Room's name policy but with this switch her dating is automatically cancelled.

Camp Shows

Sailors and Marines, when show biz took an active interest in troop entertainment. Giving the movement its greatest impetus was Abe Lastfogel, then general manager (now president) of the William Morris Agency, who set up the entire organization. He served with no pay. His first aide though all the years was Lawrence Phillips, who will preside at Camp Shows' liquidation. Phillips, who is exec veepee of Camp Shows, also served during the tenure of James Sauter, who headed CS for a couple of years, and who was followed by George J. Schaefer, the current prexy. Lastfogel continued to function as chairman of the board.

During its tenure, the function of Camp Shows changed several times. From domestic entertainment prior to Pearl Harbor, it changed to overseas as well as domestic showing during World War II. Following the armistice, it was decided to make Camp Shows the mothball fleet of the Armed Services entertainment arm by changing its function to entertainment of hospitalized vets. During the Korean War it resumed its overseas entertainment function. Following the armistice, it entertained troops stationed in isolated posts and in European and Pacific areas away from established entertainment centres.

Low-Cost Job

Camp Shows was regarded as one of the most economical agencies in an administrative sense. During WW II, its administration costs were only about 2½%, for which it produced its own shows as well. Before its demise with curtailed activity, it was able to produce and administer shows for about 10% of its budget.

It's estimated that US Camp Shows productions have been seen by 22,835,000 servicemen and woman at 464,000 performances in every part of the world.

Inside Stuff—Vaude

When Jerry Lewis hit Buffalo for one day on his current personal appearance tour, he had what he termed a "compulsion" to visit the Palace (burlesque) theatre where he made his profesional debut as a 15 year old performer in 1941. Watching the current show from the last row, he was comparing his long time recollection of the place as a mile long auditorium and block wide stage with the actual "cracker box" size of the house when the manager tapped him on the shoulder and handed him a filing card bearing the legend "Jerry Lewis, (pantomimist), September, 1941, Salary $125 p.w."

and the whole setup is reportedly up for sale. The Algiers Restaurant dropped one of its two piano bars because one is all business would justify. Like other pubs, it is installing a jukebox. The Domino also was forced to limit its small group entertainment.

In the Loop, the Modern Jazz Room is one of the few places in town that bids for top jazz names, but its downstairs operation, the Preview Lounge, rakes in that spot's heavy grosses with its exclusively dixieland kick. Other dixieland places such as the 1111 Club and Jazz Limited also contrast sharply with the general trend and get plenty of busy nights without big name performers.

Accent on Small Combos

Except for the overall disappearance of nitery crowds, the music spots could limit their pessimism with the claim that the jazz situation is no leaner than it was before the recent peak. The still durable Blue Note under Frank Holzfeind's hand does a generally heavyweight business with top band and combo names, but recent bookings of its first non-musical act, comic Mort Sahl, drew heavier crowds than co-billed musicians. A whole gamut of small combos continues to parade through the profitable London House steakery, yet recent midweek opening nights have not always been sellouts.

The only hopeful signs for jazzophiles and local musicians are on the southside where several sepia establishments provide a buffer against sagging playdates. Although Billie Holiday's Partner's Club and the Beehive have shuttered, Roberts Show Lounge and other spots thereabouts are back to music bookings after experiments with vaude acts. The Sutherland Hotel has just initiated a jazz policy starting with Bobby Scott, followed by Dorothy Donegan as a single.

Suburbia, Etc.

Obstacles in the starving cabaret operations all shape as longterm affairs. Besides the 20% cabaret tax and a decline of loose spending money in a period of mounting operating costs, the middle class migration to the suburbs, which was followed after the war by shopping centres and decentralized amusement centres bringing detrimental effects to Loop stores and pix houses, is now providing strong outlying competition for the downtown clubs. The joints in the sticks have the advantage of cheaper real estate, adequate parking space, newer buildings, lower taxes and, as a consequence of all this, lower prices to offer nearby residents. The appeal of big names is not enough to counterbalance the convenience of nabe clubs and tv. Not a single major opening in recent weeks has been sellout in the near-Loop area.

The lack of a metropolitan population of clubgoers seems to be borne out by the relative success of those few places which attract a large patronage of students from the city's colleges.

Gold Coast Assn.

Centrally located clubs are largely dependent on the convention crowds. Proprietors made known their disappointment in the small patronage from such gigantic affairs as the recent Furniture Show, but the last furniture convention was itself poorly attended by comparison with previous turnouts.

Sparked by Harry Polos, owner of the 12 West Club, cafe owners are organizing a Gold Coast Tavern and Restaurant Assn., although what the group can do to augment business besides circulating favorable publicity is as yet as much a mystery to the membership as anyone else.

Sahara, Las Vegas

Las Vegas July 11.

Ray Bolger, Peggy King, Muriel Landers, Saharem Dancers (12), Cee Davidson Orch (12); produced by Stan Irwin; $2 minimum.

Ray Bolger bounces around the Congo Room stage as if he's at home—and he is, practically, since he was its first headliner when the Sahara opened, and has played the room repeatedly. His current show, like the others, is packed with top-level showmanship, and is certain to pack the room for the next four weeks.

Opening number, with Bolger and the Saharem Dancers (12) is "Fly To Las Vegas," an original composed and arranged by Bill Hitchcock. The refreshing bit is a tricky way to introduce the cast—they alight one by one from the door of a prop TWA airliner. With his w.k. ease, Bolger breezes through "I Can Dance With Everybody But My Wife," (after which he winds up in the lap of stout chirper-terper Muriel Landers, planted in the audience, who joins him onstage for a pleasant turn of dancing and dialog), "Life Is Just A Bowl of Cherries" and "History of the Dance." He reprises his "Striptease" and "Sad Sack" faves, and bows with the "Amy" trademark. Clever gimmick in show which was rewarded hefty salvos by first-nighters, is audience participation with toy whistles to recording of Bolger's "Cricket Song." In all his numbers, Bolger is in lofty hoofing and piping form, and a number with the Saharem Dancers, "Strawhat & Cane," displays the master at his best.

Peggy King serves as a fine balance to the bill. She's a canary who's a looker and socks a song with vibrant personality and bouncy animation with such offerings as "Ohio," "Get Out of Town," "Accustomed To Your Face," "If This Isn't Love" and "St. Louis Blues."

Package is gracefully batoned by Cee Davidson and is produced by Stan Irwin. Duke.

Cafe de Paris, London

London, July 9.

Helen Traubel (with Richmond Gale), Arthur Coppersmith and Harry Roy Orchs. $6.50 minimum.

A performer of class and distinction, Helen Traubel brings a rare dignity to the lush surroundings of the Cafe de Paris. But these exceptional qualities, even when coupled with unusual vocal prowess, are, apparently, not enough to lure the paying customers, and her opening night (8) attracted only a comparatively lean turnout.

Miss Traubel is essentially a performer without tricks or gimmicks who is quite content to allow her operatic vocal chords to do fullest justice to a wide variety of tunes. There is an elegance about the entire presentation and a simplicity of delivery which is quite unusual. As the act progresses, the star evokes a growing audience reception and that suggests that word of mouth may eventually prove to be a deciding factor.

The routine is sufficiently varied to satisfy most tastes. Two top ballads in "I Believe" and "Autumn Leaves" make a nice contrast with a selection from Sigmund Romberg's "Deep In My Heart," including "Leg Of Mutton" (introed as the rock 'n' roll of 1904); while an operatic aria and a selection from "Porgy and Bess" are quite a switch on "All At Once You Love Her" (from "Pipe Dream") and a light comedy bit with her accompanist, Richard Gale. The balance is, at all times, maintained and there's always full evidence of professionalism in the presentation.

Miss Traubel is in for a month's run, after which the cafe will close for the summer season. Accompanist-conductor Gale batons the resident Arthur Coppersmith combo to insure split second precision backgrounding. Harry Roy's celebrated outfit takes the dais for the dansapation sessions. Myro.

Frolic, Revere, Mass.

Revere, Mass., July 9.

Jerry Vale, Sonny Richards, Buddy Thomas Line (10), Bob Warren, Jeanne Thomas, Cliff Natale Orch (5); $2.50 minimum.

Jerry Vale, in for a two-weeker closing Saturday (20), wraps up this room in no uncertain fashion with a round of ballads and jump tunes. The Columbia disker unleashes his new one, "Love in the Afternoon," for nice mitting, but it's "Sorrento," "Mama" and "Purple Shadows" that bring the house down for the big-voiced piper.

Vale has the cap and in the seaside 400-seater with him all the way. Opening with ballad, "For up of the show. Me," he segues to "Inamorata" for heavy palm wacking, takes "Go" ballad for nice ride, and works in oldie "Angry" for nice effect. Singer nabs ident applause on his disk number, "You Don't Know Me," then wraps it up with a rousing "Sorrento" in Italian. Aud refuses to be pacified and calls him back for two encores.

Sonny Richards, last seen around Hub at the Bradford Roof as a team with Walter Long, opens the show with a fast-paced, updated comedy routine. Richards, a single since Long retired, has a boff piece of business on "Fattaerella," a salon to fatten up scrawny femmes, switch on "Slenderella," which gets yocks. In the tour de force he uses a series of song bits and titles along the lines of "The girl that I married weighs 83."

Opening with topical one-liners, the dress-suited, stocky comic warms up the ringsiders, takes cane and straw skimmer for chorus of "There'll Be Some Changes Made," and executives some fancy terping. He takes the oldtime song & danceman routine and switches into the "modern" exponent with some zany hats and cool type terp. A slick Louis Armstrong piping carbon nabs heavy rounds, and he clinches solid with a panto to go off way ahead.

Buddy Thomas stages a bit of "Porgy and Bess" with his line of 10 lookers, handsomely costumed by Mme. Bertha, and production singers Bob Warren and platinum-topped Jeanne Thomas give with "Summertime" for big returns. Blonde, big-voiced Warren takes "I Got Plenty of Nothin'" for ultimate surrounded by rhythm chorus flowing over two stage levels. Cliff Natale batons the show in slick style. This layout exits Saturday (20). Jodi Sands and new show open Sunday (21). Guy.

Thunderbird, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, July 11.

Dorothy Collins, Ronnie Eastman, Rex Johnson, Thunderbird Dancers (8), Al Jahns Orch (12); $2 minimum.

Transferring from television, Dorothy Collins has hurled herself almost exclusively into nitery-theatre endeavors. And, from the effort of realigning her traditional act emerges a dynamically new Miss Collins whose presence atop this Thunderbird opus, shrewdly produced by Marty Hicks, should signal landoffice traffic into the Navajo Room.

Long typed as a demure miss—the sweet sweetheart of every tv livingroom—Miss Collins now is suddenly cast into the role of a sensuous torchantress who quickens the pulsebeat of devotees of the supper room. Notably, the switch is pulled off in good taste, and plenty of time and thought are evidenced in what results in an important expansion of Miss Collins' personality.

She opens in typical neck-high blouse, balloon sleeves, schoolmarm tie and full, ankle length skirt to chirp jukebox hit parader fare. Then, against a background of the Thunderbird Dancers bleating "Stay As Sweet As You Are," Miss Collins transforms herself into a provocative rebel by executing a slick onstage change in which she converts her prim apparel into a daring black satin sheath that accents her curves. The impact of this new illusion is further abetted by a layout of intensely tempoed tunes, e.g., "Night And Day," "Red Hot Mama" and "Love For Sale." During the latter segment, star unveils a hitherto latent big voice and a keen sense of dramatic underplay. For the followup she gets in a plug for her latest record release, "Sing It, Children, Sing It," by accompanying the disk which is beamed to the audience from an offstage playback. Her wrapup sees her spoofingly gyrate to the "Whose Got The Pain?" mambo. This tongue-in-cheek approach to hip flinging more or less gets her off the hook with fans who otherwise may have been startled by her new look.

Ronnie Eastman is a refreshingly vibrant newcomer to this circuit who has a solid, laugh-getting gimmick which he calls "pushbutton pantomime." He mimes w.k. records into which he inserts chunks of other w.k. records. His tomfoolery pyramids to a sock play with "Mule Train," which incorporates several platters and airwave pieces from the intro to the Lone Ranger to a familiar ciggie commercial to excerpts from a hillbilly program. The cut-ins are accomplished via a pushbutton attached to the mike. His physical and facial miming is in perfect sync to his recorded material.

Bourbon Street, N. Y.

Turk Murphy Band (7); $3 minimum after 9 p.m., $3.50 weekends.

New York's on a music room jag and Bourbon Street is the latest to get in on the act. Located on East 56th St. adjacent to the Hotel Sutton, the room is making its bid with a food and music pitch. Bourbon Street should make it on both counts.

The big difference between Bourbon Street and the flock of music rooms that have been springing up all over town is the music. While the others are trying to kick up a storm with a progressive jazz policy, Bourbon Street is reverting to dixieland. There are couple of dixieland strongholds in Greenwich Village but Bourbon Street has the eastside bailiwick to itself.

Turk Murphy, who's in for the preem month, should help establish the place. Murphy is a solid dixieland swinger and his sets are marked with style and zest. Maestro's trombone paces a combo that consists of French horn, drums, piano, trumpet, clarinet and guitar. The repertoire is out of the familiar dixieland book and Murphy makes 'em all exciting.

Atlantic City, July 13.

Johnnie Ray, Joey Bishop, Joe Maize & Chordsmen, Lee Henderson Dancers with Sandy Welsh; Sandy Kent, Pete Miller Orch (12) directed by Joe Frasetto.

Johnnie Ray played to a packed opening night house as he started a week of appearances in Paul (Skinny) D'Amato's big Vermilion Room. He gives a typical Ray show studded with faves which have been gobbled up for years by those in the Ray stable of admirers.

Singer circles stageside and grasps hands of all within reach singing "Should I Reveal" as he opens. For the next 45 minutes he works at a terrific pace offering 14 numbers, plus incidental patter necessary between each. Of these, his Jubilee song, "Walk and Talk with My Lord," with audience participation, is outstanding. But his identifying "Cry" and "Little White Cloud" are near the top in the scoring too.

Ray accomps himself on the five-octave piano onstage as he sings "Pretty Baby," "As Time Goes By" and "Cloud." A terrific worker, he is drenched with perspiration halfway through but beats on, heat and all, with unhalting vim.

Joey Bishop shows he is master of the situation as he keeps the tablers with him solidly in his offerings as the comic on this bill. Bishop is no stranger in the D'Amato arena, and his stuff gets him top mitting throughout.

Joe Maize & Chordsmen give with a type of act that keeps them coming back to night clubs. Group is a trio, with Maize playing a console steel guitar, Chubby Dorin the bass, and Johnny Cassinari the accordion. Three stage a 30-minute stit that is as zany as any caught here, but they prove they can play seriously too, if not for long. Best bit is their offering of "My Heart Cries for You," with Maize's glasses furnishing the tears.

Lee Henderson girls offer two production numbers with dances by Sandy Welsh. Sandy Kent does vocals for dancers nicely and well-knit show is backed by Pete Miller's orch directed by Joe Frasetto. Walk.

Mapes Skyroom, Reno

Reno, July 11.

Lili St. Cyr, Rowan & Martin, Little Buck, Skylets, Eddie Fitzpatrick Orch; $2 minimum.

Lili St. Cyr is introed this time as a geisha but underneath it all, it's the same act. Miss St. Cyr, wrapped up in geisha bunting at the beginning, gets rid of this in very short order.

Although she gets down to the bare facts quickly enough, there seems to be a little less time to examine these facts. For the first time since she's been appearing here, anyway, she probably bowed out ahead of the game. The act is shorter and there is much less of the bedroom lounging where she usually managed to embarrass everyone. The bath is still in and even this seems to have been tamed a little—at least the drying period is more sedate.

Rowan & Martin certainly measure up to their lately acquired star status via tv, Winchell, etc. They've polished and perfected their routines for aching laughs all the way through. Of course, the Laurence Olivier bit, which has Dan Rowan reciting Shakespeare and Dick Martin as the night club drunk, has reached classic quality. But while they were relying on this routine as the clincher for so long, they now assume a strong appeal from the very start. Their banter and jokes, delivered with sharp timing now, are greater evidence they've found their niche.

A likeable dancer, Little Buck, clicks off some pretty fancy stepping for some spontaneous reaction over the whole route. Mapes Skylets take a hayride for an opening production number and get wound up in a history of choreography.

Miss St. Cyr, as usual, can be expected to fill every table at every show, and in this particular two-week stanza, tables are always end-to-end like a convention banquet. Mark.

Tropicana, Las Vegas

(FOLLOWUP)

Las Vegas, July 9.

The many-sided talents of Carol Channing are pinwheeled through a lively night club debut at the Theatre Restaurant marked "hit" from start to finish. The polished stage star rollicks without a hitch through nine selections greeted by some of the heartiest response registered in this comparatively new showroom.

Miss Channing's writer and lyricist, Charles Gaynor, has fashioned a well-rounded mixture of songs and comic sequences for her varied talents. Impersonations of Sophie Tucker, Tallulah Bankhead and Marlene Dietrich are superbly paced with the other selections. The impression of Miss Dietrich in "Blue Angel" is accented by Miss Channing's appearance in a flesh-colored leotard and flimsy nightgown. She postures variously and sings several throay German songs in this well-received number.

Donning a flapper-day hat, the comedienne offers the whistling-voice explanation of "Cecilia Sisson's" fall from film stardom after making only one talker. Carrying the flapper motif farther, she performs "The Yahoo Step" from "Lend An Ear's" number about "The Gladiola Girl."

From "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," Miss Channing revives the show-opening "A Little Girl from Little Rock." She also sings "The Palace," backgrounded by a luminous setting depicting backstage theatre. She climaxes this delightful bit of whimsy with a doggerel-type song satirizing a faded star and her problems. "Calypso Pete" is a comic turn of a Trinidad tune spoofing an amorous Calypso Pete.

Wearing a white satin coat sprinkled with diamonds, Miss Channing concluudes her pressentation with "Diamonds Are a Girl's Best Friend." Midway through the song, she takes a quantity of costume jewelry and hurls several pieces to the audience.

Professional throughout, Miss Channing has made the transition to night clubs smoothly and perhaps with a sharper focusing of her talents. She is accompanied at the piano by Jack Russon. Her costumes were designed by John Blonder. Digl.

Gogi Grant, Chuck Cabot Orch (9); $2-$2.50 cover.

Diminutive Gogi Grant, one of the few dislelick pipers to score as a top supper club artist, should easily abet the b.o. in her fortnight here. Pretty brunet, in a smart blue net cocktail dress, was ahead from her opening "I Hear Music" and easily pleased the near capacity Empire Room at Thursday's (11) preem.

Though her 30-minute stint is short for this posh spot, Miss Grant proves she's one of the ablest canaries extant. Varies her tempos expertly, with "Two Different Worlds" and "I Can't Give You Anything But Love," latter dubbed for the film soundtrack of "The Helen Morgan Story." Hefty mitting results from reprises of her w.k. etchings, "Suddenly There's a Valley" and "Wayward Wind." Big hit also is her medley, "I Like a Novelty Song," embracing six zany tunes—some older than most tablers and the youthful singer.

Smartly she keeps rapport with a belting "Climb Up the Golden Ladder," getting audience participation via handclapping. A stage stroll with handmike wraps up a slick show with "Thanks for Everything." Begoff indicates a longer stint is welcome.

Chuck Cabot crew, also opening, had minor showbacking trouble, now remedied. Bark.

Chateau Madrid, N. Y.

Monica Boyar (with Dean Sheldon), Los Romeros & Reina (3), Chiquito Socarros and Panchito Orchs; $3.50-$5 minimum.

The Angel Lopez hospice is seemingly on an economic upbeat. The room is getting a healthy dinner trade and its late biz is made fatter by the Latin dancers, who now have a greater incentive. The new orchs in this spot, Panchito, who for many years was at Nick Prounis' Versailles, and Chiquito Socarros, a former Stork Club maestro, give an added lift to the spot.

The new show comprises Monica Boyar, who has been a habitue of the intimeries, and Los Romeros & Reina, a trio of flamenco terpers.

Miss Boyar has done exceedingly well for hersself in spots such as the Le Ruban Bleu (now defunct) and the Viennese Lantern. In a nitery such as the Chateau Madrid, it's a step in another direction for her. The room is somewhat larger than has been her N.Y. metier, and freshly recovered from some surgery, she's still not her usual self. At the Chateau its' an uphill tussle for her, but it's to her credit that she makes it with some to spare at her conclusion.

Miss Boyar makes her strong recovery with her spicier numbers. She trots out her reliables to get the audience over completely, and she ultimately does well. Dean Sheldon accomps her at the conga drum.

Los Romeros & Reina are picturesque and hardworking heelpounders. The early part of their turn has violence and color. They kick up quite a cloud with uninhibited gypsy terps. Latter part of the act is a colorful jota with an air of authenticity and a soupcon of humor. The costumings are excellent and the trio make a ditto floor appearance.

Socarros backs the show with competence. Jose.

Amato's, Portland, Ore.

Portland, Ore., July 10.

Arthur Lee Simpkins, The Rudells (3), Julian Dreyer Orch (5); $1 cover, $1.50 Sat.

Arthur Lee Simkins is back for his 10th annual engagement at this plush nitery for a fortnight that's a real community event. Whenever bossman George Amato announces the Simpkins dates the reservations start to pour in. The ropes went up early opening night (9) and will remain there for the entire two-week stint.

Simpkins is a great tenor-entertainer. He enters the elevated stage to an ovation and has complete charge of the audience for the full 55 minutes. He has a song for all in an informal concert that pleases all the way for solid returns. Program is loaded with variety, running the gamut from spirituals to pop tunes to grand opera. All are accomplished in a savvy manner with expert change of pace and fluent use of many lingos. The posh showcase was still full of noise after several polite and gracious begoffs.

Houston, July 10.

Tito Guizar, Felix Campean Orch (5); no cover or minimum.

Oilman-boniface Glenn McCarthy has chosen height of summer doldrums, intensified by shutdown of Galveston niteries, to introduce new gambit of acts on a two-week basis at his ultra-plush privatery. With probably the most diamond-studded membership (of 1,000-plus) in the country, the Cork Club had maintained its cocktail piano-dance combo only policy when it moved from the Shamrock Hilton to its present new Fannin St. quarters last March.

From the rapturous looks on faces of tab-lifter on nights of Tito Guizar's preem (9), change-over in general and Guizar in particular ought to prove a click. Guizar had to finally beg off when act began to squeeze the midnight closing hour. Felix Campean outfit is a natural in the support role and provides plenty of the light fantastic stuff for patrons' pleasure. Burt.

TV Inflation

"we've got to stick to it regardless of what others pay. We can't live with it, otherwise."

Perry Como, Steve Allen, Ed Sullivan and a few others will attempt to hold the line at $7,500 but most agents are ridiculing such quotation, Bob Hope, no spendthrift at guest pay (he prefers trades), will pay up to $10,000. CBS-TV's "Playhouse 90" will try to stick to $10,000 top and "Climax" $5,000. One packager appealed to an agent for a "blockbuster" to tee up the season but he was brushed off with, "not for $7,500."

For the picture companies they'll never have it so good. To stay within budgets and equalize the effects of the high guest coin, studios will be besieged for their stars to appear with clips of their current releases, the prime promotion thrust to trailerize in the homes of the millions. With many of the stars pouring their own coin into indie productions or working percentage, they would not be recultant to toot their own horn in the medium of plenty exposure. Ed Sullivan has long cornered this phase of guestars but as it now shapes up it will be a highly competitive field.

In the mad race for the highest dollar, it is held by some that the quality of programming will suffer. It works this way: a guestar is booked for $7,500 although he has been paid as high as $15,000. The stint calls for five days rehearsal. Says the agent: "Okay, we'll take the $7,500 but only three days of rehearsal." This applies not only to specs, specials, musicals, etc., but also to filmed anthologies. The longer shows require up to two weeks of rehearsal.

But the agent won't be the lone perpetrator in the collapse of price ceilings. He'll have plenty of help from the sponsor, who'll start getting nervous when his $75,000 show ends up 56th in the rating table (perhaps against a much cheaper western). "Load it up," he'll order, "the cost-per-thousand is running way past the danger mark." So, Joe W. Star, who turned down $7,500, will get double that. Once the world is around that X show has scrapped its ceiling (and you'll be surprised how fast the word gets around among agents, who like to boast about their deals), the controls will be lifted on other shows and the bonanza for guestars will make the '49 gold rush look like a lineup at the Christmas savings wicket.

Two of the hottest guest stars around are Elvis Presley and Harry Belafonte. The price on the former is $50,000 per guest shot. Belafonte goes for $40,000. In the best position for guest bookings are the regular weekly shows, who can guarantee a caller a flat package sum for four shots. Most producers are trying to book months ahead but the agents are balking. They prefer not to lock them in so far in advance. Something better might show up.

The guest is king and more than once he'll bank a bigger check than the star of his own show.

Critics Disagree

pans has survived beyond the following Saturday night," he claims. "I cannot name a single serious play that has succeeded in the face of general pans.

"However, it does not always work in reverse. There have been cases where the critics were virtually unanimous in praising a play, but for some reason it did not strike the public fancy or mood of the time, and folded after a comparitively brief run.

"A critic always tries to be 'right' in the light of his judgment. I do not believe a critic should be 'tough' or 'charitable." He should be fair. Critics can help the theatre by making constructive suggestions in their reviews, instead of attempting to show how brilliant they are. They should help by weeding out the unworthy, by singling out everything that has potential merit for the future."

Ethel Colby, of the Journal of Commerce, asserts that "only in a few instances do major critics not influence the boxoffice. Unfortunately, word-of-mouth recommendation takes too long to overcome destructive critiques." Robert Coleman, of the Mirror, regards the contemporary crop of critics as "able, interesting and honest" and asks, "What more can you ask?" He also says, "The critics are unjustly the whipping boys for the theatre's ills."

Power of Pans

Concerning critics' influence on boxoffice, Henry Hewes, of the Saturday Review, figures that shows succeed or fail primarily on whether they satisfy basic audience demands, but feels that critical pans can destroy a production that might catch on with the help of critical praise.

He sees no obligation for a critic to be "right," but believes "the greatest compliment a critic can receive is to be told, 'I went to see that play you panned because you made it sound so interesting'." He adds, however, that a "wrong" critic should be "conscientious enough not to revel in his 'wrongness'."

Mark Barron, of the Associated Press, believes a critic's primary obligation is to be "understanding." Jack Gaver, of the United Press, says critics should be neither tough nor charitable, but "fair." He adds, "Not many of them are, really, over the long haul. They all have angles, and anyone who reads them regularly can spot the angles. By that I don't mean they are two-faced. They have prejudices because they are human beings."

Jack Keating, of Cue Magazine, feels that unfavorable reviews, "or even reviews which praise with faint damns, from three of four important dailies can pretty effectively negate the chances of a serious play hanging around for long, unless it has some other factor going for it, such as a star or sensational theme.

"If a 'right' opinion means being with the majority or riding along with what looks as though it will be a popular success, the answer is a loud 'no'," he continues. "A critic should be neither 'tough' nor 'charitable' (or you could say he should be both—it would add up to the same thing). He should call them as he sees them, huzzahing for the good work, roundly scoring the meretricious, puncturing the pretentious.

"Critics can best help the theatre by insisting that it be as good as it can be, by refusing to be taken in by the fancy wrappings around a cheap present."

Callas Concerts

but its a deluxe tourist event. They'll return on same ship but in waiting to re-embark will have a two week holiday in Athens.

Many other events this summer include concerts (two by the Greek-American soprano, Maria Callas. She demanded and secured such fees as to nearly erupt into a political issue in this relatively poor kingdom. Again the tourist pull motivation prevailed).

National Theatre this year at Epidavros from June 15 to July 14 offers ancient tragedies "Iphigenia in Avlis," "Hecuba" and "Medea" by Euripides, "Antigone" by Sophocles and "Lysistrata" and "Ekklisslazoussai" by Aristophanes. Katina Paxinou, Alexis Minotis, Anna Synodinou, Thanos Kotsopoulos, Mary Aroni are leading players.

Belgrade Opera Ballet will give Tchaikowsky "Swan Lake" and Tirier's "Queen of the Islands" as well as Yugoslav and Greek chorol dramas in a third recital.

Randolph Morald and Otto Fritsz of Vienna Opera will present two melodramas. Cast include Nicos Moschonas.

Violonist Gerard Poulet, pianist Wilhelm Kempf, violinist Igor Bezrontny will participate as soloist to recitals of the Athens Symph Orch, conducted by Filoktetes Economides, Theodore Vavayannis Andrea Evagelatos, Hans Svarofsky, Andrea Parides, Karl Munch and Anatol Doratti.

Greek Opera House the so-called Lyriki Skini will present this year Beethoven's 'Fidelio" starring Martha Mentle and Giuseppe Ciambieri, Dino Egolfopoulo, Zoe Viahopoulou, produced by Rafaello de Baufield and conducted by Yassa Horestein.

Champ Fight

the first theatre tv event since September, 1955 when the theatres carried the Rocky Marciano-Archie Moore heavyweight championship fight. This was the most successful theatre tv event ever sponsored and it set a new record with 133 locations in 93 cities and a reported b.o. take of more than $1,000,000.

Because of the scarcity of theatre tv events, theatres have stopped installing large-screen projection equipment. About 90 to 100 theatres still have the units they installed several years ago. However, the availability of portable and mobile units, for both conventional and drive-in theatres, makes it unnecessary for theatre to make permanent installations. The units are provided by Halpern's TNT which has the projection systems stored throughout the country in RCA Service Co. warehouses. The units are employed by Halpern's TNT Tele-Sessions, a subsidiary which stages closed-circuit business meetings in hotels and auditoriums.

On the basis of the permanent theatre installations and the mobile and portable units available, Halpern anticipates a record network of theatres for the Robinson-Basilio fight. The mobile units are rented to theatres at a special rate. In addition, a percentage of the b.o. price is turned over TNT and the IBC.

The company's large-screen mobile projectors will be allocated to theatres in the next few weeks on a first-come-first-served basis. Compared with record 133 locations in 93 cities for the September, 1955 Marciano-Moore fight, TNT launched its first fight network telecast in June, 1951 with eight theatres in six cities for the Joe Louis-Lee Savold contest.

Germany's Legit

job, and a chance to star in some of the less-often-performed classics. Smaller parts are generally allotted to the inhabitants of the area.

Rather than alternating plays nightly or performing in a circuit, as Stateside strawhatters do, German outdoor theater usually has not more than three plays in its summer cycle.

And unlike the winter theater at the city stages, which regularly presents plays shortly after their Broadway run ("Cat on a Hot Tin Roof," "The Rainmaker" and "Anne Frank" were at most of the cities last winter), the summer theater is devoted to the classics, with the ancient morality play "Everyman," the plays of local boys who made good like Goethe and Schiller, and, inspired by the movies, some re-takes on "Joan of Arc" on tap this year.

Admissions are generally from two to four German marks (50c to $1), with champagne, wine, beer and sandwiches sold at intermission.

Shakespeare has made the grade for the famed castle in Heidelberg, where "A Midsummer Night's Dream," in German, arranged and set to music by Carl Orff and staged by Paul Hager, is due to be performed.

Same author is being done at Frankfurt's Carmelita Cloister courtyard, out side the castle at Rheydt, at the outdoor stage in Birten, and Wiesmoor.

The tiny town of Oetigheim has for 50 years done "William Tell" in its town square on Sunday eves in the summer. Goethe gets a going-over in outdoor theaters in Porta and Konstanz, while it's Schillers "Maid of Orleans" in the town square along the Rhine, and his "Turandot, Princess of China" at Coesfeld.

Zons on the Rhine is doing open-air plays at Friedstrom Castle, Bad Duerkheim has its theater on the top of Hardenburg Mountain, and Schwaebian Hall performs in front of St. Michael's Cathedral, while Bad Hersfeld chooses the ruins of the old monastery for its stage, and Reutlingen's Theater is in the woods.

At Tegernsee, Schliersee and the Inn Valley in Bavaria, it's called Peasant Theater. Natives in costumes act out centuries-old dramas, in strong native dialect.

And Bremke is going back to the Brothers Grimm for its performance of "Snow White" at the theater in the woods.

Unit Reviews

Jimmy Durante Show
(BARRON AMPHI., D.C.)

Washington, July 11.

Jimmy Durante, with Eddie Jackson, Sonny King, Johnny Puleo Harmonica Gang, Bob Hamilton Trio, Piero Bros., Los Gatos, Jackie Barnett, Durante Girls (6), Jules Buffano, Jack Roth, Orch (18); $3.85 top.

Jimmy Durante has brought into Carter Barron Amphitheatre the most elaborate package yet introduced there by any name entertainer. This, coupled with the comic's frenzied delivery, yield fast moving entertainment which seems to be what the doctor ordered for these hot Washington nights.

Durante, of course, is Durante, as solidly established as the pyramids, and much less silent and enigmatic than the Sphinx. He scores with galloping patter, mispronunciations, hurling handfuls of sheet music at the orchestra, etc., and with a number of his oldtime songs.

Biggest hit, however, seemed to be a number, "It's the Man Who Makes the Clothes." He sings it, as his six Durante Girls (all eyefuls) dress him and undress him, in everything from raccoon coat to kilts.

His best line in the open-air amphitheatre: "Lookit me. Forty years in show business and I haven't even got a roof over my head."

Eddie Jackson does his usual strut to "Bill Bailey" and "Inka Dinka Do" to the complete satisfaction of the large slice of nostalgia-minded in the house. A standout is singer Sonny King. He soloes "Melancholy Baby," "I Love Paris" in a gagged version, etc., and appears in the second half with Durante, both singing and on the receiving end of Durante's knockabout comedy. King is a fine performer but for this engagement he would do well to eliminate such jollities as "What the hell," and "Where the hell is the drummer."

In the usual format of these units, Durante works entirely in the second half of the bill, first half being devoted to a series of vaude acts. In addition to King, topflight job is turned in by Johnny Puleo and his harmonica gang. Puleo enlivens proceedings with the same pantomime comedy as when he was with Borrah Minevich. A very fast-moving act.

The Piero Bros., jugglers from the Argentine, prove themselves adept at handling everything from soft felt hats to Indian clubs, wooden blocks, cigarets and sticks. This is one of the better juggling acts today. The Bob Hamilton Trio displays the colorful choreography which made it so popular on tv. Act looks good. Opener is the three Los Gatos, acrobats with a jitterbug flair which goes a little flat and is not up to the level of the acrobatics. Lowe

Ak-Sar-Ben Revue
(AK-SAR-BEN FIELD, OMAHA)

Omaha, July 10.

Andrews Sisters (3), Fred Lowery, Dick Smith, Lloyd & Susan Willis, Burns Twins & Evelyn, Dave Majors Orch (12). At Ak-Sar-Ben Field July 9-10, '57.

Second of six free shows this year tossed by Omaha civic org Ak-Sar-Ben for its 21,000 dues-paying ($10 per year) members was stacked around the Andrews Sisters and came off a decided winner. Turnouts of nearly 8,000 both nights were about double the average crowds, and press and public reaction was highly favorable.

Andrews Sisters worked the closing 30 minutes, and rated the ovation they received. Gals have even more show biz savvy than ever—if that's possible—and utilize all sorts of bits to delight the aud. While it's the old faves like "Rum and Coke," "Apple Blossom Time," etc., that the aud looks forward to, new items such as "Feudin' and Fightin'" add much to the act. Patty is still the backbone of the Sisters, but Maxene and LaVerne each take solo spots. And no little credit is due the expert 88 backing of Patty's hubby, Wally Weschler.

The other particularly outstanding numbers was furnished by emcee Dick Smith. His fresh, crisp comedy and A-1 impreshes made him a near show-stopper. Opens playing a trombone without any hands, and closes playing two trumpets at same time. It's big-league stuff.

Lloyd & Susan Willis provided the comedy in the second half with their terps, interspersed with some fairly good straight work. Gal is a screwball type and very funny. She ranges from a comedy strip to a roaring '20s flapper bit to a tired ballerina takeoff—and all in 12 minutes.

Blind whistler Fred Lowery closed first half of show, and was saved from serious injury by alert stagehands when he nearly walked offstage in taking his opening-night bows. This set him up for an encore that drew a tremendous salvo of applause. However, Lowery's continuous plugging of his disks is not good show biz.

Burns Twins & Evelyn opened show, and rapid-fire action jolted the crowd off its hands. Boys do routine tap work, with blonde Evelyn going on her toes. A swift acro finish gets them off to a good hand.

Dave Majors orch, locals, did an okay job of showbacking although the intricate Andrews arrangements offered them—especially the drummer—some rough moments.

Show was the first that local booker Don Romeo has produced for Ak-Sar-Ben and officials indicated much satisfaction. Next Ak show will be a circus type affair staged by Chicago agent Ernie Young July 22-24. Trump.

New Acts

LOLITA DE CARLO, REMI & KELLY
Dance-Songs
12 Mins.
Palace, N. Y.

Sparked by eyeful Lolita De Carlo, this young terp-song trio projects enough energetic bounce to please. They need a bit more lung power to get the vocals across for a bigger impact but their enthusiasm helps 'em along there, somewhat.

The terping, though, is neat and sharp. Kelly & Remi, male duo, work well with Miss De Carlo, and bring some humor into their stepping especially in the "Steam Heat" number extracted from the legituner, "Pajama Game." Other numbers are "Another Opening, Another Show," with which they open, and "Stepping Out With My Baby. Femme does a briefie solo dance bit for good results.

Team is good for all visual media. Gros.

MARIE PALMAY
Songs
9 Mins.
Palace, N.Y.

Marie Palmay has blended a standout soprano style and a gamin guise into a lively vaude turn. She's blonde, petite and works a wry facial expression to full advantage. It's easy to like her.

There's nothing wasted in her presentation. She goes into the top register at the start with "Granada" and then cleverly slows up the mood with the wistful "My Heart Sings." Most of the humor comes from a lively medley of tunes styled along "Gay '90's" lines. It's a crowd pleaser.

With a little more meat on the act, Miss Palmay should be able to do well in clubs too. Gros.

Legion 'B's'

are fond of cracking. "I hope this one doesn't end up with a legion 'A'," the implication being that a "B" rating creates curiosity and a sense of the unusual among patrons.

It's generally felt that the "B" tags are almost meaningless in the South and large parts of the midwest and far west. At the same time, they are listened to in the East. The only Legion dictum that really can hurt a film—as was proven to an extent with "Baby Doll"—is the "C" classification.

However, it is argued that, while the "C" kept many theatres in the smaller towns from booking the Kazan picture, it certainly boosted the big-city b.o. and brought in many patrons who, ordinarily, would never have gone to see the film.

While the Legion, on paper, rates films only for Catholics, its actual impact (but most of the time without adequate explanation for the ratings) goes beyond the Catholic audience circle. Partly this is so because the moral evaluations (lacking artistic factors) of the Catholic rating body are not always properly recognized, and their specialized and narrow character appreciated, by non-Catholic groups concerned with movie acceptance. Partly, too, Catholic groups guided by the Legion ratings aggressively seek to keep exhibitors from booking films that lack Legion approval.

Among the top films, the ratio of the Legion ratings runs almost three-to-one in favor of the "B"s. Explanation in part is that, seeking the b.o. more strenuously, Hollywood has been adding more spice to its fare. Tendency to be more frank has been noted by observers, but seems to be okay with the Production Code.

Among the films that have drawn "B" tags from the Legion of late are: "Love in the Afternoon," "Pride and the Passion," "Face in the Crowd," "Sweet Smell of Success," "Prince and the Showgirl," "Beau James," "Pajama Game," "Jeanne Eagle," "Island in the Sun," "Wayward Bus," "Silk Stockings," "Loving You," "Bachelor Party," "Fire Down Below," "Band of Angels," "Boy on a Dolphin" and "The Rainmaker," "The Iron Petticoat," "The Girl Can't Help It," etc.

It has become obvious that a "B" rating doesn't really hurt a film by denying it Catholic attendance, nor does the "Unobjectionable" rating of "A" necessarily help by bringing in those addicted to "clean" pictures. Thus the "B"-rated "Island in the Sun" is a big grosser while the "A"-rated "Spirit of St. Louis" is having a tough time at the boxoffice.

In turn it might be argued that "Face in the Crowd" (with a "B") is doing poorly, whereas the "A"-rated "Heaven Knows Mr. Allison" has done well.

432, compared with $22,396 the first week. At the Esquire, St. Louis, where "80 Days" is showing in 35m, the fifth week grossed $15,283 compared with $14,996 the first stance. The Carthay Circle, Los Angeles, has been playing to virtual capacity ($27,335 for ten shows) for 28 weeks. The 28th week was the best, save the New Year's week, when prices were upped to $7.

In several instances, the picture opened in neighborhoods which hadn't booked firstruns before, such as the Shopping Town, Syracuse, and the Valley, Cincinnati. Valley is in a shopping centre, 11 miles from downtown. House grossed $13,716 the first week. Fourth week should hit $19,000.

As hitherto, provided they qualify for quota under the 1948 Films Act, they will be entitled to their cut. There is, however, a definite embargo on participation by pix made specifically for tv. There had been cases in recent years where telepix, made for the American webs, were strung together to make supporting theatrical features. In the past, they got their Eady cut. That will not be permitted in the future.

Meantime, in line with the Government's promise to introduce a new Quota Act by 1960, the Board of Trade is getting ready to sound industry opinion. All the leading trade associations will be asked to submit their thoughts within the next two or three months.

Arthur Lubin's "Take My Hand" (which is subject to a title change) will be released through Universal, as per the alignment with that company set some time ago.

No release set for the third, Stuart Millar's "Stage Struck." But a tieup with a national distrib is likely, in that the film is "major" in scope. Stars are Susan Strasberg, Henry Fonda and Joan Greenwood. Features probably going to the states righters in future would be modest budgeters, the specifics to be determined by the outcome of "Cartouche."

House Reviews

Warner, A. C.
Atlantic City, July 12.

Louis Armstrong & Concert Group, Lionel Hampton Orch, Ella Fitzgerald, Mambo Duo, Veronica Martell.

The Hamids' 4,200-seater Warner Theatre, on the boardwalk in mid-city, normally a summer motion picture house, this week was the mecca of the jazz-minded vacationist and resident as Louis Armstrong, Lionel Hampton and Ella Fitzgerald displayed their respective wares in a two-hour show.

With Armstrong, who gets top billing in this, his frist appearance here in a decade, is his concert group, including Barrett Deems, drums; Squire Gersh, bass; Edmond Hall, clarinet; Billy Kyle, piano, and Trummy Young, trombone; not to forget the vocalist, Velma Middleton, all of whom join with Satchmo in a half-hour stint which is something that jazz buffs dreams about in the quiet hours.

With that trademarked trumpet of his, Armstrong and the unit offer such favs as "Sleepy Time Down South," "Indiana," "Birth of the Blues," etc., none of them on the top listings but a solid foundation for jazz as Satch knows it. In "La Vie en Rose" and "How Jazz is Played" Armstrong vocalizes with Young. Each of the other members of the unit has his moment with instrumental solos.

Velma Middleton, vocalist with Armstrong for many years, pleases with offerings and antics. Best accepted is "Mama's Back in Town," really put over by the plump singer.

When Armstrong Co. strut into such an oldie as "I Hate to See the Evening Sun Go Down" the big audience can't do other but go to town right with him. When it comes to new music, as far as Armstrong is concerned, it was all left at home.

Lionel Hampton orch, with the leader at his vibraharp or drums all of the half-hour allowed him, devotes its moments strictly to rock 'n' roll accentuating the steady heat and at times improvising at will in a jam session which delights all in big room. Most of the time it's Hampton and his vibraharp, with the other members of the group picking up strongly at the end. As Hampton plays he emits sounds which have nothing to do with the music, but make him a focal point. All the artists in his group also get a chance as they feed the audience such as "Stardust," "Flying Home," "The Wine Song." Hampton works the drums with his vibraharp for top reception. He is joined by Armstrong and Miss Fitzgerald in the final moments of the show, Satch offering "Saints Marching In," and she the oldie "Lady Be Good," as a curtain closer.

Miss Fitzgerald is supported by a unit consisting of piano, drums and bass as she scores with such faves as "Tenderly," "Lullaby in Birdland," "Blues for You," and the very rock 'n' roll "Airmail."

Rising platfrom at Warner's, built during silent picture days to bring big orch to stage level, is utilized by Hampton unit to open show. Mambo Duo, clever dancers, and Veronica Martell, goodlooker and good juggler, are also on the bill. Walk.

Radio City, Mpls.
Minneapolis, July 13.

Herb Shriner, Jimmy Dorsey Orch (15) with Lee Castle, Tommy Mercer & Dottie Reid; Four Evans; "Let's Be Happy" (AA).

Mirthmaker Herb Shriner and top-drawer musicmakers Jimmy Dorsey's orch together undoubtedly provide what it takes for the boxoffice as well as for solid entertainment. Consequently, this first vaudfilm layout here in years promises to make both flesh lovers and United Paramount, operating this 4,100-seat showhouse happy, especially since some of the 1,000 or so Shriners here for their national convention will want to enjoy Shriner in particular and should swell the audiences.

For good measure, in addition to the two headliners, there's also the bangup Evans family—mother, father, sister and brother—whose tap and other dancing are among the best to be found anywhere.

Shriner's familiar dry, homespun humor and distinctive comedy style are devoted to a 20-minute highly amusing stock-in-trade recital of the ribtickling aspects of the life in and people of Indiana. His observations, even if heard before, are chucklesome. As he gets off his deliciously wry bon mots he's rewarded by gales of laughter. Then, to rest funnybones, he performs on the harmonica.

With its seven brass, four saxes and three rhythms, Jimmy Dorsey's band, fronted by trumpet virtuoso Lee Castle, dispenses lively swing and other melodics that are all the more highly listenable because of their boff arrangements. Such Dorsey brothers' hits as "So Rare" and "Song of India" receive fancy production trimmings. And the band's personable vocalists, Tommy Mercer and Dottie Reid, reveal nifty sets of pipes and the equipment to sell their numbers expertly.

Even at the advanced $1.50 after 5 p.m. admission this layout, not counting the feature picture, is a good entertainment buy. Rees.

Palace, N. Y.

Wong Sisters (2), Martin Bros. (2), Ben Beri, Marie Palmay, Tommy Hanlon Jr.; Lolita De Carlo, Remi & Kelly; Dean Murphy, Gyro Jets (2), Nick Francis House Orch; "Trooper Hook" (UA), reviewed in VARIETY June 26, '57.

The Palace has rounded up a likeable crowd of performers for a varied and well-paced presentation. From Nick Francis' opening downbeat to bowoff, the bill runs smoothly and to the aud's delight.

Layout opens in standard fashion with the Wong Sisters. The terping duo kicks out with some okay stepping and manage to keep everything brisk and neat. The two Martin Bros. also extract approval from a nicely planned marionette turn. By this time the house is warmed up for Ben Beri and he takes advantage of it all. With a sock assortment of juggling comedics, he pulls in yocks and a sizable mitt response.

Thrush Marie Palmay follows with some nifty sopranotes and an elfin quality. She's further reviewed in New Acts. Another New Act turn is Lolita De Carlo, Remi & Kelly, a dance turn spotted sixth. In front is Tommy Hanlon Jr. with a pleasing patter stint. His delivery is low-pressured but it gets high laugh ratings.

Dean Murphy is the other comedian on the bill but does not conflict. Murphy, a vet performer at Broadway houses, is making his first Palace appearance and the opening day regulars were with him all the way. Mixes patter and impressions in tiptop fashion. The windup spot is the hands of the Gyro Jets and the two trampoline acros send everyone home happy.

Empire, Glasgow
Glasgow, July 11.

Ronnie Hilton (with Will Fyffe Jr.), Mary Naylor, Kodell, Allen Bros. (2) & June, Gaby Grossetto & Gaston, Al Roxy & Glenda, Gold & Cordell, Miles Twins, Bobby Dowds Orch.

Ronnie Hilton, young English disk singer, is pleasing if not standout headliner, and wins palming for pop tunes, including his current waxing success, "Around The World." Singer is obviously aiming at something new, and introduces some lukewarm comedy byplay with his accompanist, Will Fyffe Jr., son of the late comedian. Idea is good, but is too forced.

Mary Naylor, talented chirper recently in from the U. S., repeats earlier successes in this vaudery with a sincere song act. Thrush, who's English, has gained some extra polish via her U. S. trek, and wins mitting for "Mr. Wonderful," "Underneath the Arches," and "I Love Everybody," her final bit.

Kodell offers his offbeat novelty of magic with live birds, and tells some good stories between tricks. Gaby Grossetto & Gaston, French father & son, score very strongly with slick juggling routines. Al Roxy & Glenda are a doubtful comedy entry, using n.s.g. material and only registering through distaffer's s.a. Duo also need better timing.

Allen Bros. & June repeat their familiar comedy dance-burlesque, but should aim at a more natural-looking go-off-the-rails opening. Gag of leaving front of trousers open is wrong for family audiences. Miles Twins, distaffers, open the layout with attractive dance bit. Gold & Cordell are stylish mixed terpers who tee off the second segment. Showbacking from the Bobby Dowds orch is adequate. Gord.

4 B'way Shows, 2 Tourers Close

Only 10 Running in N. Y., with at Least 2 of Those Likely Folds—'Paradiso' a Flop Despite Raves

Summer has caught up with Broadway and the road. The seasonal b.o. dive resulted in three layoffs and three closings last Saturday (13). Four were in New York and two on tour.

As predicted several weeks ago, the number of Broadway shows has now been reduced to 10, while the count on touring entries is two. It's figured likely that at least two and perhaps more Main Stem entries will also drop out before the end of the warm-weather period.

The Broadway bowouts last Saturday were "Happiest Millionaire," "Hole in the Head," "Hotel Paradiso" and "Separate Tables," while the road shutterings were "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" and "Matchmaker." Only one of the six, however, falls into the definite flop category. That's "Paradiso," which lost an estimated $140,000 on its $150,000 capitalization.

Ironically, "Paradiso," which costarred Bert Lahr, Angela Lansbury, John Emery, Douglas Byng and Carleton Carpenter, was one of the few shows last season to get unanimously favorable reviews from the New York firststringers. Besides that comedy and "Millionaire," the other productions are all hits. In the case of "Millionaire," the Walter Pidgeon-starrer has an approximate $30,000 deficit on its $99,000 investment, but is figured likely to recoup that when it goes on tour, beginning Oct. 3 in Wilmington.

"Hole," which starred Paul Douglas, moved into the profit class last week by virtue of the film rights to a firm headed by Frank Sinatra. That's based on the production's 40% share of the reported $200,000 paid by Sinatra's outfit for the property. Without the film income, the deficit on the play would be about $40,000 on an $85,000 investment.

The Arnold Schulman play is a possibility to resume Sept. 9 at the Plymouth Theatre, N. Y., for a brief run prior to moving to Chicago for an indefinite stand, or it may skip the Broadway return stand. Douglas is leaving for England to fulfill tv commitments and it's questionable whether he'll return to his starring assigment.

"Tables," costarring Eric Portman and Geraldine Page, who succeeded Margaret Leighton, has earned about 100% profit thus far on its $60,000 investment. The dual bill resumes its Broadway run Sept. 2, prior to touring. In the interim, the production will play Aug. 3-31 at Central City, Col. The scheduled resumptions of "Millionaire" and "Tables" accentuates the growing tendency among producers to shutter shows temporarily during the summer.

Of the road entries, "Cat" netted around $600,000 (including revenue from the sale of the film rights to Metro) on its $102,000 capitalization, while "The Matchmaker" earned about $200,000 profit on its $70,000 investment.

BUFFALO MUSIC TENT PLANS TORONTO SPOT

Buffalo, July 16.

Operators of the Melody Fair, local musical tent, are planning a similar venture in Toronto. Stock for the Canadian canvastop will be sold on both sides of the border. The Canadian Securities Commission has reportedly okayed sale of the shares, with similar approval expected shortly from the U.S. Securities Exchange Commission.

Meanwhile, the local teepee is using 12 members of the Toronto National Ballet as its resident chorus for the season. Actors Equity sanctioned the move after the tent found it impossible to recruit adequate chorus members locally. The immigration authorities were reported cool to the idea at first, but eventually went along on the basis of Equity's approval.

The tent has also worked out a plan with the Drama Dept. of the U. of Buffalo whereby drama students help out for production experience and receive college credits.

The Lighthouse Players, a new non-Equity operation, has opened in Ocean City, Md.

Soviet Actors to Attend Stratford (Ont.) Festival

Ottawa, July 16.

Russia's youngest Hamlet will watch a 27-year-old Canadian play the role July 31 at Stratford, Ont. So will two other Soviet actors and perhaps a pianist.

Michail Kozakov, 23, who made his professional debut this year at Mayakovsky's Theatre, Moscow, arrives here July 31 and will catch performances of "Hamlet" and "Twelfth Night" at the Shakespeare Festival. Toronto-born Christopher Plummer is starring in "Hamlet."

M. T. Tsarev, director of the Moscow Little Theatre, will also be present. So will Marina Kuznetsova, legit and film actress. Also on hand, if his engagements permit, high-ranking pianist L. Oborin. Latter has visited the U.S., but it will be the other three's first visit to North America. They'll fly from Moscow to Montreal, stop briefly in the capital Ottawa, then go on to Stratford. No present plans for further visits on this continent.

B.O. Prices Reasonable, But Hurt Biz, Say Crix; Offer Lotsa Remedies

Although ticket scales are not out of line with production and operating costs, or out of proportion to other prices in the current inflationary period, they are seriously hurting the theatre. That is the virtually unanimous opinion of the New York drama critics, according to a questionnaire by VARIETY.

"Unless I'm mistaken," writes Walter Kerr, of the Herald Tribune, "statistics are clear enough on the point. Theatre tickets have not exceeded or even reached the level of the general cost of living increase. The money is being spent somewhere — the problem is a competitive one.

"Lowered prices might help a little in some situations. Twofers can extend the run of a smash by four or five months, I gather. But can they really do anything for a show that wasn't a smash in the first place? How much real profit do they add during the extendedplay? Can City Center get beyond a single-week extension of its basic 10 days or two weeks? What happened to 'Brigadoon' after its move-over from the Center to Broadway?

"I'm all for lowered costs, but I don't think lowered costs will solve the essential problem, which remains a matter of the outright attractiveness of what's on the stage. I hate to see all our energies focused on this single, not really crucial aspect of the problem."

Brooks Atkinson, of the Times, reasons, "The boxoffice scale is not out of line in comparison with other things, but it is increasingly out of the range of many people who love the theatre." Richard Cooke, of the Wall Street Journal, asserts, "Production costs are too high, and are responsible for the hit-or-flop nonsense. The hit fetish is promoted by pressagents for understandable reasons, but it's bad for the theatre. Ticket prices have to follow production costs, and union rules, featherbedding, etc., have a lot to do with it."

Ethel Colby, of the Journal of Commerce, believes "The sorry state of theatrical economics today proves that the bulk of yesterday's patrons cannot or will not afford the current ticket scale. Unless Puppet Shows for Kids In Tent at Caldwell, N. J.

A tent theatre for kids is operating this summer in Caldwell, N.J. The town's Sun Dance Lodge is presenting weekly puppet shows by Lea and Gia Wallace at the canvastop. The Wallaces, who've been operating their own puppet theatre in Greenwich Village, N.Y. for the past five years, are putting on a different offering each week.

The season began June 29 and runs through August.

City Center O.K., Phoenix Blotto, The Crix Agree

The N.Y. City Center had one of its best legit seasons in 1956-57, but the off-Broadway Phoenix Theatre was a disappointment. Neither of New York's principal pop-price projects gets favored treatment from the critics. That's the concensus of answers on the subject, in response to VARIETY's annual questionaire to the reviewers on the New York legit season.

"The City Center has been doing a brilliant job," says Brooks Atkinson, of the Times. "Unfortunately, it was a weak season at the Phoenix, particularly in regard to productions that originated there." Richard Cooke, of the Wall Street Journal, thinks the City Center has been "doing very well, the Phoenix poorly."

"The City Center and Phoenix have done magnificent jobs. Thank Heaven we have them," declares Mark Barron, of the Associated Press. Robert Coleman of the Mirror, writes, "The City Center and Phoenix are fulfilling their stated aims. They offer excellent entertainment at popular prices. They even experiment, particularly the Phoenix, and that's all to the good."

"I feel that both the City Center and Phoenix are living up to expectations," writes Tom Dash, of the Women's Wear Daily, "especially considering their tight budgets. As for free-swinging critical treatment, I am not aware that the critics have indulged them in any way. For some time now, the critics have been judging these two theatres by the same standards and yardsticks with which they measure the more commercial offerings of Broadway."

"As far as I'm concerned," declares Henry Hewes, of the Satur-

Visit to a Small Planet

(BOOTH THEATRE, N. Y.)

Edward Andrews, who recently took over as the career-daffy General in "Visit to a Small Planet," gives a much straighter performance than Eddie Mayehoff did. The character is now not as funny as in Mayehoff's original, rubber-face portrayal, but the show as a whole is improved. The Gore Vidal comedy seems more believable, better balanced and more entertaining.

As Andrews plays the role, the General is still a fatuous caricature of military mentality, but not utterly preposterous, so the play's situation is more legitimate and compelling. As the star, Cyril Ritchard gives an infectiously droll, deft performance, perhaps smoother, more assured and more amusing than when the play opened five months ago. Of the other players, Philip Coolidge remains skillfully pompous as the egocentric news analyst with a gift for wrong prognosis, Sarah Marshall still gives a deceptively easy portrayal in the jill-of-all-trades part of the love interest, Conrad Janus is properly relaxed as a youth with a low-compression attitude toward atomic war, and Sibyl Bowan gets the laughs as a domestic-minded mama.

Perhaps partly because of the important casting change, Ritchard's staging seems more soundly conceived than originally, and a repeat visit reinforces the essentially genuine quality of the Vidal script, in spite of the obvious padding to fill out the original television-program length. The novel, elaborate sound and lighting effects impress anew and the up-to-snuff quality of the show as a whole is a credit to co-producers George Axelrod and Clinton Wilder. Hobe.

Accuracy, Not Generosity

"The impact of drama criticism is more an impact on the people associated with a production (coming when it does, all at once and at a time of nerve-crisis) than on overall audiences, who, in my experience, are always wrong about what 'the critics said'." That is the opinion of Walter Kerr, of the N.Y. Herald Tribune, in response to VARIETY's annual poll of the reaction of the first-string critics to the Broadway legit season.

"About the question of what serious plays have succeeded in the face of adverse reviews, it's hard to get samples of serious plays because compared to comedies and musicals relatively few are produced and relatively few are going to succeed anyway, by the nature of things. However, it's clear that a serious play can fail in spite of favorable notices ('Time Limit' and 'Hidden River'), which shores up one side of the argument.

"Critics can help the theatre most, I believe, by trying for the maximum accuracy, not the maximum generosity. Unjustified generosity can hurt, for the reader who goes in such cases gets stuck, feels he may be tricked next time as well, is thereafter suspicious of good notices, and may stay away longer because of being 'had.'

"If a review can get the reader to trust him, he will be able to send said reader to the good things, thereby building reader's confidence in and affection for the theatre. That's a pretty picture, isn't it? But I do think that the natural impulse to 'help out' where helping out isn't entirely justified does more harm than good."

Chi Area Strawhats Typify How Rising Costs Are Squeezing Legit

By LES BROWN

Chicago, July 16.

The demise of some seven summer theatres on the Windy City perimeter during the past three years, plus the still-tentative status of four-fifths of this year's operations, underscore the fact that these summertime ventures are getting riskier than ever. (See separate story on last weekk's additional closing of the Drury Lane Theatre.—Ed.)

Not only rising costs, but a scarcity of sock summer-weight vehicles, are blamed for toughergoing for the strawhats. Present season here is going to be one of the most serious in years, not in point of business but in the predominance of straight dramas and "message" comedies. The fluffy farces, which have a history as the bread and butter of barn stages, are scarcer than ever this year. That follows the trend of recent seasons on Broadway and the road.

Excepting the Highland Park Music Theatre, the four non-musical silos here have so far scheduled a total of 28 shows for the present season, and among them only five are light comedies that were recent boxoffice hits on Broadway. These are "Anniversary Waltz," "Seven Year Itch," "My Three Angels," "Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter?" and "Matchmaker." Even so, the first three have been outdated by motion picture versions that have

Vivien Leigh Ejected From House of Lords; Parade to Save Theatre

London, July 16.

Efforts by British Actors Equity and various elements of legit to save the James's Theatre appear doomed to failure. Despite a two-year campaign in behalf of the house, the London County Council is sticking to its approval of the plan for demolition to make way for an office building.

In attempts to arouse sentiment in behalf of keeping the theatre standard, actresses Vivien Leigh and Athene Seyler and drama critics Alan Dent, of the London News Chronicle, staged a parade through the streets of the City ringing a bell and carrying posters. Later, Miss Leigh was ejected from the gallery of the House of Lords for shouting objections during a debate on the current state of art in England.

The actress subsequently expressed disappointment that no one had apparently heard her shouts in behalf of the theatre during the House of Lords session. She also complained after her procession with Miss Seyler and Dent, "Hardly anyone noticed us. Next time I want a change from being recognized wherever I go, I shall just walk through London carrying a banner."

Virtually the only favorable official word on the St. James's fate was a statement by an official in the House of Lords, "The Government deplores the situation regarding the theatre, and has taken steps to prevent something like this happening again."

The latest decision to demolish the theatre comes after a two-year battle by Equity and non-professionals to save the structure. It was more than two years ago that the LCC gave planning permission, in principle, to a scheme for building offices on the site.

There was an immediate public protest against this decision. The original planning permission has remained in force, however, and to revoke it could have cost the LCC considerable money in compensation.

Leasehold ownership of the theatre is shared by Prince Littler's Associated Theatre Properties (London) Ltd., and Broadway producer Gilbert Miller. The house is currently playing a whodunit, "It's the Georgraphy That Counts."

'Jasper Story' Musical Opening Alberta Stand

Ottawa, July 16.

McCreath, director of drama for the Alberta province, is staging the show. Book and lyrics are by Elsie Park Gowan, novelist and tv scripter. McCreath, who's had U.S. stock experience, wrote and composed a musical, "Stars In Your Eyes," done at Ottawa Little Theatre five years ago.

Jasper is the site of Jasper Park, scenic area in the Rockies, and of Jasper Park Lodge, Canadian National Railways' tourist resort.

Foe of Legit In B.A.: Racehorses

Buenos Aires, July 16.

An almost complete dominance of the local theatre by adaptations of foreign plays along with hot comptition from sports events have resulted in a "crisis" for Argentine legit. Native playwrights charge they've been forced to present their own works since established producers prefer to rely upon translations of scripts proved as hits in their original tongue.

Reflecting upon the low ebb of the theatre in a recent Video debate, actor Orestes Caviglia complained that legit has become an art for the minority. He asserted that sports are the theatre's greatest enemy for why otherwise should a racehorse draw a crowd of 600,000 when the most an actor can hope for is to emulate playwright Garcia Lorca who attracted some 60,000 patrons to an afternoon bull-ring production.

Argentores (the Argentine ASCAP) reveals that last year it paid 1,633,305 pesos (about $49,000) in royalties to foreign authors, apart from 999,522 pesos ($30,000) distributed to their translators or adaptors. Native writers, exclusive of musical revue scripters, collected only 569,340 pesos ($17,000) in royalties for the first four months of the year.

Straight Plays Hardly Cure-All for Tunetents

Musical tent theatre venture into straight play production, although expanding this season as anticipated, has its limitations. For the most part, canvastop operators figure that the non-tuners have to be booked either at the beginning or end of the season. That's so the resident musical company doesn't have to be laid off for a straight play booking.

Besides the increase in dramatic shows, the tents are also giving greater concentration to kiddie shows this season. Each teepee is expected to present at least two juve offerings during the season either in the afternoon or morning. The attendance at the moppet entries usually ranges from 1,000-1,500 and is especially lucrative for concessionaires.

Other off-beat tent prospects this summer include an ice show being packaged by Robert Rapport and an English version of the opera, "Tosca," at the Musicarnival, Cleveland. Incidentally, "Peter Pan" is also slated for its first canvastop outing at the Sacramento (Cal). Music Circus.

Anent the juve angle, the Westbury (L.I.) Music Tent is instituting a special children"s policy for its 6 p.m. Saturday performances, with kids under 14 admitted free when accompanied by an adult ticket-purchaser.

SEASON ON THE BLAH--CRITICS

The 1956-57 Broadway season was generally disappointing, although "Long Day's Journey Into Night," "Waltz of the Toreadors" and one or two other plays were redeeming features. That's pretty much the attitude of the N. Y. first-string drama critics, as expressed in answer to the usual season-end questionnaire from VARIETY.

As usual, there is considerable difference of opinion among the always-individualistic aisle-sitters. As before, also, some of the reviewers express disatisfaction with the questions, or at least the wording of them.

Walter Kerr, of the Herald Tribune, voices a fairly general attitude when he writes, "A season including "Long Day's Journey Into Night," the perfect "Waltz of the Toreadors" and the interesting "Potting Shed" can't be dismissed as poor. The season started weakly and established a downbeat impression early, but with the above items it seemed to recover and wind up as by no means a great season but a reasonably satisfactory one."

Brooks Atkinson, of the Times, characterizes the season in a single word, "mediocre." Jack Keating of Cue magazine, shares Kerr's feeling about the redeeming quality of "Journey" and "Toreadors," and also mentions "Moon for the Misbegotten" and "Separate Tables" in that category, but concludes, "It was a far from good or satisfying season, considering the long, arid stretches of tripe."

Richard Cooks, of the Wall Street Journal, rates the season "only fair," while Ethel Colby, of the Journal of Commerce, thinks it "fair good, with widely diversified subject matter, considering the discouraging lack of support." Robert Coleman, of the Mirror, confesses himself "disappointed," explaining that he'd been "an optimist who had predicted that it would be as good as, or better than, the previous one." He observes, "Most of the quality over the last two semes-

CANADA ARTS COUNCIL MAKES 2 10G GRANTS

Stratford, Ont., July 16.

The Canadian Players and Le Theatre du Nouveau Monde have just received grants of $10,000 each from the recently created Arts Council of Canada. The Canadian Players is a local group which has sent out repertory companies on Canadian and U .S. tours the last three seasons. Le Theatre du Nouveau Monde is a French-language outfit in Montreal, which sent a troupe to Paris last year.

The grant to Canadian Players provides that the group should maintain its Canadian activities. The $10,000 grant is the maximum that the executive committee is authorized to make without reference to the full council, but it's indicated that application for an additional grant will be considered.

Canadian Players is headed by Robin Patterson, wife of Tom Patterson, who founded the Stratford Shakespeare Festival. The group is a sort of unofficial offshoot of the Festival, since most of its actors have appeared in Festival productions. The Players sponsored two touring companies last winter and will send out at least one troupe presenting "Othello" and "Man and Superman" this fall.

It Still Holds

In response to a VARIETY questionnaire including a reference to what should be the qualifications and functions of a drama critic, Walter Kerr, reviewer of the N.Y. Herald Trihune, believes the late Ashton Stevens' words can't be improved.

Said the longtime critic of the Chicago American, "I'd rather be right if possible, and read if possibler."

Musicals in Transitional Stage; Critics Find Books Mostly Weak

"Musicals seem to be in an unhappy transitional stage," according to Walter Kerr, of the Herald Tribune. That was his comment in a reply to VARIETY's annual questionaire to the New York drama, critics, on aspects of the Broadway season of 1956-57.

"The basic Rodgers-Hammerstein contribution to the musical stage was a wonderful one," the Trib aisle-sitter explains. "But through no fault of theirs, it tended to set an absolute pattern (the 'distinguished musical play') by excessive imitation. In the rush to cash in on the trend, the notion of the essentially comic or impudently fantastic (old style, if you wish) musical was allowed to disappear as a practical habit.

"Now we're trying to get the habit back ("Li'l Abner," "Happy Hunting," etc., for instance), but the machinery is rusty and we haven't exactly seen a fresh, contemporary way of doing it. Hence a kind of creaking and groaning to get into motion without a really, exciting image or inspiration.

"It'll come. We won't lose the R-H contribution, either (as witness 'My Fair Lady'), but will eventually have both, I hope."

Ethel Colby, of the Journal of Commerce, thinks the season's musicals were "pedestrian," but were fortunate in their "stellar performances." She declares "Retentive memories were evidenced

Set 'Hidden King' Preems For Edinburgh Festival

Edinburgh, July 16.

"The Hidden King," by Jonathan Griffin, will premiere Aug. 20 at the Assembly Hall here as a presentation of the Edinburgh don producer Stephen Mitchell. Festival, in association with Lon-

Christopher West will stage, with scenery by Leslie Hurry and a cast including Robert Eddison, Robert Speaight, Michael MacLiammoir, Sebastian Shaw, Rosalind Atkinson and Ernest Thesiger.

Actors Carried Authors: Critics

Did the actors carry the playwrights on Broadway last season? That perennial controversy-starter was posed by VARIETY in its annual questionnaire sent to the New York drama critics. For the most part, the answer was "Yes."

"There are always more good performances than plays," replies Brooks Atkinson, of the Times. A qualified answer is given by Walter Kerr, of the Herald Tribune. "There was fine acting in a lot of places, but in the case of my favorite plays ("Long Day's Journey Into Night," "Waltz of the Toreadors" and "Potting Shed") the playwriting was there for the actors to make the most of."

"There were many more interesting acting jobs than there were interesting plays," says Jack Gaver, of the United Press. "A Helen Hayes, Katharine Cornell or Lunt and Fontanne can make a success of an author's poor script," comments Mark Barron, of the Associated Press, "otherwise, it's the writer."

"There are cycles in the theatre," observes Robert Coleman of the Mirror. "At times playwrights dominate, and at others, players. I should most certainly say that the last season belonged to the actors rather than the authors."

"What would 'Auntie Mame' be without the whirlwind, engrossing performance by Rosalind Russell?" rhetorically inquires Tom Dash, of Women's Wear Daily. "Would 'Visit to a Small Planet' be nearly as good without Ritchard or Mayehoff? The same applies to 'Happiest Millionaire' with Walter Pidgeon.

"There have been a number of flops in which the stars were singled out for high praise by the reviewers, such as Walter Slezak in 'First Gentleman' and Dennis King in 'Greatest Man Alive'."

(Don't these two examples perhaps suggest that even brilliant star performances cannot "carry" an author unless the script has merit—Ed.)

Plan Musical Based on Farce of Hospital Life

Cleveland, July 16.

A musical version of "Zone of Quiet," Dr. Leon Dembo's hospital-life farce tried out at the Hanna Theatre here in 1940, has been written by the author and local bandleader Frank Hruby. They hope to have it produced on Broadway next fall-winter. The tuner will be titled "Shake Well Before Using."

A number of Cleveland physicians and surgeons who backed the original play are reportedly ready to become angels of the musical. Dembo, who's done the book and lyrics, has based the material on his experiences years ago as an interne at Bellevue Hospital, N.Y., and John Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore. Since becoming a local physician, he and his family have been active in dramatics at the Cleveland Play House.

Washington, July 16.

Washington's summer scene is being enlivened by two al fresco operations drawing combined average nightly audiences of 7,000 to 11,000. The one at the Watergate Theatre is cuffo, while the other, at the Carter Barron Amphitheatre, is a commercial operation. Both are under the aegis of the Interior Dept.

Watergate, an outdoor stadium located on the edge of the Potomac, with a barge anchored in the river serving as stage, is the scene of four weekly concerts. Its seating capacity of 7,000 does not include additional thousands who stand on Memorial Bridge, recline along the riverbank or loll in canoes and rowboats.

Concerts by bands representing the various branches of military services have been a feature of Watergate since 1950, when the better equipped Carter Barron took over its functions for other type of outdoor shows. This year, however, something new has been added as result of cooperative effort between Local 161 American Federation of Musicians, the recording industry's trust fund and the Dept. of the Interior.

The Friday night slot, normally filled by the Air Force Symphony Orch, currently on a European tour, has been allocated to special programs, including a Jazz Festival, the operetta "Gypsy Baron" and symphony concerts with name soloists. The AFM local, under the leadership of Sam Jack Kaufman, recruits the talent, paying scale salaries from the recording trust fund. Interior Dept., under the guidance of Edward Kelly, superintendent of National Capital Parks, supplies the outdoor theatre, picks up the tab for the sound equipment and takes care of maintenance and staging.

Watergate audiences, mostly capacity and never less than 4,500, are composed largely of tourists. Informal police survey of parked cars showed 80% carring out-of-town license plates. The cuffo offering has not cut appreciably if at all, into Carter Barron, which is chalking up one of best seasons since the Feld Bros. took over three years ago. Washington with its sub-tropical weather is traditionally an outdoor town in summer, and natives and visitors alike flock to its ozone attractions.

Legit Loves Those TV Writers

N.Y. Drama Critics Deny Prejudice Against Vidscripters, But Cite Difficulties

The notion, fairly general among television writers, that the New York drama critics are prejudiced against plays by television writers or adapted from television scripts, is contradicted by the critics themselves. That is indicated in the replies to VARIETY's annual questionnaire as the critics' opinions of the recent Broadway season.

"Don't sell those tv writers short," cautions Ethel Colby, of the Journal of Commerce. "Occasionally they come up with worthy plays. The constant demand on them from tv may impair their ingenuity. Yet we've had several respectable offerings from the tv contingent during the last couple of seasons."

"Writers are writers and there is no reason why a writer of tv plays cannot learn to write stage plays," argues Henry Hewes, of the Saturday Review. "However, the half-hour or one-hour tv drama is a different form than a three-act play, and a tv screen is filled more simply than is a full stage. In general, tv is at its best with the microscopic and the stage is its best with the macroscopic.

Two Smashes

"The success of 'Middle of the Night' and 'Visit to a Small Planet' on Broadway came about because their authors respected the size of the new medium and because their points of view about life spread wider than one or two characters or a few plot wallops."

The idea of any special critical attitude toward tv scripters is dismissed by Brooks Atkinson, of the Times, with the comment, "Under the law anyone has a right to write a good play. Richard Cooke, of the Wall Street Journal, remarks merely, "I don't see any pattern here yet."

Walter Kerr, of the Herald Tribune, write, "There's a real switch from the limited-scene tv drama (dictated by time and the intimacy of the closeup) to large-scale proscenium drama, and it's not surprising that writers extensively trained in the one medium should have some difficulty in expanding to the physical and emotional size of the other.

"It seems to me, however, that the problem (the difference between the two) is becoming clearer to writers, and once it does it'll be easier for them to make the jump. (When you understand the size of the jump, it's easier to prepare for it). 'Visit to a Small Planet' and 'Middle of the Night' are generally good signs, and I feel that the move-over contribution will increase. Legit can be thankful that tv is keeping writers in New York, and working. It's bound to help."

Tom Dash, of Women's Wear Daily, suggests, "the tv writers who have flopped in writing for the stage failed not because they were tv writers but because they just happened to write poor plays. For that matter there have been experienced stage writers who also failed to produce anything worthwhile last season. Experience gained writing for tv can be invaluable to a young author with the stage as his ultimate goal.

"We are in such dire need of a new crop of playwrights that we should encourage their writing in any other medium in the meantime. We will welcome them to legit whether they come from tv or motion pictures, provided they develop the talent to write worthy plays for the stage."

"Television has been feeding and and encouraging the young writers who have recently made successful stabs at legit," declares Robert Coleman, of the Mirror, and he believes the theatre should be grateful to tv for supporting them while they have prepared for Broadway.

Jack Keating, of Cue Mag, mentions the small dimension of tv as a special problem of the tv scripter in writing for the theatre, and he feels that even "Visit to a Small Planet" would have "fallen flat on its witty and intelligent but terrible skimpy face if it hadn't been for the larger-than-life performances of Cyril Ritchard and Eddie Mayehoff."

Hayes Bureau's Tieup

Washington, July 16.

Hayes Concert Bureau, leading D. C. booker of longhair, has teamed up with the non-profit Friday Morning Music Club of Washington for future presentations at Constitution Hall and Lisner Auditorium.

Under a five-year pact just okayed, the Hayes concert series and special events will be offered under the auspices of the club. This becomes effective immediately and covers the 1957-58 concert season.

After payment of all expenses and fees, net profits will go to the Music Club for its foundation and scholarship program. As a result of the deal, tickets become tax exempt.

Torrent Wrecks Chi Drury Lane; Det. Spot Dark

Chicago, July 16.

The Drury Lane Summer Theatre literally blew its top last weekend and will be out of action for the rest of the season. Torrential rains Friday (12), the heaviest in 72 years in the Windy City, brought down the canvas top on an audience of 250 during a performance of "Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter," starring Marie Wilson.

Some 48 customers were injured none seriously. All of the cast escaped unharmed. New tent, which had cost Drury Lane operator James Monos $10,000 at the season's start, is reportedly beyond repair and cannot be replaced for at least six weeks. As a result, the theatre must cancel the second week of Miss Wilson's engagement, plus the upcoming slate of "Rain" with Vivian Blaine, "Orpheus Descending" with Maureen Stapleton and Cliff Robertson, "Seven Year Itch" with Tom Duggan, and "Chalk Garden" with Viveca Lindfors and Kathleen Nesbitt.

Another tent, the Edgewater Beach Playhouse, elected to play it safe and cancelled its performance during the storm, although it has the hottest current show hereabouts, a tryout of "Circus of Dr. Lao" with Burgess Meredith. The rains were not as fierce in Highland Park, where Herb Rogers has two tent theatres, and both operated Friday without disaster, although business was slight.

The Drury Lane theatre had gotten off to a poor start this season with mild grosses for "View from the Bridge," playing subsequent to seven weeks at downtown legit houses, and then low grosses for "Arms and the Man," Carroll Baker's fiasco, which was unanimously panned by the four local critics.

Det. Tent Washed Out

Detroit, July 16.

Kenneth Schwartz, producer of the Northland Playhouse here, has given up on the idea of operating out doors for the balance of the summer. He had intended doing so after Hurricane Audrey demolished his tent operation. The producer tried the al fresco switch last week with "Petticoat Fever," but was rained out over the weekend.

Red Buttons, star of the comedy package, also was unable to appear for the first three scheduled performances Tuesday-Thursday (9-11). The operation is dark this week, and Schwartz is trying to get a new tent.

The St. Paul syndicate negotiating with the Shuberts to purchase the St. James Theatre, N.Y., is headed by William L. McKnight, Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing board chairman and Broadway legit backer. McKnight's attorney on the deal is Walter N. Trenerry, the St. Paul lawyer-industrialist who recently joined Richard Myers and Julius Fleischmann as a partner in their Broadway production activities.

Alan Hewitt made his directorial staging debut with the recent "Bus Stop" revival at the Berkshire Playhouse, Stockbridge, Mass. He directed "Inherit the Wind" for presentation the current week at the Grist Mill Playhouse, Andover, N. J., also playing the E. K. Hornbeck role (a portrait of the late H. L. Menken), which he played for some months on Broadway.

Frank Wagner is choreographing at Camp Tamiment, Tamiment, Pa., this summer, while Laura Sands will appear there as a resident company member.

Mara Lynn, assistant choreographer at the Sacandaga Park (N.Y.) Summer Theatre, will also appear in the spot's musical productions.

Mary Ellen Terry will have the dancing lead in "Can-Can" at the Finger Lakes Lyric Circus, Skaneateles, N.Y., for three weeks beginning Aug. 6.

Paul Bressoud, who had been producer at the Malden Bridge (N.Y.) Playhouse for several seasons, is back as a member of the acting company.

Tony Converse is the assistant director at the Williamstown (Mass.) Summer Theatre, while other production staffers include Will Steven Armstrong, designer; George Mallone, stage manager; David Mattson, lighting designer; Tanya Komisarjevsky, assistant lighting designer and William J. Martin, business manager. Ralph Renzi is back as pressagent.

Beulah Bondi will appear in a Denver (Colo.) U. Theatre tryout of Dan Totheroh's "Traipsin' Woman," beginning Aug. 1.

Off-B'way Show

Ever Since Paradise

H. Richard Silver & Marilyn Shapiro production of three-act comedy by J. B. Priestley. Stars Haila Stoddard, Whitfield Connor. Staged by Mark Gordon; musical director, Lynn Willis. At Carnegie Recital Hall, N.Y., July 11, '57; $3.80 top ($5.75 opening).

Cast: Marion Coben, Lynn Willis, Whitfield Connor, Haila Stoddard, Howard Morton, Iola Lynn.

Thin is the word for "Ever Since Paradise," J. B. Priestley's coyly tabbed "Physical—About Love." It is often a tasty trifle, however, Priestley being an author of intellect, asperity and good humor. Cliche as the battle of the sexes has become, he seems to be saying that Everyman's romance is still fun.

Under Mark Gordon's inventively debonair direction, this American premiere ("Paradise" was produced in London in 1939) has flair. Three couples are studied, a pair at pianos on opposite sides of the stage, a pair who, as emcee-moderators, do Priestley's philosophizing and a young couple whose romance, marriage and separation are the subject of the editorializing.

The comedy derives from Priestley's point that no matter how average a love may be, it has charm, beauty and importance. The scenes are purposefully obvious. First meeting, embarrassing moments between prospective father-in-law and groom-to-be, moonlight and Chopin three days before marriage, early marital dissension, separation and dalliance, the flight back to each other's arms.

Regrettably, substance is not given by the moralizing of the other couples. Action stops in mid-scene, discussion ensues, then on with the show until the next parley. The frame becomes more important than the picture, possibly to compensate for what may have seemed a monochromatic canvas, or because the author became overly intrigued with form.

It's quite a showcase for Haila Stoddard and Whitfield Connor, both of whom double (or quadruple) with easy nonchalance, changing their timing and inflection with their costumes and wigs.

Appearing mostly in an aqua evening gown as her gracious blonde self, Miss Stoddard makes skillful changes to such characters as a neighbor who is a toothy bore, or a harridanish gypsy fortune teller. Connor is at his keenest as an adenoidal British colonial major who neglect to pack a nasal douche dampens incipient stolen romance and sends the heroine unsulliedly home.

In support, Iola Lynn gives a performance of considerable quality as the young wife, meeting the demands for quick change of mood and attack with precision and emotional comprehension.

But Priestley has let his play take too much the form of a debating society meeting. Had he relied on nostalgia for the commonplace, he would have had a surer comedy.

Wanted: Permanent Policy

Lack of long-range, constructive planning remains a basic weakness of New York's two main non-commercial legit ventures, the City Center and the off-Broadway Phoenix Theatre. That is the essence of suggestions by Walter Kerr, of the Herald Tribune, in answer to the annual VARIETY roundrobin of the New York drama critics' opinion on the Broadway season.

"The Phoenix quite obviously needs rehabilitation," the Trib's aisle-sitter declares. 'It is still poking along at about the same (on the average, unsuccessful) level after four years. It doesn't seem to be finding itself, just repeating itself, which is clearly not a very good idea.

"The quality at the City Center has shown great improvement on the whole. It continues to bother me, however, that all those sacrifices and all that improvement does not lead to any sort of permanence, nor does there seem to be any movement in that direction. I feel that it's a 10-day, down-the-drain, one-shot operation that helps to keep a general institution going, but does not solidify into anything firmly valuable for drama itself.

"It's heroic and often successful cliff-hanging, but the same thing is going to happen next week."

This hot-and-cold laugh effort should do okay for its sponsors on the summer circuit, but after that the prospect is a pronounced question mark. Militating against its big-time chances is its improbable theme, which places the burden of entertainment on its only so-so dialog and situations.

Thin story of a five-time wedded femme who takes on a sixth spouse without advising him of the progeny she has accumulated in her previous marital ventures shapes up mainly as a series of gags, funny enough for light diversion but a sitting duck for serious critisism.

Play is not a substantial challenge for the legit debut of Dorothy Lamour, nor are the circumstances of its presentation a fair barometer of her talents in that direction. Actress does the top role with her leg in a cast, result of a pre-opening accident. That has necessitated rewrites, and considerably hampers the free movement that certain scenes need. Despite this, Miss Lamour exhibits capabilities that should fare better under more favorable circumstances.

Robert Alda's performance ranges from some questionable mugging to deft playing, the latter predominating. His son, Alan, gives a fair enough account of himself as a youthful lush, while Michael Hogan is proficient as a butler, and Diana Millay is decorative as a blonde stepdaughter on the make.

Production is mounted attractively in a single set and the pace is on the favorable side. Bone.

Gwyn Conger Steinbeck and Nathaniel Benchley have transformed Charles Finney's weird short novel into a whimsical comedy with philosophical overtones. While their adaptation has charming moments, the weaknesses are various, and the show will need a thorough revision of script and cast if it is ever to reach Broadway. In its present shape, it's not the play but the sideshow that scores.

Dr. Lao's mythical "animals" have been ingeniously conceived for the stage by Lester Polakov, and wisely they're introduced one to a scene. What the play lacks in story it to some extent gains from the suspense at what the Sphinx, the Sea Serpent, or the Medusa will be like. These animals of man's poetic imagination are given pedestrian personalities, and from this springs much of the humor.

Despite their numerous additions to Finney's soberly told tale, the adapters have emerged with a virtually plotless play. An apathetic Arizona town is stirred suddenly by the undetected entrance of Dr. Lao's itinerant and fantastic "circus." Much as the outlandish troupe entertains, it perplexes the spectators, disrupting their complacent acceptance of what they know to be true or false.

A number of minor events occur among the towns-people, but principally the adapters focus on an abortive love involvement between a newspaperman addicted to imaginary truths (lies), and an idealistic young girl who swears by his honesty.

Burgess Meredith plays the wizened Dr. Lao with kaleidoscopic skill, slipping from poetic flights to rude vernacular and foreign dialect. But it is John McGiver, as Apollonius, the jaded worker of miracles, who turns in the memorable performance, the only three-dimensional portrayal in the show.

Louis J. Camuti, Jr. as the Sea Serpent, Sydney Walker as the disbelieving lawyer, and Frances Ingalls as the town biddy all are better than workmanlike. The romantic leads, Addison Powell and Bronia Stefan, are stilted and sticky, respectively.

Alan Schneider's staging is brisk and imaginative, and Sol Kaplan's incidental music is infectious.

There's a mystic ring along with an interesting premise to "Paul and Constantine," receiving its American premiere at this seaside silo. Premise, which has to do with an obsessive guilt feeling, concerns a successful playwright's visit to the scene of the decision which determined his career 28 years earlier. Intriguing as such a notion is, it's hardly been developed satisfactorily here.

Title is derived from the two names, which actually belong to one man—Paul Constantine Chase, the playwright. As Paul, he is an idealistic young man who must decide whether he'll take the easy road to success via aid from a predatory older actress. Constantine is the youth grown to hardened, and cynical maturity.

Paul and Constantine find themselves in a long morality debate which, while it has its merits, will need to become more meaningful and absorbing if play is to be successful elsewhere. Besides, some of the issues remain a trifle hackneyed.

James Mason wrings out compassion for what is basically a distasteful character, performing with style, conviction and presence. Pamela (Mrs.) Mason is a charmer at all times, although she must undergo a trite and silly seduction scene with young Paul.

A Finnish beauty, Taina Elg has some trouble with the French dialect but otherwise does well. As young Paul, Corey Allen looks like

Plan Annual Theatre of Nations

Initial Season Click Brings Plan to Make It Yearly International Event at Sarah Bernhardt Theatre

Paris, July 16.

On the basis of its initial success this year, the Theatre of Nations is now set as an annual summer event at the Sarah Bernhardt Theatre here. It will be extended an additional two months next year for a full six-month season.

The current season started last March 20 and ends next Thursday night (25). The final presentations, opening last Monday night (15) are productions of "The Dybbuk" and "Medea" by Habimas Theatre of Tel Aviv, Isreal. They are doing well at the boxoffice, though not up to some other shows.

The top draw of the TON season has been the Laurence Olivier-Vivien Leigh revival of "Titus Andronicus" by the Shakespeare Memorial Theatre of Stratford-on-Avon, England, staged by Peter Brook. Another hit was the Soviet all-femme folklore ballet, "The Berezka," which played an extra week at the Palais De Chaillot after its Bernhardt stand.

A major success was registered by the U.S. entry, Eugene O'Neill's "Long Journey Into Night," which interrupted its Broadway run to play a five-performance engagement here with Fredric March and Florence Eldridge as costars. Also scoring was the Berliner Ensemble of East Germany in two Bert Brecht plays, "Mutter Courage" and "Galileo."

Other notable offerings were the Brecht-Kurt Weill "Threepenny Opera," presented by the West German Schauspielhaus of Bochum, with Hans Messemer, and the same group's productions of Frank Wedekind's "The Marquis Van Keith" and Jean-Paul Sartre's "Lucifer and the Lord"; the Belgrade Opera performance of Massenet's "Don Quixote" and its ballet company; the Komische Opera of West Berlin in Janecek's "Little Intelligent Fox."

Also the specialized No Theatre of Tokyo with its ritualistic performance; Erwin Piscator's production of William Faulkner's "Requiem for a Nun" for the Schiller Theatre of West Berlin; Vittorio Gassman's version of Alfieri's "Oreste"; the Wuppertal Ballet of West Germany; the Madeleine Renaud and Jean-Louis Barrault company's revival of Paul Claudel's "Le Partage Du Midi," and some oldhat Italian opera and quaint Romanian marrionets.

All boxoffice receipts went to the participating companies to help cover living expenses. The entire season was conceived and run by A. M. Julien, of the Bernhardt Theatre, and most visiting troupes agreed that the affair was handled with impressive efficiency.

Overmatched, Outdated 'Cotton Club Revue' Bows In N.Y.'s Central Park

The "Cotton Club Revue," born as a nitery venture in Miami Beach last December, is probably one of the more successful cafe shows to hit the road. After a long run at its origination point, it took to the road for a Las Vegas stand, and has since branched away from the cafe routes for a fling in the legit channels.

Moving into the Theatre Under the Stars in New York's Central Park, the absence of smoke-filled rooms and a liquor glass apparently makes a tremendous difference. It isn't as resounding a show in the great outdoors as it was in the confines of a café. The Cotton Club type of entertainment, which reached its apex in the late '20s, at times shows its age, not through individual performances but through the lack of new ideas. It's virtually the same as during the Prohibition era, except that the world in general and Negro entertainment in particular have come a long way since Clarence Robinson first produced Cotton Club shows in its vintage era.

The late Murray Weinger, who operated the Miami Beach Cotton Club this past winter and who whipped this show into shape with the benefit of Robinson's dance direction, Mervyn Nelson supervision and writing-staging by Benny Davis, assembled a generally excellent cast for this show with Cab Calloway heading the list. For the New York run Abbey Lincoln replaced Sallie Blair.

Calloway, of course, who is a genuine holdover of the Cotton Club era, is a true sparkplug in this venture. He batons with spirit, sings and romps and shows all-round excellence in every department. Of course, it would have helped the cause of the show greatly had he some writing to match his talents, as for example in the Romeo & Juliet sketch with Norma Miller. However, he's a voice of authority whenever onstage.

Lonnie Sattin was starting to make a noise prior to being recruited for this display. He's a well-built lad with a vigorous voice who pours out a lot of feeling in his songs, even though he overdrips the schmaltz at times. Aside from doing two too many numbers, there was little point in going overdramatic in "I Believe." Otherwise he measures up well.

The acroterps by Audrey June Taylor and the taps by Willie Gaines go over well. The major comedy is by Joe Chisholm who should either concentrate on his baton twirling or get fresh material. The Nite Caps (4) rock 'n' roll several tunes for good effect.

By the time Miss Lincoln got around to her spot, it started to rain and any appraisal of her effectiveness would be unfair since the small crowd was milling about in search of shelter. George Kirby tried his impressions next but was stopped short.

The line routines are almost traditional. Robinson has been around for many years, and what was once a fresh and daring approach to line numbers has long since lost its brightness. The costumes are lively and colorful.

The single set is utilitarian and effective. But it seems that during the early part of the evening, before there was a sign of rain, the Theatre Under the Stars was one of the most impressive settings in New York. With the tall buildings on each side of the stage, and the moon between a couple of buildings, it seemed entertainment enough.

Aside from that, in another time and another era, the Cotton Club Revue would have been as potent in New York as it was in Miami Beach. But the world does move.

Kansas City, July 16.

Starlight Theatre came through moderately with "High Button Shoes" for a week in the Swope Park outdoor theatre closing Sunday (14). The third presentation of the season, it figured about $40,000 for the week, somewhat behind "South Pacific" the previous week. "Shoes" had a cast including Paul Gilbert, Hal LeRoy, Denise Lor and Jill Corey.

Fourth presentation is "Can-Can" with a cast including Hildegarde, John Tyers, Sherry O'Neil, Ferdinand Hilt, George S. Irving, Mort Marshall, and Joseph Macaulay. It opened last night (Mon.) for a week's run.

Los Angeles, July 16.

Mary Martin and Giorgio Tozzi, who set a new house record at the Philharmonic Auditorium last week in the first frame of "South Pacific," have the town to themselves this week. Musical is the only offering in town, following windup of "The Matchmaker," which closed its tour here after a two-week stand at the Huntington Hartford Theatre. Latter house now is dark until July 29, when the national company of "Diary of Anne Frank" opens its tour here.

Estimates for Last Week

Matchmaker, Huntington Hartford (C) (2d wk) ($4.95; 1,024; $30,000) (Ruth Gordon, Loring Smith, Patricia Cutts). Up to good $27,000 for the final week after $21,600 first week. Tour ended here Saturday (13).

South Pacific, Philharmonic Aud (MC) (1st wk) ($5.50-$5.95; 2,670; $80,000) (Mary Martin, Giorgio Tozzi). New opening week house record of $74,700 topping the previous first-week record established by "My Fair Lady." Runs through Aug. 10.

'PAJAMA' NEAT $44,500 DESPITE RAINOUT, PITT.

Pittsburgh, July 16.

"Pajama Game" gave the Civic Light Opera Assn. a gross of $44,500, best of the season thus far, at Pitt Stadium last week. Saturday night (13) take of $11,000 helped overcome the rained-out opening. The cast featured John Raitt, Patricia Marand, Neile Adams and Coley Worth.

Raitt is holding over with this week's "Carousel," with Margot Moser, Terry Saunders, Warren Brown and Glenn Tetley.

Philadelphia, July 16.

George Jessel's summer-circuit musical bill, "Showtime" grossed $12,400 last week in its single session at the Playhouse in the Park, with one near-rave and two pans from the three dailies. Regular patrons didn't respond to the type of entertainment, but Jessel's name was apparently still a magnet.

This week's offering is "Wedding Breakfast," not previously seen in Philly.

'Li'l Darlin' Fair $38,000 Opening Dallas Repeat

Dallas, July 16.

"Texas, Li'l Darlin'," a repeat from last year's State Fair Musicals, ended the first of a two-week run Sunday (14) showing a so-so $38,000 gross. The 1951 Broadway tuner, the top grosser of the local 1956 season, again stars Jack Carson, Jet MacDonald and Danny Scholl. Featured are Howard Smith, William LeMassena, Karen Wolf and Helen Blount. Local heat wave eased last week, with the mercury under 100 degrees for three days.

Fourth production, "Annie Get Your Gun," went into rehearsal yesterday (Mon.) for its July 22-Aug. 4 run. Tuner will star Gisele MacKenzie, supported by William Shriner, David Aiken, Adnia Rice, William LeMassena, Ann Artal and Kelly Brown.

'Lady' $112,200, 'Sgts.' $31,700, S.F.

San Francisco, July 16.

"My Fair Lady," at the Opera House broke all local records in its first week, under Civic Light Opera aegis, and is completely sold out for the remaining five weeks of the run. Standing room is being sold to about 300 persons a night at a $2.50-$2.90 scale.

"No Time for Sergeants" picked up in its second week at the Geary, and first five performances of "The Reluctant Debuante" were upbeat, thanks to good word-of-mouth and favorable reviews.

CLO's "Fanny" opened last night (Mon.) at the Curran. "Diary of Anne Frank" is due Aug. 26 at the Alcazar.

Estimates for Last Week

My Fair Lady, Opera House (1st wk) ($5.50-$5.90; 3,300; $115,000) (Brian Aherne, Anne Rogers). Standee-limit $112,200; CLO subscription cuts house potential slightly.

No Time for Sergeants, Geary (2d wk) ($4.40-$4.95; 1,550; $36,000). Very strong $31,700; previous week, $25,500 for seven performances.

Reluctant Debutante, Alcazar (1st wk) ($3.85; 1,147; $27,341) (Reginald Gardiner, Brenda Forbes). Upbeat $7,000 for five performances; run set through Aug. 24, when comedy will move to the Huntington Hartford, Hollywood.

'CAT' FOLDS AT $10,900; CHI NOW SANS LEGIT

Chicago, July 16.

All downtown legit houses here are now dark for the duration of the summer, as "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" folded last Saturday (13) after an 11-week local run.

Closing notices failed to spark enthusiasm, and the final week of the Marjorie Steele starrer registered almost $10,900, with a $5 top at the 1,335-seat Erlanger Theatre. Previous week's gross was $8,100. Despite three sluggish weeks to close the stand, "Cat" is said to have finished in the black for its Chicago run.

"My Fair Lady, "Fanny," and "Diary of Anne Frank" are all tapped for the fall season so far, but opening dates have not as yet been set.

'Teahouse' Okay $24,000, L'ville Amphitheatre

Louisville, July 16.

Louisville Park Theatrical Assn. presented a Denis Du-For production of "Teahouse of the August Moon" as the second bill at Iroquois Amphitheatre the week ending Sunday (14), grossing a satisfactory $24,000. Larry Parks was starred, with Gene Blakely and John Alexander in supporting roles. No performances were marred by rain.

Third week's bill, opening last night (Mon.), is "Student Prince," starring Marion Marlowe, with Jim Hawthorne, Edwin Steffe, Fred Harper and dancers Marion Tallchief and Andre Eglevsky.

Silver Wedding

London, July 11.

George & Alfred Black presentation of three-act (five scenes) comedy by Michael Clayton Hutton. Stars Evelyn Laye, Frank Lawton, Marie Lohr. Staged by Charles Hickman; decor, Anthony Holland. At Cambridge Theatre, London, July 9, '57; $2.50 top.

Diana Marlowe ..... Miranda Connell
Simon Marlowe ..... Brian Smith
Sir Robert Marlowe ..... Frank Lawton
Lady Marlowe ..... Evelyn Laye
Lady Charlton ..... Marie Lohr
Stella Manners ..... Catherine Boyle
Moving M . en: Denver Thornton, Roy Hawksworth

A frail domestic comedy by the late Michael Clayton Hutton, "Silver Wedding" will have to rely largely on the marquee appeal of Frank Lawton and Evelyn Laye, the husband and wife acting team, paired together for the first time on the West End stage. That, however, is unlikely to sustain it beyond a modest run.

"Wedding" is a very stagey piece, obviously contrived, and the humor is elementary. And, on top of it all, not one of the principal characters emerges as believable.

The action begins the day a couple are celebrating their silver wedding. The wife comes down to breakfast and blandly tells here diplomat-husband that she's leaving him and is going off to Tangiers with an American millionaire. To justify her action, she gives her husband his silver wedding present, a collection of all his illicit love letters of a quarter-century.

The climax is unduly protracted and even the slight twist to the ending is inadequate compensation. The three key characters have a hard time to sustain audience attentions. Lawton and particularly Miss Laye have sparkle. The best performance, however, comes from Marie Lohr as an ex-Gaiety girl whose inconsequental reminiscenses have a charm of their own.

Miranda Connell and Brian Smith play the teenage children with youthful exuberance and Catherine Boyle, a tv personality, makes a mild impression as one of the women in the diplomat's life. Charles Hickman's staging puts the emphasis on the farcical nature of the plot, and Anthony Holland's single interior set is of average appeal. Myro.

Glasgow, July 11.

George & Alfred Black, and H. M. Tennent Ltd., presentation of three-act comedy by Anthony Lesser. Lyrics, David Dearlove; additional lyrics, Joy Whitby; music of the period. Staged by Terence Dudley; setting, Anthony Holland; costumes, Kate Servian. Stars Michael Denison, Sophie Stewart. At King's Theatre, Glasgow, July 8, '57; $1.20 top.

Perkins .... Derek Tansley
Smith ..... Helen Jessop
Henry Mansfield ..... Ellis Irving
Aunt Tabitha ..... Sophie Stewart
Alice ..... Mavis Sage
Mary Ellen ..... Sonia Graham
Sarah ..... Stephanie Voss
Roderick ..... Jeremy Brett
Charles Cuttinghame ..... Michael Denison

Playing a pre-London tryout this comedy, with music of the Victorian period, is a novel vehicle for Sophie Stewart and Michael Denison. Both divert from normal pattern by singing as well as acting, and entire production, well-dressed and easy on the eye, looms as gentle travesty of old-time English manners.

The play can be compared to what United Kingdom audiences know as a "Victorian musical evening," social occasion of last century when families visited with each other, took dinner and later stood around chairs while guests entertained boringly with slow and old-fashioned tunes. The authors obviously never intended it to be taken seriously.

Sophie Stewart flutters sweetly as the match-making Aunt Tabitha, a gentle, smiling soul bent on finding a husband for her eldest niece. Ellis Irving (in private life the actress' husband) is suitably dignified and Victorian as her brother, the father of three pretty daughters.

The household is excited when a handsome attorney, played by Michael Denison, arrives to spend a night. His rival in love, played by Jeremy Brett, is a mysterious stranger who makes a custom of entering secretly by a French window as the eldest daughter sings a plaintive ditty, "Meet Me By Moonlight" at the piano.

Denison makes a pleasing suitor, and Sonia Graham carries off the important role of the eldest daughter with artistry. The two younger girls of the household are portrayed with old-fashioned niceness by Stephanie Voss and Mavis Sage.

Outdated femme garments such as the Victorian crinoline and bustle are cleverly utilized for humor. The Anthony Holland setting has its own gaiety. Terrence Dudley directs with the required leisurely pace. Gord.

in the scores, except for a couple ditties in 'Bells Are Ringing,' and the relaxation in favor of familiar plots, not even treated imaginitively, was pathetic when pitted against the price of their tickets."

Atkinson's Choice

Brooks Atkinson, of the Times, writes, "I thought 'Candide' was the only musical show with both originality and talent." Richard Cooke, of the Wall Street Journal, remarks merely, "The dancing wasn't very good, either." Jack Keating, of Cue magazine, generalizes, "What ailed musicals last seasons was their books. There wasn't a truly successful one all season. The City Center revivals of such former hits as 'Brigadoon,' 'South Pacific' and 'Pajama Game' pointed up that lack."

Tom Dash, of Women's Wear Daily, says, "There was not a single musical last season with a truly great score, and after all, that is the basic ingredient of a musical show. The one that came closest to was 'Candide,' and that was a failure for other reasons."

Henry Hewes, of the Saturday Review, suggests that a weakness of the season's musicals was faltering books and lack of insistence that a show's numbers proceed from the urgency of its dramatic situation rather than from the urgency of jolting good-time Charlies with noise, pep and jokes into thinking they're getting their money's worth. There is an alarming trend in musicals and in period comedies to kid themselves to the point where we no longer believe in them and thereby lose the satisfaction of identification with their characters."

Jack Gaver, of United Press, asserts, "Rodgers-Hammerstein, Lerner-Loewe and Loesser would not have been caught dead with such as 'Happy Hunting' and 'Bells Are Ringing.' None of them would have made the mistake of creating a 'New Girl in Town,' an avowed love story no matter how sordid the surroundings, and casting in the leading female role a dancer when obviously a singing star with a real voice was required. Unless there is plot or character point to a heroine being a dancer, a musical romance calls for a singer. Gwen Verdon is not a singer."

Robert Coleman, of the Mirror, reports, "Frankly, I thought 'Bells Are Ringing,' 'Happy Hunting,' 'Li'l Abner,' 'New Girl in Town,' 'Shinbone Alley' and 'Ziegfeld Follies' enjoyable, if less than top-drawer, thanks to such stars as Judy Holiday, Ethel Merman, Fernando Lamas, Edith Adams, Peter Palmer, Gwen Verdon, Thelma Ritter, Eartha Kitt, Eddie Bracken and the one and only Beatrice Lillie."

a true comer, although his declaiming here could be toned down. Supporting performances are okay.

Harry Horner's staging helps enliven the wordy scenes and John Blankenchip's a French lakeside hotel setting fills the bill. Playbill states that drama was produced in a theatre outside of London a year ago. It's credited to a Dario Bellini, whose shadowy identity has stirred rumors that Mason himself penned the play, but that is denied. Don.

The Mistress of the Inn

New Hope, Pa., July 16.

Michael Ellis presentation of a three-act musical comedy by Don Walker and Ira Wallach, adapted from Goldoni's "La Locandiera." Staged by Ezra Stone; setting, W. Broderick Hackett; lighting, David Hale Hand; musical director, Bruce Prince-Joseph; choreographic assistant, Ralph Linn. At Bucks County Playhouse, July 10, '57.

Cast: Beatrice Arthur, Jack Cassidy, Lester Ferguson, Louise Hoff, Millicent Martin, John Call, Gene Saks.

This new musical, "The Mistress of the Inn," should have been left in 18th Century Italy, where adaptors Don Walker and Ira Wallach found it. The latter looked for, in their own words—"a small musical comedy—small only in terms of cast, ensemble and orchestral requirements." But the vehicle they chose, "La Locandiera," by Carlo Goldoni, must have been dated even when it was written.

In their free adaptation, Walker and Wallach have come up with something akin to the vanishing burlesque. Whatever it is, it isn't substantial enough even for lighthearted summer entertainment.

There's even a bump-and-grind dance, attractively if somewhat self-consciously done by pert Millicent Martin, effective as a jobless actress who always feels unemployed "when I'm not in bed." (Typical line.)

Beatric Arthur is good as the lusty and busty mistress of the inn. She is pursued romantically by three men, a waiter played by Jack Cassidy, a count played by John Call and a marquis played by Gene Saks. But her breed of woman would rather be the pursuer, so she goes after a handsome cavalier played by Lester Ferguson.

Walker wrote 17 songs in all, none of hit potential. Already published, the score includes "Simpatico," ably song by Cassidy and not so ably by Louise Hoff, and "I'm All Right" and "Cavalier's Waltz" sung by Ferguson. Ezra Stone's staging is adequate, in light of what he had to work with. The single set by W. Broderick Hackett, converted into different rooms in the inn by the use of curtains and the audience's imagination, is inventive, if somewhat confusing. Bitt.

Dublin's Gate Theatre Shuttered by Fire Law

Dublin, July 16.

The Gate Theatre here has been closed because of failure to conform to local fire laws. A "fire precautions" notice served on the theatre by the Dublin Corp. was upheld last week by a Dublin District Court.

The notice charged the theatre should be closed because of its dangerous condition. The house will remain shuttered until certain specified alterations have been completed.

Inside Stuff—Legit

David Merrick, producer of the upcoming Broadway musical, "Jamaica," had a spectacular promotion stunt in the works for the show, but it fell through last week. He had the tuner's pressagents, Harvey Sabinson and Lee Solters, approach Pan-American Airways with a proposal to fly the entire company and production staff to Jamaica, B.W.I., for a week of rehearsals at the actual site of the show's locale, taking along photogs and a few newspapermen. A complication was that the musical's star, Lena Horne, has never flown and is averse to doing so. However, that turned out to be merely an academic matter when Pan-American turned down the proposition because of the cost involved. Airline execs reportedly figured that the stunt would benefit the show and the tourist trade of the island of Jamaica, but wouldn't be worth it in terms of potential plane fares.

Especially at off-Broadway shows, where the prospect of being seen rather than the salary involved in the primary come-on for actors, particular care should be taken in announcing last-minute cast changes. At the performance last Thursday night (11) of "Career" at the Actors Playhouse, someone (presumably the stage manager) read off a batch of cast substitutions so rapidly that not even a professional playgoer could make note of the names. It was annoying to the audience as well as unfair to the actors involved.

Frances Reid was inadvertently referred to as Florence Reid in last week's issue in a review of the tryout of "Lease on Love," at the Bucks County Playhouse, New Hope, Pa. Miss Reid and her husband, Philip Bourneuf, who played the male lead in the comedy, owns the rights to the script, adapted from the original Italian of Aldo de Benedetti. As Miss Reid points out, there has been confusion for years over her name, and that of the noted actress Florence Reed, even though their last names are differently spelled.

With "Merchant of Venice," the success of the American Shakespeare Festival Theatre's 1957 season seems assured. Following an "Othello" which has enjoyed mounting patronage after divided initial appraisals, the new entry will be substantially benefitted by the Katharine Hepburn name and Morris Carnovsky's title-role performance.

Most will likely come for Hepburn, but it is Carnovsky they will remember best. For his is a Shylock, in the tradition and reflecting the experience and understanding of a superb actor. His intonation of the character's classic speeches and his mastery of the challenging emotional passages are the kind this theatre-going generation seldom meets.

Miss Hepburn's Portia is often more in the manner of a Connecticut-born Hollywood leading lady than the romantic and talented Shakespeare heroine. But the mistake is mostly a happy one. For her light-hearted treatment of the comedy scenes makes them a definite pleasure, and she wears Motley's colorful clothes very well. It is notably in the courtroom climax that Miss Hepburn is wanting. Her declaiming of the "quality of mercy" speech is a particular disappointment.

Director Jack Landau has on the whole provided a "Merchant" fulfilling the expectations of the Stratford-goer familiar with the play. There are few departures. Visually it is a distinguished show, against Rouben Ter-Arutunian's resourceful lattices, plus helpful bits of metal and other trimmings. And, of course, Jean Rosenthal's virtuoso lighting.

Landau has been especially effective in the episodes dealing with the choice of the caskets by Portia's suitors. Earle Hyman, as the king-size Prince of Morocco, makes the most of his visit, and Stanley Bell is gaily fey as Arragon. The winning selection is ardently and compellingly carried out by Donald Harron's Bassanio.

Richard Waring's Antonio is played straight and somewhat stentorian. John Colicos is a lively Gratiano. Richard Easton further establishes himself as a superior Shakespeare comic in the Lancelot Gobbo assignment, and William Cottrell is a funny fellow as old Gobbo.

Landau has been very successful with the ladies of the cast: Lois Nettleton as the comely Nerissa and Dina Doronne as Shylock's attractive daughter. They and the men, too, wear Motley's garments to good advantage. Virgil Thomson's music is helpful wherever it occurs.

"Othello" and "Merchant" will be joined Aug. 3 by the last of the season's repertory, "Much Ado About Nothing,' with Miss Hepburn and Alfred Drake. Elam.

Thornton Wilder arrived Monday (15) on the Giulio Cesare from Milan, where his "The Matchmaker" was presented. Also arriving on the same ship was Joseph Kesselring, whose new play, "Tig, Lisp and Amble," may be a Broadway entry this season.

City Center O.K.

day Review, "the Phoenix has received as unfettered critical treatment as Broadway. That does not mean that I am not personally appreciative of their intention to bring us better theatre. Despite the great service the Phoenix has rendered, I feel it should be more than just a high-minded theatre management. Eventually a production at the Phoenix should have its own special flavor, as the Circle in the Square now has.

Pop Price and Low Budgets

"As for the City Center, its drama and musical comedy programs serve a popular function devotedly and well. No one expects the organization to originate anything. We tend to disregard imperfections in production elements because a popular-price policy demands a lower budget."

Jack Gaver, of United Press notes, "The Phoenix has had two bad seasons in a row, insofar as its own created productions are concerned. I don't think the critics have given the Phoenix special treatment. As for the City Center it is not competing with Broadway. Its attraction is low price for 'acceptable' entertainment, which can be very bad or good. I would be much more interested in the City Center if it could manage (as it hasn't done very much in recent seasons) to do shows that were not still warm from their Broadway presentations."

"The Phoenix," according to Jack Keating, of Cue mag, "has been getting the full critical treatment, and I guess that's in order. But I feel somewhat impartial to its producers for bringing plays we would be unlikely to see otherwise.

"The City Center, on the other hand, has apparently a policy of lining up available stars and letting them pick their own vehicles. Occasionally, this is something most of us are grateful for the opportunity to see, but often it results in mediocre productions of plays which have recently concluded successful Broadway runs.

"I know the Center's difficulties, but the fact remains that most frequently a City Center production is a fair stock company edition of a wellknown recent success with nothing special to offer."

Ethel Colby, of the Journal of Commerce, writes, "When the City Center and Phoenix invite first-stringers, they should expect the full impact of resultant notices. Mediocrity is just that, and too often it is far less from these two benevolent houses.

"Must the bulk of their respective tries be revivals? Where is the subsidized showmanship, the needed showcase for hopeful authors on whom today's Broadway managements don't dare gamble?"

Chi Strawhats

already exhausted their outlying runs.

Five of the remaining properties to play here this term are comedies that failed to pay off on Broadway, two are comedy dramas (one hit, one miss), seven are straight dramas that failed, two are antique comedies, four are brand new, and two are George Bernard Shaw opuses. "Bus Stop," playing at two summer theatres, is cited by strawhat operators as one that could have been a moneymaker had it been made available to them last season. This year the serious comedy has to compete with its own film version. The singular consolation of the present summer is that 13 of the properties have never played Chicago legit stages.

Of the five strawhats operating here now, only one is in the category of a going business, having weathered the vicissitudes of nine previous seasons. That's Herb Rogers' Tenthouse Theatre in Highland Park, using a stalwart resident company. The others, all having undergone changes in management since 1954, are really still prospecting. They are attempting to overcome the dearth of choice plays by using marquee names, Broadway tryouts, and the casts of Broadway shows that have recently folded, a case in point being "Orpheus Descending," at Drury Lane.

Besides the tenthouse, Rogers this year is operating the seven-years-old Music Theatre, whose major problem is not so much the paucity of good vehicles as the need to keep down the nut. Rogers estimates that 90% of the 19 musimal tents operating last year failed to make money. The nut on his own theatre he estimates at about $170,000 for the 12-week season, meaning it must gross slightly over $14,000 a week to break even.

That is comparable to the nut of most non-musical touring legits without stars, yet the strawhat doesn't have the prestige, the convenient site, the first-run properties, or the access to convention trade. And, plainly, the caprices of weather can have a more disastrous effect on the suburban tents than on the downtown houses.

Nearly all the strawhats here are charging a $3.90 top on Saturdays, fearful of raising it lest they outprice themselves. Rogers, who at 34 is the dean of Chicago strawhat producers, points out that summer theatre operating costs have paralleled the pattern of big-time legit by increasing some 30% in the past five years while ticket prices have been raised less than 20%.

Quality Slump

ters was to be found off-Broadway."

Jack Gaver, of the United Press, asserts that VARIETY's question had not been specific, and comments "The season was not as interesting as the previous season, which was more interesting than the several preceding it. Let's say we're back at the pre-1955-'56 level." Mark Barron, of the Associated Press, declares, "The quality of shows, with a few exceptions, would not survive a season when people could not afford costly entertainment."

Henry Hewes, of the Saturday Review, cites "Journey" as the best American play in many seasons and "Toreadors" as a notable foreign work. Although there were no distinguished musical comedies, he says, the imported "Cranks" was a "landmark in the field of reviews." He also mentions the performance of Siobhan McKenna in "Saint Joan," the play "Separate Tables" and the visiting Jean-Louis Barrault and Old Vic companies, commenting, it makes you "begin to wonder what Broadway is moaning about."

Tom Dash, of Women's Wear Daily, calls the season "average," remarking that while the living American playwrights offered nothing to compare with the previous seasons' "Diary of Anne Frank" or "Inherit the Wind," there were compensations in Eugene O'Neill's "Journey" and "Misbegotten," plus Shaw revivals, the Old Vic and such plays as "Tables," "Toreadors," "Potting Shed," "Visit to a Small Planet," "Orpheus Descending" and the musical "Candide."

The critics generally agree that dead playwrights overshadowed living ones during the season. Atkinson notes, "O'Neill wrote the best play," and Gaver growls, "I can remember plays by Shaw, O'Neill and Shakespeare, but I'd have to do research to remember the plays of anyone else." Without the above three authors, Dash, suggests, "Broadway would have lost a good deal of its ferment."

Kerr believes that "the foreign playwrights overshadowed the American ones. Experiment in style and content seems to be coming from abroad at the moment." Coleman writes that Shaw and O'Neill gave up our lustiest and most intelligent laughs, and supplied the emotional dynamite. The new boys were in there swinging, but striking out more often than connecting."

Hewes echoes Kerr's point about the dominance of foreign over American authors, while Mrs. Colby remarks, "The dead playwrights had more life in them than the living."

Ft. Wayne Musicals Go Indoors When It Rains

Ft. Wayne, July 16.

Festival Music Theatre, which has previously presented its shows in the Franke Park Outdoor Theatre here, can now move indoors at the Palace Theatre when the weather is bad. Arrangement for the shift was made recently when rain prevented showings of "King and I" in the alfresco spot.

After one performance at Ball State Teachers College, Muncie, a deal was made for the operation to use the Palace, in downtown Ft. Wayne.

Dublin Abbey's Season Features 3 Premieres

Dublin, July 16.

B.O. Prices

the buyer has no limit on his purse the theatre-plus-dinner evening must be a seldom-enjoyed festive outing, not part of general amusement."

Mark Barron, of the Associated Press, concedes that ticket scales are out of line with general commodity prices, but warns, "Theatrical producers should take heed of the coming generation. School and college kids cannot afford present boxoffice rates, and some arrangement should be made for them to buy tickets for about $2 or $3."

A parallel suggestion is offered by Tom Dash, of Women's Wear Daily. "Why can't theatres reserve blocks of rear orchestra or balcony seats at nominal prices, especially for students?" he asks. "The smash hits take care of themselves, but a more equitable adjustment of prices would help shows that have received fair notices but haven't achieved standing-room-only status."

Henry Hewes, of the Saturday Review, comments, "Theatre economics in this country are out of line compared to Europe. We can learn from them by establishing a non-political, Government subsidy for non-profit theatres, by annual employment, pensions, efficient equipment in modern theatres and by extra uses of the theatre, theatre lounge and lobby. Almost every economic reform in the theatre is blocked because the producer is concerned only with the success of his current show."

Jack Gaver, of United Press, declares, "Of course ticket prices are too high. The average Joe would like to go to the theatre, but it's beyond his reach except on a rare anniversary or visiting-relative occasion. Whether the boxoffice scale is out of line with the general cost-of-living rise is not the point at all. The theatre is the first thing anyone can do without. People don't rationalize whether higher prices are justified or not. They just know that they don't have to go to the theatre."

Maureen O'Hara Vs. 'Confidential'

Damages of $1,000,000 were asked by Maureen O'Hara in a suit filed in L.A. Superior Court against Confidential Magazine as result of an article entitled "The Hottest Show in Town" in the March issue of the magazine. Complaint said she and her family were subjected to ridicule as a result of the article. Miss O'Hara appeared before the Grand Jury which investigated scandal magazines here a few months ago and at the time swore under oath that the story was false.

Named defendants along with the magazine were publisher Robert Harrison, Fred and Marjorie Meade, who operate Confidential's west coast bureau, and 3,000 Does identified only as newsdealers.

Book on 'Park Row'

What Fleet Street is to London newspaperdom, Park Row at the turn of the century was to New York—a concentrated strip near the City Hall and hard by the Brooklyn Bridge. It's citadel was Joseph Pulitzer's N.Y. World, morning and evening, and in the same environs were the original N.Y. Herald, the Sun, et al.

Allen Churchill has researched the pioneering newspaper tycoons (Hearst, Bennett), explored the beginnings of David Graham Phillips, Richard Harding Davis, Irvin S. Cobb, James Gibbons Huneker, Charles Chapin, the World's brilliant city editor who went to Sing Sing for the cold-blooded murder of his wife, and has called it "Park Row." Rinehart is the publisher next January.

Excellent Yearbook

The 1957 "American Peoples Encyclopedia Yearbook" (Spencer Press; Chicago), covering the events for 1956, continues to be one of the most readable reference books. The pattern laid down by Dr. Franklin J. Meine, now the editor emeritus, and skillfully maintained by exec editor Carroll Chouinard and yearbook editor A. J. Goldsmith, makes not only for a highly appealing Library item but, as produced and presented, it's an entertaining volume. There's no law which says that reference books need be dull.

The alphabetized review of the year repises, for alltime reference, the world's events, from the sociological to the atomic; from the seven lively arts and their personalities to the pundits and politicos of the hemisphere. What happened that was worthwhile in '56 is between hard covers of this impressive nearly 1,200-page volume.

Fortifying the carefully indexed cavalcade of world events is the forepart Year In Review, with topline lyliners covering their respective fields with beaucoup savvy and authority. Crammed into this section is virtually the nucleus of many an authoritative volume on sundry individualized and specialized fields. Abel.

Due in November via McGraw-Hill, New Yorker writer Croswell Bowen and Shane O'Neill, sole surviving son of playwright Eugene O'Neill, have authored "Curse of the Misbegotten," which is subtitled "Tale of the House of O'Neill." Book is said to put accent on the psychological and psychiatric evidence of the curse that has pursued one of America's most distinguished playwrights. The other son of the playwright, named for the playwright, was a brilliant Yale Professor of Greek when he committed suicide. The only daughter Oona is Mrs. Charles Chaplin.

Sheba, will recount the "greatest love story ever told." Male lead hasn't yet been cast. Film will be in color.

Despite the tremendous budget being allocated, the film probably won't run over two hours or a few minutes more, producer asserted. While film will necessarily carry great spectacle, story itself will be accented to lend importance to the subject rather than dwelling on a showy series of expensive mountings to account for its great cost.

For a picture to make big money today it must be treated importantly, Hornblow thinks, and this requires big coin. The importance of the Solomon and Sheba subject is worthy of the huge budget being set up, which should pay off correspondingly, producer opined.

13 HANDICAP

ON JUNE 21st MAX BYGRAVES OPENED AT THE LONDON PALLADIUM IN "WE'RE HAVING A BALL"... THIS IS HIS 13th SHOW THERE IN SEVEN YEARS ... HAS STARRED AT THIS ACE VARIETY HOUSE MORE TIMES THAN ANY PERFORMER IN THE WORLD. BECAUSE OF THE ENORMOUS ADVANCE BOX OFFICE HE WILL BE THERE FOR THE NEXT SIX MONTHS AT LEAST... AFTER HIS FIFTY MINUTE SOLO SPOT THE PRESS SHOWERED MORE PRAISES ON THIS YOUNG TALENTED ARTIST.

WEEKLY SPORTING REVIEW

"Max Bygraves holds the stage solo for the best part of an hour. A most endearing performance, and, by this act, Max hoists himself into the Chevalier, Borge and Danny Kaye class as an artist capable of holding any size audience entranced for a whole evening."

The TIMES

"In 'We're Having a Ball', Mr. Val Parnell and Mr. Bernard Delfont have set out to provide something gay. Their success in doing so is thanks chiefly to Mr. Max Bygraves."

DAILY MIRROR

"Max Bygraves is the Star of the Ball! — and he deserves to be . . ."

NEWS OF THE WORLD

"Max Bygraves sets the tone of good clean fun . . . This is a show everyone in town ought to see and probably will."

SUNDAY DISPATCH

"A lavish show built around Max Bygraves. He is given every opportunity to display his versatility—from quiet charm to more lively performance of music and humor . . ."

DAILY MAIL

"Mr. Bygraves's relaxed buttonholing style amounts almost to a rest cure, his ingratiating blend of Cockney gags and American singing is as smooth as ever."

SUNDAY TIMES

"Max Bygraves in 'We're Having a Ball' (Palladium) is a most engaging comedian. Not for him the cult of violence and aggression. His jokes are simple and gentle, his manner unassuming, and even in his rare moments of satire as when he refers to Shakespeare as 'Briton's top scriptwriter now under contract to Sir Laurence Olivier, the famous cigarette smoker,' his kindliness of feeling is unmistakable. Around him swirls one of the most spectacular musicals in London, a riot of sometimes clashing colours. A fiesta of girls, a phantasmagoria of hectic scenery. I enjoyed it."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN

"Max Bygraves is sure to captivate many people with his new show at the Palladium. For more than half of the second act he jokes, sings and makes fun of himself in a style which appears to be entirely natural and unrehearsed . . . That he should have made it with a repertoire that is entirely devoid of smut is in some ways the most astonishing thing of all."

RECORD MIRROR

"'LET BYGRAVES BE BYGRAVES' reads the announcement in the programme . . . we let Bygraves be Bygraves, and for the next 40 minutes or so the Max cracks—roll out breezily, merrily, spiced with all the hearty humour of this Bermondsey-born top-liner. Winding up this merry 40 minutes, Max tenders his thanks by singing, 'It's Been a Pleasure Meeting You'—and, you can well and truly take it from me, everybody at that first night agreed unanimously that it was also a pleasure meeting HIM. . ."

DAILY SKETCH

"A colourful happy show. A little more of the soft pedal, rather more of the old Bygraves' quiet charm . . ."

DAILY WORKER

"As the final curtain falls on this bright and breezy show one could quite cheerfully paraphrase the old song, 'Let Bygraves by Bygraves and start all over again.'"

REYNOLDS NEWS

"Max Bygraves cheery, friendly humour all add up to first rate entertainment the whole family can enjoy."

American Amusements At a Glance

Washington, July 23.

United States citizens last year invested $13,844,000,000 for recreation and amusement, per Government data. Breakdowns of some of the figures are as follows:

Radio, television sets, musical instruments—$2,442,000,000
Repair & service of radio-tv sets—$756,000,000
Motion picture admissions—$1,298,000,000
Legit, operas, concerts, etc.—$252,000,000
Spectator sports—$241,000,000
Horse & dogtrack bets—$414,000,000
Magazines, newspapers, sheet music—$1,824,000,000
Books and maps—$592,000,000

Computed in terms of "contribution" (wages and investments) to the national income (U.S. Dept. of Commerce figures) these are related figures:

Motion picture industry contributed $998,000,000; radio and television broadcasting added $669,000,000; and the remaining $1,158,000,000 was contributed by all forms of amusement, recreation and entertainment.

Total wages, salaries and other income for persons in motion pictures in 1956 was $797,000,000. For broadcasting, the figure was $518,000,000. It was $885,000,000 for other recreation and amusements.

Motion pictures employed the equivalent of 200,000 full time workers last year. The figure was 77,000 in broadcasting and 242,000 for other types of amusement and recreation.

Broadcasting led the field in average earnings, for the full-time worker. That industry paid out $6,584. For pictures the average was $3,830, a little below the national average. This would include earnings of ushers, etc., at small theatres.

Hollywood On a Two-Hour Diet, Trims Sails On Marathon Epics

Hollywood, July 23.

Trend toward lengthy pictures appears to have runs its course and the major studios and independents alike are slowly reverting to the more normal length footage on features. Bulk of productions now ready for release or slated for production in the near future are in under-two-hour class.

Last year there were four marathon productions: Paramount's "War and Peace" (208 minutes), Paramount's "The Ten Commandments" (221 minutes), Warner's "Giant" (195 minutes) and Michael Todd's "Around the World in 80 Days" (175 minutes).

This year, there are only two—Metro's "Raintree County" (185 minutes) and David O. Selznick's 20th-Fox production of "A Farewell to Arms," which it's been disclosed, will have a minimum three-hour running time.

And, significantly, no studio currently has plans for any film to go much beyond the two-hour limit. A possible exception to this might be "Andersonville," which was envisioned as a four-hour picture by Jerry Wald when he was at Columbia. However, the project is now in the hands of George Sidney who has given no indication that he plans to make it as a feature of excessive length.

Of pix completed or currently shooting, only 13 look likely to go over two hours: Columbia's "Pal Joey," Metro's "Les Girls" and "The Brothers Karamazov," Paramount's "Desire Under the Elms," RKO's "Jet Pilot," 20th-Fox's "Peyton Place" and "The Sun Also Rises," United Artists' "Legend of

Light Up a UN

Here's the way they cast the "typical American boy and girl" for a tv film commercial:

For an upcoming Salem cigaret ad, MPO Productions inked Cindy Lee, a Lithuanian model here two years, and Mischa Ferman, an actor from Yugoslavia here six months.

Bamboo Curtain Parting for U.S. Pix Via Dulles?

Current discussions between the press associations and the State Dept. re the entry of American correspondents into Red China has some in the film industry wondering whether Hollywood shouldn't show its pictures in that part of the world.

Red China today is the only area where a strict ban on the sale of films is maintained by the member companies of the Motion Picture Export Assn. Such a ban existed until last year also vis-a-vis the Iron Curtain countries, but was lifted with the blessings of the State Dept.

Those in touch with the Far East say that, if American newspapermen go into Red China, it won't be very long before the Chinese will

LACKS FRESH EXEC TALENT

The aging founding fathers of the American film industry were young men when they staked it out and began mining the gold. But the film industry of today is notable for the infrequency of young men in high executive posts. There hasn't been an Irving Thalberg since—well, since Irving Thalberg. Other yarns published in this issue of VARIETY present the recurring, always-new but never-new problem of the recruitment of star potential on which the boxoffice may thrive. Not unrelated to the clogged machinery of star-making is the equally tortured situation impeding the developing of new executive talent for the U.S. film companies.

Ever since Metro's dilemma in filling the presidency dramatized the problem of "chiefs," the industry has been discussing, off and on, the meaning of dynamic leadership. Metro is providing still further proof of the scarcity of the right sort of executives in its prolonged, thus far unsuccessful quest of an executive veep to backstop President Joe Vogel.

It's being said by observers that while any president of a major film company can easily reel

Too Many DJ's, Payola Rises

Chicago, July 23.

A corporate cost of living item has been offered by a "keep-my-name-out-of-this" diskery exec to illustrate the plight of the industry:

"This summer is as bad as the stinker of two years ago, but meanwhile my payola has gone up to 10 times what it was then. Cities which never had a big d.j. now have two or three. Chicago, which then had one or two, now has a dozen, and it's the same over the rest of the country."

PACKAGE SHOW TOURS FOR DATELESS DAMES

Atlantic City, July 23.

Unescorted women, who might normally be reluctant to go to a suburban strawhat and then a midtown nitery, are being especially sought as patrons for a new entertainment tour package being offered by the Gray Line Bus Co. Price for the full evening is $6.75 per person, including tips.

The package includes the regular evening performace ("Bus Stop" is current) at the Gateway Playhouse, in suburban Somer's Point, then the Timmie Rogers show at the Club Harlem here in town.

Belafonte in Hollywood Demand; Has Own Ideas on Racial Heroes

Billy Blesses BMI

The Rev. Billy Graham has now thrown his weight behind behind Broadcast Music Inc., saying that "I believe that BMI deserves not only my personal thanks, but the commendation of devout people everywhere for providing a haven for composers and authors of religious music for all faiths."

Graham lauded BMI upon accepting a specially bound copy of the "BMI Hymnal" from BMI prexy Carl Haverlin at Madison Square Garden last week.

Graham Crusade Upbeats Disking Of Religiosongs

Billy Graham's successful crusade in New York, judging from attendance figures at Madison Square Garden and the Yankee Stadium, has cued an upswing in religioso diskings at RCA Victor.

Instead of sporadic religioso releases as in the past, the diskery is now regularly scheduling from two to three such items every month. Steve Sholes, head of Victor's country & western and specialty department, is supervising the production of these platters.

Among the artists to be spotlighted are several from Graham's team, including Beverly Shea and the 1,500-voice Crusade choir. Victor is releasing a Shea disk tape during a recent Garden meeting with the choir.

Lotsa TV Satchmoola In Armstrong Guesters

Louis Armstrong is losing no time in grabbing off some of the plum television guest shot deals for next fall. Satchmo last week was set for guest appearances on the Frank Sinatra, Perry Como and "Big Record" (Patti Page) shows, while on the spec side, he's set for the Bing Crosby-Frank Sinatra Gonzaga U. Oct. 13 entry on CBS for Edsel and the duPont "Crescendo" Sept. 29 out of the Paul Gregory production stable.

He'll squeeze in most of the shots prior to his departure on his first South American tour Oct. 15, with other appearances following his return. Beyond the Singleton deals, he's set with a 10-appearances-per year deal with Ed Sullivan, last appearance of which was on July 7. Armstrong's pulling down $10,000 minimum on his appearances, with Joe Glaser's Associated Booking Corp. agenting the deals.

The combination of Harry Belafonte's personal boxoffice draw in niteries and concert, and the pendulum impact given "the miscegenation cycle," adds up as boxoffice for Darryl F. Zanuck's "Island In The Sun" (20th). Resultantly Samuel Goldwyn wants Belafonte for his filmization of "Porgy and Bess"; another indie packager is dangling the old Eugene O'Neill play, "Emperor Jones," and there are two "miscegenation" scripts awaiting him.

While Hollywood looks upon the interracial romance themes in the same opportunistic boxoffice cycle as perhaps the Elvis Presley-rock 'n' rollers or the wave of dope addiction pix, Belafonte has reacted differently.

He points to Alexandre Dumas and Alexander Pushkin, the French and Russian writers who reputedly had colored blood in them, as biopix themes more to his liking. Always a literate and vocal personality, Belafonte's race consciousness and his own personable (not to mention boxoffice impact) outlook dictates sharp judgment in not bearing down on any one single plot theme.

Meantime Belafonte, who holds the Waldorf-Astoria record with Maurice Chevalier and Benny Goodman, reopens that Gotham hostelry's fall season on Sept. 19, for a five-week stint.

Bob Hope Telefilms First NBC-Timex Spec Before Troops in Casablanca

Casablanca, July 23.

Bob Hope, in Paris completing his "Paris Holiday" pic, flew to Casablanca over the weekend (July 19-21) to tv-film his first show for his new sponsors, Timex, before U.S. troops stationed at Nouasseur Air-Material Base.

Show, which goes on air Oct. 6, will be first of the six Hope shows for Timex between October, 1957 and April 1958, and was scripted by Mort Lockman and Bill Larkin. Guest stars included Gary Crosby, Bing's eldest son now serving with U.S. forces in Germany, Marie (The Body) McDonald, Ann Miller, Eddie Fisher and Caroline Brooks. Les Brown orchestra, doing a USO tour, flew in from Germany to accompany.

Hope, veteran of countless USO appearances, remains top favorite with troops. The Nouasseur Base's outdoor theatre underwent overnight revision to accommodate 3,000 soldiers and their families who attended two performances of show under a broiling African sun.

Hope, after characteristic, laugh-getting monolog in which he kidded army life, tropic heat and self, introduced Gary Crosby who sang with him a new edition of the theme song of "Road to Morocco," and then as solo gave forth with

It's Renewal Time on Mike Wallace Show, But Philip Morris Ain't Sayin'

This week is renewal time for "Mike Wallace Interviews" on ABC-TV. Sponsor Philip Morris, by its own word, is committed to give its answer by the end of this week, when the controversial Sunday night half-hour has its 14th telecast.

Original contract is up after 20 weeks, but there is a stipulation permitting the cigaret bankroller to pick up Wallace for another six weeks if he gives word now. A PM spokesman said a decision has not been made either way up to the moment, but he cautioned that this should not be taken as a sign of his company's discontent or disinterest in the interview program. "We have discussions prior to any renewals."

Nevertheless, a string of events surrounding the 10 to 10:30 p.m. live interview has some tradesters skeptical of the chances for a PM renewal. Most recently some editions of the Wallace interview were barred from showing in Louisville by WAVE-TV, which takes PM and Wallace on a delayed basis. Kentucky station, in the same city where one of PM's more

How Fred Allen Beat The Tax Rap in Mass.; He 'Seceded' From State

Boston, July 23.

The late Fred Allen, who dramatically ended all association with Massachusetts in 1949, would have had his estate nicked for at least $100,000, state inheritance tax officials admitted here last week.

Allen, a Dorchester native and a legal resident of the Bay State until 1947, left an estate of $1,341,421 on which the State of Illinois collected inheritance taxes of $635. Federal taxes on Allen's estate were set at $141,411.

In 1949, he said to the late Tax Commr. Henry F. Long: "I don't mind being born in Massachusetts with nothing, but I don't want to die that way. I don't want New

TOMMY SANDS' FILM DEBUT AT $10,000 FEE

Los Angeles, July 23.

Tommy Sands, teen-age singing star who catapulted to national attention via a Kraft TV Theatre showcasing when Elvis Presley bowed out, will make his film debut for 20th-Fox at a $10,000 fee. Studio's multiple picture contract with the 19-year-old singer was approved by Superior Judge Edward R. Brand.

Contract calls for step-ups in his picture salary which could eventually reach $100,000 per film.

First film probably will be the feature version of "Singin' Idol." which he did on television, which 20th has assigned to Henry Ephron to produce.

'Little' Lindy's Landmark On B'way and 50th, Dies In New York at Age 36

One of Broadway's most colorful landmarks, the original Lindy's Restaurant at 50th St. and Broadway, is closing its doors on Sunday (28). Founded by Leo Lindy with three partners in 1921, the restaurant in recent years has been a losing proposition, hit by the competition from the newer Lindy's at 52d St. and from its uneconomical two-floor operation.

Originally a bar and delicatessen, the original Lindy's, or the "old" or "little" Lindy's as it was also known, grew to be one of the most important show biz hangouts on the Main Stem. Al Jolson, Eddie Cantor and other stars ate there regularly, while in New York, as did the top glm execs of the 1920s.

The old Lindy's also was the headquarters for the late Damon Runyon, whose slant on Broadway and its characters was largely received from his vantage point of a Lindy's table. Walter Winchell also frequented the old Lindy's before the newer and larger store was opened around 25 years ago. Some of the veteran waiters, with the place since it was opened, trace the decline of the original Lindy's

EDITH PIAF'S 3-YEAR WALDORF-ASTORIA PACT

Edith Piaf becomes a Waldorf-Astoria (N.Y.) staple for three years starting with the 1958-59 season at a reported $5,000 guarantee and a split of 50-50 above $8,500 in couverts. She prefers to skip New York this season. She is currently at the Mocambo, Hollywood.

French song delineator had to await the Club Versailles' decision not to renew because of her past associations with Nick Proumis and Arnold Rossfield, but with the managements decision to keep the former East 50th St. landmark closed, she became free to sign with the flagship Hilton hotel.

Ed Sullivan's Checkup For Kidney Ailment

Ed Sullivan cut short his European vacation this week and returned to New York yesterday morning (Tues.) for medical consultation on a kidney ailment. He probably won't be hospitalized, but at the same time won't do his Sunday CBS-TV show for two weeks.

Sullivan had arranged for John Daly to take over the next two shows while he was in Europe, and doesn't want to disrupt that arrangement even though he's in town. He'll return to the show as per schedule on Aug. 11.

Georgie 'Burns'

George N. Burns (& Allen), vexed with the recent diatribes about comedians on television, told a Look magazine interviewer:

"I agree. Let's get rid of Burns & Allen, Abbott & Costello, Sophie Tucker, Jack Benny, Cantor, Jessel, Durante—all the old comedians, but let's also start getting rid of old newspapermen and others writing the same old chorus.

"This is ridiculous. Getting rid of unfunny professional funnymen is something else again—it's like getting rid of a juvenile who doesn't know when he's become a character actor and won't give up—but this blanket hooey they've been writing about 'old comedians' is just too silly to be taken seriously."

Festival Awards Can Damn Films As Hi-Brow 'Art'

Some of the U.S. film companies at this point aren't at all eager to have their product selected for showing at European film festivals. Argument is that any film being shown at a European fest—particularly if it wins—gets tagged as an "art" entry. It's a label which could conceivably hurt it in the States.

No such stigma attaches for a film's Continental release, where a fest winner definitely has added prestige, and b.o., value.

The attitude is in marked contrast to the opinions expressed by executives of the Motion Picture Export Assn. attending the Cannes festival earlier this year. These execs felt very strongly that, in its future selection of films for such competitions, the American industry must make a more determined effort to pick films with an "arty" touch so as to be more in tune with the general tenor of the festivals.

Brando's Breeches Ahoy In Hot Paris Incident

Editor, VARIETY:

Paris, July 18.

The scene—the cocktail bar of the Hotel Prince de Galles. The time—cocktail hour. The date—July 17. The people—well, there were Marlon Brando, Dean Martin, Patti Page & Charlie O'Curran, Gary Crosby, Lillian Montechichi, et al. It was a gathering of Hollywoodians who wanted to "feel at home away from home."

The cocktails were being cocktailed very well. It was a bright and sunshiney Parisian afternoon, and everyone was happy to see everyone else.

Brando alone was intent on drinking tea—and ordered same. In the midst of pouring the tres chaud tea he spilled practically the

Schulbergs and Darrid's Matador Musical for B'way

Stuart and Budd Shulberg are joining forces with William Darrid to present a Broadway musical adapted from Budd Shulberg's original bull fight tv drama, "Paso Doble," a highlight of the 1954 Omnibus season, which starred Kim Stanley and first brought John Casavetas to national attention. Retitled "The Suit of Lights"—traje de luces, the Spanish name for the matador's shimmering costume—the show will be readied for a fall 1958 opening.

Talks are already underway with aficionados Peggy Lee and Dewey Martin for leading roles. Darrid and the Schulbergs are also approaching Jose Greco and Cantinflas for prominent parts in "Suit of Lights," which is laid in the bull rings and torero bars of Mexico City.

Cantinflas Got In by Chance—Myrna Loy at $1-a-Yr. 'Diplomat'—Cary Grant Out 'Tho Charming'

By HANK WERBA

Madrid, July 23.

Madrid's non plus ultra Hotel Ritz has always maintained a policy that seals the showcase off to showbiz celebrities, according to distaff Ritz manager Carmen Guerendian.

Hotel is considered here as a residence for eminence, a home for ambassadors away from home, but a plague to show-world greats who want to escape the public eye when visiting or vacationing.

"The hotel," she said, "has a long-standing, old-world tradition of offering its guests dignified peace and relaxation." Personally fond of limelighters, she feels they live in a world of noise, confusion, flashbulbs and eccentric personal behavior that imperil the monastic calm of the hotel's hallowed halls.

Ritz is full with 220 guest registrations, including 30-40 residents. Sole problem is finding accommodations for visiting prominents

WW's 50-50 Split With Desilu on Residuals, Plus $7,500 Weekly

Walter Winchell is spending his six-week vacation in Hollywood working on his new ABC-TV film series in partnership with Desilu. He splits the residuals 50-50 and gets $7,500 a week for his appearances and the story content of "The Walter Winchell Story." The basic 26 dramalets already have been upped to 39. It's a Thursday night slotting over ABC-TV. Bert Granet is the producer.

Winchell and his wife, June, are on the Coast with their daughter Walda (Mrs. Hyatt Von Dehn) who will make them grandparents in October. The Winchell series is based on the career and exploits of the columnist who will make introductory appearances in each besides doing the narration sound track. He observes:

"For the first time I'll have something running for me. It's the only branch of show business, to quote Danny Thomas, which has something running for a performer even when he's asleep, that is if he has a stake in the residuals as I have with Desilu."

TWA Ballyhooey Stunt Strictly for the Birds

By DON BYRNE

Just because things are for the birds it doesn't mean that they have to go wrong. For instance, take last Tuesday at Idlewild.

It seems that TWA had rigged a promotion with the Chicago Daily News to fly three pigeons from Chicago to New York via TWA and then release the birds at Idlewild and let them fly back to Chicago.

If they made it, it would be a long distance record for racing birds. It would also coincide with the opening of TWA's new nonstop "Ambassador" service from Chicago to New York.

Bright and early Tuesday morning three pretty stewardesses, three pigeons, cameramen and assorted pub-rel types were at the airport for the launching. As the

'Spanky' McFarland Can't Understand Why, at 28, He's 'Crumbling Old Ruin'

Tulsa, July 23.

"Spanky" McFarland, a crumbling old ruin at the age of 28, would like to meet the manufacturer of those 10-foot poles which casting directors won't touch him with.

"Somebody is making a fortune on them," he laughed. "But I'm not, I can tell you."

George Robert Phillips McFarland, who still is recognizable as the chubby, treble-voiced starlet of "Our Gang" of the '30s, is inclined to get a bit plaintive when he talks about his inability to arouse interest in the fact that he is an actor who would like to act.

"They couldn't care less," he said. "You'd think, with a name like mine, I'd be a natural for a network kiddie show emcee. But uh-uh."

KNXT in Hollywood was interested in his emceeing the current "Little Rascals" film programs, he said, but balked at his agent's asking price.

"I'd have worked for a lot less, I can tell you, but they decided to use a staff man instead."

Now on a personal appearance tour of "Little Rascal" television cities—and making onenighters at movie houses with a flatrate film package—McFarland works out of Wichita, Kan., where he moved three months ago "because I could see I wasn't going to get anywhere out on the Coast."

Married two years ago, he's now the daddy of one-year-old Verne Emmett McFarland.

VOGEL TURNS ON 'TORMENTORS'

END AS A MAN

Something had to be done about the deadly, for-blood feud on the Loew Board and Joe Vogel has now done it. He might lose but he will in that event go down to defeat with the respect of the film trade and even perhaps of the bankers, despite the reputed ice water in their veins.

Vogel may have been too genteel in accepting the Board of 13 which apparently was, in turn, too genteel to back him up against the boarding-and-raiding tactics of the Tomlinson-Mayer-Meyer crew. But at least Vogel can now argue how far he was willing to go to buy peace. Peace was not to be bought.

The situation, of course, is not simple. One question is whether Louis B. Mayer, at 72, would or could assume the burden of the studio routine despite any compulsions for restoration of his former prestige in Hollywood. A vastly wealthy man of manifold interests, his admirers of yesteryear see him self-whipped by the hurt pride of a giant will.

Those who harbor some sentiment—a word used a lot at theatrical banquets—must regret the bitterness which now literally threatens the once-champion company. Uneasy speculations of what might happen to Loew's if the Canadian industrialist grabs effective control need not here be elaborated.

Meanwhile are there tycoons and captains of industry, and bankers, basing their reasoning on a reading of film events now hopelessly terminated? L. B. Mayer's niche in the film hall of fame is secure. In his time Metro was the home of "all the stars in the universe." But that was then. That was block booking and pre-television. No more than any other producing studio could Metro "wait for television to blow over."

Essential at this time is recognition that, in the costly digestive progress, whoever is the new Loew management must be given fullest rein. One year can never be the answer, nor does the answer lie in "getting rid of all the old team."

To begin with, in the position that the corporation and Vogel both find themselves, the present emasculated powers of management can never attract the right manpower. How could it? When the nervous feeling persists that Vogel himself may be only playing a guest-shot.

Let the new management evidence that Vogel will have the realistic two or three years minimum to do a job, or get out; that he's not going to be a "guest president"; that he doesn't have to fight the battle of 13 different board members' opinions; that, being in the head spot, wrong or right, he'll be afforded fullest opportunities to use his talents and judgment, his best energies and experience. Then and only then may Loew's get back on the beam. It's 'way off beam now.

Internal strife pyschologically and physically must destroy any chief executive officer, no matter his stamina, if so much of his energy must go to fighting raiders and would-be successors to his authority. Assuming he is ousted and a new team brought in, no matter who, Vogel still will have done Loew's Inc., in future, a great service by focusing stockholder (meaning general public) interest on the proposition that no enterprise, especially when it is of the creative, art-form pattern like the film business, can insure the best shareholders' welfare if there is so much squabbling and intrigue within.

Encore From Heyerdahl, Who Brought in 'Kontiki'; Irv Lesser Again Handles

Irving Lesser, independent distributor, has taken on releasing rights to "Galapagos," feature-length documentary made by Thor Heyerdahl. Done in Eastmancolor, it's an account of the explorer's expedition to the Galapagos Islands, 600 miles off the coast of Peru.

Heyerdahl's first film, "Kontiki," also was distributed in the American market by Lesser.

Latter is specializing in offbeat material, his other entries including "Oedipus Rex" and "Pablo Casals." He says he has no delusions about attracting mass audiences but the product does provide "worthwhile profits." Films are being made by "sincere, talented independent artists of moderate means," states Lesser. "They just have to be discovered and then 'showmanized' so that pictures and suitable viewers get together."

W. E. Heller Sues Pathe

Walter E. Heller Co., Chicago factoring outfit, filed suit in New York Federal Court Monday (22) against Pathe Pictures for payments allegedly due on a 1956 note. Film outfit borrowed $365,000 and is in default of $269,750 of this amount, according to Heller.

Also named in the complaint are Ben Frye and Sam A. Costello, who are said to have guaranteed the Pathe note.

AM. B'CASTING-PAR'S 61c ON 6 MOS., 1957

American Broadcasting - Paramount Theatres had an estimated net operating profit of $2,700,000, or 61c a share, for the first six months of 1957. First half of 1956 brought $4,202,000, or 97c per share.

Net for the second quarter amounted to $957,000, or 21c per share, compared with $1,632,000, or 37c per share, for the corresponding period of last year.

Leonard H. Goldenson, president, reported that earnings for both the theatres and broadcasting divisions dropped in the second quarter. He added he looks for an improvement in the theatre business during the third quarter.

'King of Paris' Sold

Hollywood, July 23.

"King of Paris" by Guy Endore has been bought by Ray Stark and Eliot Hyman for approximately $100,000 plus about 3% of the gross on the film. Pair, aligned with Associated Artists Productions, bought property as individuals, not as AAP.

"Paris," which deals with the life of Alexander Dumas, was a Book-of-the-Month selection last October, and several hundred thousand copies have been sold in 14 countries since. It will soon be published by Pocket Books.

Several studios bid for the property.

WANTS TOMLINSON PACK OFF BACK

By HY HOLLINGER

The long potentially-explosive Loew's Inc. situation—marked by repeated efforts to unseat the present management and dissension within the board of directors—erupted loudly Monday (22) when Joseph R. Vogel, harassed and "needled" since he took office last fall, turned to strike down his "tormentors." Vogel's moves literally shook the industry and financial circles.

(1) He issued a call for a special stockholders meeting on Sept. 12 to do unto Joseph Tomlinson and Stanley Meyer what they wished to do unto him—open the chute.

(2) He will ask the stockholders to enlarge the board from 13 to 19 seats "and to fill the new and vacant posts so that an effective working majority of independent directors can be given to management."

Tomlinson, the Canadian industrialist who is the largest single stockholder of Loew's, and young Meyer, who is reported to have launched the Loew's upheaval, are charged by Vogel with working under the guidance of Louis B. Mayer "actively attempting to seize control of this great company and against the interests of the stockholders." According to Vogel, the "attack inspired" by Louis B. Mayer and "led by Tomlinson and Meyer has virtually paralyzed the

United Artists' Stardusted Shares

Shares Sell Strongly Upon Big Board Debut Altho Market Cool to Film Stocks Generally

United Artists became the surprise baby of Wall Street as the company's common stock was admitted to trading on the New York Stock Exchange. Issue opened the first day, Wednesday (17), at $22.37½ and climbed thereafter on heavy trading.

Volume was 6,900 shares on Wednesday, 17,500 Thursday and 29,700 Friday. Closing price at the end of the week was $24.75.

Interest in UA is in contrast with investors' apparent indifferent attitude toward other film business issues. This interest, of course, is linked with UA's still steady incline in grosses and profits. Concurrent with the initial trading a disclosure was made that the company's six-month period ended June 30 brought estimated gross business of $5,500,000 over the first half of 1956, and the total for 1957 expectedly will go over $70,000,000.

First quarter of 1957 brought earnings of 57c. per share on the approximately 1,000,000 shares outstanding, representing an increase of 19% over the first quarter of 1956.

'Turn in Your Ulcers!'

The economy axe continues to fall at Metro. Severed from the company payroll this week were two veteran homeoffice publicists—Herb Crooker and Russ Stewart.

Dismissal of the pair follows the lopping off of 11 staffers of the International department last week. Additional tightening of the company's overall operations is expected to extend to other departments of the company.

Maurice Evans Partners With George Schaefer To Produce for Metro

Maurice Evans and George Schaefer, who have been associated in Broadway production ("Teahouse of the August Moon"), have closed a deal to produce three pictures for Metro.

Agreement, set recently on the Coast, gives the pair a drawing account of $50,000 which can be used to survey properties and initiate projects. The deal, it's reported, may also involve M-G financing of Evans-Schaefer legit projects.

Gable With Lancaster

Hollywood, July 23.

Clark Gable will co-star with Burt Lancaster in Hecht-Hill-Lancaster's next feature for United Artists "Run Silent, Run Deep."

Film version of Commander Edward L. Beach's novel, screenplayed by John Gay, will go before the cameras Sept. 3.

Sir Gerald Hargreaves Sues, Charging Parts Of 'Helen of Troy' Lifted

Los Angeles, July 23.

Wrongful appropriation of material is charged in a $1,000,000 damage suit brought against Warners, Sam Bischoff, Hugh Gray, N. Richard Nash and John Twist by Atalanta Productions, Inc. Firm is the assignee of rights originally held by Sir Gerald Hargreaves.

Action contends Sir Gerald conceived, illustrated and wrote a story entitled "Atalanta" and submitted it to Warners and Bischoff. When the studio subsequently made "Helen of Troy," according to the complaint, "combinations of dramatic ideas and sequences" from Sir Gerald's original were included. In addition to the $1,000,000 as the fair market value of the script, suit asked for an accounting of profits on "Helen."

National Boxoffice Survey

Biz Drops as Heat Grips Nation; '80 Days' No. 1, 'Wonders' 2d, 'Silk' 3d, 'Delinquent' 4th

Drive-ins dipped this week in key cities covered by VARIETY as a heatwave scorched most of the nation. But while ozoners were off, airconditioned conventional theatres in some cities reflected an improvement as sweltering citizens sought to beat the heat.

Tourists and conventions were a b.o. aid, particularly to such marathon longrunners as "Around the World" (UA) and "Seven Wonders of the World" (Cinerama). Fresh product also lent a strong assist to the wicket. However, some keys, notably Philadelphia and Boston, were off sharply as the mercury skyrocketed. Thousands of potential customers in those towns fled to beaches and mountain resorts.

Winner again this sesh is "Around World" by a wide margin over "Seven Wonders" in No. 2 spot. Spurting into third is "Silk Stockings" (M-G), a promising contender last week. "Delicate Delinquent" (Par), with an excellent showing in 12 keys, rose to fourth from last week's ninth position.

Pickup in business finds "10 Commandments" (Par) rising to fifth from seventh last frame. It's followed by a "horror" entry from Warners—"The Curse of Frankenstein." Firm in seventh place is the newcomer "Pride and the Passion" (UA). Stanley Kramer production is copping big money in only four playdates and likely will snare championship laurels as it moves into general release.

Rounding out the Top Nine are "Sweet Smell of Success" and "Beau James" (Par). Close behind is "Prince and the Showgirl" (WB). Latter dropped from second last week due to relatively few playdates. Also on the fringe are "Bambi" (BV), a Disney reissue, and "Man on Fire" (Metro).

Potential future b.o. champs are "Night Passage" (U) and "Affair to Remember" (20th). Former, a James Stewart-Audie Murphy starrer in its first time out, is making a prodigious showing in some seven keys ranging from hefty to gigantic. "Affair" is impressive in a like number of cities.

With "Curse of Frankenstein leading the way, horror pix and science-fictioners are mopping up this stanza. "20,000,000 Miles to Earth" (Col) paired with "The 27th Day" (Col) is loud in Portland. Same distrib's "Giant Claw" and "Night the World Exploded" is similarly loud in Chicago.

"Hatful of Rain" (20th) is great on its initial New York week. "Loving You" (Par) is spotty in six keys. It ranges from very slow in Philly to tall in Detroit and brisk in Omaha.

"Love in Afternoon" (AA), good in Detroit and Denver, is okay in Boston, fair in L.A. and slow in Seattle. "Gun Glory" (Metro) is okay in Toronto and fair in N.Y.

"Dino" (AA), good in Detroit, is big in Toronto. "Rising of the Moon" (WB) is sock in N.Y., but thin in L.A.

'DON'T FENCE US OUT' OF TV COIN—PRODUCER

Hollywood, July 23.

A campaign has been launched by screen producers, only creative group in motion pictures still out in the cold on television residuals, to grab a ladling of the video gravy on those post-1948 pix sold to tv. Claim is an estimated 3,500 post-1948 films still to be funneled to tv has been staked by screenwriters, directors, actors — and musicians — and they have gotten a piece of the tv pie on some post-'48 pix already sold.

But until now the producer remained the sole film creator not on the gravy train.

Asked how SPG would enforce any demands prexy Sam Engel replied: "I don't know exactly how to go about it. Our lawyers are studying that phase of it."

DROP PATTEN VS. U

Another 'Touted' Law Suit Just Forgotten

Hollywood, July 23.

Luana Patten dropped her three month old lawsuit against Universal, challenging the validity of option pickups, and has returned to the studio to discuss future films. Events leading up to the litigation and her suspension by the studio were described as "misunderstandings" which were cleared up at the conference table.

Law suit had been touted as a possible test of the industry practice of signing talent to contracts calling for option pickups.

THEY'RE A PUBLICITY 'GIFT' BUT FILM MEN PUZZLED BY SOUNDTRACK MUSIC ALBUMS

By FRED HIFT

The American motion picture industry is enjoying important and repeated free promotion of its current film releases via the soundtrack music albums issued by the leading disk companies. This considerable publicity gift, however, puzzles film showmen not a little. Soundtrack music is never intended for listening in the ordinary sense and is often very flat indeed when heard alone divorced from story and scene.

In short, many producers and distributors of films openly puzzle why there is a market for soundtrack music. Some speculate that the glamor illustration and screen names appearing on the album fronts do the trick. Others point out that in today's crazy inflation Americans are buy-happy.

Past couple of months have seen the diskers go to bat on a wide variety of film soundtracks, the emphasis being pretty equally on musicals, which of course are a natural in the platter trade, and on the musical scores of dramatic films.

Film company executives generally welcome soundtrack releases, if they don't actually go out and promote them. However, even the Hollywood boys of late have been doing some handshaking over the type of scores that are being picked up and released by the record outfits. Music in these pictures was penned to help to create and underscore a mood set by the film. Heard by itself, some of that music doesn't sound like much.

Yet, two things are reasonably certain: (1) Soundtrack albums are often good sellers (2) Most filmites agree that the release of a picture benefits quite substantially from the promotional activities of the record companies with resulting airplugs from the disk jocks, etc.

Close Cooperation

The film companies cooperate closely with the record firms. There is an exchange of exploitation material. Window cards counter-plug record and film. Often the record companies' salesmen are kept up-to-date on the release of a given picture in specific theatres so as to affect the most practical tieins.

Here and there, a film man doesn't see eye-to-eye with the theory that a soundtrack album helps sell a picture. "I don't believe these albums help us at all," commented one dissenter. "I think a title song does. But some of these longplay disks have nothing more than 'prestige' effect. Get a producer a longplaying album, and get him a break in the Saturday Review, and he's happy."

The record companies admit that some of their LP albums are made of pretty thin stuff, but they insist it's well worth their while to go in for soundtrack albums. "People mostly buy these albums because of the covers," said one record company exec. "The public has money to spend, and they spent it. Of course, if the movie has a really good score that clings to the ear, that's another story."

Albums like "Oklahoma" and "The King and I" have been sock sellers and have paid off handsomely. Naturally the monetary benefits from a soundtrack album to a film producer are virtually nil. Against this many showmen feel that the indirect (promotional) benefits are great and the tieins valuable.

Record company competition for promising film scores is lively. That's true particularly if the picture has one or two strong numbers in it. "This business is like a roulette game," held one record man. "You miss a couple of times, and then you hit on a real winner, and you're a hero." Instance cited is "Man With the Golden Arm," which has been a strong seller. Ditto "Around the World in 80 Days" which Decca put out and which has been scoring heavily.

The record companies are remarkably chary as to statistics on actual record sales. But they comment "We wouldn't take 'em on unless we thought we could make money with it."

Had 'Mole' in His Head

Los Angeles, July 23.

Berman Swarttz filed suit in Superior Court asking $50,000, charging unauthorized use of a story treatment in Universal's "The Mole People." Studio, Howard Christie and Ray Crossett were named defendants.

Swarttz said he conceived the idea in 1951 and related it to Christie in crossett's office. They promised to make the film but later told him there was no interest in it. In 1956, complaint added, "The Mole People" was produced using substantially the treatment he had outlined.

Britons Plotting Admissions Hike

London, July 23.

An all around increase in admission prices for picture theatres appears imminent. Spurred on by the General Council of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Assn., who feel that the time has now "definitely been reached" when seat prices should be reviewed, managements in all parts of the country are to hold meetings to discuss just how much the increases should be.

No date has yet been fixed for upping admission prices, but the CEA advises that theatres in holiday towns should make their arrangements with as little delay as possible.

Price changes will vary from district to district according to local circumstances. The CEA states that although picture theatre entertainment is much more advanced than it was pre-war, it was not generally realized that the rise in seat prices during and following the war was never as steep as increases for practically everything else.

80 MEXICAN FILMS DUE FOR RED CHINA

Mexico City, July 23.

Mexico and Red China will very probably get together cinematographically, it was made known by Alfonso Pulido Islas, manager of Cimex, the semi official distributor of Mexican pix abroad. Current is a dicker between here and Peiping for at least 80, maybe 100, Mexican films. May hatch by July 31.

Islas emphasized that Red China's 600,000,000 inhabitants make a good market for Mexican features.

Sid Kaufman's 11 From, One Co-Production Deal In Germany (With CCC)

Sidney Kaufman, prez of Grand Prize Films, has made a coproduction deal. Picture will be made, in German, at the CCC studios in Berlin.

Returning from a visit to Germany last week, Kaufman also disclosed that he had purchased 11 German pictures for distribution in the States, but said he was no longer interested in buying films suitable only for the German-language houses. Among the 11 he bought are five from Arthur Brauner's CCC.

Kaufman said it simply didn't pay to import "small" German films with limited appeal. "I'm better off taking on 10 pictures with real commercial possibilities, than 40 which can't play more than 15 or 16 houses," he commented. "I'm definitely getting out of that business. By the time you give the producer an advance, pay print costs, etc., nothing much is left."

Among the pictures Kaufman acquired is "The Last Ones Shall Be the First," which Brauner produced and which was the German entry at the recent Berlin film fest.

Kaufman said dubbing was being done on "Muenchhausen," on which all U.S. rights have now been cleared for Grand Prize. New music track is being added to the film in London, and the first complete print should be in N.Y. within a few weeks. Picture was the last big production turned out by the UFA under the Nazi regime. It's in Agfa color.

ATLANTA PAPERS MOVE OBITS OFF FILM PAGE

Atlanta Constitution and Journal, which are jointly owned and operated, have adopted a new policy calling for only amusement copy on the film pages—and more of it. A daily feature story on pictures also is intended.

Heretofore the amusement pages carried obits and news unrelated to show business.

Switch came about when Robert Moscow insisted on placing ads for his first-run Rialto Theatre, Atlanta, on the television page. He did this, he said, because market researcher Albert Sindlinger advised him that only 25% of the public was reading the amusement pages once weekly while the tv page was read every day by 75% of the public.

Moscow said that when he related this to the editors of the dailies they agreed to the buildup of the film pages immediately.

Constant Brain-Cudgelling on Titles

Original Tag or New One on Remakes Puzzles Film Showmen—Seems No Guarantee of B.O. Either Way

Titling of a remake is proving a major headache for the film companies. They have discovered that there is no set formula for success. Neither retitling nor issuance of the repeat under its original title automatically guarantees b.o. acceptance.

Columbia's experience with two remakes of recent vintage demonstrates the point. "My Sister Eileen," released with the same title of the original successful film, failed to stir b.o. excitement. Similarly, "You Can't Run Away From It," a remake of the classic screen comedy, "It Happened One Night," turned out to be a b.o. disappointment.

Despite this experience, some film companies are seeking some form of guidance in their titling problems. Sindlinger surveys have discovered that there is a tendency of the public to stay away from remakes that have the titles of the original films. Interviewees — when presented with the original title of a remake—have responded that they've seen the picture on television or hoped to see it on video shortly.

As a result, there is a growing tendency among the film companies to alter the titles of the retreads unless, of course, they're based on a famous literary work. 20th-Fox, for example, changed the remake of "Love Affair" to "Affair to Remember." On the other hand, the new Selznick version of Ernest Hemingway's "A Farewell to Arms" will be issued under its original title.

Perhaps the most unusual alteration in the title manipulations is Universal's decision to use "Her Man Godfrey" for its upcoming remake of "My Man Godfrey." This decision came after a study of a special Sindlinger survey for the company.

Catholic Church As Film Exhibitor

[HAS 5,000-6,000 HOUSES IN ITALY]

Hollywood, July 23.

Richard Basehart, American actor returned to Hollywood after long sojourn in the studios of Rome, underscored in interviews here a little-known fact about motion picture exhibition in Italy. The Catholic Church owns and operates between 5,000 and 6,000 film theatres, the exact number not of record. In many villages the only cinema is the Church's.

Clergy is thus in a position to drastically reduce playdates for any film of which it disapproves. A recent example was "Il Bidone." It depicted a con game common in Italy wherein the racketeers dress up as priests. The Church didn't like this picture and resultantly the playoff was badly clipped.

Locarno, July 23.

Steve Cochrane's Italian-made "Il Grido" (The Cry) won the Swiss Film Critic's Prize awarded at the conclusion of 10th Locarno Film Festival. Pic stars Cochrane (who co-produced with an Italian partnership), Betsy Blair, Alida Valli, Dorian Gray, and was directed by Michelangelo Antonioni. Pic was recently the subject of a censorship dispute in Italy (VARIETY, July 10), and had its world preem at the Festival here.

Two Yank pix shown at Locarno also received kudos. "The Young Stranger" (RKO) by John Frankenheimer won the Swiss-Italian Radio award, while United Artists' "12 Angry Men," Sidney Lumet's Berlin prizewinner, dittoed here with a special jury award.

SEEING PETRILLO SOON; BACKLOG SALES ISSUE

Motion Picture Assn. of America hasn't had any meetings as yet with the American Federatibn of Musicians regarding the film industry's basic agreement with the union. But, said MPAA president Eric A. Johnston this week, he hopes to get together with AFM's James C. Petrillo shortly.

Present MPAA-AFM contract expires next February. To figure prominently in new negotiations, it's anticipated, will be film backlogs sold to television as specifically concerning musical content and the payoff to the AFM-ers.

Last week AFM Hollywood Local 47 had charged a breach of faith on the part of Petrillo by holding a meeting with film industry officials with no provision for attendance by Local 47 reps. No such meeting took place, stated Johnston.

ACTOR BACK IN LONDON

Paul England Badly Injured On Coast Resettling in Native Land

Actor Paul England spent the weekend at the Lambs Club, N.Y. en route to London where he will hereafter reside. Badly injured in a Hollywood automobile accident two years ago and since then under care at the Motion Picture Home ("The last word in care"), actor was feted in farewell at the Masquers in the film colony before coming east.

Having suffered some 16 fractures (the victim of an uninsured California driver), England will continue treatment in his native land. He expects to continue professional work with the British Broadcasting Co. Two old friends, Ray Noble and John Snagge, were to meet him at the BOAC airport upon arrival.

NO WIRES, ANY LOT A THEATRE

New York Sound Track

Burton Holmes, now 86, is gravely ill in Beverly Hills. Long ailing, his travel lectures continued by others in his name, Holmes toured the States in person for some 55 years, from colored slides, to black and white motion pictures to color films.

Adolph Zukor addressed a group of Loew's Theatres execs and managers at the Paramount homeoffice Monday (22) in connection with the multiple opening of "Omar Khyyam." It was his first talk to members of this chain, he noted, since 1909 when he was treasurer under Marcus Loew . . . Ironic twist is that Spyros P. Skouras is anti-home-toll television while Fox West Coast, former members of the Skouras corporate family, looms large in the home toll future.

Leo McCarey laughs off a report that he'll do the life story of the late Sen. Joseph McCarthy. McCarey next plans a picture with Gary Cooper entitled "No Secret Is Safe." It's a war story. Lottie Wenzel secretary to MPEA's Robert Corkery, going to Europe to meet her husband, Kurt W. Wenzel, who works for U.S. Information Agency in Afghanistan. He's a cameraman.

Confidential Magazine circulating the film companies with a bid for ads in its fall issue. Attached is an editorial by publisher Robert Harrison entitled "Hollywood vs. Confidential." Its main thesis: Confidential tells the "truth" (which Harrison says "can be distasteful but never libelous"), and the mag "doubts that the time has arrived when Americans can be 'gotten' for the crime of telling the truth." Furthermore, says Confidential, "'Hollywood' is in the business of lying. Falsehood is a stock in trade." Conclusion: The film companies can buy the entire press, but not Confidential, and so they're mad at Confidential. It's all so childishly simple!

Doris Day due in Gotham for the first time in five years to help plug "Pajama Game" for Warners. Husband Marty Melcher will accompany her . . . Warner Bros. execs mulling a roadshow policy for their "Story of Mankind." It's got 50 stars in it. (Shadows of "80 Days"?) . . . Director Fred Zinnemann is mountain climbing in the West before tackling "A Nun's Story." He shot background footage for it in 16m black-and-white and color in the Belgian Congo . . . Deborah Kerr's singing voice in "Affair to Remember" was dubbed in by Marni Nixon, who also subbed on the vocal chores for Miss Kerr in "King and I." It's time somebody gave her credit.

Arthur Knight, formerly of the Saturday Review and currently on the CBS-Odyssey staff, invited to serve on the Venice fest jury. He served in the same capacity last year . . . MPEA's Fred Gronich Copenhagen-bound . . . Americo Aboaf, Universal's foreign chief, was hospitalized for a week in Bombay, having caught a local bug. He's now back at his desk from the world tour.

Lex Barker, Miguel Aleman Jr., son of the former president of Mexico, and Mexican producer Antonio Matuk formed a new indie to produce eight films in Mexico . . . Paramount publicist Ted Taylor resigned to become exec assistant to William Perlberg and George Seaton . . .

John Michael Hayes is polishing up the "Separate Tables" screenplay penned by Terence Rattigan . . . Investing group has made an offer of $5,400,000 for Herbert J. Yates' controlling stock in Republic . . . Lee Strasberg, artistic director of the Actors' Studio, discussed the American theatre in a talk this week before the Harvard Union International Seminar.

"The Vikings" budget is now trimmed to $3,200,000 according to insiders, who say the shooting schedule in Europe has been cut by a week and some scenes combined . . . COMPO-ites plenty impressed with the way theatremen around the country are cooperating in the industry's better-business campaign.

Camille, exotic dancer headlining Peter Van Der North's El Morocco in Montreal, not using her given name in billing; she was born Gloria Swanson.

Director Morton Da Costa back in Gotham after produciton planning confabs wtih Warners on the Coast for "Auntie Mame," which he'll put before the cameras in early '58. While working on various legit shows this fall, Da Costa will do casting for "Auntie Mame." Rosalind Russell will star . . . Darryl F. Zanuck due in Gotham next month to attend the "Sun Also Rises" preem. Zanuck in past months was billed several times for 20th preems, but he never showed.

Mike Todd has rented a 15-acre estate, complete with swimming pool and tennis courts, at Green's Farms, Westport Conn. Estate, for which Todd has taken a one-year lease, is opposite the Fairfield Hunt Club. When real estate broker Mort Hammond asked for a deposit to close the deal, Todd wrote out a check for a whole year's rent . . . In the Sunday (21) N.Y. Times financial section, a still from the Boulting Brothers film, "Brothers In Law," was used to illustrate an interview with Herb Golden, v.p. of Bankers Trust Co., on the financing of motion pictures. The cut showed United Artists board chairman Robert Benjamin and Golden watching the film. Alfred Katz, American representative of the Boulting Brothers, says he's "mystified, but very pleased" as to why Benjamin and Golden were watching the film. "Brothers In Law," he points out, was financed 100% by Lion International and the Boultings and will be distributed in the U.S. by Walter Reade's Continental Films . . . Orton H. Hicks, director of research and development of Loew's International, is one of three Dartmouth College alumni appointed to the Board of Overseers of the Amos Tuck School of Business Administration at Dartmouth . . . Universal has set a hefty national magazine advertising schedule for "Man of a Thousand Faces."

"V.I.P.'s doesn't mean Very Important People, but Visitor Is Pest. That will give you an idea," added Adams.

Universal sales exec Harry Fellerman moved from Long Island to Westchester to get away from the Long Island Railroad. However, he couldn't make his first return trip to his White Plains home because of the accident that shut down the N.Y. Central last week . . . Producers Herbert Kline and Cyril Means Jr. eyeing Henry Fonda to portray Clarence Darrow in "Defender of the Lost," which they plan to film in New York.

CHEAPER DRIVE-IN WITH TRANSISTOR

A new system of sound transmission, eliminating the need for any underground wire connections, may well revolutionize the drive-in business.

Device, developed and patented by Sol J. Levy and to be sold by the newly-formed Vido Sound Corp., in which Walter Futter is partnered with Levy and John Shelton, will have its first application in Walter Reade's new Dover Drive-In, due to open in September near Dover, N.J.

System allows a drive-in to function without any need for electrical wiring, the usual underground conduits and the rows of expensive speaker posts. Each speaker, powered by a transistor, can pick up the film soundtrack anywhere in the drive-in area, and can be carried at will to any point in that area. It can be either hooked into the car, or taken for a stroll, or into the park restaurant. Plan is to issue a speaker to each car entering the theatre and to collect it from the customer at the gate upon leaving.

Tradename under which the system will be sold is W-I-S-P, short for Wireless Sound Speaker. Futter fixed the price at about $25 per speaker. In addition, Vido Sound will collect what's described as a small engineering charge. According to Futter, the system will save any new drive-in between $50,000 and $80,000.

Cheapens Costs

If as practical as described by Futter and by the Reade circuit, the new system could spark construction of a great many new ozoners since it would allow virtually everyone with a piece of suitable real estate to put up a screen and go into business. The wiring represents one of the most expensive parts of drive-in construction.

Furthermore, it's pointed out, existing drive-ins could enlarge their capacity by installing the wireless method of operation. Such enlargement wouldn't necessitate the ripping up of the cement grading that would have been in order heretofore.

According to Futter, the W-I-S-P device also could be used in indoor houses that have special sections for deaf people and others who up to now have had to sit apart from the regular audience. The speakers, with earphones, could now be taken direct into the auditorium.

Futter said the area in which the signal can be received can be extended to several miles. At the same time, it can be regulated to conform to the size of the drive-in so that it cannot be received outside the ozoner boundaries.

While transmission is over-the-air, Futter stressed that no actual radio signal was involved, i.e. no licensing from the Federal Communications Commission is required. Without going into detail, he described the device as a "radiation" method.

Theatre can retain the same amplification system as before. In fact, Futter maintained, the power of the amplifier can be cut in half for the wireless speaker. The signal is not affected by atmospheric conditions and is immune to static.

There are presently just over 5,000 drive-ins in the country. While some areas are literally saturated with ozoners, others—particularly in the East—have comparatively few drive-ins. The ordinary speaker today costs between $6 and $10. Futter will charge $25, but he noted the additional cost of wiring, connections, posts, etc. under the present sypstem of drive-in construction.

Fox West Coast-Telemeter Ready With $10,000,000 As Initial Fund For L.A. Toll; Tieup Stuns Trade

Dozier In a Word

Hollywood, July 23.

William Dozier adopted a triple negative on return from N.Y. huddles with Daniel O'Shea of RKO.

Asked if meeting decided anything, what next production will be, if had any news for publication, Dozier retorted with trio of "no's."

Los Angeles Pact Points Up Schism In TOA Re Toll

Fox-West Coast petition for a franchise to operate home-toll television in Los Angeles in collaboration with International Telemeter brings right out in the open a split among the hierarchy of a major film industry trade organization.

FWC and its parent, National Theatres, has been one of biggest monied members of Theatre Owners of America. On the TOA rolls are many of the top circuits of the country and the operators of these chains for the most part have been bitterly antagonistic toward home-toll. Their arguments, publicly and privately stated, have ranged from the highly principled thought of depriving the public of free tv to the fear of their coming face to face with too overpowering a competitor.

FWC and National, whose late president, Charles P. Skouras, was once board chairman of TOA, are now at odds with fellow members of the theatre association over an issue that in many quarters is considered vital.

Meanwhile, the Exhibitors Emergency Defense Committee, whose membership comprises TOA-ites, Allied States reps and others, apparently has run out of money. This unit, formed to combat home toll on the publicity and legislative fronts, reportedly had a bankroll of $165,000, blew this, and is now on the prowl for additional funds with which to carry on.

Fox-Telemeter & Justice Dept.?

Antitrust questions immediately brought up by the joint action of Fox West Coast Theatres and International Telemeter in seeking a franchise to operate home-toll video in Los Angeles in turn brought immediate answers. There can't possibly be any trouble with the Dept. of Justice, according to the Telemeter camp.

FWCT, a subsidiary of National Theatres, thereby operates under the industry trust judgments. Ditto Telemeter, being a subsidiary of Paramount.

Curiosity was aroused for here, in effect, is Paramount getting together with a theatre chain whose divorcement from 20th-Fox, also a defendant in the a-t case, was ordered by the courts.

But, say some men from Telemeter, the D. of J. could hardly construe this new association as monopolistic. There's no business to monopolize; it's a new enterprise they are trying to develop, they add.

Nicola Napoli, head of Artkino, the Soviet film agents in this country, is going to Moscow next month. He expects to be gone for three to four weeks.

Fox West Coast Theatres and International Telemeter, who over the past weekend filed a joint application for a home toll television franchise in the City of Los Angeles, are prepared to ante up a total of up to $10,000,000 as their initial investment in development of the system. Franchise bid made previously by Skiatron TV is now the subject of L. A. City Council hearings.

Company, which is the major subsidiary of the 300-theatre National Theatres chain, and International Telemeter, which is a Paramount subsidiary, intend to form a new organization which would be owned 50% by each and would be responsible for rigging the cabled tv process and providing the programming. The overall cost of wiring all of L. A.'s 800,000 tv homes has been estimated by sources on the Telemeter side at from $50 to $100 each. To cut the estimate down the middle, to $75, would mean the staggering total of $60,000,000 would be required to complete the job.

The $10,000,000 which Telemeter and Fox Theatres are willing to put up is said to be the maximum for the immediate future. What comes later on will be determined step by step, in the form of receipt of the franchise (it would be on a non-exclusive basis) and the economic ramifications which cannot be determined to any specific degree at this time. Remaining to be answered, for example, are to what extent the public would pay on a sustained basis for home-toll, the cost of attractive programming, the extent of competition from others in the field, and so on.

And there's always the possibility that air space sometime might be made available to the home-toll proprietors—a possibility which if materialized could force a full switch in the Fox-Telemeter plans.

Unresolved Points

In view of the many points that remain to be resolved, the theatre chain and the Par subsid are enjoined from blueprinting far-into-the-future plans.

But the tieup is of major significance within the trade. It marks the first time a major circuit has broken from the ranks of the anti-home toll ranks and this development clearly took the industry by surprise. The National company is second only to United Paramount Theatres in terms of size.

Further, the subsid of National has 36 houses in the L. A. area, including first runs, and these obviously are now sustained by ticket sales. Many important exhibs are opposed to home toll—the competitive effects would be disastrous, they feel. If these theatremen are proved correct, wouldn't FWCT be jeopardizing its entire economic structure by killing off its important L. A. theatrical outlets? Only the questions can be put forth now; only time will provide the answers.

Telemeter Showing N.Y. At Savoy on Aug. 12

Elaborate demonstration of the latest in International Telemeter is set for Aug. 12 at New York's Savoy Plaza Hotel. The coin-box home-toll television system is to be shown on a closed circuit throughout the first floor of the hotel.

Telemeter, which is controlled by Paramount, is planning on an exhibit showing in thorough-going fashion how programming would be wired from a central point into homes and paid for on the pay-as-you-see basis.

Press, industryites and other interested parties are to be invited.

Jeanne Eagels

Kim Novak and Jeff Chandler in unexciting biopic. Performances let down potentially interesting yarn. Must ride on star names for b.o. recognition.

Columbia release of a George Sidney production. Stars Kim Novak, Jeff Chandler; co-stars Agnes Moorehead; features Charles Drake, Larry Gates, Virginia Grey, Gene Lockhart, Joe De Santis, Murray Hamilton. Directed by Sidney. Screenplay, Daniel Fuchs, Sonya Levien, John Fante from a story by Fuchs. Camera, Robert Planck; editors, Viola Lawrence, Jerome Thoms; music, George Duning. Previewed July 17, 1957. Running time: 108 MINS.

Jeanne Eagles	Kim Novak
Sal Satori	Jeff Chandler
Mme. Neilson	Agnes Moorehead
John Donahue	Charles Drake
Al Brooks	Larry Gates
Elsie Desmond	Virginia Grey
Equity Board President	Gene Lockhart
Frank Satori	Joe de Santis
Chick O'Hara	Murray Hamilton

Disclaimer on "Jeanne Eagels" is one of the most unusual in picture annals. It reads: "all events in this photoplay are based on fact and fiction." It may be assumed that the fiction predominates and the character names are mostly phoney.

In real life the actress blockbusted Broadway in 1922 when Freud was new and Somerset Maugham was hot. "Rain" also had some jabs at the Protestant clergy, not then popular because of prohibition. The authors are intent upon telling a story rather than history so this background is just for the record. For the record, too, is the doubt that Jeanne Eagels was, as the Columbia press agents would have it, "the greatest" native actress of the century. Her one big smack was "Rain."

Jeanne Eagels may have been one of the great actresses and dynamic personalities of this century, but this biofilm will hardly prove it. Those who saw Eagels in her heyday will not recognize any likeness in Kim Novak; those who didn't see Miss Eagels will most certainly not recognize her as a great actress as portrayed by Miss Novak. More likely, majority of audiences will find themselves hard put to endure the overlong, highly contrived story that promises but never fulfills any dramatic high spots. If "Eagels" does business, it will do so chiefly on strength of the star names.

It's surprising that so colorful and meteoric a personality as Miss Eagels could provide such slight inspiration of scripters Daniel Fuchs, Sonya Levien and John Fante. Miss Eagels, who had more than the normal share of interesting human frailties, emerges as a dull, complacent blonde better fitted for the cook stove than Broadway stage. When attempting to portray the carny cooch dancer, or later a temperamental star, there is neither true temper nor temperament in the unbelievable screen characterization and situations.

Producer-director George Sidney mounted film very well and tried to breathe some life into the story with some directorial tricks, many of them cliche, but didn't quite succeed. Also, quite obviously, producer Sidney failed to wield his editorial shears on director Sidney, with the result the story rambles on and on. In this case, boy loses girl and vice versa not once but five different times. Also, Sidney must shoulder the blame for the most unattractive appearance of Jeff Chandler, who is hatted and photographed in such manner as to possibly affect his screen future.

Story picks up Miss Eagels as the pickup of a travelling salesman who gets his way with her by promising her the first prize in a beauty contest in a carnival operated by friend Chandler. She loses, but stays with Chandler and, as romance blooms, becomes the sideshow coocher among other things on the midway. Consumed by a burning ambition for the Broadway stage, she makes a beeline for dramatic coach Agnes Moorehead's studio the moment she and Chandler reach New York, he to becomes partner in his brother-in's Coney Island operation. Things become strangely easy for Miss Eagels, after Miss Moorehead's early disinclination to coach a beginner, and she's on her way to stardom when she subs for a vacationing player. Next step is when she double-crosses a former star and gets a leading role in "Rain." This also supposedly leads her to drink and dope when the star jumps to death and Miss Eagels sees the broken body on pavement. It all looks fictional, particularly the scene showing Miss Novak playing Eagels in a scene from "Rain," and probably is fictional except for her marriage to a football player and her suspension by Actors Equity for failure to do a performance.

Miss Novak, if little else in this film, looks very good and bears well the clothes of the period. Chandler is not only not at his best pictorially, but he doesn't quite look or play the part of an Italian-American carny man. More attuned to his role is Charles Drake, as the easy-going society boy footballer. Miss Moorehead is far too dramatic and artificial in her early scenes, later settling down for more realistic and sympathetic performance. Virginia Grey, as the suicidal faded star, Larry Gates, as a legit producer, Gene Lockhart, Joe de Santis and Murray Hamilton are okay in support.

Valerie

Strong story and good cast names. Brutality and sadistic episodes may alienate some; only laid in west, not an oater.

Hollywood, July 20.

United Artists release of a Hal R. Makelim production. Stars Sterling Hayden, Anita Ekberg, Anthony Steel; features Peter Walker, Jerry Barclay, Ighigenie Castiglioni, John Wengraf, Gage Clarke, Tom McKee. Directed by Gerd Oswald. Screenplay, Leonard Heideman, Emmett Murphy. Camera, Ernest Laszlo; art directors, David Bretherton; art direction, Frank Smith; music, Albert Glasser. Previewed, June 19, '57. Running time, 91 MINS.

John Garth	Sterling Hayden
Valerie	Anita Ekberg
Reverend Blake	Anthony Steel
Herb Garth	Peter Walker
Louis Horvat	John Wengraf
Mrs. Horvat	Ighigenie Castiglioni
Mingo	Jerry Barclay
Lundy	Robert Adler
Dave Carlin	Tom McKee
Lawyer Griggs	Gage Clarke
Judge Frisbee	Sidney Smith
Nurse Linsey	Juney Ellis
Dr. Jackson	Stanley Adams

Producer Hal Makelim has come up with a success d'estime, in this challenging experiment. Whether it will be a success d' box-office remains to be seen, but with strong story and good cast names, it might prove a sleeper. Drawback (or perhaps not) is the large dose of brutality and sadism depicted on the screen, which may alienate certain audience segments.

The Leonard Heideman-Emmett Murphy tale, briskly and imaginatively directed by Gerd Oswald, is laid in the west, but is by no means a western. Rather, it is a gothic and sombre psychological tale which repeats the same theme three times, each time from the viewpoint of a different character. Save for a preposterously melodramatic finale, which doesn't fit, it's a well-told tale and a work of solid craftsmanship. Plot technique is similar to the one used in the Japanese film, "Roshomon," a couple of years ago.

Story starts with bloody shooting fray, in which Sterling Hayden and his henchmen wipe out the family of his estranged wife, Anita Ekberg, and seriously wounds her. At the trial, sympathy is on his side, since he's a leading citizen, a war hero (Civil War), and Miss Ekberg supposedly was running away with handsome preacher Anthony Steel.

But Steel's testimony, related in backflash, relates another version; that he was helping an ill and neglected parishoner by taking her to her parents. Hayden's story, also told in flashback, is that she was a loose wanton, only interested in his money, who had seduced his younger brother, Peter Walker, and was carrying on an affair with Steel.

But Miss Ekberg, supposedly near death, regains consciousness and gives her testimony, later proven. Here, Hayden had married her for a substantial dowry (her European parents, John Wengraf and Ighigenie Castiglioni, had followed old-world custom of marrying her off to a local figure, to gain security). Also, Hayden had framed the supposed affair, so he'd have an excuse to kill the pair. Shooting of her family was an aftermath, when that scheme failed.

At this point his loyal henchman, Jerry Barclay, gets the drop on the court attendants and helps his boss escape. But brother Walker shoots it out with the duo and kills them, for a finale.

All three stars show up strong in wide emotional ranges required in different versions. Hayden turns in one of his best chores in years, while Miss Ekberg impresses as an actress as well as a scenic wonder. Steel, with less to do, still makes both his characters convincing.

Especially noteworthy in support are Walker, with considerable promise shown, and Tom McKee and Gage Clarke, as opposing attorneys. Wengraf and Miss Castiglioni, Stanley Adams as a compassionate doctor and Barclay all make small parts count.

Black-and-white camera work of Ernest Laszlo is cleancut and toprate. Other technical credits reflect solid professionalism. Kove.

Capsule Foreign Film Reviews

Le Grand Bluff (FRENCH). Corona release of Hoche-Ray Ventura-Belmont production. Stars Eddie Constantine, Dominique Wilims; features Mireille Granelli, Mouratache, Bernard, Dhrami, Jacques Hilling. Directed by Patrice Dally. Screenplay, Jerry Epstein, adapted by Louis Martin, Yvan Audouard, Dally; camera, Armand Thirardi; editor, Gabriel Rongier. At Balzac, Paris. Running time, 95 MINS.

Eddie Constantine, the American who became a pic star here, has been signed to do his first U.S. film for United Artists this summer. If that pic were to click, this might have a chance for dual spotting in the U.S. Otherwise, this "B" effort bodes little chance except in lower-case action spots.

Constantine plays a sympathetic grifter who gets up an oilwell combine which turns out to really have oil in it. He becomes the defender of the small stockholders against the shady group trying to buy them out. It abounds with the usual fisticuffs, which the French still have not mastered, and the usual femmes always falling into the hero's arms. Direction does not help bring out the few good ideas inherent in the script, but Constantine is his usual colorful, assured self while the girls in the pic do not fare as well. Mosk.

Tahati (FRENCH; FRANSCOPE; COLOR). CICC release of CICC-Discifilm-Cine Roma production. Stars Maea Flohr, Georges De Caunes. Written and directed by Bernard Borderie. Camera (Eastmancolor), Fersin, Bonneu; editor, W. R. Sivel. At Normandie, Paris. Running time, 95 MINS.

This pic is anamorphoscoped and in color, being a barely dramatized documentary on Tahiti, its simple natives, terping, nude women and idyllic laziness of its existence. Done with a vague framework of a reporter supposedly doing a series of articles on the isles, but spending his time chasing beauteous natives, this is too lagging for chances as a full-length film in the U.S.

Fine lensing could make this worth documentary attention if cut down in size. Some clever takeoffs on the isle's history, the everpresent dancing girls and the nudity, if not censored, could make this an exploitable item on special bills. Otherwise, it is limited for America. Maea Flohr has a pretty spirited screen presence, but video star Georges De Caunes is too self-conscious to be telling on the big screens. Mosk.

Senechal Le Magnifique (FRENCH). Cinedis release of Chronos-Rizzoli-France Cinema production. Stars Fernandel; features Nadia Gray, Armontel, Jeanne Aubert, Simone Paris. Directed by Jean Boyer. Screenplay, Jean-Jacques Rouff, Serge Weber, Boyer; camera, Charles Suin; editor, Jacques Desagneaux. At Paris, Paris. Running time, 95 MINS.

Pic is a Fernandel vehicle. It gives him a chance to play a second-rate touring actor who finds that he can never get good roles, for he is not taken seriously. But, in costume, he gets into all sorts of real adventures in life. All ends with a trial after he gets mixed up with gangsters, his first big role. His breaking up of the play and his final stardom climaxes this. Idea is good but it is rarely exploited to make this something that could have Yank chances mainly on the comic's name. He overdoes his mugging and reactions in this to lose the true comedies of the pic. However, it engenders enough laughs to make this okay locally but hard to sell in the U.S. Technical credits are standard. Mosk.

Goiema The Buddha (INDIAN; DOCUMENTARY). Bimal Roy production and release. Written and directed by Rajbans Khanna; camera, Dilip Gupta; editor, H. Mukherji; music, Salil Chowdhry. Preemed in Paris. Running time, 45 MINS.

Via sculpture, bas reliefs and paintings, this pic adroitly and feelingly tells the life of Buddha. It has a simple but telling commentary in English which gives this a legendary quality. The tale of the Buddha's quest for wisdom and faith has a natural dignity and beauty. Landscapes, sky and waters, mixed into a fluid conception of the imagery, keep this pictorially interesting throughout. Its main U.S. chances, because of length and subject, would be in pairing with another offbeat art short. At the recent Cannes Film Fest, it won a special mention. Mosk.

Rekava (Destiny) (CEYLONESE). Chitra Lanka Ltd. production and release. With Dharma Priya, Myrtle Pernando, Iranganie Meedeniya. Written and directed by Lester James Peries. Camera, William Blake; editor, Sunil Dayaratne. Preemed in Paris. Running time, 95 MINS.

This is the first pic from Ceylon, to be seen over here. It emerges a simple, folksy rambling tale of village life. It concerns a little boy who is thought to have healing qualities when he cures his little girl companion of blindness. But then superstition enters and the villagers try to exorcise him. Though meandering, the pic has a sincere quality and shows a firm technque. For the U.S., this has mainly curio appeal. It is limited but has exploitable qualities. Mosk.

Elokuu (Destiny) (FINNISH). Fennada production and release. With Solvi Makela, Emma Vaanenen, Lauri Luoma. Directed by Matti Kassila. Screenplay, Kassila from novel by F. Sillapaa; camera, Esko Nevalainen; editor, Nils Holm. Preemed in Paris. Running time, 90 MINS.

Finnish pic details the downfall of an alcoholic and the effect on his family. Pic is somewhat literary and theatrical, but has a convincing handling of the dipso's plight and shapes mainly as an exploitation item for any slim U.S. chances. Otherwise it is very limited. Acting and technical aspects are first-rate. Mosk.

Geliebte Corinna (Beloved Corinna) (GERMAN). NF release of Arca production. Stars Elisabeth Mueller, Hans Soehnker, Hannelore Schroth; features Inkijinoff, Alexander Kerst, Annie Rosar, Klause Kinski, Gerhard Buente, Hannes Tannert. Directed by Eduard von Borsody. Screenplay, Curt J. Braun and Ernst von Salomon, from novel of same name by Robert Pilchowski; camera, Fritz Arno Wagner; music, Lothar Bruehne. At UFA Pavillon, Berlin. Running time, 100 MINS.

Film's only international exploitation angle is Swiss Elisabeth Mueller who last year debutted in Metro's "Power and Prize." She doesn't prove a great actress in this, but her beauty and sympathetic charm have refreshing appeal. Pic spins the tale of a young girl (Miss Mueller) who follows the "man of her life" to Malakka where she finds out that he's already married. But soon she learns that he is an honest lover and only his wife is to blame for the circumstances. Death of his wife makes the way free for both.

"Corinna" is a familiar yarn which lacks practically everything. Adapted from a novel, Curt J. Braun and Ernst von Salomon have written a morbidly, corny script. Direction by Edward von Borsody is remarkably old-fashioned. The acting remains rather unconvincing. Hans Soehnker, who gets star billing after Miss Mueller, portrays the male lead with an overemphasis. Hannelore Schroth is nearly silly as his toujours drinking wife. Vet actor Inkijinoff enacts an Asiatic nabob—also a rather odd performance. Entire film's production dress reveals a very moderate budget while technical qualities are not even average. Probably German film-making at its 1957 lowest ebb. Hans.

Flickan I Frack (Girl In Tails) (SWEDISH—COLOR). Sandrews release of Rune Waldekranz production. Stars Maj-Britt Nilsson, Folke Sundquist; features Lennart Lindberg, Sigge Fuerst, Anders Henrikson. Directed by Arne Mattsson. Screenplay, Herbert Grevenius, based on novel by Hjalmar Bergman; camera (Eastmancolor), Sven Nykvist; music, Hakan von Eichwald. At Film Studio, Berlin. Running time, 98 MINS.

That Swedish comedies can be much better than their reputation was proved at the Cannes Festival last year when Ingmar Bergman's "Smile of a Summer Night" walked off with an award for the most poetic comedy. Unlike "Smiles," which was more the offbeat type of comedy, this is truly escapist entertainment. It's the kind which should also appeal to majority of sophisticated patrons. Aside from lacking names well-known in the U.S., this comedy is so familiar it likely will find it tough going in most American spots.

In brief, this is the story of a girl who goes to a ball in tails since her father refused to present her with an evening gown and so she takes her brothers' dress suit The "girl in tails" causes a scandal in this Swedish small town at the beginning of this century.

Acting is of top calibre. Maj-Britt Nilsson enacts the title role charmingly. Folke Syndquist portrays a young count, her beau, smartly. Exceptional support helps this lightweight story. Director Arne Mattsson, creator of "Summer of Happiness," seems to have given the whole thing the right touch of slowness to catch the old-fashioned atmosphere. A fitting contribution is the music, mostly Johann Strauss waltzes. Camera and other technical credits are firstclass. Hans.

Sait-On Jamais (Does One Ever Know) (FRENCH; CSCOPE; COLOR). Mondex Film release of Raoul Levy-Iena-Carol Film production. Stars Francoise Arnoul, Robert Hossein, O. E. Hasse; features Marian Marquand, France Vidalie. Written and directed by Roger Vadim. Camera (Eastmancolor), Armand Thirard; editor, Victoria Mercanton; music, John Lewis. At Biarritz, Paris. Running time, 95 MINS.

The characterizations are only emulsion-deep in this pic which makes the amorous, half-nude dallying suggestive rather than truly erotic, with flashes of violence gratuitous. However, this is wrapped in a picturesque backing via the Venice locale, and it shapes mainly as an exploitation feature for the U.S., and will take plenty of bally. Mosk.

No morale fibre exists in the characters since they walk through the lush C'Scope settings rather abjectly. A Gallic reporter meats a girl one night and they are soon ensconed in her room in an esoteric looking Venetian palace inhabited by two goons and a rich, aging Baron. There is also a disquieting young hoodlum who was the girl's previous lover. Then comes complications since the Baron had hidden millions of phony but perfect Anglo pounds. Then there is the murder of the Baron by the hoodlum, all being resolved by a rooftop chase.

Francoise Arnoul is cute but is lost in an ill-defined role. Remainder of the cast is passable, with only Robert Hossein making a real impression as the murderer.

C'Scope and color are firstrate and the Venice backgrounding also may help in U.S. situations. Another Yank plus is the music scoring by the Modern Jazz Quartet. It's written by John Lewis.

Non Scherzare Con Le Donne. (Don't Trifle With Women) (ITALIAN). APICI production and release. Stars Rossana Podesta, Giorgia Moll, Marco Vicario, Armando Silvestre. Directed by Giuseppe Bennati. Story and screenplay, Bennati, Benvenuti, Stucchi, Bernardi; camera, Gabor Pogany; music, Francesco Lavagnino; editor, Franco Fraticelli. At Capranica, Rome. Running time, 95 MINS.

Pic, which recounts the innocently amorous exploits of a summer-resort Romeo, makes for diverting entertainment in a mood similar to Fellini's "Vitelloni." However, it is lighter-veined. Could rate some U.S. attention, especially among Italo patrons.

Aided by very good dialogue, director Giuseppe Bennati keeps the pic moving at a fast episodic pace as Marco Vicario goes from one girl to the next in his never-ending search for true love. Of course, she has been right under his nose all the time. Acting, lensing, music, direction and other credits give this little pic a polish and unashamed charm not usually associated with films of its stature. Hawk.

La Ragazza Delle Saline (Girl From Salt Fields) GERMAN-ITALIAN-COLOR). Cineriz release of a Rizzoli-Bavaria-Schorchi-Zagreb Film production. Stars Isabelle Corey, Marcello Mastroianni; features Jester Naefs, Peter Carsten. Directed by Franz Cap. Screenplay, Johannes Kay; camera, Vaclav Vich; music, Bert Grund; editor, Friedl Schier-Buchow. At Adriano, Rome. Running time, 95 MINS.

Exploitable meller in the "Bitter Rice" vein has some chances in minor U.S. situations, but with dubbing, unless cost of color prints militates against purchase. Sexy-ingenue combo is person of star Isabelle Corey, a newcomer, is likewise a buildable sales point.

Tale is set in the fisherman and salt flat areas of the Adriatic coast, where rivalry between anglers and salt processers leads to constant tension. Further conflicts derive from the jealousy over Marina, buxom villager whose wide-eyed face belies her mature body and intentions. Nearness of water also has been handily used by makers to provide its star with an almost constantly wet, and clinging, wardrobe. Love scenes, fights, and documentaristic shots of salt field work are well blended for good general audience effects.

Stars Isabelle Corey, a definite comer, and young vet Marcello Mastroianni, make likeable topliners performing their surface chores well. Direction by Franz Cap is occasionally ponderous in the Germanic idiom, but generally keeps things moving. Color (uncredited) is uneven, though achieving some good effects. Other technical credits are average. Hawk.

L'Ultime Paradise (The Last Paradise) (ITALIAN—COLOR—ULTRASCOPE). Lux Film release of a Lux-Panaeurpa production. Directed by Folco Quilici. Screenplay, Quilici, Goffiero Colonna, from a story by Quilici; camera, (Ultrascope Terranicolor), Marco Scarpelli; music, Francesco Lavagnino; editor, Marie Serandrei. At Capitol, Rome. Running time, 95 MINS.

Feature documentary is a direct descendant of "Lost Continent" and similar Italo travel projects. While not nearly as successful, it has enough unusual footage, excellent lensing, plus some exploitable angles, to make it a fair investment for U.S. bookings. Trimming of overweight celluloid is suggested

Gun Glory
(C'SCOPE-COLOR)

Stewart Granger and Rhonda Fleming in a color western. Some flaws but okay boxoffice.

Metro release of a Nicholas Nayfack production. Stars Stewart Granger, Rhonda Fleming; co-stars Chill Wills. Features Steve Rowland, Jacques Aubuchon, James Gregory, Arch Johnson. Directed by Roy Rowland. Screenplay, William Ludwig from Philip Yordan's novel "Man of the West"; camera, (Metrocolor) Harold J. Marzorati; editor, Frank Santillo; music, Jeff Alexander. Previewed Culver City, Cal., July 18, '57. Running time, 88 MINS.

Tom Early	Stewart Granger
Jo	Rhonda Fleming
Preacher	Chill Wills
Young Tom Early	Steve Rowland
Grimsell	James Gregory
Sam Wainscott	Jacques Aubuchon
Gunn	Arch Johnson

Action and starkly photogenic backgrounds, excellently lensed in Metrocolor, help sustain interest in the ordinary western story that is "Gun Glory." It has been proficiently put together by producer Nicholas Nayfack, directed with a shrewd sense of values by Roy Rowland and competently trouped by a cast headed by Stewart Granger and Rhonda Fleming, whose names will be of some marquee value. Overall boxoffice prospects are okay.

William Ludwig screenplayed from Philip Yordan's "Man of the West," the story of a man who makes the most of a second chance; Stewart Granger, returning home after a three year absence during which he acquired a reputation as a gunslinger and gambler, finds his wife has died in his absence and his 17-year-old has turned against him. He resolves to stay and work out a new life but is immediately catapulted into trouble when cattleman James Gregory threatens to run a big herd through the peaceful farming valley, ruining the property so that he can use a shortcut to the market. Townspeople, led by preacher Chill Wills and egged on by crippled storekeeper Jacques Aubuchon, pay no heed to Granger's warning that men like Gregory understand only the language of the gun. When one of the townspeople is killed en route to Laramie to get help, they finally decide to fight but Gregory's men massacre them and start the cattle through the pass. Granger dynamites the mountain to halt the drive, wins out in a showdown fight and gains the love both of his son and of Rhonda Fleming, beautiful widow who had been the only one to accept his return.

Granger is very good in the role and there's virtually no trace of a British accent to mark the careful characterization. Miss Fleming is both easy to look at and capable in her part and Wills turns in an excellent performance as the preacher. There is fine support from Aubuchon, Gregory and Arch Johnson, a gunslinger, but much of the film is thrown to Steve Rowland, son of the director, in the role of Granger's son, and he is far too inexperienced to handle the footage.

Color photography by Harold J. Marzorati is good and other technical credits are stock. Music by Jeff Alexander is unobstrusive. Song, "The Ninety and Nine," is sung by Burl Ives behind the main title credits to help set the aura of the returning prodigal. Kap.

The Young Don't Cry

Mediocre filler fare with only new following of Sal Mineo to help at the b.o.

Hollywood, July 16.

Columbia release of Philip A. Waxman production. Stars Sal Mineo, James Whitmore, J. Carrol Naish; features Gene Lyons. Directed by Alfred L. Werker. Screenplay, Richard Jessup, from his novel; Camera, Ernest Haller; editor, Maurice Wright; music, George Antheil. Previewed June 27, '57, Running time, 89 MINS.

This Philip A. Waxman production seems to have a message—something about the necessity for youth to decide on the right way of life. Film's chief asset is the fine performance turned in by Sal Mineo in the lead, and some profitable playdates might result from this lad's rising b.o. value. Basically, however, pic is no more than mediocre filler fare.

"Cry," made independently for Columbia release, was filmed in its entirety in and around the Brockton Orphanage for Boys near Savannah, Ga. As screenplayed by Richard Jessup from his own novel, footage is frequently wordy and the action often aimless. Plot concerns Mineo, one of the "older" boys at Brockton, trying to "find himself" before setting out in the world. At the windup, it appears that he has. Other main characters in the mixup are: James Whitmore, convict working near Brockton on a road gang who utilizes an unwilling Mineo to make his escape; J. Carrol Naish, brutal prison warden who eventually kills Whitmore; and Gene Lyons, Brockton alumni who's become a millionaire by ruthless methods and thus is an idol to some and the opposite to others. Naish, always a top pro, fares best of the trio. Showing up well in support are Paul Carr, a sullen nasty-tempered Brockton youth; Leigh Whipper, Negro convict who aids Whitmore's escape and is shot in the process; and Ruth Attaway, Negress living in the vicinity who has a motherly interest in the Brockton boys. There's also a notable bit from an 11-year-old youth in the role of Crispy, also of Brockton.

Apache Warrior
(REGALSCOPE)

Example of intelligence and skill applied to modest budget. Well-made and scripted Indian yarn which can serve a wide variety of booking situations.

Hollywood, July 15.

20th-Fox release of a Regal Films Production. Stars Keith Larsen, Jim Davis, Rodolfo Acosta; introduces Eugenia Paul; features John Miljan, Damian O'Flynn, George Keymas, Lane Bradford, Dehl Berti. Produced by Plato Skouras. Directed by Elmo Williams; screenplay, Carroll Young, Kurt Neumann, Eric Norden, from Young-Neumann story; camera, John M. Nickolaus Jr.; editor, Jodie Copelan; music, Paul Dunlap. Previewed June 15, '57. Running time, 73 MINS.

Slated for the program trade, nevertheless this well-made and scripted Indian yarn, out of the Regal Films schedule for 20th-Fox, stands as an example of intelligence and skill applied to a modest budget. Chances are hampered somewhat by lack of strong name values, but this offering still can fit a wide variety of situations with good results.

Scripted by Carroll Young, Kurt Neumann and Eric Norden tale underlines predicament of proud Apaches after defeat of Geronimo, without undue sentimentality. Keith Larsen portrays "Apache Kid," an Indian scout working for Army to quell last resistance of scattered war parties and to establish a firm peace. He's a close friend of white scout Jim Davis.

However, he's still Apache. When hotheaded brave George Keymas kills his brother, Larsen fulfils primitive Apache law by hunting down and slaying Keymas. Brassbound army major, Damian O'Flynn, condemns him to prison for this, but Larsen escapes with killer Rodolfo Acosta and his band. During escape, Davis is seriously wounded by Acosta, and thinks his ex-buddy, Larsen, is responsible. After his recovery, Davis goes hunting for Larsen, unjustly accused of Acosta's renewed raids, and Larsen's newly-wed squaw, Eugenia Paul. But Larsen convinces Davis he didn't do the shooting and all three successfully combine against an unsavory trio of white bounty hunters, after Larsen's scalp.

Larsen is becoming a specialist in Indian roles (he's tv's "Brave Eagle") and turns in a perceptive, well-balanced portrayal. Davis, with a strong role, impresses. Miss Paul debuts with a bright personality and engaging promise. As unreconstructed Apache menace, Acosta contributes convincing savagery.

Yet John Miljan, as elderly, crippled Apache chief, is very good in support. O'Flynn, Keymas, Lane Bradford and Dehl Berti, also rate favorable notice.

Elmo Williams' direction is deft and sensitive, cleanly outlining problems of period and place, yet leaving proceedings with plenty of well-thought-out action. Technical credits reflect favorably to behind-the-camera crew, considering short budget. Kove.

Amanecer en Puerta Oscura
(Whom God Forgives)
(SPANISH-COLOR)

Berlin, July 2.

Juan Kopecky production. Madrid. Stars Francisco Rabal, Luis Pena, Alberto Farnese, Isabel de Ponce. Directed by Jose M. Forque. Screenplay, Alfonso Sastre, N. Zaro, Jose M. Forque; music, Regino Sainz de la Maza; camera (Eastmancolor), Cecilio Paniagua. At Berlin Film Fest. Running time, 99 MINS.

Spain's entry at the Berlin film fest turned out to be a thrilling tale centering around three murderers who are chased, captured and sentenced to death. One of them, however, is acquitted due to God's decision—the finger of Jesus el Rico during a religion procession points at him and, according to an old Spanish religious law, this means acquittal.

Film has impressive acting and excellent color photography on its plus side. Direction is not smooth all the way but suspense prevails throughout. Due to pic's religious ingredients, it won't have general appeal but stands a good chance in Latin territories. Reception in Berlin was split two ways—some were thrilled, others bored. Hans.

Felicidad
(MEXICAN-COLOR)

Berlin, July 3.

Cinematografica Nacional, S.A. production. Stars Gloria Lozano, Carlos Lopez Moctezuma and Fanny Schiller. Directed by Alfonso Corona Blake. Screenplay, Emilo Costallido; camera, Rosalio Solano; music, Raul Savista. At Berlin Film Fest. Running time, 121 MINS.

This Spanish release centers around an aging professor who falls in love with a girl whom he pretends to marry. Since he, however, is already married, this brings the girl the biggest disillusionment of her life, while his own marriage nearly goes to the rocks. Latino plotting is hard for others to take seriously. However, "Felicidad" has positive values. One is beautiful Gloria Lozano, who sympathetically portrays the femme lead, the other one is Moctezuma who, very convincingly, enacts her aging partner.

Overlong Egyptian feature mounts an attack against "capitalists" and demands rights and freedom for the needy. Remarkably clumsy in its techniques, often unintentionally funny, mostly just too noisy—this is (or would be if shown) a strange item for western audiences.

Farid Shawki, who also produced this one, has an interesting face as star. He claimed here picture shows an important aspect of Egypt's society. Be that as it may. Hans.

Ghana, West African colony which just recently obtained its independence from the United Kingdom, has in this full-length documentary first of its own film production. Film depicts this little state's independence festivities and attempts to explain how much and how long its populace has been longing for freedom.

Colorful dances and horse races are the highlights of this presentation which, in all, emerges as a rather awkward and technically amatuerish but occasionally touching message of human aspiration. Hans.

Berlin, July 2.

Jadran Film production, Zagreb-Dubrava. Stars Boris Buzancic, Mira Nikolic, Zvonimir Rogoz, Zlata Perlic. Directed by Nikola Tanhofer; screenplay, Nikola Tanhofer, after an idea by Pero Budak; camera, Slavko Zalar; music, Milo Cipra. At Berlin Film Festival. Running time, 99 MINS.

Yugoslavian film industry product has considerably improved in recent years. This pic is by no means a masterpiece but it has impressive camerawork, good acting and even an interesting plot which may give it some (limited) chances for art houses. It's the story of a young medic who comes to a deserted village whose narrow-minded inhabitants first show a dislike for him but in the end he wins their confidence when he frees them from a notorious evildoer.

Direction by Nikola Tanhofer deserves the compliment of being at least satisfactory. Boris Buzancic, the medico, turns in a fully believable performance. Mira Nikolic, who gives her screen debut in this, portrays Bojka, the girl he falls in love with. Miss Nikolic, a real beauty, shows promising talent.

Technically, film is not smooth all the way but that doesn't spoil much the general good overall impression. Hans.

Ruf Der Goetter
(Call of the Gods)

Berlin, July 3.

Schorcht release. Directed by Dietrich Wawrzyn. Camera (Eastmancolor), Klaus Schumann; music, Peter Sandloff; commentator, Ernst Schnabel; editing, Heinz Pohl; expedition and production manager, Peter H. Backhaus. At Berlin Fest. Running time, 78 MINS.

This full-length documentary, an official German entry at the Berlin Film Festival, attempts to give an insight into India, its people, landscapes and culture. Although it's been declared "particularly valuable" by W. Germany's classification board, pic emerges as a considerable disappointment. It's rather jumpy and narration is poor.

Film's only asset is very beautiful Eastmancolor shooting. Hans.

Crooner Frankie Vaughan on the run from a murder rap in army camp. Strong dramatic values.

London, July 4.

Associated British-Pathe release of an Anna Neagle production. Stars George Baker and Frankie Vaughan. Produced by Anna Neagle. An adult type of deadend kid drama that provides a good vehicle for the radio and disk crooner Frankie Vaughan. It is overlong but presents an entertaining problem of topical interest, the absorption by the army of juvenile delinquents. Lacking discipline and hating all kind of authority some come through and make fine men —some don't.

Story is set on the coastal outskirts of Liverpool docks, where a gang of youngsters make their headquarters, and though in the main harmless, get blamed for much of the neighborhood trouble. Their leader, Frankie and his pal are called up for military service, are posted to the same regiment and immediately get involved in brawls. A malicious older recruit fakes the rookies' instructions on the initiative test and the pair set out across the minefield, after knocking out the guards. Frankie is used to mines washed up near the docks and gets through, but his buddy gets killed and he is held responsible. In a fight the hoaxer draws a gun on him and gets killed, and from then on the dockside kid is on the run. After hiding out in his old rocky caves, he is sheltered by his girl and found by the Army Chaplain, who believes his story and persuades him to return for trial. Another soldier finally testifies and saves him from the condemned cell for a conventional happy ending.

Frankie Vaughan does well in this, his first screen appearance, his main obstacle being his maturity, which is too obvious in the early stages, but matters less when he goes into uniform. George Baker gives a sincere performance as the sympathetic Padre and Ray Jackson is good as the other rookie. Carole Lesley looks attractive as the girl who is pitchforked into romance with the deserter, and Jackie Lane, sister of Joan Collins, is cute as her tough little room mate. Army types are well characterized, and a good deal of humor is extracted from what is in the main a serious subject. Camera work is effective and direction by Herbert Wilcox on a high level. Clem.

Footsteps In The Night

Run-of-the-mill mystery.

Hollywood, July 18.

Allied Artists release of Ben Schwalb Production. Stars Bill Elliott. Features Don Haggerty, Eleanore Tanin, Douglas Dick, James Flavin, Gregg Palmer, Harry Tyler, Ann Griffith, Robert Shayne. Directed by Jean Yarbrough. Screenplay, Albert Band, Elwood Ullman; story, Band; camera, Harry Neumann; editor, Neil Brunnenkant; music, Marlin Skiles. Previewed July 17, '57. Running time, 62 MINS.

Mary Raiken	Eleanore Tanin
Henry Johnson	Douglas Dick

Mr. Bradbury	James Flavin
Pat Orvello	Gregg Palmer
Dick Harris	Harry Tyler
June Wright	Ann Griffith

A short and routine meller, "Footsteps In The Night" has Bill Elliott as the Jack Webbish detective called in to investigate a murder. The side-kick in this case is Don Haggerty. Douglas Dick, an avid card-playing gambler, is the main suspect, having played cards with the victim shortly before his strangulation, but the murderer actually is Gregg Palmer, neighborhood gas station owner with a long police record. Seems as though he mistakenly kills the wrong man in his attempt at robbery. Eleanore Tanin portrays Dick's fiance, but has nothing whatsoever to do with the plot.

The Albert Band-Elwood Ullman screenplay, from a story by the former, provides the basic mystery ingredients to keep up the interest, and Jean Yarbrough's direction gets it all on the screen competently.

Elliott has the majority of the footage, and his underplaying goes with the role. The others all turn in stock stints, with Dick faring perhaps a bit better than the rest.

Producer Ben Schwalb used his Allied Artists bungalow as the setting for a goodly portion of the action. Neal.

That Night

Excellently-made N. Y. production deals with heart attack and its family consequences. Despite power to grip audiences two factors must be overcome in selling: grim theme and tv origin of story.

Universal release of Galahad Production (Himan Brown) produced for RKO. Stars John Beal and Augusta Dabney. Directed by John Newland. Screenplay and story, Robert Wallace and Jack Rowles; camera, Maurice Hartzband; editor, David Cooper; music, Mario Nascimbene. Previewed in N. Y. July 15, '57. Running time, 84 MINS.

"That Night," one of the RKO pictures taken over by Universal, falls into an unusual category. It is a well-made, excellently performed and compelling film. Yet its very effectiveness may hamper its chances at the boxoffice. Many viewers may find it unpleasant just because it so successfully brings a sense of personal identification.

The Galahad production, produced by former radio packager Himan Brown at his (built with 'Inner Sanctum' profits) New York Production Center, is the story of a heart attack. It details minutely the experiences of a 41-year-old commuter who suffers his first seizure. Film is both a sociological and a clinical study.

It presents the tensions and strains of modern society that bring on the attack. The victim, a writer of tv commercials, is a "typical" suburbanite. He works in Manhattan and has a house in Connecticut. He is harrassed and badgered in his two separate worlds. In Manhattan, there is the pressure of his work, unpredictable hours, and equally unpredictable demands from his bosses and clients. In Connecticut, there is the house, a wife and three children, washing machines, tv sets and all the expensive gadgetry of modern living to "keep up with the Jones."

The attack comes as the man is rushing to catch a train. Then follows in almost documentary style his trip to the hospital, his own fears of death, the treatment, notification of his family, the crisis, and his eventual recovery. The experience results in a complete reevaluation of his standards, a new sympathetic understanding between husband and wife, and a completely new outlook on life in general.

To the credit of those connected with making the film is the fact that they have done it honestly. Some of the scenes are so realistically staged that sensitive viewers could feel they are experiencing

Philadelphia, July 23.

For the third straight week theatres in the mid-city died. A long heatwave, climaxed by 100° plus mercury Sunday (21) and yesterday (Monday), added to low grosses in all houses. Only exceptions were "Around the World" at the Midtown and "Seven Wonders" at the Boyd. Duel between Pat Boone at the Goldman and Elvis Presley at the Randolph proved a Mexican standoff as neither did business. "Beau James," doing well elsewhere, retired after one term at the Randolph to make way for the Presley opus, "Loving You."

Free morning and night street parades and other counter attractions diverted attention away from the showhouses during the just-ended Shriners' national convention and they're doing likewise currently as far as the just-started Aquatennial, local annual summer mardi gras, is concerned. 'Delinquent' 16G Leads Indpls.

Indianapolis, July 23.

Biz is perky at most first-run situations here this stanza, with air conditioning in sticky heat a helpful factor. "Delicate Delinquent," spurred by Jerry Lewis' personal appearances opening day, is going great at Indiana to lead town. "Affair to Remember" is extra good at Keith's, "Sweet Smell of Success" oke at Loew's. "Johnny Tremain" is getting modest results at Circle. Hot Air Still Deflates N.Y. But 'Stockings' Sock 170G, 'Affair' Sultry 105G, 'Rain' Robust 31G

Weekend heat wave, with temperatures hovering in the high 90's, tended to wilt Broadway business generally. Biz was especially clobbered on Saturday, but there was a slight pickup on Sunday. General exodus to the beaches and country-side of native Gothamites and absence of tourists in midtown area made something of a ghost town of Broadway.

Radio City Music Hall, with "Silk Stockings" (M-G), appeared to overcome torrid temperatures, scoring a great $170,000 or near for opening round concluding today (Wed.). "Affair to Remember" (20th), in first Roxy week, also showed promise with a big $105,000 anticipated for week ending tomorrow (Thurs.). Despite hefty take, "Affair" was victim of heat wave and wicket count was slightly below hopes. "Hatful of Rain," another 20th entry, racked up a solid $31,000 for tee-off round at Victoria for session winding up today (Wed.).

Surprise of the week was the activity at the artie Normandie where the kid-appeal Walt Disney reissue, "Bambi," attracted the moppets for a rousing $16,000 or near expected for opening round concluding tomorrow (Thurs.). Turnstile activity at the Normandie is the best since the previous Disney reissue of "Cinderella."

Except for the hard-ticket entries, the long-runners suffered in the heat. Second week of "Band of Angels" dipped to $20,000 or near at the Paramount. "Pride and Passion," in fourth Capitol week, tallied okay $35,000. "Sweet Smell of Success," in fourth Loew's State week, brought in fair $19,000. "Beau James," in fourth Astor session, was also fair at $14,000. "The Delicate Delinquent," Jerry Lewis solo starrer, called it quits at Mayfair after three rounds, scoring okay $13,000 for bowout week.

"The Rising of the Moon," John Ford entry for Warner Bros. release continued as the best of the artie pictures with a great $11,500 in second week at 55th St. Playhouse. "Passionate Summer," a French import, got off to a good start at the Paris Theatre, with $5,500 for three days. "Maid in Paris," another French import, continued okay with fine $8,000 for second session at Walter Reade's Baronet Theatre.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,300; 75-$2) — "Beau James" (Par) (5th wk) Fourth session ending today (Wed.) seems likely to reach fair $14,000. Previous session tallied $18,000.

Little Carnegie (L. Carnegie) (550; $1.25-$1.80) — "Lovers' Net" (Times). Opened Monday (22). In ahead, "Nana" (Times) concluded 14-week run Sunday (21) with good $4,050.

Baronet (Reade) (430; $1.25-$1.80)—"Maid in Paris" (Cont.) (3d wk). Initial followup round appears headed for a fine $8,000 or near for stanza ending tomorrow (Thurs.). Opening week hit sock $10,000. Continues.

Capitol (Loew) (4,820; $1-$2.50) — "Pride and Passion" (UA) (5th wk). Fourth session concluding tomorrow (Thurs.) is estimated to hit an okay $35,000. Third week rolled up $48,000. Continues.

Criterion (Moss) (1,671; $1.80-$3.30)—"10 Commandments" (Par) (37th wk). The 36th stanza winding up tomorrow (Thurs.) is seen hitting a strong $42,000 for 16 performances. Last week, also for 16 performances, was $43,000.

Fresh Pix Perk Cincy; 'Passage' Fast $12,500, 'Curse' Ditto, 'Beau' 11½G

Cincinnati, July 23.

Three winning new bills are perking pix traffic this week. Shaping for the lead by a comfy margin is "Night Passage" at Keith's and Twin Drive In, a rare Cincy day-and-dater. "Curse of Frankenstein" looms hefty at the Palace and "Beau James" appears rosy in the big Albee. Holdover "Delicate Delinquent" retains power in third main line stanza.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (3,100; 90-$1.25)— "Beau James" (Par). Pleasing $11,500. Same last week for "Prince and Showgirl" (WB).

Capitol (SW-Cinerama) (1,376; $1.20-$2.65) — "Seven Wonders" (Cinerama) (59th wk). Visitors for Cincy Reds' games lifting to hotsy $18,500 over $17,000 last week.

Esquire (Shor) (500; 50-90)— "Young and Passionate" (Indie). Okay $1,200. Last week, "Saint Joan" (UA) (2d wk), $800.

Argentine Exhibs Take Case to Public

Furious at Forced Bookings of Already Heavily Subsidized Native Films

Buenos Aires, July 23.

An Exhibitor Federation's session here which lasted from 9 a.m. to midnight, resulted in a fortright statement in press, under a banner headline: "Violation of Free Enterprise" and "The Time Has Come To Speak Clearly About Argentine Films and Their Compulsory Exhibition."

The Exhibitors say that masquerading under "nationalism," the producers are determined to over-ride all rights but their own, and in self-defense the exhibitors are prepared to resort to all legal means to end such dictatorial measures.

Although they oppose the new Film Law in principle, Argentine theatres feel it might have been tried out on an experimental basis, but the Screen Institute, which has administrative powers, is proceeding to dispose of their property in a completely arbitrary manner, to benefit producers.

Exhibitors reveal that the Institute went back on a promise to apply obligatory protection only to films made after the "Revolution." "La Bestia Humana," which they were forced to release yesterday, was made in Peron's time, with a 1,900,000 peso loan from the State Bank. Even before release the picture received a 675,032.-peso grant from the proceeds of the 60 centavo boxoffice tax created under the new Film Law. This means that it has already cost the public 3 million pesos before release. Another such film, "Continente Blanco" (Mar del Plata) has had a grant from the same tax of 478,756 pesos. In view of this generosity, why should the producers want further help from exhibitors?

Labor unions, many of them former Peronists, are siding with the producers and urging the Government ram down the throats of the exhibitors the full unpalatable dish of the law. Exhibs have lately been in open refusal to show the films, though previously ordered.

Especially hateful to the theatres is the dictated "holdovers" of films long beyond their boxoffice value. Houses operate with empty seats up to 60% because the native Argentine studios' product must be "protected."

Sex and/or Crime Bans Yank Films In W. Pakistan

Indicative of the film censorship problem throughout the entire Far East, the West Pakistan government since January of 1957 has banned 14 films in their entirety and has censored a host of others.

A U.S. Government report says that, since Oct. 1955 no fewer than 44 Hollywood films were banned in W. Pakistan. Among them are "Summertime," "Kismet," "King of the Khyber Rifles," "The Last Wagon" and "Don't Knock the Rock."

Report said film censorship was being taken "very seriously" by top Pakistani officials who are particularly alert to all sequences in westerns that "shock Muslim sensibilities. "It added that most of the American films coming into Pakistan were of the "sex and struggle" variety.

Neither sex nor struggle make suitable screen ingredients for the Pakistanis, with the censor board particularly alert to sex scenes and sequences detailing techniques of crime. Pakistani censors see eye-to-eye (for once) with their Indian colleagues who also are very tough on the American product and have no hesitation to ban it or cut a film to shreds.

While the film companies continue to be harassed by foreign censors, the pressures have abated somewhat in many areas. It is particularly in the more primitive countries that governments tend to fear the impact of American films on their people. Violence in American pictures is still the number one complaint in most areas.

Television & Culture

London, July 23.

A party of 70 American journalists will attend the World Commercial Television Congress to be held in London on Sept. 18, under the auspices of President Eisenhower's "People To People" Foundation, set up last August.

During a day-long session the best examples of commercial video from America, Britain, Canada, Brazil, Mexico, West Germany and Cuba will be screened. London journalists and Continental reporters residents here will also be present.

Between the morning and afternoon sessions there will be a luncheon attended by the press and U.S. Ambassador to London, John Hay Whitney, as well as President Eisenhower's personal representative Charles E. Wilson. Wilson will speak on "Television as a World Cultural and Economic Force."

The two sessions will be devoted to the screening of actual commercials and program excerpts. After each counrty's contribution there will be a question and answer time for the press.

Cuba's Revolution Murders Films

Santiago de Cuba, July 23.

Film theatre owners here have denied rumors that they plan to close their theatres due to a lack of business. Upon hearing the rumors, Santiago's police chief, Lt. Col. Jose Maria Salas Canizares, had summoned the owners to a conference to urge them not to close. They denied planning to do so, but did point out that they are operating at a loss.

Due to the long-running Cuban revolt, which is especially felt in Santiago, where the university is shut down, people prefer not to go out nights in this city. Bars and nightclubs are generally empty at night, and the city's only casino, at the Casa Grande Hotel, rarely has more than a handful of customers. Average attendance at the city's two main theatres, Cuba and Augllera, is between 40 and 50 persons on any night.

Sales Canizares suggested that the theatre owners try to work out an agreement with the electricity company to cut down on their electrical bills.

Natives Convert Town Into Picturesque Resort

Barcelona, July 23.

Sitges Beach, about 25 miles out of Barcelona, has undergone a change of atmosphere promoted by the local citizenry formerly devoted to shoe manufacturing. Transformation into a resort for middle class Europeans (few Americans show up) has produced a gay and colorful place with extremely modest prices.

Tiny place has the following open air cafes:

La Cabana, Sacromonte, Patio Bar, Oliva's, El Prado and El Retiro. Inclosed quarters are Comodin, La Galena, Granada, Los Toros, La Cala and Las Vegas. Entertainment is nearly all flamenco dancing as the tourist expects castagnets and panderetas in Spain.

Another very attractive point as Sitges are the Bodegas, plenty of them, where good wine costs very little.

Aids Negro College Fund

Houston, July 23.

All profits of the Chocolate Bayou Drive-In Theatre on Thursday (25) was donated to the United Negro College Fund, E. C. Norris, campaign coordinator announced.

The local drive needs $5,000 to meet its quota of $25,000. The national quota is $4,000,000 to aid 31 privately operated Negro colleges.

43 FEWER PRODUCTIONS SO FAR IN JAPAN, '57

Tokyo, July 23.

For the first time postwar a decrease in Japan's motion picture production is noted. Figures released by the Japan Motion Picture Producers' Federation reveal a total of 233 films for the first half of the calendar year, a drop of 43 for the same period of last semi-annum.

Breakdown of the major studios lists: Toei 54, Toho 45, Daiei 38, Shochiku, 37, Nikkatsu 32, and Shinoho 26. Further inspection reveals that 149 or 63.9 per cent were modern dramas while 84 or 36.1 per cent were historical.

A trend toward wide-screen productions started during the January-June period with "Otori-jo no Hanayome" in ToieScope, "Emperor Meiji and the Great Russo-Japanese War" by Shintoho and Daiei's "Jigokubana" in VistaVision. Toei has continued heavy w-s production and now has a total of 13 completed.

Increase in the use of color was also significant. In the period, 37 pictures or 15.9 per cent of the total were tinted, nearly a threefold hike over the 13 color films for the term last year. Studio breakdown shows: Shoshiku 9, Toei 9, Daiei 8, Toho 4 and Nikkatsu 3.

Footage for the period totaled 1,707,477 feet, averaging 7,328 feet per film. Average screening time was 1 hour, 21 minutes. Compared to 1956 figures, total footage represented a decrease of 239,678 or 12.3 per cent. But average footage per picture was upped by 273 feet. In particular, Shochiku, Daiei and Nikkatsu made longer films.

The half-year period was also marked by the successes of feature length documentaries including "Shirol Sammyaku," "Zoo Dairy" and "Antartica."

The term saw the release of 105 imported films, a hike of 20.3 per cent over corresponding period of last year. These included pictures from: the United States 67, France 11, England 8, Italy 4, Germany 4, Soviet Russia 2, Spain 2, and one each from Sweden, Hong Kong and Australia plus four co-productions.

Experts saw 459 dramas, 58 cultural and educational films and 181 newsreels. Dramas went to: Okinawa 238, United States (including Hawaii) 90, Taiwan 81, Red China 9, Soviet Russia 9, Hong Kong 8, Poland 5, Italy 5, France 4, two each to Germany, Turkey and Brazil, and one each to Thalland, Burma and Argentina.

Peace Negotiated With Cine-Techs On U.S. Quotas

London, July 23.

Assn. of Cine and Television Technicians and the Motion Picture Assn. of America have come to terms on the issue of employment of foreign producers and directors on British quota pictures. A basis of understanding was reached after a two-hour meeting at the Ministry of Labor last week.

The terms of settlement will now be referred back to the parties concerned for ratification. This was the third meeting held since the union threatened to withdraw labor from British productions sponsored by American companies.

The dispute stemmed from action inaugurated by Technicians, who were determined to impose an agreed limitation on the employment of foreign producers and directors in British pictures. They have a quota arrangement with the British Film Producers Assn. but American companies are excluded from membership, and are outside the terms of that deal. The union originally threatened to "stop work" on July 1, but the Ministry of Labor, acting as a peace-making body, took the initiative of calling the parties together and paved the way for a settlement.

Benign Policy on Spain's Film Co-op

Madrid, July 23.

Spanish film industry is taking a close look at Films Espanoles, Cooperativa, a co-op film production company recently chartered. While film cooperatives date back some 20 years to Eduardo Maroto's Cinema de Madrid, the latest to appear is by far the most important venture of its kind.

This one groups three of Spain's crack directors: Juan Antonio Bardem, Luis Berlanga and Nieves Conde. Each of the three will direct at least one film a year and all three will collaborate on the artistic preparation of each project. Other prominent members of the Cooperativea are cameraman Francisco Sempere, vet production manager (and prexy of FEC) Rafael Carrillo and finance chief Rafael Alcala.

Spain offers singular inducements to this "cooperate." FEC, for example, is eligible to a twin loan —one from the Cooperative Sindicato and another from the Sindicato Nacional del Espectaculo. Minimum loan in each case is 20% of the total budget and, when funds are plentiful, can go as high as 30%. Parallel advantage is that both loans are forthcoming at the start of production. The usual Espectuaculo loan is granted midway through shooting.

Further reducing the need for capital outlay, the co-op will pay director and cast only 40% of budget salary and 50% to staff and technicians. The remainder comes out of the proportionate split of profits which the cooperators anticipate from local and world market exploitation.

FEC associates need not calculate profits before and after taxes. The finance ministry benignly recognizes co-ops as tax-free organizations. In terms of the budget alone, status represents a 10% saving.

Karlovy Vary Charivari '57

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Karlovy Vary, July 23.

Last week of this Tenth Karlovy Vary Film Festival ended in a blaze of midnight parties that had the scribes, attending the three or four showings a day, groggy. Best party was the Russo pouring of vodka.

This year's fest showed a sudden flushing of photogenic actresses from various countries which helped give the last week of the fest the photobulb-popping atmosphere of Western equivalents.

Though the U.S. counted itself out of the fest, due to the U.S. refusal to enter new films in competition and the Czech refusal of U.S. features already shown at film festivals, plus the breakdown of U.S. film sales due to disagreements on number and price, Americans here were invited cordially to all parties. Red Chinese deliberated first but then politely invited Yanks.

Gustav Machaty is talking of remaking his "Ecstacy," in which Hedy Lamarr cavorted in the altogether, in Germany this year.

Czech attempts at "cheesecake" in their photos are sadly lacking in flair. They managed to make Isabelle Sarli, 1955's Miss Argentina, look less than attractive on a cover of a special fest magazine.

One of the American delegates arrived with a load of chewing gum and was most popular. Gum is taboo here, both as an unnecessary item and as a sloppy vestige of American folkways. However, the Czechs love gum and children followed the loaded American around like a pied piper. Princely donor regretted not having little American flags on them.

Czechs have "heard" about U.S. stars rather than "seen" them. Gregory Peck is known to many only via an Anglo picture, "The Million Pound Note."

Czechs are intensely interested in any American books. Film reps have VARIETY subscriptions and many have already "mastered" the jargon.

Festival had a goodly number of interesting features entered. Made for a good looksee at Eastern pic trends and content. Shorts were also in abundance. Thus the first "A"-rated Karlovy Vary Fest turned out about on par with its bigger brothers in the West in sweep entries and interest. Of course the Western glamor was missing and the amount of film sales did not equal the Western turnover.

Two London Weeks Before Royal & Co. Crosses Pond

Prior to its fifth tour of the United States in September, the Royal Ballet will give a two weeks' season at the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden commencing Aug. 20. Among the ballets will be two by Frederick Ashton, "Le Peri," and "Rinaldo and Armida."

Dancers depart England on Sept. 1 and open at the Metropolitan Opera House in N. Y. on Sept. 8 for four weeks.

Italy and Spain Trade Affinity Newly Evident

Rome, July 23.

The Italian film industry is continuing its two-way love affair with Spain, resulting in an increased number of co-productions with that country, as well as continuing ample use of the Hiberic peninsula as location for Italo pix.

Established some years ago via a twin production pact, set up and later elaborated when arrangement was found profitable, the close Italo-Spanish link stems from two basic premises. One is fact that relatively inexpensive items may be produced in combination for mutually advantageous payoff ("Marcelino," "Pepote," others especially in religioso or semi-religious idiom), while as is s.o.p. with dual productions, pix count in both countries' quotas.

Second, and more important point is that, with the embargo on most Yank pix in Spain, the Italian film has found a relatively new and very profitable market in that country. Local productions have been known to run up lengthy runs in Madrid top showcases, while such Italo stars as Vittorio DeSica, Alberto Sordi, and many others have become more and more familiar to Hispano fans, often in lieu of the missing Yank firmament.

Currently in progress in Spain are three Italian productions in combo with Spanish opposites. Director Franco Rossi has just gunned "La Tenera Estate" in Barcelona, pic starring Walter Chiari, Ruben Rojo, Yvonne Monlaur, and Isabelle Corey. Enlapa-Balcazar are producing this one.

Aldo Fabrizi is in Madrid, winding an acting-directing effort called "Il Maestro" (The Teacher), while in the same city, Alberto Sordi is about to start work on "Il Marito" for Fortunia of Rome and Chamartin of Madrid, and co-starring Aurora Bautista. Other items, recently finished, include "Un Angelo a Brooklyn with Pablito Calvo and Peter Ustinov, "L'Eretico" with Folco Lulli, and "Agguato a Tangeri," with Gino Cervi, Genevieve Page, and Edmund Purdom. Future plans are being drawn up for a "Spanish Carousel," "Gold of Spain," and several others, all during the next six months.

FRISCO BALLET HITS LATINS FOR STATE

San Francisco, July 23.

Director Lew Christensen, said 22-dancer ensemble's itinerary will include Mexico City, Caracas, Rio de Janeiro, Sao Paulo, Montevideo, Buenos Aires, Santiago, Lima and Bogota.

Company will take its music director, Earl Murray, and a Frisco pianist and employ local musicians en route. A pair of guest stars will be engaged to work with the company.

WHEN SOVIETS MEAN 'BUSINESS'

Spain's Cure for Delinquents

Madrid, July 23.

Madrid press, carrying crescendo items on recent juve misconduct, front-paged action taken by a small provincial municipality in punishing two young delinquents. "Gamberros" (as rowdies are termed here), were sentenced to sweep the main streets of town at the busy hour, under public glare. Each wore a shoulder sign tabbed "Por Gamberro" (for rowdyism).

Widespread publication would seem to indicate not only newspaper, but government approval of punishment inflicted.

UFI Assets Case Starting Sept. 6

Berlin, July 16.

Civil Land Court of Duesseldorf takes up on Sept. 6 the suit brought by exiled cinema owners against the liquidators of the former Reich property (UFI). Ousted (by Nazis) owners, represented by Josef Eckert, point out that they have not been compensated for loss of property beyond the Oder-Neisse to the degree provided by the Bundestag. They demand that the UFA theatres, already denationalized, be returned to the liquidators to meet claims.

UFI liquidators asked date of the trial be delayed to Oct. 15 but the court rejected this request. Simultaneously with the trial against the Ufi liquidators, there for collection of evidence. Latter is also brought forward by Joseph Eckert.

Associated British Corp. Discloses Profits Of Main and Video Biz

London, July 23.

Although recording a substantial profit increase for the financial year ended March 31 last, Sir Philip Warter, chairman of Associated British Picture Corp., in his annual statement to stockholders, explains that theatre earnings have been maintained only by increased admission charges an warns that as many as 600 cinemas have no hope any longer of operating profitably. Among the total are a number owned by their organization.

Associated topper explains that the reduction and modification in the admission tax scale, introduced in the Easter Budget, would be largely offset by the increase in the statutory levy and the new wage award. In the circumstances, he could see little alternative to further closures, depriving the public of the amenities on which they have come to rely and in the long run killing the goose which has laid the golden eggs for the benefit of successive Chancellors for so many years. Given fair and reasonable treatment in regard to taxation, picture theatres could meet the need of providing adequate means of relaxation and recreation. He earnestly hoped the Chancellor "for the sake of everyone in the industry" would see the wisdom of making a substantial reduction in the cinema tax in next year's Budget.

In his statement, Sir Philip reports that company's subsidiary, ABC-Television, has wound up its first financial year with a "satisfactory profit." They had made a good start with this new venture and the business had been established on a solid foundation. They had a television contingencies reserve of $2,100,000 to provide for initial losses, but, although it had not been necessary to call on the fund, the board felt it prudent to retain it as a general contingencies reserve.

Sir Philip reports that, of the $2,660,000 previously transferred to theatre development reserve, they had spent $2,371,000 on installation of wide screens, anamorphic lenses, etc. The unrequired balance had been written back to the profit and loss account.

Reviewing the Corporation's activities, the chairman said its studios had had busiest year and, in addition to feature production, were now also used for the making of telepix.

70 1957 Starts, Italy's Film Biz Slowly Recovers

Rome, July 23.

Italian production continues its slow return to "normality" after a long period of crisis. Some 70 features have been started since Jan. 1, 19 of them in color, and 29 shot in a widescreen system. Largest number of features had their start in April: 19, while the lowest figure was racked up in May 5.

Currently, some 31 Italian features are in production here and elsewhere. Of these, 13 are going in Rome studios, eight on location throughout Italy, while three are in production in France, three in Spain, two in Jugoslavia, one in China, and one in India.

Ten recently finished shooting are being edited.

'STUDYING POSSIBILITY' OF ITALO EXHIB AID

Rome, July 23.

The Italian Government is "studying the possibility" of some tax cuts to alleviate the currently critical exhibitor crisis, according to Raffaele Resta, the new Undersecretary for Entertainment.

Resta made the statement in discussing current status of the Italian Film industry to the Italian House of Parliament. With regard to the condition in which the industry finds itself, Resta termed it "satisfactory," noting that the protective law approved last September had not really become practically effective yet.

The Undersecretary also said his office was watching the extension of Italy's telenet and its effects on the pic sector, and promised that a solution equitable for both sides would be worked out.

Censorship, both of pix and legit productions, was another principal topic touched in Resta's speech, in which he hoped for a rapid approval by the government of the proposed new censorship law replacing the outdated present legislation, instituted during the Mussolini regime.

ALWAYS SPELL IT AS B-A-R-T-E-R

Karlovy Vary, July 23.

The political and bureaucratic approach to business (which turns out always to mean "barter") was well demonstrated by the Russian delegation here at the recent international film festival. The Russians are thinking in terms of a "Russian Film Week" in New York but their minds cannot conceive of this except on an exchange of product, or barter, basis. There must be an "American Film Week" in Moscow.

Seemingly it never occurs to the Soviet film men that nothing now stops them having a "Russian Film Week" in Manhattan. They can simply move in, make their own private deal for a theatre, announce their offerings and see what happens just as the French did two months ago in San Francisco. But this is capitalistic thinking and capitalistic marketing techniques. If there are obvious risks such procedure sidesteps the interminable delays of bureaucratic negotiation and protocol.

The Russian delegation made it evident that they totally fail to understand a free market, the American system of each individual film being sold separately, or the rule of public response as the sole determinant of the film rental via shared percentages between theatre and distributor.

Russians keep arguing that their films ought to be greenlighted by the Washington government. Patient explanation of the unreality of this expectation does not penetrate the Russian mind. They apparently deem it just "counter-propaganda."

Apparently the United States action in naming Eric Johnston of the Motion Picture Assn. as an "Ambassador" to the Middle East fatally weakened the case that the MPAA itself was an independent agency.

After 40 years (since 1917, that is) under Communism, which defines Government as such, Russians cannot imagine unilateral commercial enterprise using Russian gold for expenses in a free market. This reflects in their frequent reference to wanting to "send a delegation" to the United States. Delegationitis is the Soviet disease in foreign countries as committeeitis is the preoccupation of the bureaucracy at home.

For sheer exercise in intellectual frustration try sometime to explain to Russians what the Motion Picture Assn. of America is. They flop the basic point that this is a private body, that not all American producers belong and that among the private companies which do belong distinct conflict of viewpoint is constant. Try to tell Moscow about a Max Youngstein, an Otto Preminger, a Monsignor Little of the American Legion of Decency. You get a blank exoression.

'Please Tell Us'

Delegates included Nikolay Danikov, Deputy Minister of Culture and directors Lev Arnshtam and Alexandre Zarachi. One of their suggestions was that it might be a happy thing if the MPPA dispatched to Moscow a qualified U. S. film showman to pick out 10 films that would have "appeal" in the States. Apparently the Soviet producers would dearly love something to go by in their thinking.

Soviets adamantly maintain that there is a "place" for their films in general U. S. market and also use the old chestnut, until recently used by the French, that some of the U. S. major distributors ought to handle their product.

Russians thought that if film biz (i.e. exchange) ever started with the U. S. the USSR could take from 20-25 Yank features annually. They now make about 85 foreign films a year (none from Uncle Sam) and export 115. They said that the American version of "War and Peace" (Par) was liked by all the individual Russians who had seen it, but they are still going ahead making their own version.

USSR would welcome coproduction with America and hoped to someday exchange films.

London's 90° Heat Wave Broken; '80 Days,' 'Prince & Showgirl' Big

London, July 23.

The end of the heatwave has resulted in a marked upward trend in b.o. returns at most firstrun situations, all of which took a beating when the mercury soared into, and stayed in the 90's. Main interest in the local scene is focussed on "Around the World in 80 Days," being shown here in the CineStage version, which preemed July 2 at the Astoria, with a trio of charity performances. It's now running on a regular nine-shows a week policy, and is playing to capacity, natch, at every performance. House gross is $1,400 per show and the weekly take, therefore, is exactly $12,600.

"The Prince and the Showgirl," the Warner opus, co-starring Marilyn Monroe and Laurence Olivier, has proved a sturdy stayer. Its first Warner week hit a fancy $11,500, the second round dipped slightly to $10,600, but the current frame is soaring to a likely $13,700. "Sweet Smell of Success" made a boff start at the Leicester Square Theatre, with over $6,000 on its initial weekend and prospects of a stout $10,000 for the full stanza. "Bachelor Party" at the London Pavilion is heading for a solid $6,500 in its third round, substantially better than its opening sesh. Among other new entries, "The Shiralee" is finishing its first Empire week with a likely $14,000 and "Beau James," hypoed by a personal by Bob Hope, looks like grossing a fair $7,300 in its opening round at the Plaza.

1921 'KID' EXHIBITING

Amsterdam, July 16.

An Amsterdam judge has ruled that Charles Chaplin's 1921 silent film, "The Kid," may be released by Meteor Film in Amsterdam. At the beginning of 1957 Meteor Film bought rights to re-release "The Kid" for $5,000 from a French company that presumably got its copies from an Italian company where rights of pictures expire after five years.

Shortly before the scheduled date of release the Roy Export Co. in Lichtenstein declared that it owned all rights in "The Kid" for Holland and that release via Meteor Film infringed.

Judge considered that the contracts of Roy Export Co., did not prove its claim.

Resultantly "The Kid" is now showing in two Amsterdam cinemas, the City and Flora, with soundtrack music by Maria Nazzaro, inspired by Perio Morgan, which Chaplin himself would not approve.

TOEI's N.Y. Branch Preems in Fall; More L.A. Staff

Tokyo, July 23.

Toei Motion Picture Co. will open a New York office for promotion of its product. Eijure Takebayashi will leave here in September to prepare for that purpose. Last year, Toei established a Los Angeles office and intends to bolster its sales force to further cash in on the heavy Nisei population in California.

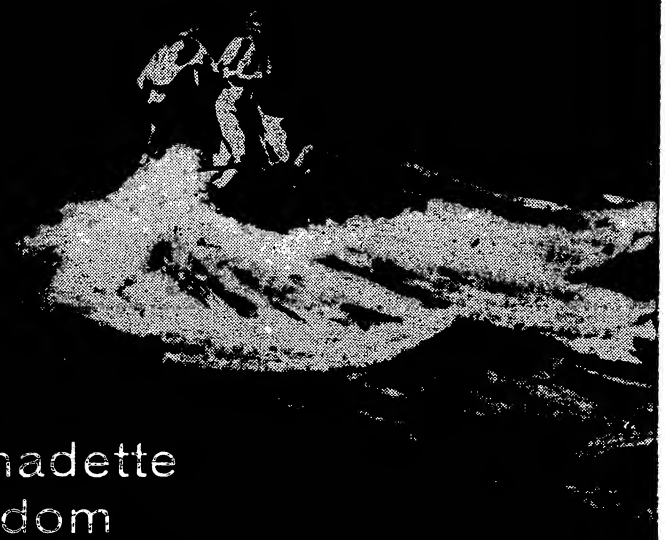
In New York, the studio intends to push such product as "Minamoto Yoshitsune" (Warrior Yoshitsune), "Hahakozo" (Portrait of Mother and Child) and "Fujiwa Ikiteiru" (Living Mt. Fuji). It is understood that Toei topper Hiroshi Okawa signed a contract for distribution of the trio with the Cavalcade Co. when in New York early this year for the Japan Film Festival at the Museum of Modern Art.

Okawa further plans to visit Central and South America in October to open markets, mainly in Brazil and Argentina, where there has been heavy Japanese immigration in recent years.

JAP & WESTERN ARTS IN OSAKA FESTIVAL

Tokyo, July 23.

Plans for an international art festival are being made to take place in Osaka April 10-May 10 of next year.



The idea is to present classic Japanese art forms, including kabuki and noh dramas, Bunraku puppets, the Takarazuka Girls' Opera Troupe and sumo wrestling side by side with Western forms. Under negotiation are invitations for representative artists from a host of foreign nations including the U. S., Britain, France, Germany, Austria, India and Thailand.

Osaka has been selected as the site because it is in the center of Japan cultural triangle of cities—Kyoto, Nara and Kobe—and will enable visitors to make side trips to smaller festivals in the neighboring cities.

The first annual Osaka International Festival of Music, Art and Drama is under joint sponsorship of the Asahi and Mainichi newspapers, NHK (Japan Broadcasting Corp.), the Osaka Prefectural and Municipal Government, the Osaka Chamber of Commerce ;

Where—When—How of New Stars

[PROBLEM ACTIVELY ON U, WARNERS, 20TH WORRY LIST]

Film industry is getting behind a drive to "sell" new faces to the public.

Several studios, notably 20th-Fox, Warner Bros. and Universal, have in recent months been giving the problem some close attention, and as a result, the number of films with comparative "unknowns" in them is increasing.

Talent heads are aware, however, that the mere casting of a newcomer in good parts isn't enough to make a real dent with the public. There are personalities like Pat Boone and Elvis Presdley, who have been borrowed from other media, who accentuate their draw on the screen.

But, in many instances, the new faces are seen once or twice, and then disappear again. What now concerns industryites is how to build up real stars with a drawing power comparable to that of Clark Gable, Lana Turner, Cary Grant, and other top players that in the past have commanded attention almost regardless of the pictures they were in.

U Long Concerned

Lack of new and appealing personalities has long bothered Hollywood. Universal was first to recognize the need for action when it set up its talent school (now dissolved). 20th-Fox just recently created a talent development centre, and Warners has begun to put more young people under contract.

Translating the realization of the need for more stars into action, the studios have begun to energetically cast newcomers. Some come from the stage, others from television. Still others are picked up fresh by the studios. Example would be Diane Varsi at 20th, who was cast in a lead part in "Peyton Place." She'd never been before a camera.

'Rangers' Loaded

At WB, "Darby's Rangers" is full of new faces, and again at 20th, "No Down Payment" will offer the public a roster of new players. It all adds up to Hollywood gradually overcoming the long-held theory that a picture without "names" can't be boxoffice. Two factors contribute to this slow change of heart.

One is a shortage of top stars that still mean anything at the boxoffice and the big coin and participations asked by those that do. Another is the belief that, in today's market, the story counts more than ever.

'Matter of Exposure'

Producer Milton Rackin, who's active at Warner Bros., last week said that, in his opinion, it was no more difficult to create a new screen star than it was in the 1930's, when the screen had virtually no competition. "It's a matter of exposure," he opined. "The trick is, when you've found an exciting new man or woman, to put them into several good pictures, in parts particularly suited for them. You make five consecutive pictures with them, let the public have a good look, and you've got a star."

Rackin reminded that it took people like John Wayne a long time to "catch on." He voiced regret that the studios had given up their stock list of stars, which made for continuous employment, particularly in the days when more pictures were being made. "I think we're gradually coming back to that," he observed, pointing out that Warners alone in recent months has signed some 20 new players.

Not Like Yesteryear

It's noted by others that the business of "making a star" today isn't quite as simple as it used to be. Some say audiences have changed, have become more sophisticated and therefore less apt to idolize a personality. Some feel that Hollywood itself is to blame since it stripped its stars of publicity-built glamor and made them just plain Joes and Janes. Still others point to the new type of talent that has invaded the pictures from tv, talent that puts the emphasis on ability and artistic integrity rather than extrovert behavior.

Finally, there are those who'll blame exhibition for stubbornly resisting the product that doesn't have names to offer for the marquees.

Fact is that the industry isn't really sure what its audience wants. On the one hand, performers with real talent are valued and appreciated. On the other, these same people rarely attain real star status. Several important actresses, several from tv, have come up in recent years, but have made little impact beyond getting good notices. Then there are performers like Jayne Mansfield, whom no one will accuse of an over-supply of talent, but who catch the public's fancy.

What Hollywood really is looking for are players that combine these qualities, and who eventually will show staying power in the old tradition.

Gal Stars Hard to Get

Hollywood, July 23.

Inability to sign femme leads is given as cause for postponement of Bel-Air's "Three Pursued" for United Artists. Had sought Shelley Winters and Linda Darnell.

Was to have been one of indie's costlier productions with four to six weeks schedule. Meanwhile firm is dickering with Warners for multiple picture deal apart from present United contract.

Paramount's 6-to-Go

Hollywood, July 23.

Paramount has six productions set to go before the cameras in the next three months.

Starting in August are Don Hartman's adaptation of "The Matchmaker" and "Houseboat," latter a Mel Shavelson-Jack Rose entry; September, Panama-Frank's "Jayhawkers," Alfred Hitchcock's "From Amongst the Dead," and "Buccaneer," to be produced by Henry Wilcoxin under the Cecil B. DeMille banner; October, "Comanchero," initial indie film to be made by Marlon Brando.

Jack A. Goodman Dies: Dazzling Bookman Was Jerry Wald's N.Y. Eye

Jack A. Goodman, 48, who died over the weekend of a cerebral hemorrhage in Manhattan was not only executive editor of the book publishing house of Simon & Schuster and author but he had in recent years a unique contractual relationship as a story scout for Jerry Wald. First while Wald was still production head at Columbia Pictures and latterly heading his own unit at 20th-Fox, Goodman was Wald's eyes and ears in the literary world.

Goodman was a man of many talents. With the diversion of Leon Shimkin, he and Albert Leventhal were regarded as the new management of Simon & Schuster. Although top editor, Goodman also wrote many of the brilliant ads which characterized this publisher.

Goodman had been a member of the Writers' War Board of the Authors' League and active in many extra curricular ways. His friendships were as numerous as some of his feuds were acid, he and Clifton Fadiman making a point of detesting each other.

Goodman was seriously ill about two years ago and away from his desk for some months under treatment for high blood pressure.

REPUBLIC PICTURES IN PROFIT NOSEDIVE

Republic Pictures earnings for the 26-week period ended April 27 nosedived to $92,586. Profit for the similar half-year stretch ended April 28, 1956 was $1,078,694.

Income for the current 26 weeks was $199,586, less taxes of $107,000, or a net of $92,586. This compares with income of $1,714,694 (including special capital gain of $1,000,000) for the similar 1956 period. Tax bite on that take was $636,000 or a net of $1,078,694.

Today's Actors Demand Dialog If Only Crossing a Room—Mamoulian

By GEORGE GILBERT

Changing motion picture industry came in for some analysis last week from stage and screen director Rouben Mamoulian who feels that both production and exhibition may do well to reappraise themselves with a view toward self improvement. There's too much talk on the screen, he complained, because most film-makers apparently have forgotten that the motion picture is basically an action medium.

"We should recapture the lost magic of the motion picture," Mamoulian urged, "by taking advantage of the fluidity of the camera. In many cases the industry has gone too far away from excellent effects that can be created by angles and cutting." He also deplores the attitude of some actors who believe they can't walk across a room without a line.

Timeless appeal of westerns, Mamoulian noted, is obvious due to their emphasis on action and a minimum of dialog. Moreover, he added, while widescreen techniques such as CinemaScope, VistaVision, etc. have certain benefits one musn't lose sight of the values inherent in conventional 35m black-and-white. After all, "From Here to Eternity," one of the industry's biggest boxoffice pictures, was made in 35m.

Real problem in Mamoulian's opinion is the tendency of some exhibitors to let their theatres deteriorate. "Why," he said, "I went into a Los Angeles theatre on a Thursday night and only seven patrons were inside. At another theatre I was shocked to find only 23.

"But on the floors popcorn and trash crunched under foot and unpleasant odors were evident—hardly an inducement to attract and hold customers. An aura of glamor is required to make people feel that their visit to a theatre is an experience and worth dressing up for."

Now Take Radio City

That "glamorous aura," Mamoulian conceded, has always been found in New York's Radio City Music Hall where the director's recently completed Metro release," "Silk Stockings," is on view. "There the ushers are polite and attentive," he pointed out, and the interior is spotlessly maintained." This is true of some European theatres, he added, which are so excellently appointed and staffed that patrons attend in tuxedos and evening gowns.

Mamoulian, whose directorial guidance of "Silk Stockings" marks his first film in seven years, remains in New York another week to help plug the Arthur Freed production. "I feel it's the duty," he said matter of factly, "of everyone to promote a picture."

He stressed that Fred Astaire and Cyd Charisse, stars of "Stockings," have also been out-thumping in behalf of the film. This personal touch to exploitation and merchandise, the director asserted, is necessary now in light of the continuing trend toward independent production.

"With pictures tailor-made and no longer mass produced," Mamoulian said, "it's a common practice for the star, director, producer et al to help sell them in the field." For example. Mamoulian himself has been participating in a round of radio-tv appearances, newspaper and magazine interviews since his Gotham arrival 10 days ago.

As part of the "Stockings" campaign, he was guest of honor Monday evening (22) at the writer's Conference reception at Columbia U. and is scheduled to address the Writers' Seminar group today (Wed.) at the same university. His topic: "motion pictures from the days of D. W. Griffith to the advent of the wide screen."

Don't Cry, Honey

Hollywood, July 23.

In a welter of confusion following the disqualification of Leona Gage as Miss USA, in the Miss Universe contest, producer David Heilweil rushed into print with the announcement that he was negotiating with Miss Gage to play the lead in his next western, "Affair at Tangle Blue."

Miss Gage has never acted.

Jack Le Vien Heads New Industrial Film Section Of Hearst's Metrotone

Jack Le Vien, former v.p. of Pathe News and top exec in the newsreel field, has been named special productions director at Hearst Metrotone News Inc.

Appointment signifies expansion of the company into the production of sponsored films for tv and industrial use, according to C. B. Stratton, exec veep.

Hearst Metrotone News produces MGM's News of the Day reel and the Telenews tv film news service. It also puts out a weekly sports review and a news digest for video.

Le Vien was news editor of Warner Pathe News after the war, when he had been an Army colonel commanding the press camps for war correspondents in Africa, Sicily, Italy, France and Germany. At Pathe, he had been representing the U.S. newsreel pool on a number of top stories, such as the Olympics, the Big Four Conference, etc. He left Pathe when the reel was discontinued.

Youngsters With 'Star' Potential

Alfred F. Corwin, representing the Motion Picture Export Assn. and the International Committee of the Assn. of Motion Picture Producers, has scouted both American and foreign studios and has come up with a list of abecedarians reaching for stardom and who might make it. As to their physical appearances, he makes this comment: "Judging from a two-week tour of the studios for a first-hand look at the newcomers, the atomic age, for all its genealogical effects on humanity, hasn't done an iota of damage to the pulchritude or virility of the generation."

Here in capsule form is the way Corwin sizes up some of the hopefuls likely to replace the large crop of aging film stars of today.

Anthony Perkins. Son of the late legit actor, Osgood Perkins, had a key role (replacing John Kerr) in "Tea and Sympathy" on Broadway, and important roles in the films "Friendly Persuasion" and "Fear Strikes Out." Will costar with Sophia Loren in "Desire Under the Elms."

Vera Miles. Beauty contest winner has had good parts in various films, including "The Searchers" and "The Wrong Man." Appears as late Betty Compton in "Beau James" with Bob Hope.

Felicia Farr. Petite brunette with stage background costars with Glenn Ford in "3:10 to Yuma."

Dolores Michaels. Graduate of the 20th-Fox talent school has a featured spot in that studio's "Wayward Bus."

Barbara Lang. From tv to films, first being "House of Numbers." Hollywood-born platinum blonde.

Kerwin Mathews. From classroom (he was a teacher) to films, first being "Five Against the House."

Exhibs Brush Aside Booz Report

[EVIL LIES IN POLICY, NOT FILM ROW]

Exhibitor sources now being heard from tend to discount the recent Booz, Allen & Hamilton survey of film company exchange operations as merely touching the surface. Theatremen contend that if the industry wants to make a survey of what really ails the business, it's the sales operation, not physical facilities which should be scrutinized.

It's the contention of exhibitor leaders that many film companies are losing millions of dollars annually because of poor selling practices and "exorbitant" terms. Theatremen claim that two recent pictures, classified in the blockbuster category, played less than 5,000 dates each because of the sales policies of the companies involved. Both these pictures, theatremen contend, could have doubled the number of dates for a take of at least $2,000,000 each extra if the distributors had been more lenient in their rental demands.

It's asserted that the two pictures cited represent only a small portion of the additional revenue that could be obtained. As a result of unpleasant relations between some theatremen and certain distribs, many pictures are frequently bypassed. A study, according to the exhibs, of the number of pictures skipped because of onerous terms or because of personal animosity between the exhib and the distrib, would disclose that numerous pictures are not earning their full potential. The sum lost as result of the bickering is said to run into millions annually.

Film Ad Layouts Cry for Talent On Art Front

Shortage of art layout men and visualizers of showmanly come-on shapes as a real headache to the film companies which are paying more attention than ever to the creation of striking ad campaigns.

Several ad-pub toppers are complaining that they can't find good artists with a flair for designing interesting and offbeat ads that still tell the story of the film.

Parenthetically, some also gripe about the unavailability of expert publicity men, now that there are so many independents in the field, each having one or two pluggers on their payroll.

Tendency to go offbeat in the ads has grown of late. Recent examples are "Face in the Crowd" at Warner Bros. and "Hatful of Rain" at 20th-Fox.

The dramatic and striking 20th-Fox ad for "Hatful" was due to the insistence of ad-pub v.p. Charles Einfeld, who was shown a line drawing suggesting the ad. It was to have been turned out as a painting. Einfeld insisted that the drawing be filled in and used as the theme-ad for the picture. The simple, yet starkly dramatic drawing has garnered a lot of attention as capturing the mood of the picture to perfection.

Another unusual ad was used by United Artists for "Saint Joan." Here, as in "Baby Doll" and also in "Hatful," a single posture keyed the entire campaign, identifying the film for the public.

7-CITY PREMIERE IN OCT. FOR 'RAINTREE'

Metro's "Raintree County," longest and most expensive domestic production in the film's history, will get the roadshow treatment with a seven-city world premiere in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Louisville, San Francisco and Los Angeles early in October. Theatre promotion will begin eight weeks in advance.

MGM plans to handle the film like a legit show, as was done by United Artists on "Around the World in 80 Days." In connection with this, studio plans to hire special ticketsellers in outlying towns where film is to be shown and to arrange theatre parties.

As part of the advance buildup, Metro will supply each theatre with three trailers, including a special announcement of the presentation, a cross-plug trailer to be used in other first-run houses in the area, and a five minute "behind-the-scenes" subject to run four weeks in advance of openings.

Metro will also supply two subjects for tv use, a series of tv spots and a one-reel documentary for school promotion.

"Raintree," which cost $5,400,000 will run three hours and five minutes. Studio's previous long-run champion was "Quo Vadis," at two hours and 48 minutes.

Film, produced by David Lewis and directed by Edward Dmytryk, stars Montgomery Clift, Elizabeth Taylor and Eva Marie Saint.

Old, Tried Gimmicks Pep Warners 'Screamiere' Of 'Curse of Frankenstein'

Midnight "horrorthon premieres" for Warners' British import, "The Curse of Frankenstein" have already been staged at the Roosevelt, Chicago, and the California; San Diego, and stunt will be repeated at the Paramount, Times Square.

Warner stalwarts like to suggest that should midnight premieres or round-the-clock showings (as in San Diego) multiply this would be serious competition to television "late show" films. All-night cinemas were quite common throughout the United States during the swing shifts in the war factories.

The San Diego strategy followed the "screamiere" at midnight with a "swing-shift" (airplane town) at 3 a.m. and a "breakfast premiere" at 6 a.m. with free java and sinkers. The 9 a.m. unreeling was a "housewives jamboree" and a "shippers premiere" came at noontime. For the rest of the first day clock-rounder it was a "serviceman's premiere" (big Navy town), then an "elbow-bender's premiere" and finally a "daters ding-dong" premiere.

Every gag, new or antique, in the horror film exploitation catalog was trotted out by the Warner gang. Per example: a conspicuous smelling salts rack, an ambulance parked outside the theatre, legal notice in the dailies that Warner Bros. was not liable for shocks or accidents attributed to fright and all attended at their own risk. Everyone entering house was handed a "faint" or "pass-out" ticket.

Although Warners in general has been putting its production stress on planned blockbuster high-budget releases there will actually be considerable accentuation of exploitation of which "Frankenstein" is a first sample.

Coming up are "Black Scorpion," in the science fiction department; "The Black Patch," classified as an "adult western" and George Montgomery's first indie for WB.; 19 disk jockeys will make up the pitch for "Jamboree."

N. O. Legion Committee Sees 'Communism Aim' In Zanuck's 'Island'

New Orleans, July 23.

The "Americanism" Committee of the First District American Legion on Friday (19) issued a statement objecting to the showing of Darryl F. Zanuck's "Island In Sun" (20th Century-Fox) and urged Orleanians to stay away from pic.

The Legion statement said the film contributed to the "Communist Party aim" of creating friction between the races.

"Island" was being shown simultaneously at the Tudor, all-white house on Canal St., city's main stem, and the Clabon, Negro house on N. Claiborne St.

Except for one or two letters to letter columns of newspapers, Legion protest of showing was only one from any groups. A threat by a neighborhood group to picket the Tudor failed to materialize.

SLOW, STEADY, SIGNIFICANT TREND TO NEW PLAYOFF POLICIES IN BIG CITIES

A slow but nevertheless significant chipping away at time-honored distribution and clearance systems is developing. A complete overhaul of the method of releasing pictures—which many regard as antiquated—may not take place for some time. However, there are signs indicating that both distribution and exhibition feel that something must be done to obtain the greatest value from available product.

The most noticeable current trend is the bypassing of downtown engagements for so-called medium budget pictures and sending these entries, via saturation bookings, directly into subsequent-run and nabe houses.

Another important deviation from accepted practice is Paramount's system of distributing Cecil B. DeMille's '10 Commandments." Instead of the mass bookings which usually follow a downtown run, Par is dividing certain cities into zones and are giving the picture—through bidding—to only one theatre in the subsequent-run area. This practice was accepted without protest in Cleveland. However, in Philadelphia eleven exhibitors banded together to bring an antitrust suit against Par. The court, however, ruled in Par's favor. As a result, the film company is contemplating following the same method in other cities.

In the New York City area, for example, it's conceivable that Par may make the picture available for initial sub-run engagements to only one theatre in eash of the five boroughs of the city. Under the old method, it would mean placing the picture in about 100 theatres at the same time. Par's thinking in this case is that the mass bookings would result in a fast playoff and potential patrons who cannot see the picture during the week it's booked stand a chance to miss the picture completely. By moving the picture gradually down to smaller and smaller theatres, it's felt that a broader segment of the population will be able to be reached.

There have been considerable complaints about the method of releasing pictures in the N.Y. area. Following the Broadway engagement of a picture, customers, in the nabe areas usually have a choice of two films—those playing the so-called RKO and Loew's splits. If they cannot see the pictures playing during one particular week, the pictures are lost to them forever. This situation has resulted from the continuous exhibitor demand for a stepup in run. There are indications now that the distributors are desirous of upsetting this system, particularly in the releasing of so-called blockbuster films which, it's felt, should have a slower playoff.

Exhibitors, on the other hand, are accepting with relish the first-run engagements in the neighborhood areas. To the distributors, it also represents an advantageous departure. For the same coin that it takes to open a picture on Broadway, far better results can be obtained with 100 bookings in the outlying districts. Some exhibitors contend, however, that the public may feel that the pictures are being siphoned into the nabes because they are not strong enough for Broadway engagements. Theatremen therefore would like to see the day when, for example, a "Pride and the Passion" or "Beau James" will open simultaneously on Broadway and in key neighborhood or surburban houses. It's pointed out, for example, that surburban Long Island, Westchester and New Jersey residents rarely come to Broadway for their film-going. Therefore, it is asked, what harm would there be if the picture opened day-and-day on Broadway and in a number of Long Island, Westchester and New Jersey communities. Some theatremen strongly feel that the Broadway grosses will not be affected by such a move.

The pictures being shunted into the nabes—in New York, Chicago, Boston, etc.—are for the most part pictures with special appeal to teenagers or local residents. Columbia selected this method for "Garment Jungle" because of the large number of garment industry workers in the N.Y. neighborhoods. Par's "Loving You" and "Omar Khayyam" and 20th-Fox's "Bernardine" are geared for the teenage audiences.

Albert Band, 33, Teams In Budget Pic Producing With Louis Garfinkle, 27

A young Hollywood producer-writer-director team consisting of 33-year-old Albert Band and 27-year-old Louis Garfinkle is out to prove the case for low-budget pictures. Their initial argument is a $150,000 picture—"Killer on the Wall," written by Garfinkle, directed by Band and jointly produced under the Maxim Productions banner by the pair. United Artists, which completely financed the project, will shortly distribute.

Band, in New York to confer with UA officials, maintains that certain subjects, treated carefully, are ideally suited for low-budget treatment. He agrees that low-cost films are limited by their economics and subject matter. However, when Garfinkle and himself prepared the script for "Killer on the Wall," they did not think in terms of low-budget project. "It's accidental that it fell in that category."

Band and Garfinkle, whose first joint association was in the directing and writing of "The Young Guns" for Allied Artists, have their next three projects lined up in the $350,000 to $400,000 bracket. Their biggest problem in advancing up the budgetary ladder, Band feels, is to overcome the Hollywood stereotype. "If you make a $150,000 picture, that's the only kind you can handle."

"Killer on the Wall," an original by Garfinkle, is described by Band as a "human creeper." It stars Richard Boone, Theodore Bikel and Howard Smith. It was filmed in nine days on the Ziv lot in Hollywood and on location. According to Band, the speedy shooting schedule was obtained as a result of two months of pre-production planning involving work with a visual designer and sketching out each scene on paper.

On the team's future slate are "The Monster," based on a story by Stephen Crane; "The Last Rebel," a post-Civil War story by Virgil Gerlach, and "Dream House," based on a teleplay by Arthur Cavanaugh. Garfinkle will adapt all three properties for the screen.

Band, son of artist Max Band, was formerly a production assistant at Metro where he worked with John Huston and Gottfried Reinhardt.

Meanwhile At The Studio

Hollywood, July 23.

A plan for producer-exhibitor conferences to help boost box-office potential of forthcoming films is suggested by Louis Garfinkle, newly partnered with producer-director Albert Band.

"Exchange of ideas should be a pre-production project," Garfinkle declared, "not something that is done as an afterthought or when a producer is out trying to sell a product he has already made."

With this in mind, Garfinkle hopes to interest United Artists in a compaign under which producers releasing through the company would make regular trips around the country, conferring with exhibitors. Such junkets, he insists, shouldn't be of the fly-by-night variety but should be carefully mapped out to give producers ample opportunity for full-scale discussions with theatre men and branch managers.

Don't Kids Smoke?

Hollywood, July 23.

One of the youngest film personalities ever approached for a cigaret endorsement has turned the tobacconists down flat.

Dennis Hopper, 21-year-old Warner contractee credited with a teenage following, was offered $5,000 to film a tv commercial for L&M Cigarets. He and Warners—which would probably have shared in his take—turned down the deal.

British Rentals For U.S. Films, $25,200,000 ('56)

London, July 23.

Peter Thornycroft, Britain's Chancellor of the Exchequer, today (Tues.) revealed the earnings of American films in the British market in 1956. Figure was $25,200,000.

In his House of Commons statement, Thornycroft didn't mention how much British films earned in the U. S. in the same year. Figure is believed to run around $3,500,000 to $4,000,000.

Official remittance from Britain is $17,000,000. Bonus remittances bring the total up to about $22,000,000. The American companies have virtually no coin frozen in Britain.

SAYS ERNST WOLFF— NO NEWS ON MOSAIK

Berlin, July 23.

"Nothing new, absolutely nothing new!" Those were the words Ernst Wolff, director-owner of Berlin's Mosaik Laboratories, used to this VARIETY reporter. In brief the company's bankruptcy crisis is still continuing. "Funny thing is," Wolff said, "that other people always know more than I do. I hear and read much about Mosaik. Nearly all is completely untrue. Fact is that it's still the old story. One of these days, another creditors' meeting will be convened. And so it goes. No new offers, neither from UFA, nor from any other group."

Wolff won't go on vacation either. "Never in my life have I been on vacation. When I had the time for it, I didn't have the money. When I had the money, I didn't have the time."

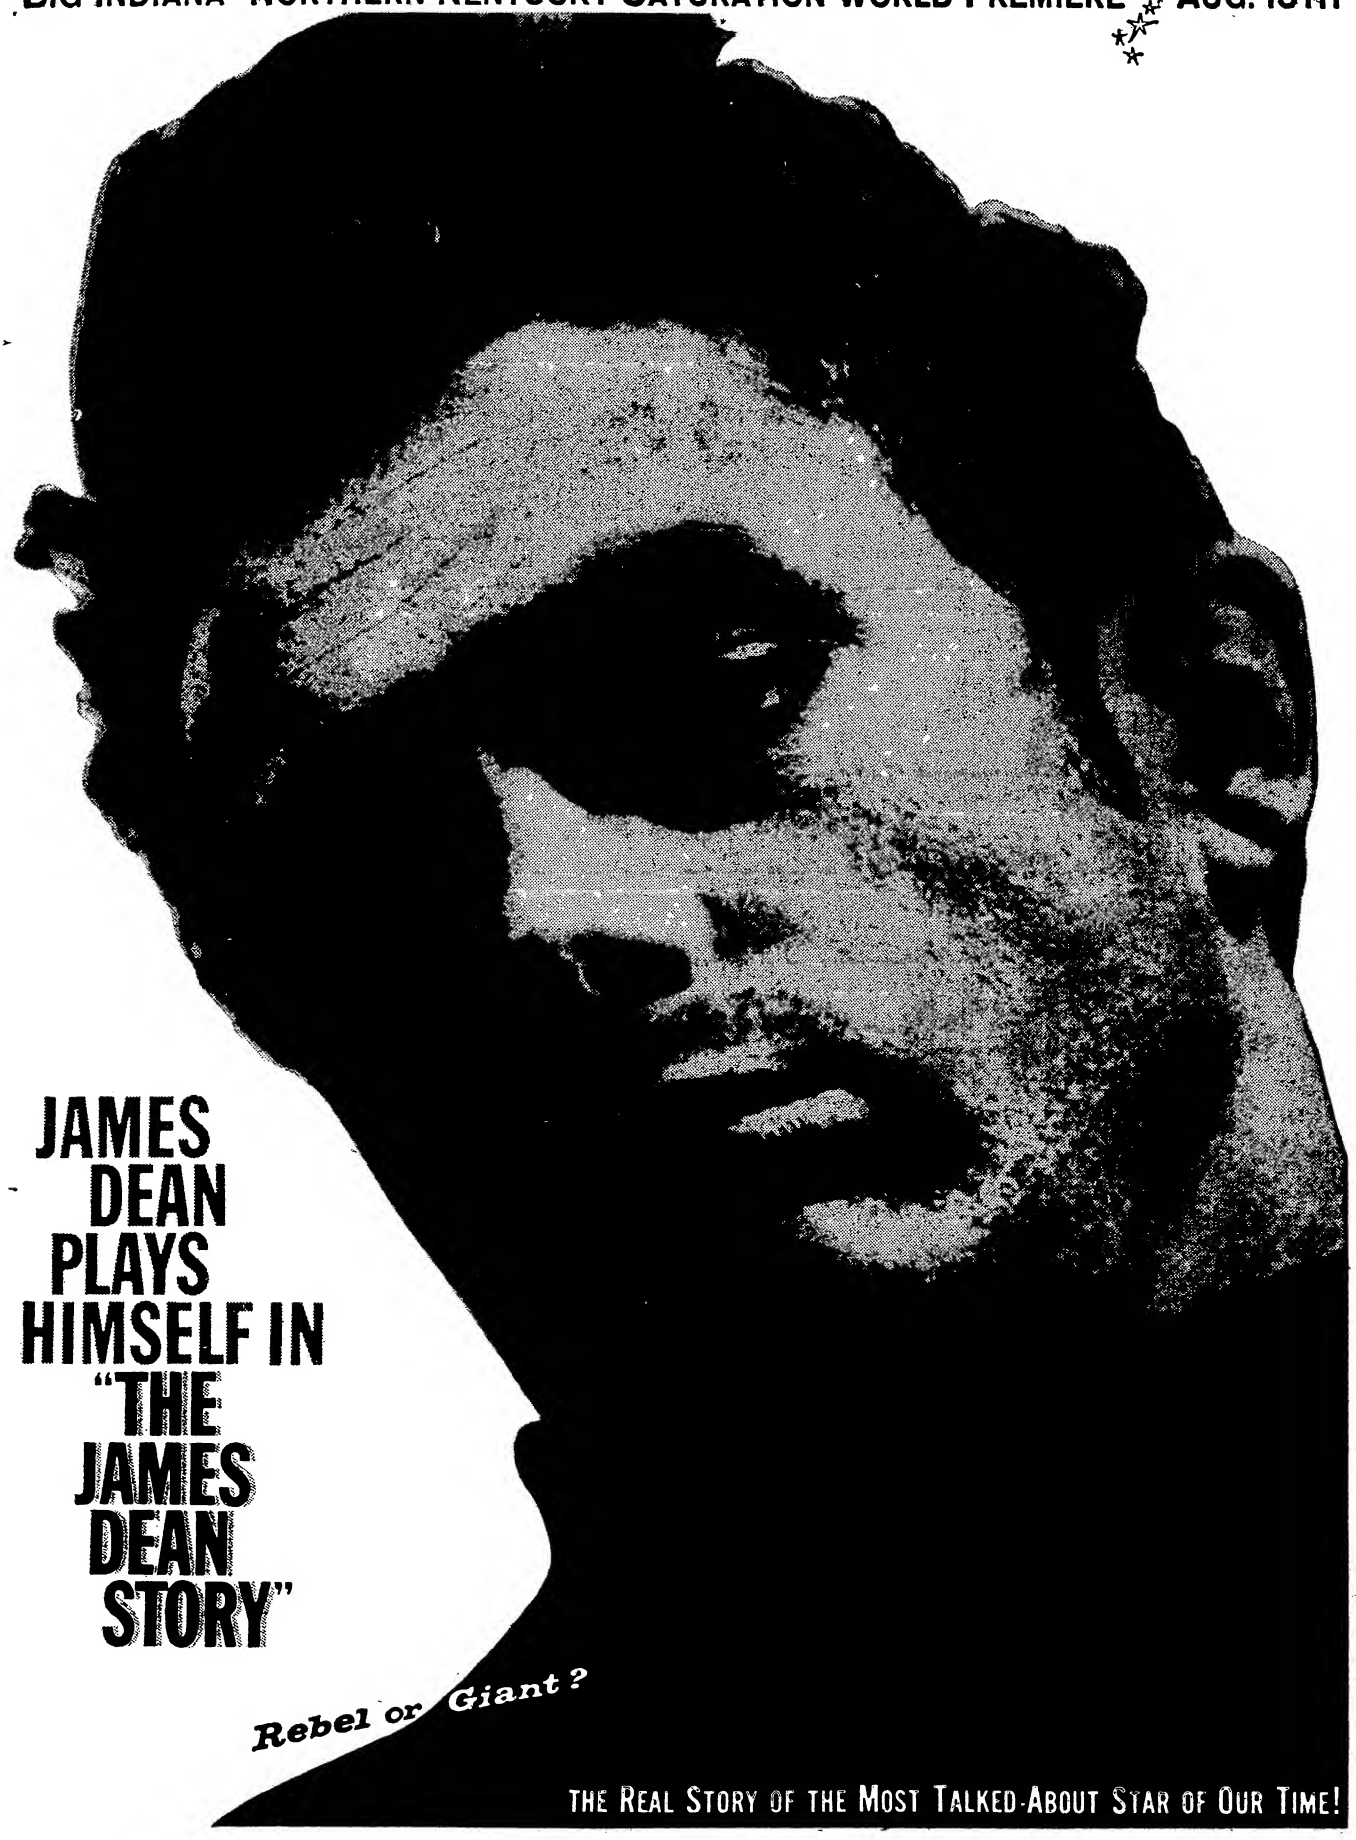
WB In Flux On 'Fanny'

Warner Bros.' negotiations to acquire the film rights of the recent Broadway musical, "Fanny," continues in the off-and-on stage.

Newest wrinkle that may upset the deal is the demand by Brandt & Brandt, literary agency handling the negotiations for the legit interests, for a $100,000 advance before the various rights can be examined. It's understood that if the rights cannot be fully cleared after examination, the film company forfeits the down payment.

Total asking price for the film rights is $300,000 plus 10% of the gross after the picture grosses $4,000,000.

Tall Claims & Big Talk a 'Must'?



The pros and cons have begun on the way the film industry should address itself to the public as the institutional promotional campaign starts rolling. Specifically, what is the message to be gotten across?

The approaches have been decided upon: a heavy ad campaign, product trailers, radio commercials, newspaper contact work, etc. But within the industry, and among outside observers, there are differences centering around accuracy versus exaggeration.

In the one camp are those who insist that only honesty pays off; the public rebels at extravagant use of adjectives in copy about pictures.

Not so, says the other side. The theory in this corner is that films are a Barnum & Bailey business, the public has come to expect tall claims and big talk generally. (Said one ad-pub v.p. "I wouldn't want to be accused of underselling my pictures.")

Mike Naify Taken Over 'Ancient History'

[GOLDWYN TRIAL A REPRISE OF COAST DEALS]

By BILL STEIF

San Francisco, July 23.

Sam Goldwyn's slow-moving $1,755,000 antitrust suit against 20th-Fox, National Theatres and Fox West Coast pushed ahead late last week when Goldwyn's lawyer, Joseph Alioto, began tripping up the millionaire California theatre-owner, Michael Naify.

Naify was only the second witness called in the trial's second week—first was Fox West Coast president John Bertero—and he held his own very nicely against Alioto's pointed questions until the last hour of testimony.

But Naify, in his mid-70's and rather deaf, began to come unzipped when Alioto taxed him with a series of documents tending to show that his chain had worked hand-in-glove with Fox in booking pictures. The half-owner of United California's 100-odd theatres was discomfited by evidence showing his Reno manager had blocked Goldwyn from hiring a dance hall for exhibition of "Up in Arms" in 1944, and Naify had no ready answer for the charge that Charles Skouras had instructed him to clam up about the deal in which Joe Schenck bought half of United California for United Artists.

Alioto's questions, of course, were of the "when did you stop beating your wife?" variety.

From Syria to Cinema

Naify mounted the stand in Federal Judge Edward P. Murphy's court and swiftly told of his start in theatre business at Atlantic City in 1912, shortly after he'd migrated from Syria. In 1916-17, he said, he moved to Sacramento and by 1921 was a partner with his brother Jimmy, and Turner and Denken, in several small theatres. That was the year they organized the T&D Jr. circuit, with "the idea to operate in small towns."

Naify wasn't clear as to when Fox first started acquiring its interests in T&D Jr. and Golden State—presumably it was some time in the later '20's—but recalled making a deal with Wesco Theatres (corporate predecessor of Fox West Coast) in which he gave some T&D Jr. stock for interests in the Gore Brothers' houses controlled by Wesco.

He remembered buying up the Walsh family interest in the Oregon-California Theatres (in which George Mann was a co-partner) and acquiring small theatre companies in Monterey, Merced and Oakland, Cal.

"Fox came in afterward," he said, "I don't remember making any deals with (Harold) Franklin (Wesco president, 1928-30)."

Early 'Pools'

Deals involving houses in Oakland, Frisco and Sacramento, involved "no connection to my knowledge" among pools in Reno, Frisco and the valley towns. Some of "these details of ancient history" had escaped him. "We did these things to save some expenses . . . no, there was nothing about renting pictures more cheaply."

In 1932, he, Emmick and McNeil joined their interests to form one company, United California. These interests involved a bewildering complex of theatre companies all over Northern and Central California, Northern Nevada and Southern Oregon. Naify came out with 40% of United Cal's stock, and Emmick and McNeil with about 30% apiece.

Their basic agreement was made to "stabilize" and "simplify the setup" and included a first-refusal option to the other partners whenever one of the partners wished to bail out.

The two subsidiaries were Golden State, in which Fox had 26% of the stock, and T&D Jr., in which Fox had 31%. The Naify family had most of the T&D Jr. stock, but the Nasser family had some. Emmick and McNeil had control of Golden State and minor stockholders, according to Naify, included the Frisco theatre attorney, L. S. (Ben) Hamm and, at one time, C. B. DeMille.

Fox was asked to join United Cal, said Naify, "but Mr. Oldknow of Fox refused to put their stock in," as did the Nassers. The result was that Fox held only a fraction of a per cent of United Cal. Other stockholders in one or another of United Cal's subsidiaries included, said Naify, the Blumenfeld family, the Horowitz family of Oakland, George Mann, Lawrence Borg and John Peters of Salinas, Ralph Ford of Oakland, the Walsh estate of Gridley, Walter Pretty of San Bruno, and the Sam Levin family of Frisco which had sold out to Ackerman and Harris and then reclaimed their half-dozen Frisco houses during the depression.

All Pure Business

Naify put this web of ownership on the record as blandly as he would buy a dozen oranges. He countered every suggestion from Alioto that there was anything improper here by insisting it was all pure business, pragmatism carried to the ultimate degree.

Then Alioto started pressing the witness on his relations with Charles, Spyros and George Skouras, and on the relations between the Naify film buyers and 20th-Fox's distribution. The lawyer started mildly, by introducing a 1946 Naify letter to Naify's Sacramento manager, M. G. Hustler. In the letter was this sentence:

"You know my setup with Fox West Coast. I am a partner with them in Sacramento and I cannot start a new theatre unless we all agree to do so."

Hustler apparently wanted backing for a new theatre and Naify explained he wrote the letter because "I didn't want to hurt the fellow's feelings . . . maybe I didn't word it correctly, y'know, I'm not an expert in writing letters . . ."

Later he explained further:

"I didn't think it ethical or businesslike or honest to go against by partner . . . but I'm free, I can start anything I want any time . . . I have no agreement with Fox West Coast or anybody."

Next came a 1942 Naify letter to Charles Skouras which included the sentence, "While you are making the deal with Columbia Pictures, don't forget to get a split for that theatre in Sacramento."

But when Alioto asked if Charles or Spyros Skouras or Eddie Zabel had ever helped Naify buy pictures, Naify replied:

"No, once in a great while they would intercede in my behalf, only when we disagreed with the distributors. No, I never went to them . . . we dealt with the distributors mostly in San Francisco, once in a while went to New York."

Metro's High Prices

Naify made one such New York trip, in company of his country-division buyer, Vern Taylor, when "we had a little difficulty" with Metro's Frisco chief, George Hickey. "They wanted high prices for their pictures," he said, "and Eddie Zabel called and said, 'why don't you get together with George?'"

Another time, in 1949, "Joe (Schenck) tried to get me together with Metro . . . Joe talked to George (Hickey) about it"—but Naify denied Schenck acted as an "intermediary."

The theatre-owner pointed out "we have our own formula on house expenses, we negotiate with the local exchangeman on our own sliding-scale . . . producers used to tell us, 'why don't you use the Fox formula?' and I said, 'no, it's different in the country and in the (neighborhood and suburban) districts . . .'"

Naify said he saw Charles Skouras often in the '40's, would drop by and say, "hello, Charlie, how's everything? It was just a social call."

Terms and Details

He admitted that Fox had come close to buying the Emmick-McNeil share of United Cal in 1944-45, that there was tentative agreement on price and that Naify would have acquired an additional 10% of the stock to bring him into a 50-50 partnership with Fox. But the deal fell through because of Emmick's and McNeil's desire to have Fox guarantee that their capital gains tax wouldn't cost more than 15%.

He said Ben Tamm had first presented him with Milton Reynold's proposal to buy the whole United Cal circuit, at $500 a share, that Emmick thought the Chicago pen manufacturer's price could be raised—and was, to $550 a share. Naify decided he didn't want to sell, "I like to stay in the business," but Emmick and McNeil had to have an answer for the Reynolds offer and it was then that Naify decided to exercise his first-refusal, to meet Reynolds' price. He phoned Charles Skouras, who was in Monterey, and two days later Skouras visited and said Fox would like to buy the Emmick-McNeil stock, would resell Naify 10%, but didn't know if the Justice Department would sit still for the deal. Skouras agreed to have Fox lend Naify $233,000 as a binder, said Naify, but neither Schenck nor Robert Lippert were mentioned in the first conversation.

Naify testified he told Skouras that if Fox was disqualified, "I'll have to look for a partner who has cash," to which Skouras replied, "I'll have to look for a partner for you—maybe Mr. Joe Schenck would be interested."

Schenck was brought in the next day or so, sat in on Frisco conferences in the office of attorney Oscar Samuels with Naify and Skouras. Naify added:

"John Bertero was there but left when we started talking the deal."

This confirmed Bertero's earlier testimony, despite Alioto's efforts to imply that Bertero's absence from the heart of the matter was a peculiar way for a high Fox West Coast official to act.

Directly, Alioto asked Naify if George Skouras, who was to become UA chief within a couple of years, participated in the Naify-Skouras-Schenck meeting.

Just as directly, Naify answered, "no, he wasn't in on it until the time we closed the agreement with United Artists (in mid-1948)."

Goldwyn lawyers possess a deposition Charles Skouras made for a pair of FBI agents in mid-October, 1947, some two months after the deal was set. In the deposition Skouras says his brother, George, was present at the Naify-Skouras-Schenck meeting.

Naify testified "Joe Schenck endorsed a note for me to make the payment (to Emmick and McNeil of about $2½ million) . . . Joe called the Bank of America, spoke to Al Gock and we went down to the bank . . . Joe said, 'yes, I'm willing to endorse—Emmick and McNeil didn't want more than 30 per cent because of the capital gains tax' (whole deal was close to $13 billion)."

Naify insisted he didn't know George Skouras had anything to do with his sale of the United Cal stock to UA, said he found out later that George Skouras owned some UA stock but didn't know that George was working for UA.

"All I knew," he said, "was that Joe Schenck was the major stockholder."

He insisted, too, that he knew nothing of the Skouras brothers' income-sharing arrangement, "I heard about it way after, indirectly, two years after the deal was closed . . . I don't know nothing about their personal affairs."

Then the Goldwyn lawyer threw the blocks to Naify.

First came a Zabel wire to Charles Skouras, charged to T&D Enterprises. Part of it said, "work on Naify towns tomorrow."

Said Naify: "I never authorized Mr. Zabel to make any deals for me."

A 1942 Naify letter to Spyros Skouras, regarding Paramount's "Louisiana Purchase," included the phrase, "hope in future to reciprocate and do something for you."

Said Naify: "All he did was bring us together (with Leo Agnew and Charles Rieger)."

A 1938 Naify letter to Vern Taylor, on Spyros Skouras' personal letterhead, told Taylor, "you had better get your master agreement out . . ."

Said Naify: "No one helped write the letter . . . (Skouras) extended the courtesy (of his office) . . . Spyros asked me to come down to New York at that time to patch up the affair with Warner Brothers and Paramount . . ."

A 1944 Charles Skouras wire showed Skouras had arranged a Naify-McNeil meeting in Los Angeles with Ned Depinet, RKO sales manager, over Goldwyn's "Up in Arms."

Said Naify: "Charlie phoned to set up an appointment . . . I never discussed with Charlie what it was about . . ."

A 1943 McNeil letter to Naify buyers Taylor and Roy Cooper said "Skouras told me etc., etc., regarding a Paramount picture."

Said Naify: "I don't know about it."

Alioto asked: "In 1947, '48, '49 and '50 didn't Taylor, Lundgren and Zabel hold meetings in which they agreed what expenses to charge into the sliding-scale?"

Naify denied it.

Labor Union Angles

He also denied that he'd gotten "the labor unions to move in" for him in the Tulare-Hanford-Visalia area, that he'd bought up all available Mexican films to stop a Mexican house in a valley town, that he'd called in city authorities to stop competition because of building code violations.

On this last point Alioto cited evidence showing that Goldwyn had hired Tony's El Patio Ballroom at Reno in 1944, put up equipment to exhibit "Up in Arms" and had been stopped by Naify's Reno manager. Defense lawyer Arthur B. Dunne's objections were overruled as Alioto went on to explain "the power of this buying combination."

A final tangle between Alioto and Naify concerned Naify's leasing the State, in downtown Oakland, to Fox. Naify said the theatre "wasn't doing much business, wasn't profitable to us," but denied he "had an agreement with Skouras or anybody not to go downtown."

But Naify never answered Alioto's last question:

"You could run theatres as well as Charlie Skouras, couldn't you?"

Bertero's earlier testimony was simply a buildup to Naify's appearance on the witness stand. The Fox West Coast president was smoother and obviously more aware of the legal implications of what he was saying than was Naify.

Highlights of his three days on stand included:

(1) Introduction of a mid-1947 Naify letter to Bertero claiming Bertero "instructed (Fox's) film buyer not to disturb any existing situations," though almost six months had passed since a Federal court decree ordering a break-up of Fox-Naify theatre pools. Letter discussed Bertero's instructions to buyer Bert Pirosch—it showed Naify and Fox hoped at that time for reversal of court order.

Alioto brought up letter after Bertero had denied giving any "written or oral" instructions on the Market Street pool for Frisco first-runs;

(2) Goldwyn evidence introduced through Bertero showed Joe Schenck put 11 UA houses and Fox put 40 of its houses into United West Coast chain. Agreement was that any new houses acquired in pooled territories would also go into a 70-30 profit-sharing agreement and eight theatres were so consigned.

'39-'48 Profit

United West Coast profit from 1939 through 1948 was $23,682,881 on basis of $80,803,546 gross and 175,788,038 paid admissions. Net operating profit was 29.31 per cent—figures all came from document Fox prepared after dissolution of joint interests was ordered in Paramount case.

Bertero testified 75% of United West Coast's profits were split 70-30 as "additional rent." But he vigorously denied that "additional rent" was part of expense charged to producers in film buying deals.

Bertero also testified "nothing was ever done that was incompatible with the basic agreement" between Fox and UA in pooled areas;

(3) Alioto led Bertero through complex leasing and ownership situation in Oakland, noted Robert Lippert at one time wanted to buy or lease a closed Oakland theatre on which Fox paid month-to-month $1125 monthly rent. But, implied Alioto, Fox pressured Transamerica's Capitol Co., which owned house, into nixing Lippert's offer.

(4) Alioto produced letters tending to show Naify circuit bluffed building a downtown Oakland theatre in order to keep lease on one Fox-owned house. Warners, Paramount, Blumenfelds were also mentioned in this connection. But when Alioto asked Bertero, "was this all coincidence or was there agreement among you?" Bertero replied, "no, we had a hard time surviving";

(5) Bertero testified Lippert sued Fox in 1943-44 because "Lippert claimed he'd been deprived of product." Alioto questioned whether one Lippert charge was that Fox converted a garage near a Lippert theatre in Richmond, Cal., to force Lippert out of business, but Bertero confirmed only that such a conversation had occurred.

An exclusive Daily VARIETY story of July 14, 1948 rose up to haunt Michael Naify on witness stand during the Samuel Goldwyn vs. 20th-Fox antitrust trial late last Thursday (18).

Goldwyn's lawyer, Joseph Alioto, introduced a letter before Federal Judge Edward P. Murphy which Naify had signed. Letter, dated July 28, 1948, demanded retraction of a story headlined "Schenck Asks Release from 20th Pact to Buy into Naify Theatres."

Letter claimed story written by now deceased editor of Daily VARIETY, Arthur Ungar, was "pregnant with misstatements" and denied that:

(1) Schenck would buy 50% of United California-Golden State for UA; (2) Price was $50 a share for 11,500 shares; (3) Schenck had advanced Naify $2,350,000; (4) Schenck had first call on Naify stock; (5) Milton Reynolds-Ted Gamble deals for United Cal were "cold."

As a matter of fact, story was right on the button, with the possible exception that per-share price was too low. Naify, taxed by Alioto, could only say:

"I didn't write it. I don't remember authorizing it. I used to know a fellow named Ungar in L.A. Letter came from the files, I don't know who wrote it."

Nagata Next (13th) Trip to States Aims at Firm Co-Production; Cites Japan's Terms, Benefits

By DAVID M. JAMPEL

Tokyo, July 23.

When Masaichi Nagata, prez of Daiei, makes his 13th trip to the U.S. in August, he will once again seek to firm up plans for his pet project, co-production.

Possibilities to be explored will be with 20th-Fox on the projected Townsend Harris film which John Huston has been named to direct, and a picture of indie producer Jack Cummings to be based on the 19th century voyage to Japan of Englishman Will Adams.

Nagata's productions of international prizewinners, including "Rashomon" and "Gate of Hell," were instrumental in making the rest of the world sit up and take notice of the Japanese industry. While he has assisted American productions on location in Japan, notably "Teahouse of the August Moon" which Cummings produced for MGM, Daiei has never entered into joint production with a U.S. company.

A progressive thinker with a flair for getting things done in this land of ceremonious delay, Nagata feels that since the trend is toward pictures using international backgrounds as a stage, and since good properties are scarce, the time is ripe for co-productions.

Nagata told VARIETY that he knew no reason why the best talents of the American and Japanese interests cannot be pooled in joint efforts. He said, "From our contacts with American productions in the past, it should be known whether Daiei is worth while to deal with. We have tried to be straightforward in these associations and have always done our best."

Regarding capital outlay of a desired co-production, Nagata stated his position: "As you know, Japan has very little foreign currency. I foresee arrangements whereby the dollar requirement will be sustained by the U.S. company and the yen expenditures assumed by the Japanese. It would amount to a sharing of all costs, studio rentals, etc."

Flexible Financing

Continuing to spell out his terms Nagata said, "I would enter a joint production on a basis of 50-50, 40-60, or 30-70. Under no circumstances would I accept a percentage less than 30. That goes for profit sharing as well as outlay. If an American company is willing to put up 70 per cent, that's fine. This point is one of the vital ones to be discussed when I go to the States."

Nagata stressed, however, that he felt mutual confidence should be the basis of a co-production. A strict plus and minus or profit and loss relationship, he said, will in the long run end up in bickering. He prefers a relationship of goodwill.

Planning to spend three or four weeks in the States, including travel time, Nagata expects to stop in Los Angeles and New York for 10 days each. In addition to talking about joint productions, he will meet on U.S. distribution of Daiei films and also discuss distribution of Disney and Goldwyn product in Japan, both of whom he represents here.

Regarding the possibilities of television in Japan, Nagata said he believes it will never have the impact on the film industry that it produced in the U.S. "There will be no closing of theatres," he said. "We will try to adjust with tv for mutual benefits."

He revealed that the motion picture companies have just been granted licenses for two of the five Tokyo channels to be added to the present six. This grant, he feels, will allow the showing of certain m.p. features that will be timed to avoid conflict with theatre showings. For the next few years at least, he saw no reason to make films expressly for tv when Japan has perhaps the largest stock of m.p. footage in the world.

Nagata said that in the past, when the Japanese film companies tried to live with tv by supplying three-year-old films, the results were unsatisfactory. He declared, "The royalties were so few and far between that it was unprofitable." Seeing that the situation was going to get worse before it got better, he had his films withdrawn from the tv circuit rather than set a low standard of payment.

He also foresaw the boost in the number of channels as unfavorable to the release of films, commenting that sponsorship will not increase in kind, thereby resulting in thinner outlay of sponsor yen.

Those are the reasons, he said, why the picture industry saw fit to take matters in their own hands and apply for their own schedule.

"Of course television is still in a very primitive stage in Japan," Nagata said. "Approximately 450,000 sets have been bought. But they are making 200,000 to 250,000 per year because they are selling that many. NHK (Japan Broadcasting Co.), the semi-government organ, has a network all across the mainland. There will be a commercial network over the same area when the independents get organized, probably about in 1959 when the number of sets will be close to one million.

"The effect, however, will not be as great as in the U.S. I feel that as long as we make good pictures, we are assured of having a very good audience. We will also benefit, I think, from the mistakes made by the American film producers regarding television. Besides, there are differences in the habits of the peoples and in the entire structure of our television. The scheduling, for example, is very different. Eventually, some impact may be felt, but we will try to work with the medium."

U TO 'HORNPIPE' CAGNEY

Musical Intended for Stage By Anderson & Mamoulian

"The Devil's Hornpipe," a script which Maxwell Anderson and Rouben Mamoulian originally wrote as a Broadway entry via the Playwrights Co., has been acquired by Universal which will film it as a musical starring James Cagney. It's slated to roll shortly under a fresh tag of "Never Steal Anything Small."

New title stems from a tune of that name written for the picture by Allie Wrubel. Mamoulian, although he's directed a number of musicals, won't be associated with the production of the story which is described as a satirical melodrama that takes place on the waterfront.

PREMINGER'S OWN OFFICE

Film Man Readying Some Legit Ventures on Side

Otto Preminger this week opened a New York office as a preliminary to expanding his activities. In addition to his motion picture work, the producer-director intends to operate in both the legit and television fields and is now on the prowl for story properties.

Preminger has hired Thomas C. Ryan, formerly associated with Collier's and Women's Home Companion, as aide to his N.Y. story editor, Eve Coleman.

Next on the film-makers schedule is "Bonjour Tristesse," which he starts shooting late this month in France for Columbia release. In starring roles are Deborah Kerr, David Niven and Jean Seberg.

He's to follow this with "This is Goggle," play by Bentz Plagemann. Rehearsals are slated for the fall and a Broadway presentation is figured for December.

U Backlog Sale Ups Decca $2

Early wrapup of the deal by which Universal's backlog goes to television is seen behind the heavy activity of Decca Records stock on the New York Stock Exchange. Decca, which controls U, was the volume leader on the big board Monday (22) with a total of 106,300 shares traded. It closed the day at a new high of $19.35, up $2.

U stock, which is listed separately, exchanged hands in the amount of only 800 shares, but climbed $2.25 and closed at $28.37½.

Big interest in Decca came immediately on the heels of a Wall Street Journal story which quoted Abe Schneider, 1st v.p. of Columbia as saying "negotiations are nearly completed" for the takeover of the U backlog for tv. Distribution is to be via Col's tv subsidiary, Screen Gems.

As previously reported in VARIETY U figures to collect $18,000,000 for lease of its library of pre-1948 pictures over a 10-year period.

EASTMAN POLLS FOR 1926-1930 HONORS

Reuben Mamoulian, who started his film career in the Eastman Theatre, Rochester, N.Y., at the invitation of the late George Eastman, has been named chairman of the committee for the Second Festival of Film Artists to be held Oct. 26 in Rochester. At that time the George Eastman medal of honor will be presented for "outstanding contributions" to the art of American motion pictures within the 1926-1930 period.

On the Festival Committee are Jesse L. Lasky, Walter Pidgeon, Bosley Crowther, Burnett Guffey, Gen. Oscar N. Solbert, director of the House; James Card, curator of motion pictures at the House, and Richard Griffith, curator of the Museum of Modern Art Film Library in Manhattan.

Eastman House is now mailing ballots to film stars, cameramen and directors who will elect 20 film artists for the second "George" awards. When ballots are returned and tallied, the five top scorers among each of four categories: actresses, actors, directors and cameramen, will be notified and invited to appear in Rochester for the October ceremonies.

U. S. Indies Contractually Free to Sell to Danes

Denmark can expect a flow of new American features in the near future despite the continuing Motion Picture Export Assn. boycott of the market with the exception of the 18 theatres which have agreed to lift the rental ceiling to over the controversial 30% of gross.

Jerry Bresler, independent American producer who worked in Copenhagen recently (shooting "The Vikings") analyzed conditions and found that indie film-makers shortly will market their pictures on their own in Denmark. He said the indies become free to do this two years after the opening of their product in New York and on condition that their regular distributors don't have a release set.

The indies, of course, would be subject to the 30% ceiling on rentals. But, it's pointed out, many films wouldn't be given a higher percentage even if there were no such ceiling.

In addition a number of Yank reissues are getting through to Denmark, according to Bresler. He related that Jacques Lammond, Mexican distributor who lives in Paris, provides a flow of product to the Danish market from RKO, United Artists and 20th-Fox.

U. S. Much Needs Sell in Orient, Opines Aboaf

Top-to-bottom public relations program in the Far East, designed to educate trade, public and governments to the realities of the American film biz, was advocated in N.Y. by Americo Aboaf, Universal foreign sales topper. He's just returned from a three-months trip through Europe and the Near and Far East.

Aboaf held that many of the obstacles being thrown into the way of the U.S. film industry in the Far East were due to a basic misunderstanding, i.e. the idea that all or most of the money earned abroad by American films is "profit."

Due to nationalism, rising local production and the desire for protectionism, "doing business in Asia is becoming more difficult." At the same time, he stressed, distributor business volume is up and likely to stay that way, Universal alone, for instance, is showing an increase of from 10% to 25% in billings this year over last, with the upswing particularly pronounced in Japan.

Bertero added that Lippert suit eventually was settled for about $25,000;

(6) Alioto, over defense objections, laid groundwork for attack on Bertero's bluebook of runs, clearances and availabilities. Alioto tried to show Bertero forced Fox bluebook on other distributors, but Bertero stoutly maintained the documents introduced simply were part of process for getting clearances for 20th-Fox product;

(7) Through Bertero, Alioto brought out agreement under which Salinas threatre operators Lawrence Borg and John Peters pooled with Fox. Part of pact said neither party would acquire new house within five-mile radius of downtown Salinas without offering other party 50-50 participation. Thus, claimed Alioto, Fox got 50 per cent profit of the new El Rey, though it put no money or property into theatre;

(8) Bertero testified to those details he knew of in Milton Reynolds' $12,533,000 offer to buy Emmick-McNeil interests. Offer included suggestion that Lippert Theatres be brought in for administrative purposes;

(9) Through Bertero, Alioto established groundwork for later questioning of Naify on all Northern California and Nevada pools.

At one point during week Alioto was forced to put National Theatres' counsel, Fred Pride, on witness stand to identify memo found in Charles Skouras' files. Skouras memo protested to UA about "promoting a new first-run unit in Los Angeles."

Bertero failed to identify exhibit as a Skouras memo of a 1945 conference which included Skouras, Ed Rafftery, Grad Sears and Carl Lesserman and, when defense's Arthur Dunne objected, Judge Murphy refused to admit document into evidence.

Then Alioto called Pride, who knew details. Memo dealt with Fox efforts to frustrate Joe Blumenfeld's attempt to take over the Vogue and Pan-Pacific Theatres in Hollywood and, in substance, said Fox would make concessions to UA to retain the status quo. Memo's addressee was unknown, but one sentence, in caps, said, "To what extent this pressure was applied I will explain to you personally."

All of this, of course, was simply a buildup to the appearance of Naify, who was Goldwyn's star witness of the week.

Arbitration, Getting Nowhere Slowly, Recesses Until Sept. 16; Distribs Resist Most Theatre 'Demands'

Chances for the establishment of an industry arbitration system received a major setback last week when the joint exhibitor-distributor conference adjourned until Sept. 16. The official reason given for the postponement is that it is difficult to assemble all the conference representatives during the summer weeks ahead.

While this official explanation has some validity, it was learned that optimism about the future of an arbitration plan is waning, particularly among the exhibitor conferees. The theatremen's attitude is based on the adament stand taken on most issues by the distributor representatives.

Although the official handouts of the Motion Picture Assn. of America, which is handling the press relations, give the impression that the meetings are proceeding smoothly, the sessions have been far from harmonious. Only things agreed upon have been the unimportant issues. At one point, palaver grew so heated that a highly-placed exhibitor representative almost walked out of the conference.

As far as can be learned, the distributors have nixed every proposal that the theatremen consider important in present-day trade relations in the motion picture industry. But distribs have been unable to come up with suitable counter proposals although they have admitted that certain inequities exist.

One thing seems clear. Theatre Owners of America and Allied States Assn. are acting as an exhibitor team in the discussions. So far there has been no difference of opinion between the two rival exhibitor organizations and both groups, are demanding pretty much the same conditions and stipulations in the arbitration draft.

Despite the postponement until September, the exhibitors are determined to see the conference through to its conclusion. "We'll stick with it no matter how long it takes," said an exhibitor representative.

Earlier an attempt was made by some of the exhibitor representatives to have a spokesman for the Dept. of Justice or Senate Small Business Subcommittee sit in on the conferences. It's understood, however, that both Government agencies turned down the invitation. As a result, the proposal was not offered to the distributors.

Take Up Wilcox's as To All-British Promotion In United States Mart

London, July 23.

British film producers are mulling a proposal to launch a sustained publicity and public relations campaign for the promotion of British product in the United States. The move was taken last week on the initiative of Herbert Wilcox, who first outlined his thoughts on the matter on his recent return from New York and Hollywood.

As a result of Wilcox's proposal, a special committee was set up to investigate the position and to make an early report to the executive of the British Film Producers' Assn. In addition to Wilcox, the committee comprises Robert Clark, the Associated British Production topper; Victor Hoare, head of Lion International, and George Minter, boss of Renown Pictures.

John Davis, the Rank aide, intimated that he would supply the committee with any information based on the experiences of their distribution organization in America.

Wilcox's recent trip to the U.S. was keyed to two pictures, "Yangtse Incident," which is being released through DCA, and Anna Neagle's first indie venture, "These Dangerous Years." He returned convinced that British pictures would be hypoed at the box office if there was a successful and effective pre-selling campaign.

Soundtrack Music

than one instance a film company actually subsidized the soundtrack release of a given film on which it was anxious to have an LP on the market. Homeoffice execs say they've heard of such instances, but never would they themselves get into such a deal.

Asked why they would put out purely background scores lacking a strong title-song lead, the disk execs come up with a standard answer: This is the age of the packaged LP and people simply go for the movie music. "It's a trend," said one. "Who knows how long it will last."

Some companies, capitalizing on well-publicized film titles, are putting out soundtrack recordings of music which even the motion picture audience probably wasn't aware of at the time of release. Example is MGM records, which has dug up scores from some Metro oldies and has packaged them.

Upcoming Albums

Upcoming is an LP combining the score of "Ivanhoe," "Plymouth Adventure" and "Madame Bovary." Music for all three was penned by Nicholas Rozsa. MGM Records also is putting out highlights from the "Quo Vadis" score and is coupling "Edge of the City" and "Cobweb." "People like background music. We're giving it to them," ran one explanation. MGM Records also is doing a heavy promotion job on an upcoming soundtrack recording of "Raintree County" and a record with the soundtrack of "Silk Stockings."

Among the recent soundtrack disk releases have been "St. Joan," "Face in the Crowd," "Pride and Passion" and "Giant"—all on Capitol Records, which is probably the most active record outfit in that particular area. Capitol also had the very big "King and I" soundtrack release.

Decca thinks its "80 Days" track may well hit the 1,000,000 sales mark, which is extraordinary for an LP. Decca had "Picnic," "Man With the Golden Arm," the Glen Miller and Benny Goodman stories, "The Eddie Duchin Story" and "Sweet Smell of Success." Outfit also packaged the music from "The Mountain."

At RCA they had "Spirit of St. Louis" "Rainmaker" and, just coming out, "Band of Angels." RCA, too, is handling a soundtrack album on "Mr. Rock 'n' Roll," which Paramount acquired. The Imperial label featured soundtrack music from "Men in War" and is putting out the music track from "The Fuzzy Pink Nightgown."

Columbia has had "War and Peace," "Trapeze" and "Baby Doll" and is bringing out "An Affair to Remember." Paramount's own Dot label had "The Ten Commandments" and, in a more logical vein, "Funny Face." In the musicals department, RCA will bring out "South Pacific," and Columbia will have "Pajama Game," because Doris Day, starred in the picture, is one of its contract performers.

With the film companies taking the position that they have virtually nothing to lose, but a good deal to gain from soundtrack album releases, the record outfits also feel that they are taking somewhat less of a risk. Occasionally, if contractual obligations conflict, a company will re-record a score and then call it music from the given film. Even if the music on the record is taken directly from the soundtrack, the musicians that originally recorded it for the film must be paid over again.

Asked whether, in the light of the current record company interest in their music tracks the producers were beginning to put music into films with an eye for eventual release on records, a film company exec shrugged off the idea with "I've never heard it suggested. Maybe it occurs to some of the smaller fellows. The big ones are more interested in turning out a picture that registers on the screen." Same situation does not, of course, hold true of the out-and-out musicals.

Regular Contracts For Only 28 Writers; But Lots Currently Employ Many

Hollywood, July 23.

Although there has been an upping in the number of screenwriters employed at the major studios since last January, the number of scripters under contract has hit a new low—28.

Biggest increase in writer jobs is at Metro, indicating considerable production activity ahead for the Culver City lot after several months of comparative quiet. Metro tops the major studios in screenwriters on its payroll, with 30, as compared to 13 working there last January. Studio is also far ahead in the field of termpacters, with 16 such scripters there. Metro which, in what used to be "normal," led Hollywood in screenwriters working slipped to fourth the early part of the year, shortly after the top echelon change which saw Dore Schary exit as studio production chief, with Ben Thau the new studio boss.

Number of writers at the majors today totals 115, as compared to 98 last January; number of term scripters, which hit a new low of 29 the early part of the year, slipped again, this time to 28, as the industry trend to sign writers to single picture deals rather than termpacts continues.

Universal, which led the field in number of screenwriters the first part of the year, is now runnerup with 27. Next is 20th-Fox, with 19, then Columbia, with 17.

There are 12 scripters at Warner Bros., a hike of five; nine at Paramount, one at Allied Artists. There are no writers either at RKO or Republic.

RKO's 3 Pictures Via DeLaurentiis

Rome, July 23.

RKO has signed a three-picture pact with Dino DeLaurentiis productions following lengthy confabs. Deal calls for features to be made in Italy by the local company. Two of these will be released by RKO in Italy and in certain other countries, while the third, on a large-scale budget and with actors of international calibre, will get RKO distribution all over the world. Latter will be shot in English language.

One of the films will probably be a Guilietta Masina starrer, currently being scripted by her husband, Federico Fellini, and several other writers. Fellini, however, will not direct the item, which deals with the adventures of a slightly aged countess, played by Miss Masina. No starting date has been set yet, while other details of the pact are still undisclosed.

Deal with RKO follows on heels of other similar ones the Italo producer has concluded in recent years with Paramount and, more recently, Columbia. RKO, in turn, has taken on release of the upcoming Gina Lollobrigida starrer, "Anna di Brooklyn," as part of its program of International investments, initiated by company topper Tom O'Neill during his recent European swing.

Jack L. Warner Starts New Big HQ On WB Lot

Hollywood, July 23.

Flanked by stars and executives, Jack L. Warner, WB prexy, broke ground yesterday (Mon.) for the studio's new $1,000,000 administrative headquarters for tv film production. Building will house facilities for executives and writing and editorial staffs.

Four major network shows are currently being filmed at Warner Bros. and a fullhour science series is due to start soon. Available for these productions are the 21 big sound stages, three of which were recently remodelled specifically to meet tv needs.

Among other facilities, the new building will house 26 film editing rooms and four projection rooms. Warner stressed the new structure was only the first step in a long-range program to build tv film production.

Vogel Fighting Tomlinson

ability of the board of directors to function." He charged, too, that the policies and the program of Loew's have been obstructed and that, as a result, the equity of the stockholders is being endangered.

Tomlinson Not Talking

Tomlinson, reached at his Ft.-Lauderdale, Fla., home, refused to comment on the Vogel blast. He said he'd like to study Vogel's statement before he issued any of his own.

The Loew's president attributed the resignations of Reid, Pace and Brownell to the "atmosphere of frustration, wrangling and stalemate created by the drive for power" of L. B. Mayer, Tomlinson and Meyer. Vogel indicated that he had hoped that Tomlinson's large stockholdings "might be an assurance of cooperation" but that events proved that "his real ambition" was to make Meyer president of Loew's, himself chairman of the board, and Louis B. Mayer "a paid adviser under contract to the studio." This setup, according to Vogel, was constantly proposed "as the price for peace."

In the sharp counter-attack on Mayer, Vogel recalled that during Mayer's 27-year tenure as studio boss he had received over $20,000,000 in direct compensation. He added that in the last three years of Mayer's sole authority as studio head in 1947, 1948 and 1949, the Metro pictures released lost about $9,000,000. "This is the man who, at the age of 72, is attempting to recapture his position through the Tomlinson-Meyer machinations," Vogel declared.

The Loew's president, in a lawyer-checked, carefully-worded statement, noted that unfounded stories of the company's financial distress, had been spread "while Tomlinson himself turns down bids for his stock at substantial gains." Noting that the directors came from different parts of the country and that any absence shifted the majority in the close-divided board, Vogel declared that the situation "prevented the effective operation of the company and subjected the officers of the company to dire threats of seizure of control."

Can't Conduct Biz

The 13-man board consisted of six Vogel supporters and six so-called Tomlinson men. Reid was regarded as the "swing" man. The other two who handed in their resignations last week— Pace and Brownell — were considered in the Vogel camp.

The split in the board, according to Vogel, brought about an atmosphere in which "intrigue, conspiracy and political manipulation took the place of constructive business effort." He reported that such an incident took place at the July 12 board meeting on the Coast when several directors could not attend. Vogel stated that under these circumstances, a representative of a management consultant firm was "used" to suggest to the board that Vogel and the other key executives be removed.

The Loew's prexy stated that the "bad faith" of Tomlinson and his associates was revealed after the Feb. 28th stockholders' meeting. He recalled that Tomlinson and his team started the "open assault on Loew's" seven months ago shortly after he (Vogel) assumed the presidency. Most of their charges, he said, were directed at the prior administration. "They ignored the fact that I had already launched a thorough-going program to bring the company back to its former eminence."

Vogel reviewed his "housecleaning" efforts — the termination of Dore Schary's contract and the removal of charges of nepotism. In addition, he noted that he had "speeded" the company's television activities. He declared that "much more could have been done if I had not been obstructed."

Sought Harmony

Recalling his efforts to avoid a proxy fight with Tomlinson last winter, Vogel said he supported a harmony plan which gave the Canadian six members on the board, "thus creating a virtually evenly divided board with only myself as an experienced executive in the motion picture industry." He pointed out that Tomlinson had told the stockholders that "a satisfactory reconciliation" had been arranged. He quoted Tomlinson as saying: "I am very happy to sit with Mr. Vogel and we selected what I think is a very fine board."

That very day, according to Vogel, Tomlinson and Meyer held a secret caucus and tried to swing incumbent directors to dump Vogel and name Meyer president and Tomlinson chairman of the board. The Loew's president continued that after the opposition faction promised peace, Tomlinson and Meyer, "directed behind the scenes by Louis B. Mayer," moved into the Loew's homeoffice building with a staff of lawyers and accountants and "proceeded upon a carefully calculated scheme of harrassment and attack."

Tomlinson, Vogel said, sent letters daily to all the directors making serious charges. His staff, Vogel stated, asked for records and documents, some of them 20 years old, "and were deliberately insulting to our personnel." While he was on the Coast cutting studio overhead and revising the company's production schedule, Vogel said he was harrassed each night by stories from New York "of the bombardment of baseless accusations by Tomlinson and the replies which had to be sent by me pointing out the recklessness and in accuracy of this letter campaign."

They Learned Nothing

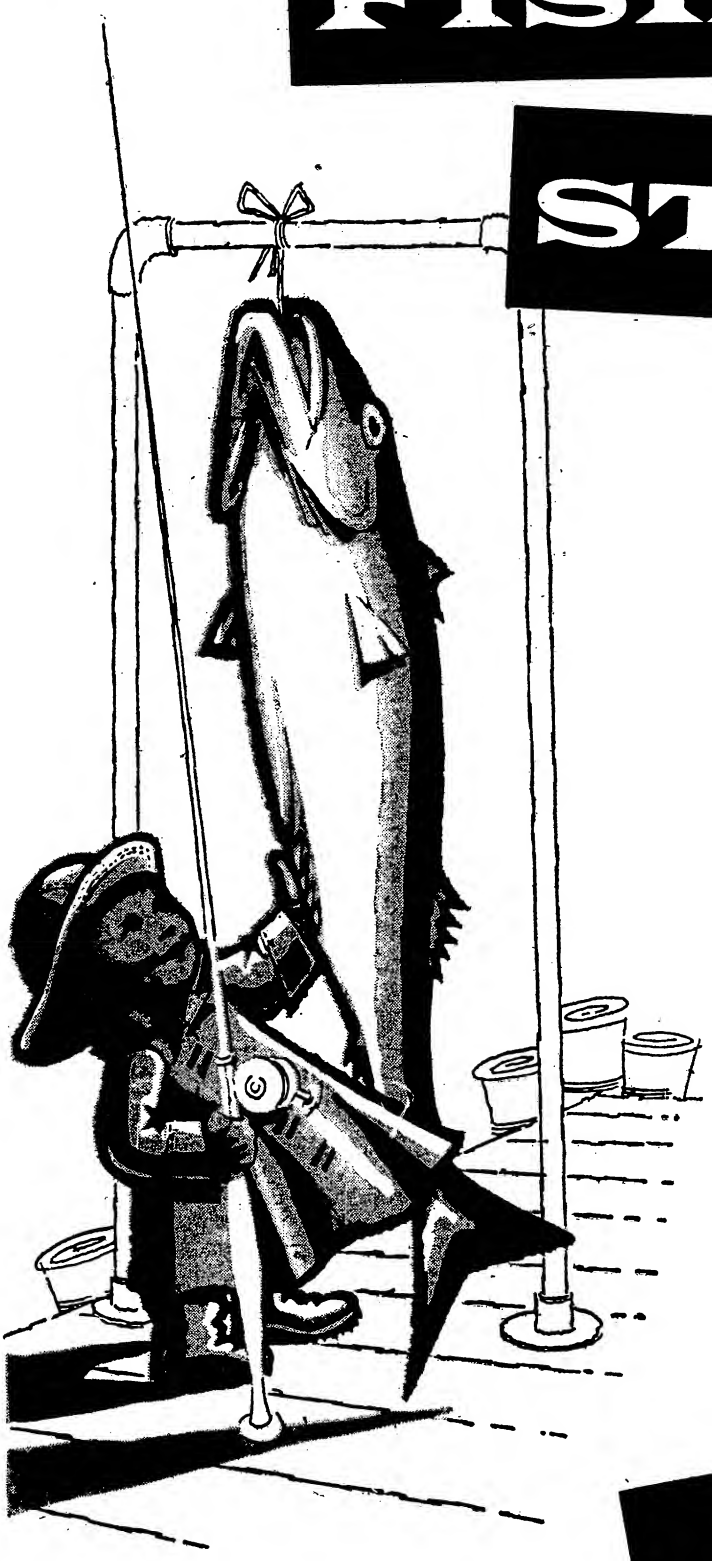
Vogel asserted that he nevertheless gave Tomlinson full cooperation and delivered every document demanded. "Not a single impropriety was exposed, after weeks of research by Tomlinson, Meyer and their staff," he said.

The decision to call the special stockholders' meeting, Vogel said, was taken with the advice of directors, stockholders and executives "who share my sense of obligation to the company, its owners, its personnel and the public itself." The directors who resigned, Vogel added, urged him to call the special meeting "for it was clear that the best interests of the company required that its owners should take the matter in hand."

"For a long time I remained silent," Vogel said. "This was due to my desire not to expose our internal quarrels to the public gaze lest this injure our company. Such forbearance was mistaken for weakness. As often is the case, it accelerated new attacks in the hope that one more blow might wear down the management, cause resignations of board members, and that our company might fall into the hands of the attackers. When it became clear that more injury would be done to our company by paralysis than from exposure, I determined to submit the facts to the stockholders."

Vogel's statement was prepared after a hectic summer weekend of discussions with attorneys and public relations advisers. Conferences on the draft were held Friday, Saturday and Sunday before a final statement met the approval of the Vogel forces. Reports persisted that Vogel may take some form of legal action against Tomlinson, Meyer and Louis B. Mayer.

TYPEWRITERS CLATTER, 13 WRITERS AT H-H-L



Hollywood, July 13.

Total of 13 writers now are working on as many properties for Hecht-Hill-Lancaster in a burst of literary activity that tops many major studios.

William Gibson, author of the novel "The Cobweb" and the tv drama "The Helen Keller Story," reported this week to bring the total to a baker's dozen. He'll work on "The Hitchhiker," based on the George Simenon novel.

Other writers working for H-H-L are John Gay, "Run Silent Run Deep"; John Michael Hayes, "Separate Tables"; Nigel Balchin, "Lucy Crown"; Clifford Odets, "Way West"; Louis Peterson, "Take a Giant Step"; George Axelrod, "The Catbird Seat"; Philip Yordan, "Kimberly," formerly "Tell it on the Drums"; J. P. Miller, "The Unforgiven"; Neil Paterson, "First Love"; Roy Chanslor, "The Ballad of Cat Ballou"; John Dighton, "The Rabbit Trap"; Ray Bradbury, "And the Rock Cried Out."

PRIZE BABY OF THE INDUSTRY

East-West Twain Still Not Together; Chill Unit Mgrs. Touring Expo

Coast-originated plan for the industry to set up a film exhibit to tour the country's numerous county and state fairs for institutional purposes has been given the cold shoulder in New York.

Council of Motion Picture Organizations, which frequently is the clearing house for such proposals, hasn't been given any word on the idea by its originator, the Unit Production Managers Guild, and has come out with no statements.

But homeoffice execs and circuit officials aren't doing any cheering anent the recommendation. This is for the reason that actually the projected touring exhibit is not new, a not dissimilar scheme having been advanced more than six years ago and scuttled after much consideration.

New York group at that time wanted an elaborate exposition on all phases of picture making to be put up at the Grand Central Palace. This was to be followed by a touring exhibit.

New Yorkers, most of them exhibitors, were refused cooperation by homeoffice officials and studio bosses. The matter died.

Prevailing opinion at that time, and apparently one that still persists, is that the industry has its own exhibit in the form of every picture that plays every theatre. The public is interested only in the finished product, and not how the cameras turned, the costumes designed or the sets decorated, it's felt.

Immediate support for the Unit Production Managers Guild's "Fair Plan," outlined last week (17) in VARIETY, has been promised by the Motion Picture Costumers Local 750 IATSE, which pledged full cooperation of its 1,000 members. A joint statement by Ray Harp, prexy and William Edwards, business representative of the local, praised the proposal as both practical and provocative.

"It makes good sense to our people," the Costumers execs declared. "We whole-heartedly agree that such a traveling exhibit could reach millions of persons."

MPC toppers pointed out that the union has long advocated establishment of a permanent museum in Hollywood and expressed regret that the scheme had fallen through "Fair Plan," however, it was noted, could serve as an effective out-of-Hollywood substitute which would "accomplish the important end result, interest people in attending motion pictures."

Costumers said they have long felt that in any industry-wide exhibit "Hollywood's great reputation and artistry in costuming would be a tremendous magnet." Consequently, Harp and Edwards declared that "any time such an exhibit is concretely blue-printed, the Costumers will gladly make available their full manpower, and technical knowledge to make such an exhibit a complete success."

Inattention DeMille Doesn't Suffer From

Paramount's concentration on "The Ten Commandments" in terms of exec manpower assigned to sale of this single production with top-level meetings around the world on its distribution, stacks up this way: The time and effort given to the Cecil B. DeMille epic are nearly equal to the attention given a full season's lineup of releases a few years ago.

James E. Perkins, exec v.p. of Par International, and Jerry Pickman, ad-pub v.p., returned to New York this week from a swing of Berlin, Paris and Rome where they and Clay Hake conducted another series of meetings on release of the production.

Hake is coordinator for overseas sales and distribution.

Sales and promotional conferences have been going on almost constantly at the New York homeoffice — all focusing on the marketing of "Commandments," and now attention is being given the overseas market. Film is to open in England and the Continent in the fall.

All key officers in capital European cities convened in London last May for the initial confab on "Commandments."

RAY LAWLER'S BIG SALE

Australian Actor Sells His 'Doll' Play to H-H-L For 300Gs

Hollywood, July 23.

Hecht-Hill-Lancaster has agreed to pay $300,000, an unprecedented price, for the film rights to a current London hit play by an unknown Australian actor-writer.

Play is "Summer of the 17th Doll," written by Ray Lawler. It was first presented in Australia where it was seen by Sir Laurence Olivier who promptly acquired the rights to the London production and brought Lawler to England to star. Play will be produced on Broadway next season by the Theatre Guild in association with Roger Stevens.

H-H-L plans to make it with four top stars.

UA, Disney Near Deal with Czechs But MPEA Aloof

Karlovy Vary, July 23.

Both United Artists and Walt Disney are about to wind up deals here with the Czech state monopoly. At the same time, an immediate Czech pact with the Motion Picture Export Assn. looks unlikely.

The deal with UA involves three films—"Marty," "Trapeze" and "Rebellion of the Hanged." They'd be sold for $20,000. Disney looks set to sell the Czechs "Snow White" and "Lady and the Tramp."

The Czechs definitely are miffed over the MPEA failure to enter a picture at the recent Karlovy Vary film fest. They originally wanted "The Rainmaker," but this was nixed by MPEA. Marc Spiegel, the Assn.'s Continental manager, then wanted to bring in "Friendly Persuasion," but the Czechs stood firm against a picture that had already been shown at another fest (Cannes).

Czech reps here feel that the offish MPEA stance may have been a gambit due to their balking at prices and the number of films they were asked to take per year. They're also wondering whether the negotiations with UA and Disney might have something to do with it.

The MPEA wants a prince range of between $3,000 and $10,000 per picture, with most films in the $10,000 category. It also wants the Czechs to take 25 films. The Czechs want a scale set up so no film will cost more than $6,000. They also maintain they can't take more than 10 to 15 pix per year.

Czechs import comparatively few European films. No. U.S. pictures have been on the screens here since 1948 (the exceptions being "Little Fugitive" and "Salt of the Earth.")

ALTERNATE ENDINGS

Foxwell Hopes Yanks Use Sad One On 'Manuela'

London, July 23.

Anticipating that an unhappy ending might adversely affect the chance of his features in the U. S. market, indie producer Ivan Foxwell, on his own initiative, made alternative fade-out sequences for "Manuela," starring Trevor Howard, Pedro Armendariz and Elsa Martinelli.

Now that he's closed a deal with Paramount, carrying with it a guaranteed advance of $280,000, Foxwell is anxious that they should adhere to the original—and unhappy—ending. With that in view, he's heading for the U. S. for confabs with Paramount in the next few days, to talk them out of using his own alternative.

"Manuela" was launched last weekend with a Royal premiere graced by the Duke of Edinburgh.

Busy Planning to Be Busy; Sam Engel Next Summer Rolls Five for 20th-Fox

Hollywood, July 23.

Currently readying five properties for 20th-Fox under his new indie deal at the studio, producer Samuel Engel will have five vehicles rolling next summer, all of them on location and two abroad.

Engel has assigned Harold Jack Bloom to screenplay "Captive." Tome involves the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and Engel and Bloom go to British Columbia July 30 for discussions on the project with the RCMP. Film will be shot there.

Engel is also readying "Glorietta Path," based on a factual story about a nun sent to Colorado around 1880, as a member of the Sisters of Charity order. Vehicle is based on a series of letters the nun sent her Mother Superior. Film will be lensed in Colorado.

Producer is also prepping "The Freebooters," from his own original story. Property will be shot on location in Wyoming. He has two other vehicles which will be lensed abroad.

Producer's last film, "Bernardine," which stars Pat Boone, is currently playing in 450 situations here and in Canada. Although it opened only July 4, it has already recouped its production cost of $1,150,000, and studio estimates it will hit a domestic gross of $4,200,000 and global gross of around $6,000,000, Engel said. Breakeven figure for the film is $2,250,000.

Latex Believed Stanley Hero As Profit Increases

Net profit of Stanley Warner Corp. soared to $2,699,600, equivalent to $1.25 per share, for the 39-week period ended May 25. Showing for the fiscal stanza indicated a 33% increase over the similar period of a year ago when net income amounted to $2,029,200, equal to 94c per share on the stock outstanding at that time.

As has been its custom, Stanley includes all its income together, making it impossible to determine which of its primary operations is the most profitable. Overall take from theatre admissions, merchandise sales, rents from tenants totalled $83,808,700 as compared with $70,780,400 for the corresponding period of a year ago.

The statement does not reveal whether or not theatre operation was profitable during the financial period reported. In recent years, however, it's believed that the healthy financial structure is due largely to the activities of the International Latex Corp., a wholly-owned subsidiary which manufactures the Playtex brand of bras, girdles and baby pants and which has recently diversified into the pharmaceutical field with a group of products issued under the Isodine label.

The company's net profit for the quarter ended May 25 was $691,800 as compared with $400,100 earned during the same period of a year ago. This is equivalent to 31c per share as compared with 18c per share a year ago.

In addition to its theatre chain and the International Latex Corp., Stanley Warner also obtained income from the production, distribution and operation of Cinerama theatres.

Shulman Buys Ritz Art, Cleve., Katz Quits Biz

Cleveland, July 23.

Edward Shulman of Cleveland bought the Ritz Art in Memphis from Jack Katz, who quit the film biz, and has added it to his middle-western Art Theater Guild as the 11th house in this chain. Remodeled by Steve Ely of Columbus, O., the Ritz opened last week as Memphis' sole art house.

Manager is Nelson R. McNaughton, who has been pinchhitting at Shulman's Heights Art Theater in Cleveland in absence of regular manager, Nico Jaccobelli. Latter is on European trip to check new product at Venice Film Festival and to visit his hometown in Bari, Italy.

Group, includes: Harry Mandel, RKO Theatres; Harry Goldberg, Stanley Warner; Ernest Emerling, Loew's Theatres; Rodney Bush, 20th-Fox; Si Seadler, Metro, and Phil Gerard, Universal.

At a meeting last week, reps of the industry groups aligned with COMPO in the institutional campaign were given assurance that the studios would lend their full support. This was stated by Clarke H. (Duke) Wales, secretary of the Studio Publicity Directors Committee. He said the Coast group, for example, would provide talent where needed in the plot to stimulate theatre attendance.

Kansas City, July 22.

Hottest of weather is being met with some stellar attractions and most boxoffices are holding their own. Temperatures are hitting the 100-mark almost daily, aiding the conventional houses and cutting in on drive-ins.

East, Heavy Centre of Cartooning, Urges L.A. Accept 'National' Acad

Hollywood, July 23.

Protest on manner of organziation of newly-formed Academy of Animated Arts was registered from NY, by IATSE Screen Cartoonists Local 841. In letter to AAA exec director John M. Holmes, Pepe Ruiz, union's biz agent, urged the Acad "to organize on a national basis, recognizing all geographic locations, all forms of animation, all types of studios and all unions in the industry."

Ruiz' letter commented: "You cannot fairly claim to speak for the animated cartoon industry. You are undoubtedly aware that a substantial proportion of animated cartoons are produced outside California . . . It is our conviction that an Academy cannot command public acceptance and respect unless it is created and motivated by every segment of the industry it represents."

Meanwhile, the dove of peace hovered over the embattled newly-formed Academy of Animated Arts, following a meeting with dissident indie cartoonery producers and unofficial reps of Screen Cartoonists Guild last week.

"Complete reorganization" of the Acad was promised by AAA officers, as well as repayment "as soon as possible' 'to the IATSE of a $3,000 loan from the IA's Motion Picture Screen Cartoonists. Ray Patin, one of the dissident producers, stated that his group was "still listening" to the Acad, on the basis of starting all over again.

Meanwhile, matter of SCG support came up at regular membership meeting last night. AAA exec director John Holmes dispatched a letter to the Guild, promising full participation rights on all levels.

Lawrence Kilty, SCG biz agent, emphasized that he attended meeting strictly as an unofficial observer. He declared that the Guild will retain an "open mind" about the Acad, if organizational mistakes are corrected. "We're critical of the method of formation, in which a large part of the industry was left out," he told VARIETY.

Besides Holmes, AAA reps attending Tuesday meeting were Herbert Klynn of UPA, AAA v.p.; secretary Wilson D. Burness; and attorney Woodrow S. Wilson. Klynn admitted organizational errors, mainly because of short period in which the new Acad was set up. He also invited indie producer and SCG participation in the upper echelons of the Acad and promised that the AAA would completely "disassociate" itself from any suggestion of IA or major studio "domination."

HERB STEINBERG OF PAR CLEAN-BILLS LEWIS

Paramount exploitation director Herb Steinberg, who toured 21 cities with Jerry Lewis, states it just isn't so that the comedian acted like a heel in Toronto, as he was so described in a dispatch from that city last week. Stuart Kennedy, disk jockey on Toronto's CKEY, rapped Lewis for being late for a date, cursing stagehands, muffing publicity opportunities, etc.

On his entire 23-day tour, said Steinberg, Lewis was late for one appearance (caused by a traffic snarl in St. Louis), he talked about the stage setup only to members of his own entourage, never to stagehands, and had nothing to do with arranging the press audiences.

And the comic feels, according to Steinberg, that perhaps the personals aren't worth the effort if all he gets is a rap.

Foreign Film Fair Fizzles; TOA's Miami Convention To Have Seminar Instead

Theatre Owners of America's ambitious Foreign Film Fair, which was to have been held with the org's 1957 annual convention at Miami, has fizzled.

TOA prexy Ernest G. Stellings, in disclosing the decision not to have a fair this year, hinted at both practical difficulties and a lack of cooperation from the independent distributors. TOA had been wrestling with the organizational problems involved for some months.

Stellings said the exhibitors group still intended to hold a foreign film seminar, and would cooperate with any distributor desirous of arranging private screenings for attending theatremen.

The first Foreign Film Fair was held within the framework of the TOA convention in Gotham last year.

"Because of the distance from the center of foreign film distribution, the heavy convention program, and in view of the difficulties in obtaining the proper facilities close to the convention area, it was deemed necessary to postpone the Film Fair to a later date," Stellings stated.

"It is hoped that with a more central location and a more convenient time, the full cooperation and efforts of all segments of the industry, as well as the foreign producers, might be correlated so that the Fair could be sponsored as part of an all-industry promotion and public relations campaign."

'TEXAS LI'L DARLIN'':

Mr. Carson Betters Classic Portrayal

By JOHN ROSENFIELD

THE AUDITORIUM revival returns Jack Carson as Hominy Smith.

The name is the same but it is a different Jack Carson. The erstwhile movie clown has done time on the stage and night clubs in the six years since our last "Texas, Li'l Darlin' " and, you know, this guy is now an actor with an immortal role.

He invests the script with his abounding vitality and all that sort of thing but he has learned everything about jet-propelling a gag, timing a point and even the greasing the rails for a fellow-actor.

The Carson portrayal of the rural politician with sliding panama, snapping galluses and drooping pants comes near to being tremendous

CARSON'S growth into a stage star of immense magnitude instead of a short-order clown with an amazing set of loutish tricks make this show one of the joys of the Dallas summer. A crowd of 1,850 was on hand to applaud it.

That Night

an attack of their own. There's no attempt to glamorize story or the performers.

As the heart attack victim, John Beal could easily pass for one of the myriads of commuters seen in Grand Central or Pennsylvania stations. Similarly Augusta Dabney, as the victim's wife, is a representative-surburban housewife. Both give the type of convincing and noteworthy performances that will rate important attention.

Based on a true-life incident detailed in a magazine article, the story was also presented on Robert Montgomery's tv show, a factor that may also hamper the picture's b.o. chances. Despite which as a modest-budget "small" picture, "That Night" represents an outstanding contribution in film-making. It's a picture that is worth seeing, but it'll take a lot of selling to convince the potential customers.

Robert Wallace and Jack Rowles provided the realistic and provocative story and screenplay; tv actor-director John Newland makes an auspicious bow as a theatrical film director, and producer Brown has set up production values that are right. Shepperd Strudwick, as the victim's doctor; Malcolm Brodrick, Dennis Kohler and Beverly Lunsford, as the victim's three young children; Rosemary Murphy, as a nurse; Bill Darrid, as a doctor, and Norman Corwin's old radio narrator, Joe Julian, as a patient, lend strong support.

Technical aspects are first-rate, including Maurice Hartzband's camerawork, Mel Bourne's art direction, David Cooper's editing, and Mario Nascimbene's music. Holl.

This is a sort of French "Man Who Came to Dinner." But here a zany character, who has been rebuffed by a girl, tries to commit suicide in a friend's home and then he moves in as they decide to cure him of his phobia. Comedy is in the havoc caused by this demanding character who upsets the life of the family. Main asset is the first starring role of comic Darry Cowl, but otherwise its humor is stilted and telegraphed ahead.

Cowl is a sort of amalgum of Harpo Marx and Jerry Lewis plus a stuttering manner of speech. He is only funny, however, when the material is strong enough to harbor his capers, and here the weak, talky plotting leaves the fun patchy.

Technical credits are good and supporting cast adequate, but director Jack Pinateau has relied too much on the shambling Cowl without making situations "logical" enough for acceptance. Mosk.

A rather slow moving sentimental yarn has been woven around the polyglot population in the foreign section in central London known as the Scho. It is a simple story that lacks punch and gives the impression that more could have been made of the colorful material. It rates as fair entertainment that should cash in on the popularity of the stars.

A small side street of shops and cafes has been shut down for road repairs and Mike, one of the working gang, proceeds to live up to his reputation as a wolf. He gets involved with an Italian family about to emigrate to Canada. The son wants to stay behind as he is in love with a barmaid, but Mike has already proved her an easy conquest, and saves him from a hopeless marriage. The elder daughter is reluctant to go as she has a chance to marry a prosperous cafe proprietor. The younger girl at first most anxious that the family shall stay together, falls for Mike's charm, and stays behind, only to find he doesn't want her.

The repairing gang moves on, after their job is complete, but after the girl is left flat she prays in the nearby church, and Saint Anthony obliges with a miracle. A broken water pipe forces up all the newly concreted street, and the workmen come back to start afresh. Mike realizes he can't get out of it this time and gets resigned to the ball and chain.

John Gregson never seems quite at home in rough clothes but makes a likeable personality of the roving Romeo, and Belinda Lee is simple and naive as the anglicized Italian girl in love with him. Her elder sister is played in more adult, alien fashion by Rosalie Crutchley, and Marie Burke and Peter Illing make an authentic, excitable Momma and Poppa.

Ian Bannen has more real opportunity to characterize as the disillusioned son, and Cyril Cusack weaves in and out like a connecting thread as a salvationist-mailman nursng a hopeless love. Supporting players provide brief nationalistic characters as a background frame, but have little impact on the story. Pic is well directed and has some excellent camera work. Clem.

1918—A Man and His Conscience

Berlin, June 30.

Suomen Filmiteollisuus (SF) release of T. J. Sarkka production. Stars Aake Lindman, Ann Savo, Pentti Irjala, Helge Herala, Merja Linko. Directed by Toivo Sarkka. Screenplay, Jarl Hemmer; camera, Marius Raichi; music, Heikki Aaltola; editing, Elmer Lahti; sets, Karl Fagerstrom. At Berlin Film Fest. Running time, 105 MINS.

This Finnish film has an unusual plot to offer: it concerns a priest who seeks to lead a prostitute back on to the right path of life. He succeeds only temporarily since the girl's former instincts awaken. The end of this film, backgrounded by the Finnish revolution, sees neither of the two principal players survive.

Although director Sarkka has maintained a certain amount of suspense, film is "remote." It's pretty limited to Finland home consumption.

A strong plus is Ann Savo who enacts the prostitute. Aside from her extremely beautiful and appealing looks, which command attention, she reveals outstanding acting abilities. Aake Lindman is very convincing as the priest and same goes for a number of supporting players. Hans.

Ingen Tid Til Kaertegn
(Be Dear To Me)
(DENMARK)

Berlin, July 6.

Flamingo Film Studio production. With Eva Cohn, Lily Welding, Grethe Paaske, Hans Kurt, Joergen Reenberg, Preben Lerdorff Rye. Directed by Annelise Hovmand. Screenplay, Finn Methling and Annelise Hovmand; camera, Kjeld Arnholtz; music, Erik Fiehn. At Berlin Film Festival. Running time, 101 MINS.

Denmark, an outstanding film producing nation in silent days, came to Berlin Festival with a feature that stands considerably above the average offerings of 1957. It's a very well made production centering around an eight-year old girl who feels neglected by her busy actress-mother and her even busier executive-father. So she goes off on a private excursion and the worried parents finally realize that it's about time to take more care of the child. This film has many advantages to offer, but its main asset is Eva Cohn, a "lovable" and highly talented moppet who pretty much steals the picture.

Direction by Annelise Hovmand, who also worked on the script, also deserves mention, the more so as Miss Hovmand succeeded in creating a film which for its poetic ingredients will also appeal to the more fastidious customers. Occasionally, there is an overdose of sentimentality but that's not anti-commercial. Hans.

Le Rouge Est Mis
(The Red Light Is On)

Paris, June 25.

Gaumont release of Cite Film-SNEG production. Stars Jean Gabin; features Annie Girardot, Paul Frankeur, Lino Ventura, Marcel Bozzufi. Directed by Gilles Grangier. Screenplay, Michel Audiard, Auguste-Le Breton, Grangier from novel by Le Breton; camera, Louis Page; editor, Jacqueline Sadoul. At Biarritz, Paris. Running time 90 MINS.

Louis	Jean Gabin
Helene	Annie Girardot
Riccolo	Paul Frankeur
Pepito	Lino Ventura
Pierre	Marcel Bozzufi

This is an underworld pic which treats a group of aging gangsters trying to work themselves into regular bourgeois life while carrying on their payroll robberies. Plot shows most of the mob being killed. Film has some excitement but is generally plodding. Main asset is the presence of Jean Gabin who gives the pic some weight, as the gangleader. However, it telegraphs its action blows, and this limits it to dual fare for the U. S.

Gabin runs a modern garage as a cover. His kid brother has been sent up for a petty theft done for a young girl. The last gang job goes astray when it leads to a lot of killing and betrayal by one of the members. One of them thinks it is Gabin's recently released brother, but Gabin saves the boy at the cost of his own life.

Film is well played and has a rugged, crude aspect in the earthy dialog of Auguste Le Breton. An ex-gangster, he has become known for his salty gangster tales. He wrote "Riffi." However, this lacks the verve of the former. Gabin displays his usual, vigorous assurance. Annie Girardot is a saucy conniver with an attractive physique and personality.

Technical credits are good as are other actors. Pic looks good locally. Mosk.

Mort En Fraude
(Fraudulent Death)
(FRENCH)

Paris, May 25.

J. Arthur Rank release of Intermondia production. Stars Daniel Gelin; features Anh Mechard. Directed by Marcel Camus. Screenplay, Michel Audiard, Camus, Jean Hougron from novel by Hougron; camera, Edmond Sechan; editor, Jacqueline Thiedot. At Marignan, Paris. Running time, 105 MINS.

Horcier	Daniel Gelin
Anh	Anh Mechard

Film starts out as a taut thriller and segues into one of the first French filmic looks at the Indochinese debacle of 1950. It has a style and pace but meanders in dramatic progression. It has some good action scenes and a solid offbeat production value in the locations of Indochina. This shapes a probable arty theatre entry and would be worth dubbing for general situations.

A Frenchman, coming to work in Indochina during the war, has agreed to smuggle in a package. It is stolen during the trip and some smugglers pursue him. Then, he realizes what the war is doing to these people and tries to help them.

For a first pic, Marcel Camus shows a firm feel for place, atmosphere and characterization. However, it advances too leisurely after a fine beginning. Daniel Gelin is excellent as the hounded Frenchman who finds a reason for living in helping the natives and Anh Mechard is telling as the Eurasian he loves. Use of natives and locals also adds a realistic element. Technical work is tops. Mosk.

Rose Bernd
(GERMAN—COLOR)

Berlin, June 25.

Schorcht release of Bavaria production. Stars Maria Schell and Raf Vallone; features Kaethe Gold, Leopold Biberti, Hannes Messemer, Arthur Wiesner. Directed by Wolfgang Staudte. Screenplay by Walter Ulbrich, after stageplay by Gerhart Hauptmann; camera, (Agfacolor) Klaus von Rautenfeld; music, Herbert Windt; editor, Lillian Seng. At Marmorhaus, Berlin. Running time, 98 MINS.

Rose Bernd	Maria Schell
Arthur Streckmann	Ray Vallone
Henriette Flamm	Kaethe Gold
Christoph Flamm	Leopold Biberti
August Keil	Hannes Messemer
Vater Bernd	Arthur Wiesner
Maria Schubert	Christa Keller
Judge	Siegfried Lowitz

Gerhardt Hauptmann's "Rose Bernd" is one of the most prominent German stage plays and the kind of story German audiences love best. This is amply borne out by the boxoffice results within Germany, which have been tops. For the foreign market, and specifically for the U.S., this is a most doubtful entry, except perhaps for the German language houses. It might best be compared with a German version of an American soapopera, i.e. the bubbles are missing.

As was the case with other Hauptmann plays, such as "Die Ratten," this one, too, has been modernized. It's now the German postwar era and Rose Bernd is a refugee girl from Silesia. Although much of the original has been saved, some critical (German) filmgoers may again argue that this isn't the true Hauptman. In any case, it got the "particularly valuable" certificate from the West German film classification board.

Wolfgang Staudte, one of Germany's top directors, is responsible for this one, and while there are some flashes of imagination, his direction on the whole is pedantic and over-dramatic. Color lensing by Klaus von Rautenfeld helps the picture, but Maria Schell's performance is something to argue about. She's Germany's top actress and her name on the marquee alone assures the film stature in Germany.

But this can't detract from the fact that her portrayal of Rose Bernd is shallow and unrealistic, and that she persists in the kind of mannerisms that have become the trademark of virtually every picture in which she appears. Rose Bernd here becomes Maria Schell, instead of the other way 'round.

Story concerns Rose Bernd, a young farm girl who is in love with three men: Christoph Flamm (Leopold Biberti), the owner of an estate; Arthur Streckmann (Raf Vallone), a goodlooking but callous laborer, and August Keil (Hannes Messemer), a goodnatured printer, whom Rose has been promised by her father. When Rose realizes that she is expecting, and that Flamm is the father, everyone turns against her and she has to leave the community. Her child is born, and dies, in the snow, under a viaduct, as the train roars by overhead.

Miss Schell fails to communicate her emotional turmoil, and as a result the whole melodramatic story becomes maudlin. If Hauptmann is a difficult author for foreigners to grasp in the first place, this version of the play doesn't endear him any further. There are some good performances to compensate. Kaethe Gold has dignity and understanding as the crippled wife; Vallone has a good, masculine quality; Biberti does okay as the landowner; Hannes Messemer is good as the shy but loyal friend.

Technically, the film is firstrate. Herbert Windt's music is a plus.

Woman In A Dressing Gown
(BRITISH)

Yvonne Mitchell's prize-winning performance highlights new British domesticity problem story. Good b.o. possibilities.

Berlin, July 3.

Associated British-Pathe release of a Godwin-Willis-Lee Thompson Production. Stars Yvonne Mitchell, Anthony Quayle and Sylvia Syms. Produced by Frank Godwin and J. Lee Thompson; director, J. Lee Thompson; screenplay, Ted Willis; camera, Gilbert Taylor; music, Louis Levy. At Zoo Palast, Berlin, July 2, '57. Running time, 98 MINS.

Amy	Yvonne Mitchell
Jim	Anthony Quayle
Georgie	Sylvia Syms
Brian	Andrew Ray
Hilda	Carole Lesley
Pawnbroker	Michael Ripper
Mrs. Williams	Nora Gordon
Hairdresser	Marianne Stone
Manageress	Olga Lindo
Wine Merchant	Harry Locke
Harold	Max Butterfield
Christine	Roberta Woolley
Newsboy	Melvyn Hayes
Hilda's Baby	Cordelia Mitchell

A prize winning entry at the Berlin Festival, for which Yvonne Mitchell collared the best actress award, "Woman In a Dressing Gown" is a picture with obvious b.o. potentials and distinctly geared to capture femme support. The Godwin-Willis-Lee Thompson production should be a stout home trade candidate, with brisk potentials in other territories.

The principal character in Ted Willis' screenplay is reminiscent of the Shirley Booth role in "Come Back, Little Sheba." Yvonne Mitchell plays an endearing slut on the verge of losing her husband to a younger, more attractive and more wholesome girl. The uncanny depth of her portrayal lifts the story from a conventional rut and gives it a classy stature, which will reap returns when it goes the rounds.

Miss Mitchell plays the wife who is never able to keep pace with the demands of life. Every day she tries in vain to make her home attractive for her husband and son, but the odds are always overwhelming. Dishes remain unwashed, food, such as it is, is always spoilt and she, herself, is continuously garbed in a dirty greasy dressing robe. Inevitably, her husband (Anthony Quayle) is attracted to a girl in the office (Sylvia Syms) but at the moment of crisis cannot make the break.

Astute writing and adroit direction help to retain sympathy for the leading character, although her tiresome behavior rarely justifies it. There's one moving scene in which she persuades her husband to bring the other girl to the house, so that the three of them can talk it over as adults. But Miss Mitchell gets drunk even before the other two arrive, and it develops into a highly embarrassing and emotional situation.

Miss Mitchell's performance is the walk-away highlight of the production, but Anthony Quayle does a solidly reliable job as the husband. Sylvia Syms contributes a more tender performance as the other girl and Andrew Ray makes an impressionable son. Other roles, mainly of minor importance, are adequately filled by a competent team.

J. Lee Thompson's crisp direction sets the pattern for the okay technical credits. Myro.

Screenplay by Stemmle, after stage comedy, "Schwarzbrot and Kipferl," by Werner von der Schulenberg; camera (Eastmancolor), Heinz Schnackertz; music, Herbert Trantow; editor, Klaus Eckstein; Tradeshown at UFA Pavillon, Berlin. Running time, 98 MINS.

Mizzi Fox	Lotte Lang

This German comedy takes its fun from the natural contrasts that exist between northern Germans and Austrians. Pic has its first locality in a hotel up in the Austrian mountains where a German and an Austrian family encounter each other. After varied troubles mainly resulting from the fact that each party lays claim to the best hotel rooms, but the girl of the German and the boy of the Austrian family fall in love, and peace returns. Pic seems a natural for the German market if not in all countries.

R. A. Stemmle directed this with such speed that it makes the more familiar situations still worthwhile. He is helped by a number of experienced comics, notably Oscar Sima, Paul Hoerbiger (the Austrians) and Gustav Knuth and Fita Benkhoff (the Germans). The romantic interest is adequately supplied by Gerhard Riedmann and Eva Probst. Important supporting roles are well done by Fritz Tillmann, Gusti Wolf and Lotte Lang.

Pic has the advantage of beautiful though occasionally too bluish Eastmancolors plus a fine score by Herbert Trantow. Other technical credits are all up to par. Hans.

Berlin, June 25.

Schorcht (German) release of Cosmopol production. Stars Luise Ulrich; features Hans Nielsen, Karl Schoenboeck, Ingrid Andree. Directed by Helmut Weiss. Screenplay, Helmut Weiss, Erich Freidmann and Juliane Kay, after comedy, "It's Never Too Late," by Felicity Douglas; camera, Kurt Hasse; music, Johannes Fehring; editor, Ilse Wilken and Amalia Marschalik. Preemed at Filmbuehne Wien, Berlin. Running time, 97 MINS.

Film Director	Eric Frey

Felicity Douglas' comedy, "It's Never Too Late," after which this was taken, was recently a real success on the local stage. Despite a competent cast, this film is not half as good as the stageshow. There is too much concentration on slapstick while rather old-fashioned direction can be blamed. The creators of this low-budget film may be grateful to Luise Ulrich since she saves this pic via her intelligent portrayal of the femme lead. She also will guarantee this one at least saisfactory returns. "Family" will be restricted to German-language territories.

"Dear Family" shows a bunch of egoists with most of them the quarreling type. Only normal person around is Miss Ulrich. The many things occurring in her household inspire her to write a book which not only finds a publisher but also Hollywood attention. She eventually departs from her family but then returns when she realizes that everyone is basically nice.

Miss Ulrich portrays her mother role with the essential charm, being is a natural for this part. Hans Nielsen is convincing as her lawyer-husband. Ingrid Andree comes off very well as her film-crazy daugh-

Freedom
(NIGERIA-COLOR)

Berlin, July 9.

Moral Re-Armament presentation and production. Written by Manasseh Moerane. Ifoghate Amata and Asbayisaa Karbo. Camera (Eastmancolor), Richard Tegstroem. Aimo Jaederholm and others. Music, James W. Owens. At Berlin Film Fest. Running time, 95 MINS.

"Freedom" is based on the like titled play of the Moral Re-Armament movement and is reportedly the first African tinter. Hard to judge by artistic or other critical criteria. It's a slanted effort, financed by members of the MRA religious movement. Film shows how in Nigeria, amid colonialism and anti-colonialism, force and discord, the idea of the MRA movement is taken up and all is turned peaceful.

"Freedom" is dilettantish and contains unintended comedy but it must be regarded as well-meant and, to a certain degree, interesting enterprise.

Definite plus is the color photography, handled by Walt Disney's Swedish cameraman Richard Tegstroem and Finnish Aimo Jaederholm. The acting, mostly by inexperienced players, is occasionally moving. For its message and its sympathetic principal characters, film found a friendly reception in Berlin. Hans.

Ealing's second production under the Metro banner is an outdoor adventure yarn filmed largely on location in Australia. It's a picture with a considerable amount of charm, hypoed by an outstanding moppet performance by five-year-old Dana Wilson, who acts with all the knowhow of an accomplished veteran. It's b.o. potential, however, must be considered questionable. It's the type of diversion that can be aided by word-of-mouth.

The title is also a doubtful bet as a ticket selling aid, but "Shiralee," which is an Aborigine slang word meaning burden, may arouse some customer curiosity. Peter Finch, a native Australian, can have no name value in the States.

As a native Aussie, Finch has no difficulty in affecting the local accent, which, to British ears, to start with, is akin to an unpleasant cockney dialect. It is, however, easy to follow and may be acceptable in America. In the story, he plays a roving laborer, going from town to town in search of casual work. When he eventually returns to his own home, after an absence of several years, he finds his wife (Elizabeth Sellars) living with another man. He snatches their child out of the home and, with his "shiralee" on his shoulder, he continues his trek across the country.

Apart from the opening sequences, most of the action shows Finch accompanied by his daughter, in search of work and, all too frequently, getting the brush. Also, he's clearly ill at ease with his own child, unable to show the affection and devotion for which she yearns. However, when the infant has the choice of returning to her mother, she options to rough it with the male parent. The final sequences, in which the mother tries to regain custody, the father is beaten up by a gang of thugs and the child almost killed by a truck, provides dramatic tension in a different key.

The entire plot is dominated by Finch and Dana Wilson and they carry the story with considerable force. First class players like Elizabeth Sellars, Rosemary Harris, Sidney James and Tessie O'Shea have comparatively little to do, but make impressive contributions to the overall production. Technically, the pic maintains a high standard, with particular credit to Paul Beeson's outdoor camera work. Myro.

De Vliegende Hollander
(The Flying Dutchman)
(NETHERLANDS)

Amsterdam, July 13.

Corona Film production and release. Directed by Gerard Rutten. Script by Ed. Hoornik and Rutten. Camera, Andor von Barsy. Music, Henk Badings. Features, Ton Kuyl. At Cineas, Plaza Cinemas, Amsterdam. Running time, 90 MINS.

First feature picture to be produced in Holland in two years has as subject early years of Dutch aviation pioneer Anthony Fokker. Subject is apparently not popular with public; Warners' "Spirit Of St. Louis" did so-so business here, but "Flying Dutchman" was already in production then, so producers of Dutch film could not take advantage of boxoffice experience of U.S. release.

"Flying Dutchmon" has electronic music by Henk Badings which may be in character with "the progress" the film wants to stress, but instead makes the local public laugh.

Story, depicting first years of Fokker as plane builder, is situated in Holland and Germany. No German actors were used, though, and phrasing of German dialog characters by Dutch actors proves text bookish, and may mean that whole sound track must be redubbed if or when film is released in Germany.

There is not much action in story and most of the actors show stage technique. Direction is static. Only in the German episodes is more momentum achieved.

Episodic pic concerns itself with customs and life among the inhabitants of some central Pacific isles. Some of the tales have more plot than others, just as some show the obvious while others cite the unusual. Among these are a religious ceremony in which village males show their valor and purity by throwing themselves off a high tower headfirst, with only a vine tied to their legs to abruptly stop their fall. Likewise striking is series of shots showing unusual methods employed in combating moray eels and tiger sharks endangering fishing waters.

Of great beauty and considerable sensuality are sequences depicting marriage of two islanders, complete with fore and aftermath views of often half-naked dancing girls. Marco Scarpelli does a masterful job wth his Ferraniacolor camera (the Ultrascope process is occasionally fuzzy at the edges). A top assist comes from Francesco Lavagnino's lilting musical score which adds much to films mood. Hawk.

Taxichauffeur Baenz (Taxi Driver Baenz). Praesens Zurich production. Directed by Werner Dueggelin; screenplay, Schaggi Streuli; production manager, Uors von Planta; camera, Emil Berna; music, Robert Blum. Stars Schaggi Streuli, Elisabeth Mueller, Maximillian Schell; features Emil Hegetschweiler, Elisabeth Barth, Fred Tanner, Marianne Hediger, Ruedi Walter, Fredy Scheim, Stephanie Glaser, Sigfrit Steiner, Fritz Nussbaum, Peter W. Loosli, Hans Grimm. At Urban Theatre, Zurich, June 26, '57; running time, 93 MINS.

Latest Praesens entry, in Swiss-German, again is in the popular vein of previous Swiss b.o. winners "Policeman Waeckerli" and "Upper Town Street," telling a simple tale of simple people. Contrary to its predecessors, however, only moderate grosses, even on the local market, are in store for this one, with chances abroad questionable. "Baenz" suffers from a weak, only mildly entertaining script and unexperienced direction by newcomer-to-films Werner Dueggelin, an otherwise talented young stage director. Technical credits are fair, with choppy editing contributing to the below-par quality.

Plot is about a hackie financing his daughter's studying medicine. She is engaged to a weak young character whose embleezling of money brings on the complications. With the father's help, all is straightened out in the end. Mezo.

Radio (& Film) Man Argues Air-Plugs Pay Off When Intelligently Written

Editor, VARIETY:

Dallas.

The writer notes with interest your report of the meeting of the Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey in which the members of that esteemed organization indicate their lack of confidence in radio advertising for theatres.

As radio station owners (KLIF, Dallas; KILT, Houston; KTSA, San Antonio) and also as theatre owners (Tri-State Theatres), we feel that we can speak with some authority for both radio and theatres. We feel that the conclusion reached by the New Jersey theatremen is based not upon any ineffectiveness of radio but rather upon the failure of the motion picture industry and theatremen themselves to use the medium correctly.

As a test campaign, we booked O. Henry's "Full House" into our Casa Linda Theatre here in Dallas. The picture had played the theatre earlier with no results at all. Upon re-run, and supported by a heavy radio campaign on KLIF, the picture did 600% better than the first run—and all three nights of the return run were played in a driving rain.

As a second test, we brought back Orson Welles' "Citizen Kane," a boxoffice turkey everywhere the first time around in 1941, and smashed all Casa Linda boxoffice records with the use of intelligent radio promotion on KLIF. The picture did exactly 15 times as much business as it had done on its first offering in 1941. Further to establish the point, three months ago we picked "The Snows of Kilimanjaro" from a list of leftovers offered the Casa Linda. Using radio exclusively again, "Snows" broke even the "Citizen Kane" record.

The answer? It lies simply in intelligent production of announcements. We have long known that institutional campaigns by theatremen have no effect at all. For years on KLIF, our Casa Linda Theatre promoted itself institutionally as "the theatre of distinction" and called attention in rather lacklustre fashion to the feature showing that evening. The results were minuscule. It is not enough to give the name of the picture, the stars, and the time of the features, and hope that people will show up at the boxoffice. Nor is it enough to use the transcribed hokum and cliches in the transcribed announcements offered gratis by the studios themselves. One must locally construct production spot announcements and use them in saturation schedule on stations with high ratings, wherever possible. The announcements must be catchy and listenable and must create in the listeners' imaginations an impression that they wish to fulfill by seeing the picture. This "imagery transfer" is the full secret of successful motion picture advertising. One who understands it, one who will use radio as it should be used —with interest-compelling announcements—will discover that he has been missing motion pictures' greatest advertising possibility.

San Antonio, July 16.

A battle outside the National Theatre here had more action than a "B" movie, according to local police.

Scene I unfolded they said when Domingo Berlanga was refused admittance to the theatre. Angered Berlanga attacked Modesto Garcia, theatre special officer, the police report showed.

Patrolman H. C. Smart, spotting the fight from his car, arrested Berlanga after a chase and struggle in which Smart received cuts and scratches. He reported he had to handcuff Berlanga, who threatened revenge.

Meanwhile, Rafael Maldonado, a bystander, was attacked by one of three men who accused him of having reported Berlanga as a drunk. Maldonado, knocked down, kicked and beaten, required treatment at a local hospital.

Berlanga was booked for drunkness and aggravated assault on a police officer.

COMPO Funds Now From Theatremen; No Distrib Pledge

Council of Motion Picture Organizations is moving ahead with exhibitor collections to finance the industry's institutional campaign although the distributors have yet to take new formal action in the way of matching the theatremen's money dollar for dollar.

Motion Picture Assn. of America board of directors several weeks ago allocated $250,000 for the program. Exhibs, however, on the basis of enthusiastic statements by trade association leaders, likely will ante up over $1,000,000. If this proves correct, MPAA obviously will be called upon to substantially hike its contribution.

It's regarded as a foregone conclusion that MPAA eventually will pay its full share. When the original donation was made, president Eric A. Johnston made it clear that MPAA's continued support could be expected.

Theatremen are chipping in the amount equqaliing quarter of 1% of the film rentals they paid the distribs last year.

Texas Carriers Want Up

Austin, July 23.

Film Carriers Assn. met here last Thursday (25) with representatives of the Texas Drive-In Theatre Owners Assn. and COMPO to discuss a rate increase of approximately 50c per 100 pounds. The carriers held a meeting last June 24 with Texas exhibitors relative to the rate increase.

Ozoners are conducting an informal poll among its membership on the carrier's request. Response from a recent special bulletin to the members indicates that the exhibitors feel they cannot bear any additional financial load, which would cause more of the ozoners to go out of biz and ultimately hurt the film carriers.

DIRECTORS' GUILD TAPS 'ALLISON' SECOND TIME

Hollywood, July 23.

Five new films were nominated for directorial achievement in the second quarter of 1957 and a sixth, which had been nominated in the first quarter, was renominated for consideration in the annual Screen Directors Guild award sweepstakes, prexy George Sidney disclosed.

"Heaven Knows Mr. Allison," (20th) directed by John Huston, is the two-time nominee.

Others are "A Face in the Crowd" (Warners-Newton Productions), Elia Kazan; "Funny Face" (Paramount), Stanley Donen; "Gunfight at OK Corral" (Paramount-Hal Wallis), John Sturges; "Twelve Angry Men" (UA-Orion-Nova Productions), Sidney Lumet; and "The Pride and the Passion" (UA-Kramer Co.), Stanley Kramer.

Twelve more films will be nominated during the year, six in each quarter, with the ultimate winner to be chosen early next year.

Writers Guild Seeks A Lippert TV Payoff

Los Angeles, July 23.

Breach of contract suit charging release of post-1948 films to television without payment to writers was filed by Writers Guild of America, West against Lippert Pictures Inc. Federal Court action asks an accounting of all monies received by Lippert as well as full information on the titles of pix released, the names of the writers involved and the salaries originally paid them for scripts.

WGAW contends Lippert was a member of the Independent Motion Picture Producers Association which signed a guild contract in 1951 agreeing to conform to any industry pattern for post-'48 pix.

More They See, Less They Like FCC

Proponents of Home-Toll Video Swerve From Washington—Favor Local Circuitry Systems

Some proponents of home-toll television are beginning to have second thoughts about the advisability of doing business over-the-air. Wire transmission looks better to these minds all the time.

The big reason is that (1) wire or cable signals don't come under the jurisdiction of the Federal Communications Commission, and (2) circuitry which is comparatively cheap, but can carry several audio and video programs at the same time, has been developed.

FCC is still mulling the question of authorizing test runs of over-the-air pay-tv transmissions and the Commission continues to receive pro and con briefs on the subject.

Meanwhile, however, it has not escaped the notice of the home-toll advocates that, even if the FCC flashes the greenlight on commercial operations, their activities will—per force—be sharply curtailed. By contrast, any wire system is free of interference.

Thus, while over-the-air telecasts are almost certain to be restricted to only a small portion of a station's available airtime, cable transmission can go on all day long. Furthermore, it wouldn't interfere with standard telecast service.

As currently envisioned, toll-video using air channels would preempt the same wavelengths used for regular commercial telecasts. Viewers unwilling to pay wouldn't be able to get the station's signal for the period of the pay shows.

Whereas only one show can be transmitted over the air, wire can carry three programs. Testifying before Congress last week, Matty Fox of Skiatron-TV said his projected wire service in Los Angeles would offer baseball, new films and other attractions for pay. However, during the day the wire would carry free background music, educational and children's shows. They'd all be of the "bonus" variety. This kind of variety would be impossible with an "air" service.

Nevertheless, from an economics point-of-view, toll-tv using air channels still is much cheaper than a cable system; and should the FCC authorize tests, it appears certain that the pay-TV companies will grasp at the opportunity, particularly in such cities as New York and Chicago, where a cable network would run into many millions.

Bruce Balaban's Trailers' for TV

Fees Paid by Film Companies—Qualify As Industrials on Air

'The principle of distributing free sponsored industrial films to television and organizations has been adapted for the motion picture industry. Prime mover in this service is a company called TV-Movie News Service, headed by Bruce Balaban, son of A. J. Balaban, former managing director of the Roxy Theatre. Young Balaban is allied with Modern Teleservice, a subsidiary of Modern Talking Picture Service, a leading distributor of sponsored films.

TV-Movie Service offers free to 479 television stations special filmed material aimed at promoting upcoming motion pictures. The footage offered, either prepared by a film company or by Balaban's organization, consists of background film concerned with the making of a picture or special aspects of a production. It is geared specifically for news shows, women's programs, children's shows, sports shows, etc. TV-Movie News Service also provides all the material needed for correct use of the film clips including introductory copy for integrating into applicable program format. For example, copy slants for United Artists' "Trapeze" consisted of the following: Sports—stars did most of their own tricks; intensive training; Burt Lancaster's stunt background. News—Ringling Bros. circus closing; comparison of U.S. and French circuses. Kids—animals and circus. Women—romantic approach; star values of leads. Each of the clips, of course, contain a mention of the picture without resorting to the hard sell.

Balaban gets his fee from the film companies. Charges are made for completed telecasts of filmed material and include all service charges for distribution and use of related selling material. For the first to 100th booking, he gets $25 with an additional $10 for each extra showing on the same station. For the 101st to 200th telecast, the cost is $22.50 each and it decreases to $17 on the basis of a graduated scale. No charge is made for telecasts in excess of five on any station.

TV-Movie News Service distributes bi-weekly to tv stations a publication known as TV Movie News which contains news about individual pictures and the film clips available. The publication prints personal interchange on special use of the material, merchandising tie-ins with lists of local retail outlets (whenever possible), current release schedule for each film company, information for local contests, promotion of special offers originating with the film company.

Outfit follows a similar system in distributing the special films to clubs, churches, service organizations, etc. It employs the services of Modern Talking Picture Service which spots sponsored films with some 133,000 groups. Detailed certification is provided the film company for each play on tv or at an organization. In addition, film company receives regular notice of bookings and status of each film sent out. If a tv station or club turns down the film, a detailed explanation of the reason is provided for the film company.

Perhaps biggest deal set by TV-Movie News Service is a 15-month arrangement with Magna for exploitation of the upcoming "South Pacific." At a cost of about $50 a month, Balaban's outfit has undertaken to feed filmed background material for "South Pacific" to tv stations in 54 cities and 16m background prints to clubs and organizations in the same number of cities.

28 Completed Scripts, 22 Writers on U Lot

Universal reports that it now has the largest story backlog in the history of the company with 28 completed scripts and 22 writers working on 19 additional screenplays. All of the completed scripts are shooting ready whenever production chief Edward Muhl gives the greenlight on casting and production details.

Breakdown of the 28 screenplays reveals that 11 are from original stories, seven are based on novels, four are biographies, four are from magazine stories and two are based on plays.

Clips From Films Boomerang Still, Says Sindlinger

Film companies which permit the presentation of clips from new pictures on television are committing economic hari-kari, according to Albert Sindlinger, whose market research outfit is constantly on the prowl for boxoffice trends. He said this week he's found that the old features look better on tv than excerpts from the new productions and this discourages the public from attending theatres to see the new productions in their entirety.

Scenes from three recent films aired were Paramount's "Beau James" on the Steve Allen program and Columbia's "Fire Down Below" and 20th-Fox's "Prince and the Showgirl" on Ed Sullivan hour. These exposures obviously were regarded as good promotion by the film companies involved.

But, said Sindlinger, a business deterrent proved true. The product looked grainy and, having been made for large-screen theatres, the images were cropped on video. This is in contrast with the old features which were made for the standard (of a few years ago) screen and are presented via completely new 16m prints.

Exec also said his investigators checked theatre managers and they, like the companies, believe the tv slotting of new pic footage is good publicity for free. The public is not too enchanted.

Dick Condon's Prophecy

Making of specially designed television films to go hand in hand, and serve propaganda purposes for, theatrical features will become standard practice among Hollywood producers, according to Richard Condon, who for the past 27 months has been handling special promotion phases of Stanley Kramer's "Pride and the Passion."

While making the picture on location in Spain, Kramer also lensed nine four-minute clips and five 12-minute reels and put together a 30-minute subject, all focusing on different aspects of how the production materialized. Condon took the films around the country with him and, back in New York this week, reported that 34 tv stations committed themselves to airing 19 hours and six minutes in the aggregate of the shorts. Additionally, the 30-minute picture was presented on NBC-TV's network "Home" show plus 57 independent stations.

Films served other purposes as well, according to Condon. He said he screened them at luncheon meetings and other-type sessions with the press, exhibitors, merchants, etc., in the course of his 32-city, 79-day tour and in this way provided an insight on the background of "Passion" and stimulated newspaper coverage, trade interest and commercial tie-ups.

Condon's honest-to-goodness report on the free space: 134,556 agate lines in the papers.

He stated further that exhibs are now becoming particularly active on the promotion front. They have come to realize the need to compete for the public's attention and are hustling with the bally to cop that attention, he said.

Oklahoma Picks March 5

Oklahoma City, July 23.

United Theatre Owners of Oklahoma has selected March 5-6 as the date for its 1958 annual convention.

Hotels and recreation areas are now being surveyed by a committee designated to find a site for the 1958 session.

Eric Johnston to South America

First Trip in Three Years—Partly to Offset Latins' Sensitivities on U.S. Taking 'Em For Granted

Eric Johnston's forthcoming Latin American trip—he leaves Aug. 1—is as much of a public relations gesture as it's a practical attempt to strengthen the American position in two countries, Argentina and Brazil.

Johnston will be accompanied by Robert Corkery, the Motion Picture Export Assn.'s Latin American supervisor. They will go to Brazil, Venezuela and Argentina and expect to be back within two or three weeks.

The last time the MPEA chief was in Latin America was three years ago. Since then, some of the local government officials—particularly in Argentina—have complained that MPEA, in tune with the rest of the U.S., has a tendency to take Latin America for granted. Latinos pride suffers under the impression that the focus is continuously on Europe, even though there is no question that the importance of the Latin American market for Hollywood is rising continuously.

The three markets Johnston and Corkery are skedded to visit give the Americans close to $30,000,000 in annual film rental, with Brazil alone amounting to about $16,000,000 this year.

There are no problems in Venezuela. In Brazil, where Sao Paulo has authorized a sharp increase in admissions, a decision still pends in Rio de Janeiro, where the companies have gone to Court in an attempt to force a lifting of the Government-imposed admission price ceilings. A ruling is overdue.

Danger in Brazil is that, if the Rio ceiling is lifted, a move which would affect the whole country, some attempt may then be made to reduce remittances. If such a move can be stalled, if for no more than a year, then the American companies would take out of Brazil an additional $5,000,000 to $6,000,000.

Argentina Difficult

Situation in Argentina is difficult, since local producers, not the exhibitors get the breaks. Also, the newly-established Argentine Film Institute is creating problems. MPEA has been promised a rise in admission ceilings after the elections. Johnston's visit could have important psychological effects inasmuch as he generally comes not only as a spokesman for the film biz, but also with the reputation of a White House confidant and a man who has served as President Eisenhower's special emissary on several missions.

While Johnston generally is not in on the lower-level discussions of film pacts, etc., his arrival on the scene in the past has tended to break deadlocks, or to help to wrap up agreements by the sheer weight of his reputation. Also, Johnston has free entree to high government officials everywhere and thus is able to present the American film industry point-of-view at the proper levels.

Rank in England Sets 24 for U.S. in '57-58; Rank in America Has 14

Rank Organization has listed 23 pictures, now in production, editing or preparation stages, which it plans to release in the U. S. during late 1957 and early 1958. The 23 are in addition to the 14 Rank films which Rank Film Distributors of America has on its current sked.

Kenneth Hargreaves, Rank-Yank prexy, said eight of the 23 films slated to reach the States were now in cutting and editing stages. He said the pictures upcoming "offer the widest appeal to all types of audiences everywhere in America."

Meanwhile, the Rank combination of "Checkpoint" and "Triple Deception" has been set for a 25-theatre saturation preem in the Philadelphia exchange area on Aug. 18. Another Rank package—"Reach For The Sky" and "Triple Deception"—is doing good business in multiple run situations throughout Northern California, Rank-Yank sales chief Irving Sochin reports.

WAGNER AT HUDDLE FOR MORE N.Y. FILMING

Movement is underway to further establish New York City as a film-production centre. At a meeting with officers of the Film Producers Assn. of N. Y., Mayor Robert F. Wagner stated he's high on the idea.

Specific ways of cooperating with film makers were recommended to Wagner by Harold E. Wondsel, president of FPA; David I. Pincus, president of Caravel Films, and Douglas T. Yates, v.p. of Consolidated Film Industries.

He in turn indicated he would appoint a special coordinator who'd be assigned to easing location permits, revising out-dated fire regulations, clarifying sales tax provisions and otherwise encouraging production in Gotham.

As a first step, Wagner named 1st Asst. Corporation Counsel Leo A. Larkin to meet with FPA reps to determine what immediate assistance can be rendered. First such session was set for tomorrow (Thurs.).

Wagner also promised to address a luncheon-meeting of advertising, television and film execs in September on the Gotham film-making program.

New York Pitching ('We'll Cooperate') For More Features

Campaign to increase feature film production in New York has been launched. The group, which has designated itself as the "Keep 'Em East Committee," has allied itself with the Film Producers Assn. of New York, which has already started a drive to keep the production of tv commercials and industrial films in Gotham.

The new committee is chairmanned by Martin H. Poll, head of Gold Medal (formerly Biograph) Studios in the Bronx, and consists of George Justin, an eastern production manager who coined the slogan "Keep 'em in the East" while working on the Elia Kazan-Budd Schulberg film, "On the Waterfront" several years ago, and Charles J. Maguire, also a production manager.

Aim of the committee, according to Poll, is provide a source of information about N.Y. facilities, disseminate information about successful N.Y. film production, seek added cooperation between Mayor Robert F. Wagner and various city departments and film producers of N.Y., and invite all groups associated with motion pictures, including industrial producers and labor groups, to exchange information and suggestions relating to keeping film production in the east.

As a pitch for film producers to employ N.Y. facilities and, as a result, Poll's Gold Medal Studio, Poll asserts that Elia Kazan has stated that "Face in the Crowd," filmed at Gold Medal, would have cost 47% more to film in Hollywood. The Gold Medal Studio, completely refurbished, recently completed its first year of operation. It is currently host to "Mr. Rock 'N' Roll," an Alan Freed production which will be released by Paramount. Moving in shortly will be "The Goddess," a Paddy Chayefsky film which is being financed by Columbia. Studio has also been employed for tv pilots, industrial and commercial films. It has two sound stages, scene dock, dressing rooms, carpenter shop, commissary, and projection rooms under one roof.

Jurow Exits Columbia

Hollywood, July 23.

After six months in an executive capacity, Martin Jurow's contract with Columbia Pictures has been ended by mutual consent.

Prior to joining Columbia, Jurow was with the William Morris Agency in New York.

And, No Critics

Opening a picture off Broadway appears one way of escaping critical attention. Only the Mirror, News and Post reviewed "Bernardine."

And "Loving You" was caught by only the Herald Tribune, Times and World-Telegram & Sun.

Can't Say It Now; Star & Tribune Get Film Help

Minneapolis, July 23.

In a VARIETY interview a year ago William P. Steven, executive editor of the two Minneapolis jointly-owned dailies, the Star and Tribune, upbraided Hollywood because, while always asking favors of newspapers, it invariably failed to cooperate with the latter on their ventures.

Emphasizing that cooperation is a two-way street, Steven pointed out that year after year Hollywood had been virtually ignoring his newspapers requests to send film personalties here to participate in its Star night and Coronation show, one of the annual attractions of the local Aquatennial, summer mardi gras here.

Whatever the reason the sheets this week are coming up with a lineup of important names. James Stewart and Jayne Mansfield will be in from Hollywood to participate in the show which will be staged in the Auditorium for the first time instead of outdoors in the municipal stadium.

Also, there'll be Eddie Fisher, but Mike Todd will be responsible for the singer's presence. When Todd was here for the "Around the World in 80 Days" opening week before last he was told of the newspapers' show and in gratitude for his lavish welcome here he not only declared himself a Minneapolis resident from now on, but also his determination to help line up personalities for it.

After being informed of the search for personalities, he asked, "Why wasn't I asked to get one?"

Learning that David Niven and Shirley MacLaine of "Around the World" were unavailable because they were working on other pictures, he got on the trans-Atlantic telephone and caught Fisher, winding up a European tour, at a Paris airport.

Last Friday (19) he called Ted Mann of the Academy, where "Around the World" is playing, and informed him Fisher had agreed to come here to appear in the show, interrupting a planned vacation to do so.

Among others who'll appear in the show are television's Fran Allison and songwriter Sid Lippman who was born here.

World Premiere of "Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter" has been set for Minneapolis this week because Jayne Mansfield, its star, is here to appear in the Minneapolis Star-Tribune newspapers' Aquatennial show in the local Auditorium.

Never Knew If 'Outbid' in Texas

Trail Drive-In Asks Triple Damages on Shut-Out Of Top Releases

Houston, July 23.

A $1,180,332 lawsuit, alleging monopoly and violations of anti-trust laws, was filed in U.S. District court here by the Trail Drive-In Theatre, operated by Jack Farr. Complaint contends principally that the King Center Drive-In Theatre is getting "top grossing" pictures before the Trail because of sealed bids submitted to the film distributors.

Defendents are Warner Bros., Paramount, Jefferson Amusement, with headquarters at Beaumont, Tex., which operates the King Center Drive-In, and Interstate Theatre Circuit, which operates a number of theatres here including the South Main Drive-In.

Seymour Lieberman, the attorney who filed the suit, said that the theatres file sealed bids for the various film features.

"We don't know if the Trail is actually outbid or not," Lieberman said. "The results of the bids, opened in private, are never revealed. King Center may be allowed to bid after all of the other bids are in."

The Trail alleges in the complaint that it was outbid on two recent major films, "Giant" and "Gun Fight in the OK Corral," because the King Center Drive-In, which operates an east and a west side, made one lump bid for both theatres, that is, both sides.

"We had a case there where two theatres were bidding against one," the attorney said.

Complaint asks for damages of $393,444, tripled. Trail says it lost $100,000 in improvements to investment, $208,444 that it would have taken in if it had received top grossing pictures first and an $85,000 loss in concession business.

The suit also asks $20,000 for attorney's fees.

Cinerama Without Three Projectors Loses Much of Appeal?—Theatremen

The phenomenally successful Cinerama pictures would lose their impact if the three-panel screen and three-projector system were to be reshaped so that only one projector throw would be required. This is the opinion of several leading circuit operators who expressed their views privately and on the sidelines of a New York meeting of the Council of Motion Picture Organizations.

The thought they got across is that the focusing of three beams of light on the screen represents an added value for the ticket buyers. They're impressed with what they consider to be something extra special—something different than the standard presentation of a picture, according to the theatre-operating observers.

And just as the public is intrigued with the mechanics of Cirama, they also went along with the idea of wearing viewing glasses for third-dimension pictures, said the exhibs. Depth-illusion product wasn't killed by the need for the glasses — the public bought many millions of them. The quality of the pictures was almost consistently low and this caused the death of the 3-D processes.

Panavision & Metro Angle

Hollywood, July 23.

Panavision and Metro research and development departments have successfully extracted a three-strip Cinerama or Cinemiracle-type release print from a single negative 65m photographic process, Panavision prexy Robert E. Gottschalk disclosed. Development, he emphasized, proves that as originally anticipated in the design of the Panavision-Metro 65m process, Cinerama and Cinemiracle films can be made in the form of regular films with all of the practical and economic advantages of single-camera photography.

New three-strip extraction was demonstrated at the Cinemiracle Theatre, using footage from Metro's "Raintree County." Demonstration was on the standard three-camera Cinemiracle system and Gottschalk described the results as very gratifying.

BERATE COURT'S OKAY AS BLOW TO 'MODESTY'

Albany, July 23.

"Judge Desmond (Charles S.) in his majority opinion permitting the exhibition in New York State of the nudist film 'The Garden of Eden' implicitly put the seal of approval of the Court of Appeals on a condition rampant today that is condemned by the Sacred Scriptures and contrary to the accepted proprieties of the human race since its inception." So The Evangelist, official weekly of the Albany Catholic Diocese, declared in an editorial.

President of the company publishing The Evangelist is Bishop William A. Scully, chairman of the Bishops' National Committee on Motion pictures and moderator of the Legion of Decency.

Titled "Pondering of Pelts," the editorial asserted that ". . . The trend today, in the increasing craze for comfort and pagan pampering of the body, is to ignore decorum and time-honored custom" in regard to "immodesty."

Frisco Expands; 2d Best Market For Artie Films

San Francisco, July 23.

Gerald Hardy has converted his 750-seat neighborhood theatre, the Presidio, into an artie. First booking is "Red Balloon' and "Lost Continent."

John Persons is a partner in the operation and Jack Lowry, formerly with the United California chain, has been named managing director.

Theatre itself is one of Frisco's newest and is readily accessible to neighborhoods which ordinarily furnish bulk of business for seven arties now operating here. Scale will be $1.25-$1.50.

Presidio will be a showcase for Continental Distributing product, through a deal negotiated with Continental's Western reps, Harry H. Thomas and Bill Tomlinson. Continental package of 15 films has been scheduled for next nine months at theatre.

Parsons says Frisco is "second best spot in the country" for art films—next to New York—and confirms that trend toward arties here continues unabated.

Maury Schwartz recently converted his neighborhood Four-Star exclusively to foreign films and most other houses in this category, Larkin, Clay, Stagedoor, Bridge, Rio and Vogue have been doing well with long runs. Trend indicates, however that buying competition will get hotter and hotter.

'Keep Two-Family Zoning' Plea Used Against Bid For Fairyland Drive-In

Kansas City, July 23.

Efforts of a group to build a new drive-in theatre on the southeast edge of the city met with opposition from home owners in the area when the application came up before the City Planning Commission last week.

Application seeks permission to build a drive-in theatre in Fairyland Park, the city's outdoor amusement park. Attorney for the theatre promoters said it is planned to cost $500,000 and would be located on a 20-acre site that is now undeveloped. It is just east of the present park and part of the park property.

The area now is zoned for two-family dwellings. A petition against a change in zoning was presented to the commission with about 300 signatures. Opponents alleged in their document that the theatre would endanger the lives of children because of increased traffic and would damage property values and would be a general nuisance. A ruling by the commission is to come later.

Film Adaptation Defies Television Scripters

Hollywood, July 23.

Unable to lick the problem of converting a non-fictional tome, "Bellevue Is My Home," into a screenplay, 20th-Fox has sidetracked the project for the time being. Consequently, Frank Latourette and Jim Moser of the "Medic" television series, signed to produce-direct the project, have checked off the Westwood lot.

A studio source said there were "script problems" which caused the sidetracking of "Bellevue." No new writers or producer have been assigned the project.

Matty Fox Estimates L.A. Can Be Wired For Subscription-TV at $12,000,000; Zenith Sez 'Service Is Inevitable'

Washington, July 23.

As far as Matty Fox, prexy of Skiatron TV Inc., is concerned, wired subscription tv in the third largest city in the U.S., is just around the corner. And regardless of what Paul Raibourn of Telemeter told Mitt Gross of the New York Post recently, Fox told the Celler Antitrust Subcommittee last week, the job can be done in Los Angeles for under $12,000,000. Furthermore, Fox testified, Skiatron can be ready with its system for next season's baseball games if the switch of the Brooklyn Dodgers to L.A. is sealed this summer. The same goes, he said, if the New York Giants are moved to San Francisco.

Confronted with an estimate attributed to Raibourn that it would cost around $50,000,000 to wire L.A., Fox remarked, "that's what it would probably cost Telemeter." Which explains, he added, why Telemeter hasn't gotten a franchise in L.A.

Committee counsel Herbert Maletz read further from Gross' interview with Raibourn, quoting the latter as saying, "You know, conversation about pay-tv is always easier than raising the money that will make it go. I'm the guy who has to find the money and I can tell you I'm less inclined to be enthusiastic than those who don't have to raise it."

To which Fox replied, "I also have to raise the money and I am enthusiastic."

Both Raibourn and Mayor Christopher of Frisco, who had estimated the cost of wiring his city at $30,000 to $60,000,000, said Fox, are thinking in terms of conventional methods, employing coaxial cable and numerous amplifiers. "Coaxial cable," he explained, "costs 40c a foot. We have a system of wire grids that would cost 4c a foot and costs much less for amplifiers. Our surveys show it would cost less than $6,000,000 to lay the grid system for Frisco."

How much would it cost to wire New York City? Chairman Emanuel Celler (D-N.Y.) asked.

"That would require a separate survey," Fox replied. "We never planned to wire Manhattan. We intended to start in the outer areas and work in toward Manhattan. We know it costs approximately $12 a tv home to lay the grid in any community that does not have unusual physical characteristics."

Will there be closed circuit sub-

'Foreign Legion' Web Prospect Hot

"Assignment Foreign Legion," the Merle Oberon starrer out of the CBS Television Film Sales stable, is hot again as a network possibility for the fall. Carter Products, via the Ted Bates agency, is interested in the show for the Tuesday at 10:30 spot on CBS-TV, but must first work out the budgetary complications involved in the sale.

Those budget problems stem from a potential product conflict with Revlon, which has the Tuesday at 10 slot with its "$64,000 Question." The Revlon situation is such that Carter won't be able to advertise its Arrid Deodorant, and would have to confine its sponsorship to other products like the Little Liver Pills, Nair and Rise shave cream. Since Arrid takes up a large part of the Carter budget, question to be resolved is whether the other brands can amass enough of a budget to carry the show without the deodorant.

CBS-TV, meanwhile, is still pursuing a sale on "Small World" for the Tuesday period, in the event the Carter deal doesn't go through. Web is still negotiating with Pan American to take on the show, but it's likely that if Carter doesn't take the time and Pan Am doesn't buy "World," CBS will install the latter show as a sustainer.

Gobel's 'Monitor' Slot

Hollywood, July 23.

George Gobel over the weekend set his first net radio deal with NBC, to tape 10 two and one half-minute comedy monologs for inclusion on net's weekend "Monitor" program late in September. They'll be scripted by Gobel and his tv writing staff.

Pact was set between NBC and Gomalco, Gobel-Dave O'Mailey partnership.

FCC Won't Pass Buck to Congress On Pay-TV Issue

Washington, July 23.

Pressures from "the hill" regardless, the Federal Communications Commission does not intend to pass the buck to Congress on the subscription tv issue. This is the position of the agency, under the chairmanship of John C. Doerfer, made plain last week in a letter to Chairman Emanuel Celler (D-N.Y.) of the House Judiciary Committee.

In reply to a a recent request from Celler to leave the decision on conducting toll tv tests to Congress, Chairman Doerfer asserted that "in the absence of Congressional action on the amendment of existing law . . . it is the Commission's duty to make some disposition of the pending petitions" (to authorize subscription).

Celler introduced a bill more than two years ago to prohibit any tv station "to impose a toll, fee, subscription or other charge, directly or indirectly, on the general public for the privilege of viewing tv programs received over tv sets located in the home." The measure was reintroduced in the present Congress and referred to the House Interstate Commerce Committee, whose chairman is Rep. Oren Harris (D-Ark.). Harris has also exerted pressure on the Commission to hold off action on subscription but he has shown no indication of considering the Celler bill.

Celler wrote Doerfer two weeks ago that subscription tv, even on an experimental basis, carries such "dangers" to the public interest that "no action . . . should be taken without the express approval of Congress."

Immediately following Celler's letter, Rep. Frank Chelf (D-Ky.), a member of Celler's Committee, urged Doerfer "not to allow anybody, no matter what position he may hold in or out of the Govern-

McC-E Producing SO's 75th Anni Spec; Set Schnoz

The Standard Oil of New Jersey 75th anniversary show, which shapes up as one of the major tv one-shot entries of the new season and which gets a 90-minute Sunday night showcasing on NBC-TV Oct. 13, will be strictly a McCann-Erickson production, one of the few instances of an agency taking over complete reins on a network "super."

Initially it was planned as a Showcase Production package, but latter will only be tied in for an administrative assist with McC-E program factotums Terry Clyne and George Haight masterminding the entire production.

Standard Oil program budget exceeds $500,000 (this is exclusive of time costs). Thus far Jimmy Durante has been pacted, with an all-star cast envisioned. It's strictly in the spare-no-expense area of programming with Kay Thompson pacted for the choreography and special effects, Leslie Stevens to do the scripting, etc.

Hudelson to WRCA-TV

Ben A. Hudelson is switching from Westinghouse Broadcasting Co. to WRCA-TV, N. Y., and will become manager of production for the NBC flagship station. Hudelson was production supervisor on special assignment for WBC.

Prior to moving up to the WBC homeoffice, Hudelson was production supervisor at WBZ-TV, Westinghouse's Boston station.

Fuller Brush Man's Door-to-Dial

NBC Radio veep Joe Culligan is working on the audience promotion scheme to end all audience promotion for radio. He's negotiating a tie-in with the Fuller Brush Co. which would employ all of its 100,000-plus door-to-door salesmen in a "turn to NBC" effort.

Under the plan, still not finalized, each Fuller Brush man, during or after his regular pitch, would suggest to the housewife that she turn on the radio to the NBC station, even mentioning the name of the show that's on at the time. Besides, he'd leave a promotion piece listing the web's top shows with the housewife and do a short pitch about NBC's regular programming.

With some 100,000 salesmen making anywhere from 10 calls per day each up, NBC figures it can hit as many as 1,000,000 homes daily with the in-person pitch.

NBC Radio No Longer Stepchild As Brass Okays 3-Ply Expansion

Radio is losing its stepchild status at NBC. Web's top management, which only a year ago relegated the NBC Radio web to the sidelines as a near-hopeless proposition, has now approved a three-ply programming-audience promotion-research expansion for the network, involving not only a considerable cash outlay but such concessions as on-the-air television promotion for the radio network.

Renewed interest in the radio web by management stems from the dramatic reversal of the web's downward trend since last summer, when the network hit a low in business and in affiliate relationships climaxed by the disaffiliation of Westinghouse Broadcasting Co. Since then, and more particularly since the first of the year, the web, under Joe Culligan, has:

1. Added 18 sponsored hours to its weekly total, topping CBS in this category.

2. Signed to its list of sponsors 52 of the top 100 advertisers in the country, compared with only 22 in January.

3. Lifted its sales by 50% over the January level.

4. Lost no significant affiliate since Westinghouse defected last August.

With these accomplishments, plus a revised program schedule and the promise of a profitable operation within reach, web's management has okayed television promotion of radio shows and personalities, such as Madeline Carroll ("Affairs of Dr. Gentry"), Walter O'Keefe ("Nightline") and Frank Blair (newscasts), via the "Today" show and the Steve Allen stanza, with an upbeat promised on the Allen stanza come the fall. It has okayed increased expenditures on talent for radio, with programming

More Gabe Heatter Sales For New Mutual Owner

Mutual newscaster Gabriel Heatter begins a new Sunday quarter-hour show on the network in mid-August, in addition to his 15 other shows a week. The commentator's new sponsorship pact begins after the new ownership of the network takes over next month and was used to help the negotiations between Mutual chief Thomas O'Neil and new owner Paul Roberts.

Sleep-Eze on Aug. 18 and Hudson Vitamin on Sept. 8 have bought two-thirds of the Sunday 5:45 to 6 show. Fact is being relayed to MBS affiliates in an effort to show them that it will be "business as usual" under the new ownership.

Rhodes Pharmacal and Beltone have both renewed on Heatter's weekday shows.

Krolik to Spark Educators' Goal: Better TV Shows

The National Education Assn. is embarking on a major campaign to elevate the standards of television and is enlisting the cooperation of its 1,250,000 members. As the initial step, it is hiring Dick Krolik away from NBC. As the tv consultant for the NEA, he will initially set up pressure groups among educator bodies around the country designed to enlighten the citizenry on good tv programming.

As part of the new setup, Krolik will create a unit that will do advance tv screening as a guide for teachers throughout the U.S. and the NEA is enlisting the support of its various publications.

Krolik has been with NBC-TV for the past three years in various production capacities, chiefly on the "Today" and Wide Wide World" shows.

It's at Krolik's behest that the NEA as its first major move in the tv-radio field will begin to mobilize its 1,200,000 members and affiliates in support of quality program-

Robt. Montgomery And Cagney Team

Although the "Robert Montgomery Presents" hour dramatic entry is permanently off the NBC-tv schedule, the actor-producer still has a year's contract with the network. It's more than likely that he'll show up in a producer status during the next season helming one or two of the web's hour or 90-minute specials.

However, Montgomery's major efforts during the upcoming semester may find him back in the feature pic business in a co-production deal with James Cagney. Talks have been going on for a theatrical feature based on the life of Admiral Halsey with Cagney in the title role. If it bears fruit Montgomery will shift his scene of operation to the Coast.

Tuck Resigns N.Y. Post, Name Williams, Coppola

New York Post has assigned staff reporter Bob Williams to the television beat and will bring Jo Coppola over from Newsday, where she's the tv critic, to double with Williams on the video coverage. Jay Nelson Tuck, for the past two years the Post's tv critic-columnist and previously night city editor, is resigning from the paper as of Friday (26).

Switches mean that Harriet Van Horne has decided to turn down the Post's offer to switch from the World-Telegram & Sun. She'll remain with the Scripps-Howard flagship paper.

NBC-TV's 'Mr. Non-Fiction'

Henry (Pete) Salomon, NBC-TV's No. 1 impresario in the "non-fiction" area of programming but with the specific title of Director, Special Projects, has a man's size job ahead of him, projecting a four-pronged agenda into the '58-'59 season with some of the most ambitious ventures yet attempted.

To expedite the heavy schedule Salomon has just completed an organizational revamp of his entire setup, with Donald Hyatt designated as Manager, Special Projects; Jim Nelson to helm promotion-advertising-sales and kindred functions as Manager of Program Services and with Jack Kiermaier in charge of administration.

Four distinct units have already been set up as part of "Operation Salomon," with the latter "reporting to himself" in personally helming "Project 20." Second unit will be headed by Bob Graff and Bob Ginna and this will encompass the so-called Wisdom series (upcoming are Picasso, Stravinsky, Ben-Gurion, Ted Shawn & Ruth St. Denis). Graff-Ginna team will also be responsible for the Antarctica film, "Eleven Against the Ice," which Timken will sponsor as an hour show on Sept. 23.

Graff will also be in charge of the "Assignment" series and, Secretary of State Dulles willing, an "Assignment: Red China" looms on the horizon along with an "Assignment: Japan." Already set for next season is "Assignment: Southeast Asia."

Third unit will comprise a series of in-depth news feature shows which envisions a stellar participation by Martin Agronsky. Also contemplated is a children's news program.

A fourth unit, labelled "Unit X" pending further clarification of format, etc., will be in the area of live production (as opposed to Salomon's major excursions, into film).

Major "Project 20" item envisioned by Salomon is a history of musical comedy, probably a six-part series spanning Lily Langtry to Gwen Verdon depicting the development of musicomedy in the 20th Century, each show representing a decade of progress. This is designated for the '58-'59 sked, either as full hour or 90-minute attractions.

Also on the "Project 20" agenda and also for '58-'59 is a series of four shows based on Walt Whitman's "Leaves of Grass," with poet critic and Whitman authority Lloyd Frankenberg already at work in blueprinting the series. It's designated as a panoramic portrait of the U. S. as it goes into the second half of the 20th Century.

For the immediate future, "Project 20" next season will do "Innocent Years" (1900-1914), which Timken will sponsor on Nov. 21, and "Back In the 30's," the latter a 90-minute probing. Thus, "Project 20" will have completed the cycle, the "Great War" and "Jazz Age" already behind.

WRITERS' PLACE IN THE SUN

McC-E's '57-'58 Topdog Status

When the curtain goes up on the new tv season, the four top agencies in programming will each be billing in excess of $80,000,000 annually, an unprecedented feat, with McCann-Erickson leading the pack. McC-E's overall tv-radio billings will approximate $102,000,000, breaking down as follows: $70,000,000 expenditure in network programming; $20,000,000 in television spot biz and $12,000,000 in radio.

Young & Rubicam, with approximately $85,000,000, will be in No. 2 position, with J. Walter Thompson and BBD&O in that order trailing not far behind.

McCann-Erickson boasts its own Top 10 among clients who will be billing in excess of $4,000,000 each in tv. These include, not necessarily in the order of their expenditure, Liggett & Myers; Swift, Chrysler, Esso, Bulova, Westinghouse, National Biscuit Co., Coca-Cola, Chesebrough and Mennen. McCann clients, incidentally, will be represented with five one-hour program series—Studio One (Westinghouse); Climax (Chrysler); boxing (Mennen); Disneyland (Swift) and Eddie Fisher-George Gobel show (L & M).

Nearly $2,000,000 (time & talent) of McCann-E client coin will alone go into two of the season's major one-shots—the Standard Oil of N.J. 75th anni show and the Liggett & Myers-sponsored 90-minute "Pied Piper" tint film starring Van Johnson.

Caesar & Coca to Reunite

Slated for Half-Hour Series on NBC Either in Fall Or Early '58

Sid Caesar and Imogene Coca will be reunited on NBC-TV by next fall in a new half-hour television show to be produced by Caesar's Shelrick Productions. There's already a verbal agreement between Caesar and Miss Coca to resume as costars, and negotiations are already in progress with NBC as to a deal for the fall.

If the network can't find a September time slot for the team—and that's a strong possibility because of the late timing of the Caesar-Coca reunion—the negotiations will proceed towards a longterm agreement with a January or fall-of-'58 start. At this point, Caesar and NBC are pinning down details as to format.

Caesar, who severed his contract with NBC in May, and Miss Coca, who's been freelancing for the past couple of years, were reportedly brought back together by Manie Sacks, NBC-TV v.p. in charge of programming (who incidentally said he can't claim credit for reuniting them). Sacks, it's understood, proposed the Caesar-Coca format in an effort to woo Caesar back into the NBC stable, which he left when the network made it clear he couldn't continue with his hourlong "Caesar's Hour" format.

At the time, Caesar was adamant about the hour format and turned down an NBC offer to star him in his own half-hour show. But with the proposal that he re-team with Miss Coca, Caesar apparently has changed his mind and decided a half-hour format under the new circumstances would be workable.

Last time the pair worked together was on "Your Show of Shows" on NBC-TV in 1954. At that time, the combination split, Caesar forming his own production company to do "Caesar's Hour" and Miss Coca doing her own half-hour Saturday night situation comedy show (which costarred Hal March). "Caesar's Hour" lasted three seasons; Miss Coca's entry ran half a season, after which she moved into the freelance television and legit field.

Roger L. Stevens In Mutual Deal

Realtor-legit producer Roger L. Stevens is the man behind the buyout of the Mutual network, it's been learned. Stevens is understood to be putting up most of the cash for the purchase of the web, and believes it can be operated at a profit.

Paul Roberts, the Coast FM operator who is actually handling the transaction for Stevens, is not only a front man in the deal but would actually head up the network's operations, since Stevens has a score of other projects going for him and won't be able to spend much time on the network.

All-Star Grid Coin

Pabst Brewing, Standard Oil of Indiana and Pure Oil will split a three-way sponsorship tab on ABC-TV's Aug. 9 telecast of the annual College All-Star Football Game from Chicago.

Brewery has inked for first and last quarters of the Friday night grid show on 176 stations. Standard Oil took the middle two quarters on a regional lineup in the midwest, and Pure Oil the same segs on a southeast-midwest regional buy.

New York football Giants, last year's world champions, play graduating college stars.

100G Mankiewicz (Gen. Motors, SO) Bid on NBC Specs

NBC-TV is willing to shell out $100,000 to film producer Joseph L. Mankiewicz (with whom, incidentally, the network is partnered on his Figaro Productions) if he will take over command of two of the upcoming season's major specials.

These are the Standard Oil of N. J. two-hour show, which will go into the Sunday night 9 to 11 period on Nov. 17, commemorating the 75th anni of SO of N. J., and the 90-minute General Motors special to be telecast on Oct. 13 in the Sunday night 9 to 10:30 period.

GM show, as a 50th anni celebration, will enlist all the stars who will be doing tv duty for the various cars identified with the parent company. On a time-and-program basis, the shows will represent an outlay in excess of $1,500,000.

Peter Paul Sweetens Godfrey TV Coffers In Big Daytime Buy

Peter Paul Candy Co. is moving back into network television with an unusual Arthur Godfrey daytime buy via CBS-TV. Candy company is taking a solid half-hour of Godfrey, starting in September, on alternate weeks over an 18-week span. Until now, Godfrey had been sold strictly on a quarter-hour basis.

Reasoning behind the Peter Paul half-hour setup is that it will get a contiguous rate on what amounts to two alternate-week quarter-hours. Most bankrollers eschew this type of setup on the theory that using different days of the week gives them a wider audience range, but since Peter Paul will be exposing several different products, it feels there isn't much difference.

'MATINEE' NOW GETS THEM ALL

By GEORGE ROSEN

The fact that NBC-TV's major claim to distinction in the full-hour live drama sweepstakes next season (with the lone exception of the Wednesday night Kraft show) will rest on the 3 to 4 p.m. "Matinee" falls within the "strange things are happening" tv orbit.

If, as the ratings already testify, "Matinee" has finally come into its own as a distinctive, qualitative entry which is now paying handsome dividends to the network in sponsor interest, the deterioration of the 60-minute live drama format in the NBC scheme of things, whatever the demerits to television as a whole, is unquestionably having a salutory effect on "Matinee."

For one thing, major tv writers who have been toiling in the nighttime vineyards and have suddenly found themselves bereft of showcases, now that such hour entries as "Lux Video Theatre," Alcoa-Goodyear, Kaiser-Armstrong and "Robert Montgomery Presents" have been eliminated from the NBC nighttime roster, are now making a bid for "a place in the sun" in establishing a stake in the "Matinee" sphere of dramaturgy.

Take, for example, the whole flock of writers out of the Ashley-Steiner stable who in the past have been associated with nighttime hour dramas and who have now been signed for "Matinee" scripting assignments. Bob Dozier, who has done scripting duty for such after-dark entries as "Climax," is represented on "Matinee" by his newest contrib, "Finchley's Fan Club." Then there's Lee Pogostin's "Freedom Comes Later," Abby Mann's "The President's Child Bride," Frank Barton's "Night Train to Chicago," Harry Junkin's "Boys Will Be Men," Tony Spinner's "The Ivy Curtain" and "The Iceman," Alvin Boretz's "The Lost Hour" and "Heed the Falling Sparrow," Frank de Felitta's "The Fable of Honest Harry," Bill Altmon's "Forbidden Search," Dick Berg's "Long and Terrible Day"—all, or virtually all, candidates for nighttime showcasing under normal conditions, but at this point relegated to "sun time" exposure because there aren't that many hour live evening programs to go around.

By the same token that "Matinee's" five-times-a-week slotting eats up a lot of scripts, there are a lot of writers in tv craving attention. In fact never before has the plight of the serious tv scripter been reduced to such a low level—a sad turn of events, indeed, when one considers that it was the 60-minute live drama that gave television its initial prestige.

CBS-TV alone seems to be perpetuating the cause of live serious dramatics, with such continuing entries as "Climax," "Playhouse 90," "U. S. Steel Hour" and "Studio One" (with even the latter's future after the first of the year reportedly in a neubulous sponsorship state.)

What goes for the writer also applies to the tv director. CBS has absorbed some of them, but the future status of too many is uncertain. Everyone worth his salt envisions theatrical pix and legit horizons. Some of them make it. The majority just keep envisioning. As a last resort (but much against their better judgment) they embrace the half-hour vidpix formula.

Program will come from the Playhouse Theatre, Manchester. A telefilm of Mey and Divov, the puppeteers, has been made for screening on children's tv on July 28.

'Panic Time' on Unsold TV Network Slots; ABC & NBC Have Most of 'Em

With less than seven weeks to go before the start of the new season, the panic button is beginning to ring at the networks. The three tv webs combined have a total of 11 hours of prime evening time still unsold, and what was once an easy confidence that come fall they'd all be SRO has turned into a frightening suspicion that there may not be enough sponsors to fill so large a void in so short a time.

Webs figured that "the pieces would fall into place" by early August. But that's only a week off, and there are still too many pieces to fill and apparently not enough advertisers in sight. Even if a last-minute rush of sponsors begins within the next couple of weeks, it's now deemed highly unlikely that anybody will be posting an SRO sign for all nighttime periods.

ABC and NBC are burdened with most of the unsponsored segments. ABC has nine half-hour periods open, along with three alternate-week half-hours, for a total of five and a quarter hours to fill.

NBC has four full half-hours and six alternates for a total of three and a half nighttime hours open. That comprises all of "Wagon Train," all of "Panic," the Sunday 6:30 period, and alternate-week half-hours on "Crisis" (actually, it's alternate full-hours for half a season), "Price Is Right," "Restless Gun," "Californians," "Tic Tac Dough" and "Life of Riley."

CBS is in the best position, with only three full half-hours (all of them fringe time, but included because CBS has traditionally programmed and sold them) and three alternate half-hours. The full half-hours are Tuesday and Saturday at 10:30 and Sunday at 6. The alternates are in "Perry Mason," "Harbor Master" and "Wally and the Beaver." Total time is two and a quarter hours.

WBC on FM Kick

Westinghouse Broadcasting Co. is converting its four FM stations to independent programming operations and will operate them as classical music stations starting Aug. 5. Stations had previously carried the regular programming of their AM counterparts, and Westinghouse now claims to be the first major multiple owner to convert its FM facilities to separate programming.

Four FM'ers are KDKA, Pittsburgh; KEX, Portland; WBZ, Boston and KYW, Cleveland. First two start immediately, while the Boston and Cleveland operations will get a later start due to transmitter location changes and technical improvements. Initially, the stations will operate from 4 p.m. to midnight, seven days a week. Major factor in the conversion decision is the increased sale of FM sets as part of the hi-fi upswing.

Will Client Love 'Studio 1' in Jan. As It Does in July?

There have been reports that Westinghouse may call it quits on sponsorship of the 60-minute Monday night "Studio One" entry on CBS-TV at the end of the year. (Westinghouse deal is on a Jan.-to-Jan. calendar year basis as distinct from most contractual commitments which start in the fall.)

A CBS-TV spokesman, on the other hand, says the web has been given the greenlight by McCann-Erickson, agency on the Westinghouse account, to proceed on lining up new vehicles on the basis of a firm renewal, but conceded that "anything can happen between now and Jan. 1."

Whatever happens, there's a definite CBS-TV future for Herb Brodkin, producer of the series, who is championed by the web's high echelon as one of the more creative components around the network on the basis of his "Studio One" work since the program was overhauled last January, at the insistence of Westinghouse.

Hellman, Searchinger Exit Ashley-Steiner, Team With Merrick

Jerry Hellman and Marian Searchinger are leaving the Ashley-Steiner agency and combining with casting director James Merrick to organize a new talent packaging agency, Jerome Hellman Associates. New operation, which is taking along some Ashley clients and is also preening some new package entries, will work in television, pictures and legit.

Hellman, with Ashley for the past three years (before that with the Jaffe Agency), has operated primarily on the tv talent and packaging end and organized and was later one of the producers in the Unit Four operation. Mrs. Searchinger has been a tv-legit writer's agent with Ashley, and was with Daniel Hollywood and Liebling-Wood previously. Merrick, a vet casting director, just wound casting chores on Paddy Chayefsky's "The Goddess" and has operated extensively in legit and tv ("Studio One," "Philco Playhouse," etc.).

Hellman is still working out the legal angles on transfer of Ashley clients and plans to fly to the Coast next week to set up representation there before springing the list of the new company's clients and properties.

Polly Bergen As Dean's Alternate

Polly Bergen is being signed by NBC-TV to alternate with Dean Martin in the web's Saturday at 9 Showcase for Liggett & Myers and Max Factor. Miss Bergen's exclusive pact with CBS-TV ends in September, enabling NBC to sign her for the show, which kicks off in the fall.

Actually, Miss Bergen will be repping Max Factor on the show, since Martin was signed by Liggett & Myers. Finalization of the show's format had been stalled until now because the cosmetic house had been unable to make a choice on a singer ot take the alternate weeks to Martin's appearances for the cigaret firm.

Situation had even gotten to the point where Liggett & Myers had threatened to pull out of the deal entirely unless Factor came up with a choice. Selection of Miss Bergen resolves the problem. Singer had been signed to an exclusive television deal by CBS last fall, but the only appearance she made for the web were in the lead role of the "Helen Morgan Story" on "Playhouse 90," as a substitute one week for Jackie Gleason and as a panelist on "To Tell the Truth," plus a couple of guest shots.

VIDFILMS' 'STAR & THE BLURB'

So Who's Laughing?

Los Angeles, July 23.

Breach of oral contract and invasion of privacy is charged by wrestler-actor (or is it actor-wrestler?) Lord Anthony Spears, also known as Aaron Saxon, Abe Stein and Aaron Zepess, in a Superior Court suit against Medic TV Productions, Gabriel Productions, General Electric, Procter & Gamble, Worthington Miner, James Mosier and Frank LaTourette.

His lordship says the defendants ganged up on him and he came out second best in a telepic for the "Medic" series entitled "The Laughter and the Weeping." The opposition obviously was greater than anything he had ever faced in the ring, so Lord Anthony trudged into court for succor.

His Lordship says he was told they'd do his life story, pay him as technical adviser, use him as an actor, and pay for plastic surgery to change those nasty cauliflower ears and make him presentable. They, he complains, didn't.

For all of this, Lord Anthony Aaron Abe asks $1,000,000.16 in damages. What the 16 cents was for isn't stated in the complaint. Probably amusement tax.

Civil War Doesn't Bother South; Stations Flock to 'Gray Ghost'

"The Gray Ghost," CBS Television Film Sales' pilot which couldn't find a place in the network sun because of socalled "controversial" angles anent its Civil War setting, has been released for syndication and has racked up some $800,000 in orders in little more than a week. CBS Film Sales hasn't firmed up several of the station orders because of impending regional deals for the areas concerned.

Show's instantaneous success in syndication points up anew the "controversy" bugaboo that's become an inherent fixture at the national advertiser and agency level. Although the show is concerned with a Southern hero, Gen. John Mosby, the national sponsors nixed the show on the "controversy" peg. But to no one's particular surprise, stations in the South are scrambling to tie up the property.

Film Sales hasn't firmed up all of the southern orders because that's where there's so much activity. General sales manager Tom Moore said that two southern station managers flew up to N.Y. last week to try to land the show, while other managers sent in contracts with the price open. Acceptance of the property isn't limited to the south, however, with orders in from the northeast, midwest and a regional for the Coast.

Regional deals on the show point up another difference between the national sponsor and the regional advertiser. Latter know their areas and can tell immediately whether a show has anything of a controvertial nature for their customers. National sponsor, on the other hand, hasn't the on-the-spot knowledge and can only "anticipate" trouble, even when it doesn't exist.

CBS ordered immediate production on 39 of the shows, with Lindsley Parsons producing on location and in studios on the Coast. CBS is figuring on an early-November air date.

Disney's Satellite Vidfilm for IBM

International Business Machines will make its entry into network television with a one-shot 60-minute institutional telefilm on the launching of the earth satellite. Plum fell to Disney Productions to produce and it is being targeted for March, 1958 exposure on ABC-TV in "Disneyland's" regular 7.30 to 8.30 Wednesday time period.

IBM will preempt the "Disneyland" for the night. A title has not been picked yet for the vidfilm, which, it was explained, is in the planning stages. Production has not begun.

ABC-TV accepted the order, clearing the preemption with the juve show's sponsors-to-be. Benton & Bowles, which arranged the science show for IBM, purportedly based the contract with Disney on his delineation of the atom for the "Disneyland" show some months back.

ABC SYNDICATION'S 500G ON '26 MEN'

ABC Film Syndication has made over $500,000 in sales on its new half-hour western for next season, "Twentysix Men," it reports. Some of the initial sales were to Standard Oil of Texas in eight markets, Hood's Dairy in all New England, A&P in Pittsburgh, Buffalo and Syracuse and to bankrollers in five Pennsylvania-Maryland markets.

Series, about Arizona Rangers at the turn of the century, is being produced for ABC by Russ Hayden, with Tris Coffin and Kelo Henderson, a newcomer, starring.

Vidfilms Playing $5,600,000 Role To 'Sell Britain'

London, July 23.

The Central Office of Information plans to buy telefilms from the BBC and commercial tv and offer them to principal outlets abroad to boost Britain in foreign parts. This is one part of a plan that will add $5,600,000 a year to the $36,400,000 now spent on overseas information services.

A Government White Paper, which outlines the details of the "boost Britain" plan says that while it is too early to define hard-and-fast policy about the use of tv material, expansion in this field should begin immediately. A large proportion of the material will include newsreels and documentary films, but the COI will also buy telefilms of programs produced in Britain which might be of interest to people abroad, but which are not considered commercial propositions for selling to overseas tv stations.

Another integral part of the plan is to cut overseas radio transmissions to several countries and focus them on places which are considered of great importance.

Ed Beloin to Metro On 'Thin Man' Series

Hollywood, July 23.

Ed Beloin has been signed by Metro to produce its "The Thin Man" teleseries starring Phyllis Kirk and Peter Lawford.

Series, on which one film had been shot, goes into production in two weeks. Ben Starr, who was associate producer on the project, has exited. Sam Marx is exec producer. Colgate is picking up the tab.

Beloin, formerly a producer with NBC, last year screenplayed "Holliday in Paris," Bob Hope starrer, and "Sad Sack," Jerry Lewis starrer for Hal Wallis at Paramount.

EVEN CROSBY NOW PITCHING

By ART WOODSTONE

Bing Crosby, who has restricted his television appearances thus far, just finished performing in four telefilm commercials. He apparently did them without offering even token resistance.

It's being held that Crosby's pitchman stand for American Gas Assn., pushing white appliances, is no freak of the business, but rather further indication of the growing tendency of entertainers in general to accept blurb offers. Those who lend themselves to making up this trend are to be distinguished from stars, who in a now well-established pattern, perform as spielers for the sponsors of their own regular tv shows. Count in the older list emceepitchmen such as William Lundigan, Robert Reagan, Henry Fonda, Douglas Fairbanks Jr., and "sponsor spokesmen and women" such as Betty Furness and Julia Meade.

Robert Weede, Jo Sullivan and Art Lund, plus others from the cast of Frank Loesser's Broadway musical, "Most Happy Fella" have been doing a series of spots for White Owl cigars. Martha Wright, even more recently, finished a tele blurb on film for Cheer. Julie London did a sultry singing slant for Marlboro. Lesser names, Tina Louise ("Li'l Abner") and singer Karen Chandler did blurbs, Miss Louise for Acrilan blankets, Miss Chandler for Minnesota Mining. Choreographer Tony Charmoli did one for General Motors. Bob Fosse, also a foot scribbler, appeared for Admiral.

Then performers like Vaughn Monroe, and Marge and Gower Champion, while associated with regular tv series for a sponsor, also undertake considerable national spot work for the same sponsors.

The performers, the big ones at least, have not sought out the tv work. Instead, agencies, lately having come of the bright thought that blurbs can be effective if they are entertaining, went and sought entertainers to do them, diminishing the amount of teleblurb work available to straight models. It has been estimated by a commercial film producer that as many as 75 to 100 performers are used for commercials every month by his company alone.

But for the bigger performers the inducements to do commercials are as many and varied and, apparently, as valid as the performers who do them.

For Cash or Product

The least enterprising approach is to appeal to the performing "corporation," who is sometimes strapped for immediate cash,

'Honeymooners' Into 50 Markets

Though Jackie Gleason isn't due for any regular exposure on television next fall, his "Honeymooners" half hour is already set in some 50 markets via the syndication route. CBS Television Film Sales claims gross sales of $950,000 thus far on the show, which the network bought outright from Gleason Enterprises for $750,000.

"Honeymooners" lineup includes several regionals, with Clairol now at the 24-market level in its alternate-week spread, S&W Foods tapping the show in 11 Coast markets and Ronzoni sharing the show on the Clairol alternate week in three markets in the east. CBS has had the show in syndication only a month, and is negotiating other regional deals which will swell the market total.

Producers Still Trying to Beat Risky Pilot Rap; TPA Setting Up A 'Produce-to-Order' Division

Weintraub: Pied Piper

Good part of the Flamingo Films Sales force has moved over to Telestar Films, the new Bernard Schubert-Sy Weintraub vidfilmery. Five Flamingo salesmen have followed Weintraub, who used to be Flamingo's v.p., in to the Telestar setup.

Quintet comprises Charlie McGregor, head of Telestar's Chi office; Ken Rowswell, sount-western sales chief for Telestar; Bill McDonald, head of the Atlanta office; Ken Israel, heading up the Pittsburgh branch and Julian Ludwig, in charge of the Coast office. In addition to the ex-Flamingo quintet, Wally Lancton has joined Telestars as eastern division manager. All report to sales manager Ray Hamilton.

DuM's WABD In Vidfilm-To-Live Change of Pace

WABD, DuMont's New York television station, which has been carrying the vidfilm torch in a big way, plans to do about six full hours of live programming a day next fall. Station, still operating essentially under the policies of a former management, is now carrying an average of about an hour a day of live telecasting, exclusive of the limited live work done on juve cartoon shows and the like.

Meantime, the station, managed at the top by Richard Buckley, and programmed by John Grogan, a Buckley aide from the days when he was exclusively head of WNEW, N.Y., radio, has pretty much done all the film buying it will do for next semester. It has taken "Sword of Freedom," "Big Story," "Official Detective," "White Hunter," plus three half-hour series for stripping. This is a small total of new stuff compared with the pile of celluloid bought for last season by Ted Cott, who managed the station's affairs until two months ago.

Reportedly, WABD will be increasing its budget sharply to do the new live programs it has in mind. This, too, signifies a change in the attitude of DuMont Broadcasting's stockholders, who, when led by Paramount Pictures, kept a fairly tight hold on budget.

Two live programs definitely to be done by WABD next season are "Fiesta," featuring south-of-the-border tunes and produced by WABD in collaboration with Mercury Artists, and Art Ford's "Greenwich Village Party." Ford, a deejay at WNEW, (also a DuMont station) will produce this variety stanza for the station.

At least eight other live shows are being peddled to agencies by

Dudley in From London With 3 'OSS' Entries

Paul Dudley flew in Monday (21) from London with the first three of the Bill Eliscu "OSS" series which stars Ron Randell and which McCann-Erickson is agenting. Dudley is head writer and coordinator for the advertising agency on the series which is being directed (mostly) by Robert Siodmak with Peter Maxwell and Laurie Huntington in Britain. Siodmak did the first two and Maxwell did one. Eleven are already in the can.

Dudley's visit to New York is for the selling season.

There are two distinct schools of thought about whether the troubled telefilm producers can sell network sponsors their shows without pilot films. But there is one fact for sure at present and that is that, despite the growing number of schemes unravelled in trying to beat the costly pilot film rap, there have been very few known pilotless deals made.

This week, Television Programs of America was the latest to come up with a plan for selling vidpix on a national basis. Company is establishing a "produce-to-order" department under Bruce Eells, TPA Coast veep, and his job will be essentially to confer agencies about bankroller's future program desires ("find out generally what they want first") and then, when "sufficient interest" is shown, make an eight or 10-minute film job in as nearly strict accordance as possible with sponsors' needs. Incidentally, TPA will continue doing at least part of its selling through the traditional pilot setup it is herein trying to obviate.

This TPA jawing session with agencies, in an effort to get a better picture of the lay of the land, is evidently aimed at cultivating the heightened desire of agencies and sponsors to dictate the content of their network programs. If it works, stabbing in the dark with nothing sharper than an "out of the blue" pilot will give way to great producer savings and a lessening of risk.

There are arguments against there ever being a successful substitute for pilot films. Agencies may have been very vocal about doing their own network programs, or at least dictating them, but very few have had the nerve to undertake the job. Young & Rubicam eight months or so ago planned to do its own stuff, but the plan was later dropped. Even with pilots galore to choose from, nervous agencies

TV Cues Rewriting Of M-G Contracts

Hollywood, July 23.

Standard Metro pacts, which exclude tv work, seem likely to get overhauling, since Culver City lot has entered video production field. Case in point is Ann Miller, under exclusive MGM contract, who's being considered for one of two top femme leads in forthcoming "The Feminine Touch" skein being mulled by MGM-TV. Her contract is being re-written to allow her to appear in the Metro series, should it develop.

Joan Blondell has been mentioned as other femme lead in "Touch," from an Adrian Samish story idea.

Nancy Littlefield's SG Talent Scout Role

Nancy Littleton has been named to the new post of eastern talent scout for Screen Gems, the Columbia Pictures telefilm subsid. She's been with Screen Gems for some time as casting director for the commercials division, and in her new post, she'll report to the same boss, eastern production chief Ben Berenberg. It's believed the first time a telefilm company has created such a spot.

Screen Gems also last week established a new sales division, the north central division, and moved William E. Young out of the N.Y. sales office to head up the division as manager. Telefilmery also signed Harry Bubeck to its Chicago sales staff. Bubeck was formerly with the Leo Burnet agency in Chi.

Lotsa Film Space on WOR, WPIX When & If Dodgers, Giants Scram

Now that the Giants are certain to leave New York after the present season is over and the Dodgers' Walter O'Malley is threatening to shift to the Coast where he can make an allegiance with pay-tv, WPIX and WOR-TV are on the spot. To WPIX, which alternates 77 Giant games with a similar number for the Yankees (who will remain in New York) and to WOR-TV, which has 102 Dodger games, the teams' going elsewhere means the loss of heavy doses of prestige, audience following, not to count sponsor coin.

What is expected to eventuate is a return to film during the afternoon and evening hours now devoted to play-by-play of the two teams.

Giant topper Horace Stoneham told a House Anti-Trust Subcommittee last week that he's taking his team elsewhere, the Polo Grounds situation being as bad as it is. WPIX will retain the Yankees, if the contract is renewed next year with Yank sponsors, but will have to fill an anticipated 200 hours of Giant airtime with something else. Station will probably extend its two daytime feature film shows to those summer days absented by the ball team. At night—and there were over 20 night games this year—station will go with half-hour syndications and other features.

Spokesman for the station said there will be no loss of money if and when the Giants leave, but admitted that the big audience position, because of baseball, will be weakened. WPIX will not only lose game sponsors Ruppert Brewery and Pall Mall, but the heavy pre- and post-game underwriting. Still, it has long felt nighttime baseball coverage (demanded by the sponsors) cut into its regular post-dark revenues. Loss of the Giants will help reestablish the economic balance.

The economic degree to which WOR-TV will be affected, if O'Malley packs up the Dodgers, would be greater than at WPIX, simply because the General Teleradio station carries 102 day and night games for the one team. Station said, if a final decision to move is made, WOR will revert to the live Ted Steele afternoon show 52-weeks of the year and "Million Dollar Movie" every night. WOR will lose the lucrative fore and aft spots too, where they are SRO. Shaeffer and Luckies pay for the Dodger games proper.

Mayor Wagner's N.Y. Film Support

The Film Producers Assn. received a pledge from Mayor Robert F. Wagner of "vigorous support" in keeping the film business in New York City. Troubled by further threatened shifts to the Coast of production, FPA prexy Harold Wondsel asked the city's chief exec last week for relief from "tax inequities," and for the extension of lensing privileges on location, and the end to "antiquated fire regulations."

Wondsel said the city's film industry grosses some $70,000,000 annually and employs over 25,000 persons in production, laboratory and creative work.

He said New York presents a "smoke screen of operating hazards that inhibit the production companies who do the bulk of their work here." Wondsel said the situation was also worsened by failure to construct the "oft-sought and talked about production centre." He added that filmers in New York have been "stymied and discouraged with the level of cooperation provided them."

Wondsel requested "constructive support" from city officials through establishment of an "atmosphere of interested cooperation," appointment of a commissioner or coordinator to "aggressively promote" civic cooperation and to handle lensing skeds in New York, the end to "exorbitant" fees charged by the Park Dep't for location setups and simplification of laws governing child labor.

He's confabbing with Gross-Krasne general manager David Mathews anent upcoming "African Patrol" and "Adventures of Jungle Boy" series.

'Brooks,' Schlitz Reruns For CBS-TV Sat. Slot If 'Big Top' Gets Axe

With "Big Top" due to go off the air in September unless a last-minute sponsor comes along, CBS-TV is considering using two film rerun shows in the Saturday 12 to 1 p.m. spot. Web is holding off on a final decision until next month, in the event that a sponsor places some outside show into one of the periods, but is holding in readiness "Our Miss Brooks" and the "Schlitz Playhouse" reruns to fill the period.

"Brooks," in which CBS has an ownership stake, is already programmed cross-the-board in the 2 to 2:30 period, so the Saturday show would be no problem. Similarly, CBS recently brought up rights to 104 "Schlitz" reruns from RKO Teleradio and is already using some of them as summer replacement shows, with plenty still unused which could go into the Saturday period.

'OFFICIAL DETECTIVE' TO ROLL NEXT WEEK

Hollywood, July 23.

Production on "Official Detective' series starts Monday (29) at Desilu, for National Telefilm Associates lineup of shows. Based on files of OD mag, series already has been sold in 27 markets. Mort Briskin is producing and Lee Sholem is directing.

Meanwhile, start on feature version of another NTA-Desilu series, "Sheriff of Cochise," seems likely to be delayed. Tentatively, theatrical version had been slated to commence in February, during break in telepix lensing. Now it looks like entire batch of 39 "Sheriff" vidfilms will be shot before feature version starts.

WICC-TV Facilities Leased for Vidfilms

Bridegport, July 23.

Studios and sound stage facilities of WICC-TV are being leased for use outside on-the-air hours by Valho Film Productions, Inc., headed by Vernon C. Hoyt, who has just resigned as national director of mass communications for the National Conference of Christians and Jews to return to film making.

Valho's operations will not affect WICC-TV, according to Philip Merryman, general manager, who becomes a member of the board of the new company. WICC has no financial interest in the new enterprise.

Dan Fish's TV Setup

Dan Fish, who returned from New York recently, intends to enter the tv production and distribution fields. He's in the process of forming a new outfit, to be known as Transatlantic TV.

Fish has a telepix package deal under discussion and is negotiating British rights to several U.S. properties.

NTA's Low-Budget Library Setup For Multi-Run Skeins

National Telefilm Associates becomes the latest distributor to establish a separate corporate division to handle library sales of formerly syndicated telefilm properties. Owning eight 30-minute series, at least six 15-minute shows and a potpourri of features, which have been around long enough to have had multi-runs on tv, NTA is putting them into this low-budget selling package setup.

New division will be called Famous Films—Programs for Television. It will headquarter on the Coast as "an autonomous and self-contained operation," with Ed Gray as veep in charge.

All told, Famous Films will have 500 five-, 15- and 30-minute shows and 200 features in the catalog.

Half-hours include "China Smith," "Combat Sergeant," "Police Call," "International Playhouse," "Quality Theatre," "Orient Express" and "Play of the Week." Ely Landau, prexy of NTA, did several of the quarter-hour shows in the library. He produced "Bill Corum Sports," "The Passerby," "The Health and Happiness Club," "M.D.," "Man's Heritage" with Raymond Massey.

Barter Deals Go International

First barter-time buy on American video outlets has been pacted by an overseas advertiser, adding new sources to the rapidly expanding system of film barter and "trade out." Television Clearing House Inc., U.S. middle-man outfit which helps manufacturers get rid of overload inventories, arranged for a British syndicate, Alfred Simpson Ltd., to peddle a three-way razor over U.S. tv.

TCH, run by L. J. Dahlman, generally gets free physical equipment, from office furniture to prizes, for stations in return for airtime; it's a "trade off."

Post-'48 Features Will Feel Impact Of Pay-TV, When & If—Bob Fellows

Hollywood, July 23.

In pay-tv, "the entertainment industry is on the verge of the greatest thing in its history," feels Robert Fellows, currently making his telefilm debut as a producer on Four Star Films "Alcoa-Goodyear Theatre." In fact, he accepted the vidfilm assignment, in part, to familiarize himself with tv techniques, he admits. "My agent, Bert Allenberg, felt this was a good show and a good outfit, and a good chance to learn the business."

"Pay-tv is inevitable," feels Fellows. "It's become uneconomic for the advertiser to support all of television. And there's nothing 'free' about 'free tv.' The viewer pays the hidden advertising cost in the price of the product."

Aside from sports, the first impact of subscription video will be made by the post-1948 backlog of feature films, Fellows predicts. However, pictures specifically made for pay-tv are still a long way in the future, he submits.

Present situation finds theatrical features making approximately 85% of earnings in first runs, Fellows points out. Probably, pix will continue to debut in theatres, but a second run on pay-tv will bring in an additional 30-40% in revenues, he contends.

"Actually, the real free choice the tv viewer will have will be between sponsored shows and pay-tv," Fellows tossed out. "The advertisers' problem will be how to crack prime times, in opposition to pay video."

However, Fellows offered an alternative plan to tv sponsors. "There's no reason why they can't enter the picture-making business themselves," he commented. "We might yet see a credit reading 'General Foods Presents.' Why not? Even if the picture just breaks even on pay-tv, the advertiser will make money out of advertising values. This might be the sponsors' answer to toll-video. Now is the time for the big advertisers to think about entertainment, as a diversification investment."

As for the problems in launching pay-video, Fellows admits they are formidable, reckoning the field as a "billion dollar market." However, there's no problem which can't be licked by the combined ingenuity of American industry and technicians, he feels. But it is a big financial problem, he admits, and

Klaeger Raids Transfilm In Expanding Staff

Robert Klaeger, who a couple of months ago ankled Transfilm where he was a top executive, all told has hired four of his former cohorts to handle the production and administration of his new tv film commercial production company. First, as reported a few weeks ago, he hired as his second in command, John Fenton, a Transfilm production exec.

This week he inked George Ottinox, as animation production manager; Philip Donoghue, motion picture supervising editor, and Stephen Kambourian, supervising film editor. They all held the same posts at Transfilm.

'Buccaneers,' 'Launcelot' Reruns for ABC-TV, But WOR Gets Paid

Official Films sold "Sir Launcelot" and "The Buccaneers" for rerun network use to ABC-TV and Kelloggs but there was a fly in the ointment that has only just been settled. Distrib had made a sale in New York to General Teleradio's WOR-TV, it was learned and for awhile the station would not release the properties, which it wanted to use itself next fall, to ABC or the sponsor.

A cash settlement was made the other day with WOR-TV for an undisclosed amount, it was reported. WOR had a written contract with Official, which made the settlement. Two series will be used by Kelloggs in the fall on ABC as afternoon juve programming.

OFFICIAL TAKES OVER 'ERROL FLYNN THEATRE'

Official Films takes over for syndication all remaining markets on the Marcel Le Duc telefilm skein, "The Errol Flynn Theatre." The 26 half-hours were sold by Le Duc in 30 U. S. markets since he began selling them in April.

Series, shot in England by Inter-TV Films Ltd. of Canada under Le Duc's aegis, is an anthology. Skein is on WABD, New York, on KTLA, L. A., and in Savannah, St. Joseph, Seattle, Philly, and Cleveland, etc. But Official syndicated chief Wells Bruen reports that several major U. S. markets, including Chicago, Dallas and Fort Worth, are still on the to-be-sold list.

Brandt Exiting NTA

Joseph A. Brandt is ankling as comptroller of National Telefilm Associates, post he's held since the end of 1956. The former vice-president of Gruen (watch) Industries is leaving the telefilm distribution company approximately two weeks after the signing of Eric Haight as NTA treasurer.

Brandt has not announced future plans. Haight came to NTA from his own investment company.

VARIETY - ARB City-By-City Syndicated Film Chart

VARIETY'S weekly chart of city-by-city ratings of syndicated and national spot film covers 40 to 60 cities reported by American Research Bureau on a monthly basis. Cities will be rotated each week, with the 10 top-rated film shows listed in each case, and their competition shown opposite. All ratings are furnished by ARB, based on the latest reports.

This VARIETY chart represents a gathering of all pertinent information about film in each market, which can be used by distributors, agencies, stations and clients as an aid in determining the effectiveness of a filmed show in the specific market. Attention should be paid to time—day and time factors, since sets-in-use and audience composition vary according to time slot, i.e., a Saturday afternoon children's show, with a low rating, may have a large share and an audience composed largely of children, with corresponding results for the sponsor aiming at the children's market. Abbreviations and symbols are as follows: (Adv), adventure; (Ch), children's; (Co), comedy; (Dr), drama; (Doc), documentary; (Mus), musical; (Myst), mystery; (Q), quiz; (Sp), sports; (W), western; (Wom), women's. Numbered symbols next to station call letters represent the station's channel; all channels above 13 are UHF. Those ad agencies listed as distributors rep the national sponsor from whom the film is aired.

TV'S WINNING OF THE WEST

Hailey's Comet

Scripter Arthur Hailey, the Canadian public relations man who broke into television a year ago with such hot properties as "Flight Into Danger" and 'Time Lock," has another provocative entry listed for fall production by "Studio One." Titled "Course for Collision," script is concerned with the President of the United States on a peace mission to Moscow in 1962 with a life-or-death decision to make.

"Course" is a suspense yarn, and an interesting sidelight on the sale to "Studio One" lies in the fact that there was bidding for the show from NBC's "Suspicion" as well. "Suspicion" is set to preem in the Monday 10-11 time opposite "Studio One," and the latter apparently will use the fight-fire-with-fire strategy by scheduling suspense yarns against "Suspicion."

Hailey's original television entries have just been completed as motion pictures, with shooting just finished at Paramount on "Zero Hour" (the new title for "Flight Into Danger") and an Aug. 19 London preem set for "Time Lock," which was filmed in England. In addition, "U.S. Steel Hour" does his "The Change in Chester" next Wednesday (31), into which he wrote a special part for ex-"$64,000 Question" contestant Barbara Hall. The "Studio One" and "U.S. Steel Hour" sales, his first to those shows, were set by agent Maeve Southgate.

British TV Writers Pose Strike Threat Unless They Get 'Fair Deal'

London, July 23.

British tv writers are prepared to take strike action if their pleas for a "fair deal" from the commercial tv programmers are not heeded. Negotiations, for better payment and other terms which have been going on for two-and-half years between the Television Writers' Council and the programmers, have finally broken down, with all claims submitted on behalf of the writers refused.

At a news conference, held by the TWC, which was formed to act as a negotiating body with Independent Television programmers when the Commercial Television Act was passed, Francis Williams, who presided, said they were going to approach Members of Parliament in a bid to get the matter raised in the House of Commons.

Main issues which had been rejected were a system of payment based on royalties; additional payment for stage, film, foreign tv, publication and any other rights; and the revision of existing contracts.

All efforts to avoid a deadlock were unsuccessful and the programmers remained firm in their refusal to grant any concessions on the claims. The view held by the TWC was that the four originating programmers, Associated-Rediffusion, Granada TV, ABC-TV, and Associated TeleVision, were not acting as competitive bodies, which contravened the Commercial Television Act. When a script was sold to one of them a fee was paid, but the programmers could all benefit from the one payment by haying the program networked. In this case, the company which originally bought the script, recouped most of their money out of fees from the other companies in the network. The writer got no additional payment for a networked show.

Newsweek's Got That Station Yen

Los Angeles, July 23.

Newsweek entered the radio-tv field last week with the acquisition of a substantial minority interest in KFSD-AM-FM-TV, San Diego. Stations have an NBC affiliation and are managed by William F. Goetze.

Newsweek bought a part of the interest of Fox, Wells & Co., which will retain its majority interest in the San Diego operation.

Another San Diego station, KSON, was sold to Jack Gross, who formerly operated KFMB in that city. In another ownership change in this area, Rabel Enterprises bought KXOC, Chico, Cal.

Meanwhile, FCC granted a construction permit to Pacific-South Broadcasting Co. for the first high-fidelity radio station in the San Gabriel valley. Studios will be in West Covina.

AFTRA Scans Pay-TV

San Francisco, July 23.

Major subject of discussion at AFTRA's 20th annual convention, opening here Thursday (25), will be pay-tv, over which AFTRA currently has no jurisdiction.

Some 150 delegates from 42 chapters are enroute for four-day meeting.

Also on the agenda are discussions of the current contract's "unfair station" clause, educational tv and the AFL-CIO Code of Ethics, which it's expected the delegates will reject because it isn't strong enough.

National president Frank Nelson will preside and official hostess at the Sheraton-Palace meetings will be Wanda Ramey, president of the Frisco local.

New officials will be elected next Saturday (27) night.

ABC Radio To Trim Sails In Economy Move

Hollywood, July 23.

Curtailed personnel and operations to effect a more economical balance is being studied by department heads of ABC Radio here and in N.Y. Study is expected to be completed in six weeks but John Hansen, manager of KABC and Dresser Dahlstead, program director for the web's western division, denied that many employees have been pinkslipped.

Net's chief problem is piping shows to the network which are not accepted by affiliates. This phase will undoubtedly be curtailed, with the web put on a staggered schedule as originally proposed by Robert Eastmen, prexy of ABC Radio, which is now autonomous.

Also being studied is recent NBC decision to feed all network shows from N.Y. Local programs are taped and airmailed to N.Y.

71% NIGHTTIME SHOWS ON COAST

By BOB CHANDLER

New York has virtually lost the battle for control of television production to the Coast. A VARIETY tabulation of the three-network fall schedule, as set thus far, shows that New York will be responsible for production of only 24.8% of all nighttime shows, or only 26 of the 105 programs scheduled for the prime evening hours. On the other hand, the Coast will produce 71.4%, or 75 of the 105.

Hand-in-hand with the West's rise to dominance over the East is the constantly accelerating use of film by the networks. Percentage of shows on film next fall will reach an alltime high of 63.8% vs. 36.2% for live—in other words, 67 of the 105 total will be on film. Of this, the Coast will produce 61 shows or 58.1% of the total, while Europe accounts for four shows or 4.8% and New York only two shows or 1.9%.

But the Coast is fast catching up to New York in live production as well. While the East will be responsible for production of 24 live shows (less than one-fourth of total tv production in the prime hours), the Coast will be doing 14 live stanzas, or just 13.3%. The Coast output in numbers is more than half of the East's, and in terms of hours the Coast will account for 10½ hours a week while New York that four and a half of the 15½ will

A further examination of the East vs. West live output shows that four and a half of the 15 will comprise quiz, panel or audience participation shows, with this type almost exclusively accounting for the difference in the output. New York will originate seven and one half hours of musical and variety shows, while the Coast will do six and a half hours of music, variety and comedy (no comics from the east). New York will originate three hours of live drama, the Coast two and a half. Each will do one hour of miscellaneous-type shows.

(Three programs are excluded from the breakdown, the boxing bouts on NBC and ABC, because they originate from various points, and NBC's "Suspicion," because it will consist of 20 filmed segments from the Coast and 22 live shows from New York. If the bouts were included in the live vs. film breakdown, total film programming would reduce to 62.2% and total

NBC-TV's 750G In New Daytime Biz

NBC-TV this week signed $750,000 in new gross daytime business via pacts with Lanolin Plus and Pharma-Craft, with both sponsor deals to start in the fall. Lanolin bought two weekly quarter-hours on three shows, while Pharma-Craft picked up two alternate-week quarter-hours on a pair of daytimers.

Lanolin deal, via Kastor, Farrell, Chesley & Clifford, calls for an every-week quarter-hour of "Price Is Right" and alternate-week segments on "Bride & Groom" and "Queen for a Day." Pharma-Craft, through Doherty, Clifford, Steers & Shenfield, bought alternate-week segments on "Comedy Time" and "It Could Be You."

Saphier-Steve Allen Ruling Could Affect Future Agent-Talent Relations

Arbitrators decided against Steve Allen's former agent James L. Saphier who had demanded that the video performer pay him a percentage from two NBC-TV programs, the old "Tonight" and the current 8 to 9 p.m. Sunday showcase. A corallary issue raised in the arbitration, one that only in part decided the outcome, can have wide effects in agent-tv performer relations.

Saphier wanted an agent's share from the two programs, which began on the network after the split of Saphier and Allen, who became associated with agent Jules Green. Saphier contended that his contractual arrangement entitled him to a share of the show take. He also raised the point that regulation 12-B had no bearing on the arbitration. 12-B is the Code written in 1953 by the American Federation of Television & Radio Artists and the agents.

It was generally thought until now that 12-B only applied to individual performers and agents and, hence, could not serve as a defense for Allen. But AFTRA national counsel Mortimer Becker, called in as an interested party, testified that the regulations also applied to "packagers"—corporate entities—such as the one built up around Allen. The arbitrators, Herb Jacoby, Jack Katz, John Shulman, wrote their decisions in favor of Becker's testimony.

But the actual issue of payment to Green was primarily decided, it was reported, on the fact that there was a clear-cut time between the end of Green's contract and the beginning of the first of the two network shows. Saphier's agreement ended in May, 1955, and "Tonight" with Allen on network began several months later, near the end of the year.

Decision was reached last week after several weeks of unpublicized arbitration.

Then There Was One

Departure of Mort Werner from NBC-TV (he joins Kaiser Industries) leaves but a single key "Weaver man" on an active duty at the network. He's Mike Dann, veepee and star salesman on the tv "specials."

Since Pat Weaver exited as prexy, a total of 25 "Weaver people," including 17 in key administrative-creative berths, have checked out. Only other remaining one except Dann is Tom McAvity, who, since the Bob Kintner ascendancy, has more or less been sitting on the sidelines.

Kaiser's Bigtime TV Status, Lures Werner From NBC

Mort Werner, NBC v.p. in charge of daytime programs, is leaving the network in mid-August to become a staff vicepresident of Kaiser Industries, the parent company embracing all of the Henry J. and Edgar F. Kaiser enterprises in aluminum, steel, gypsum, cement, autos, etc. Werner will have charge of all television activities for the company—not only television sponsorship, but station administration (for Kaiser's Honolulu radio-tv outlets) and a reported television project in South America.

Werner has been in the daytime slot (also in charge of "Today"-"Home"-"Tonight" since last spring, when the NBC-TV programming department was overhauled. Prior to that, he had been v.p. and national program director. He joined NBC in 1951, having been brought in by the then program chief, Pat Weaver, as a producer on "Today," and rose through the "Today"-"Home"-"Tonight" setup to his program department posts. He was one of the few "Weaver men" to survive the revamp at the web last winter and spring.

Curiously enough, Weaver, his ex-boss, will now be reporting to Werner, via Weaver's new consultancy relationship with Kaiser under which he'll direct all television advertising for Kaiser Industries. Werner, incidentally, has been NBC's key contact man with Henry J. Kaiser in all its sponsorship relations, since he knows Kaiser intimately.

NBC hasn't yet set a replacement for Werner, who won't check in at Kaiser until Aug. 19, a week after he gets the new Arlene Francis show and "Dollar a Second" on the air as replacements for "Home."

Hayes to Europe

Arthur Hull Hayes, prez of CBS Radio, and his family depart for Europe tomorrow (Thurs.) aboard the S.S United States for a tour of the Continent and visits to CBS offices in London, Paris and Rome. They will also attend the graduation from Oxford of Arthur Hull Hayes Jr.

Hayes is due back in New York Sept. 2.

NBC-TV on Tint Sprint in Fall

NBC-TV will upbeat its use of color telecasts in the fall, with at least six and a half hours of regularly scheduled nighttime programs per week, two hours a day in the Monday-Friday daytime period and at least 24 specials to be tinted. Moreover, part of the World Series and some NCAA football will be tintcast.

Biggest color night will be Sunday, with Steve Allen switching to tint and the Dinah Shore "Chevy Show" immediately following, so that the 8-10 p.m. period will be all tint. Rundown for the rest of the week has "My Friend Flicka," tentatively set for 7:30-8, as the Monday entry; the George Gobel-Eddie Fisher 8-9 hour on Tuesday; "Kraft Theatre" continuing as the Wednesday tint representative; the half-hour Rosemary Clooney

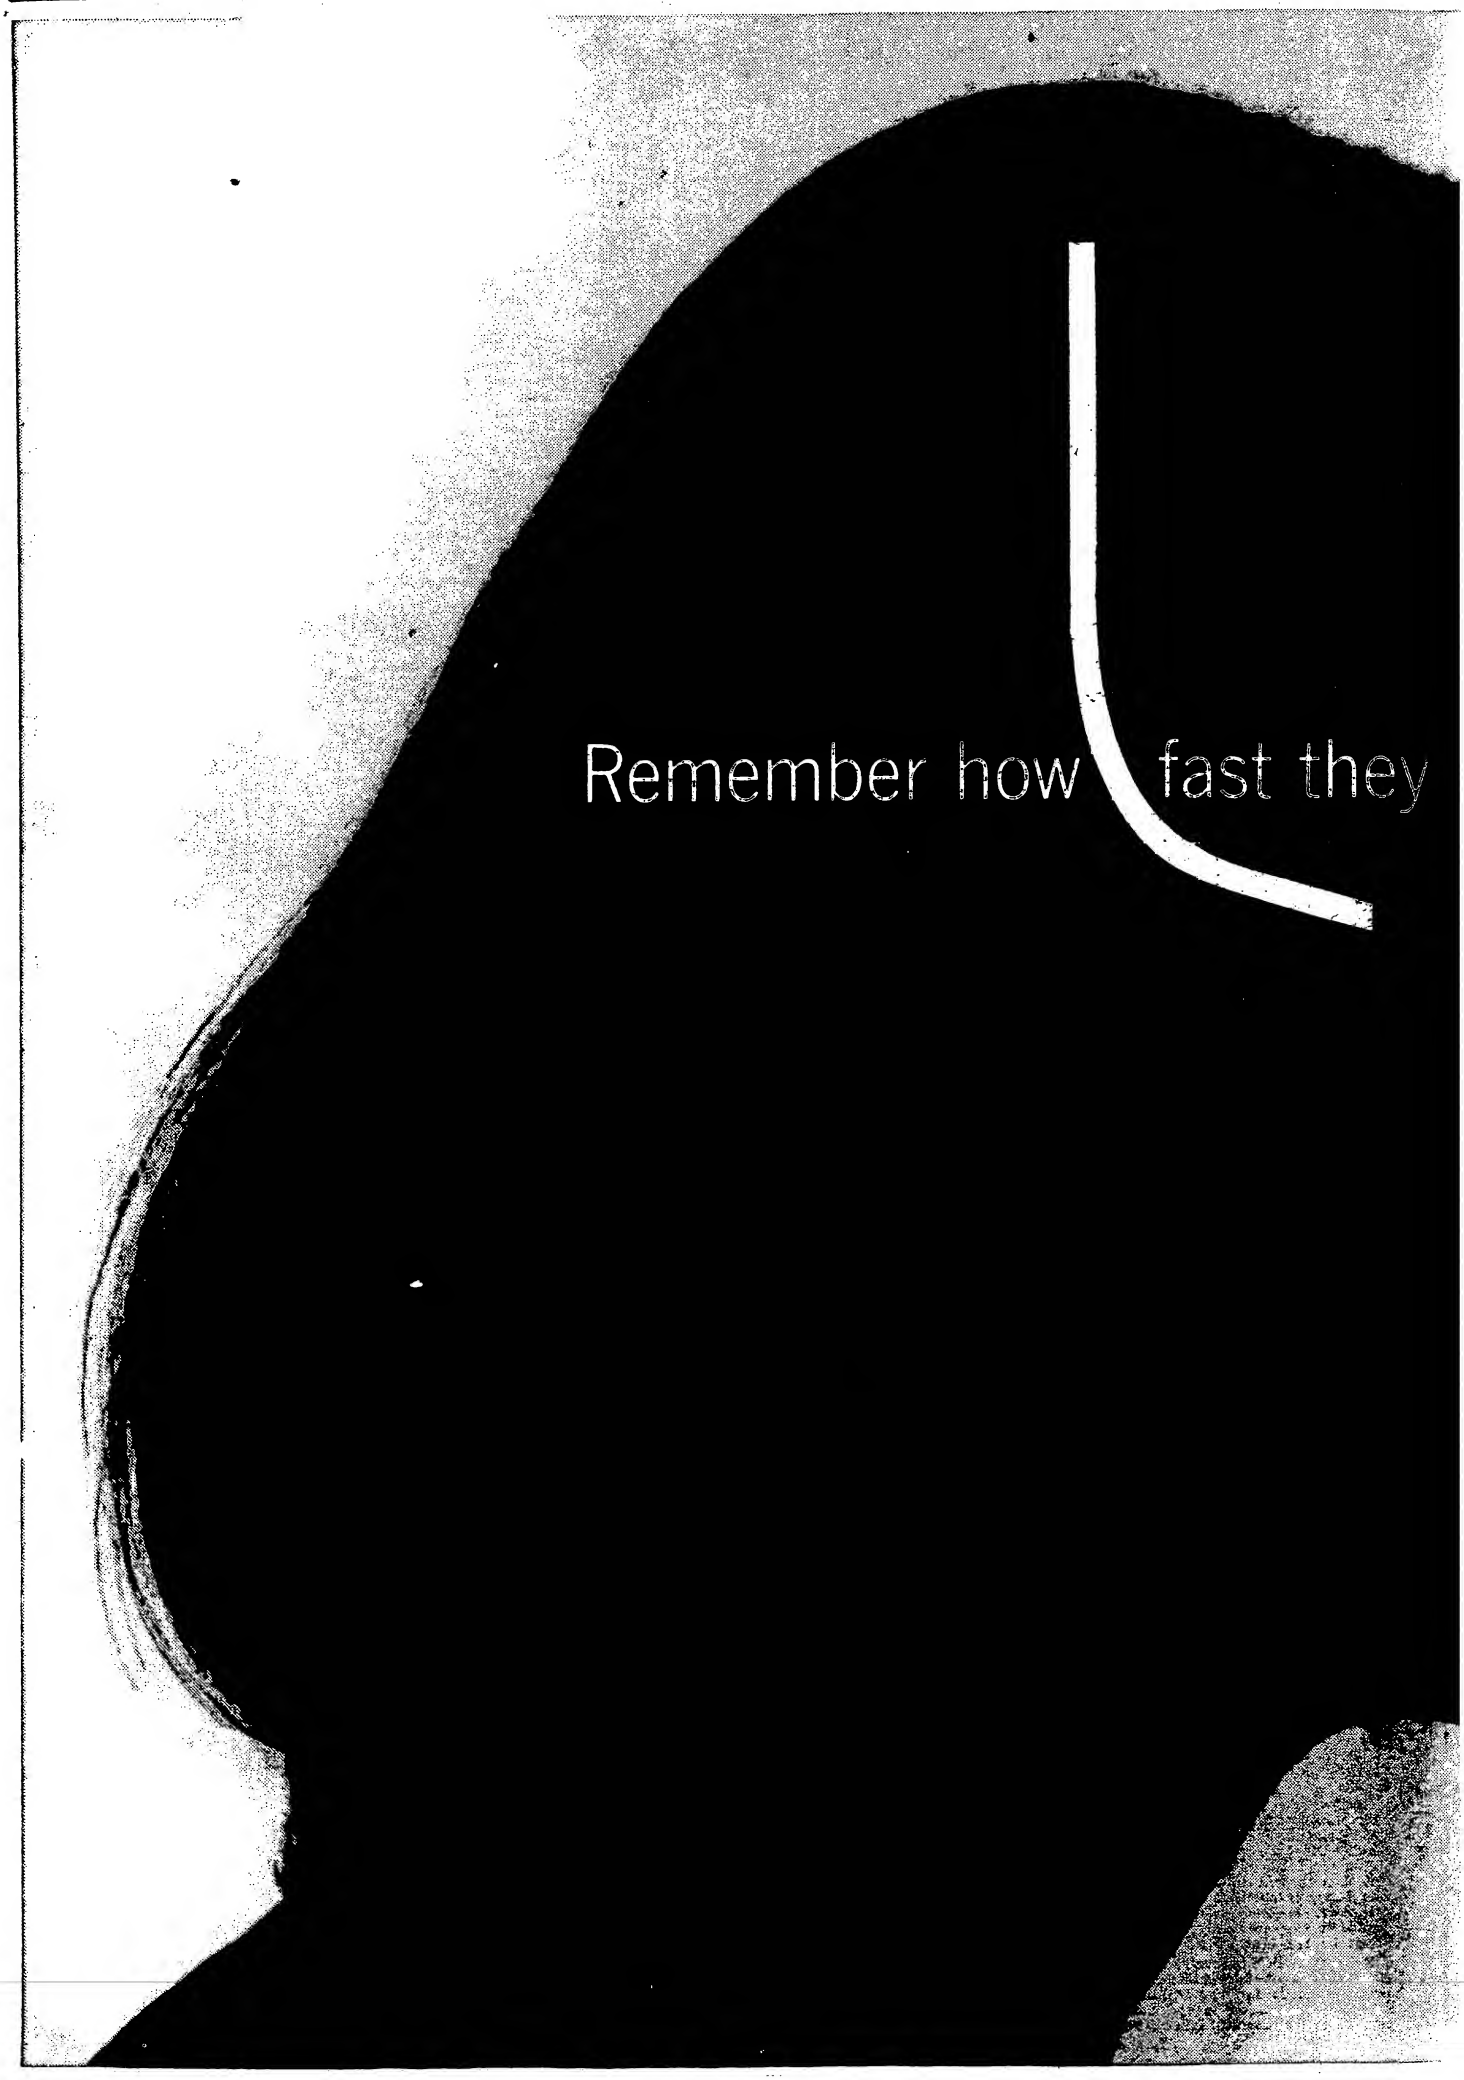
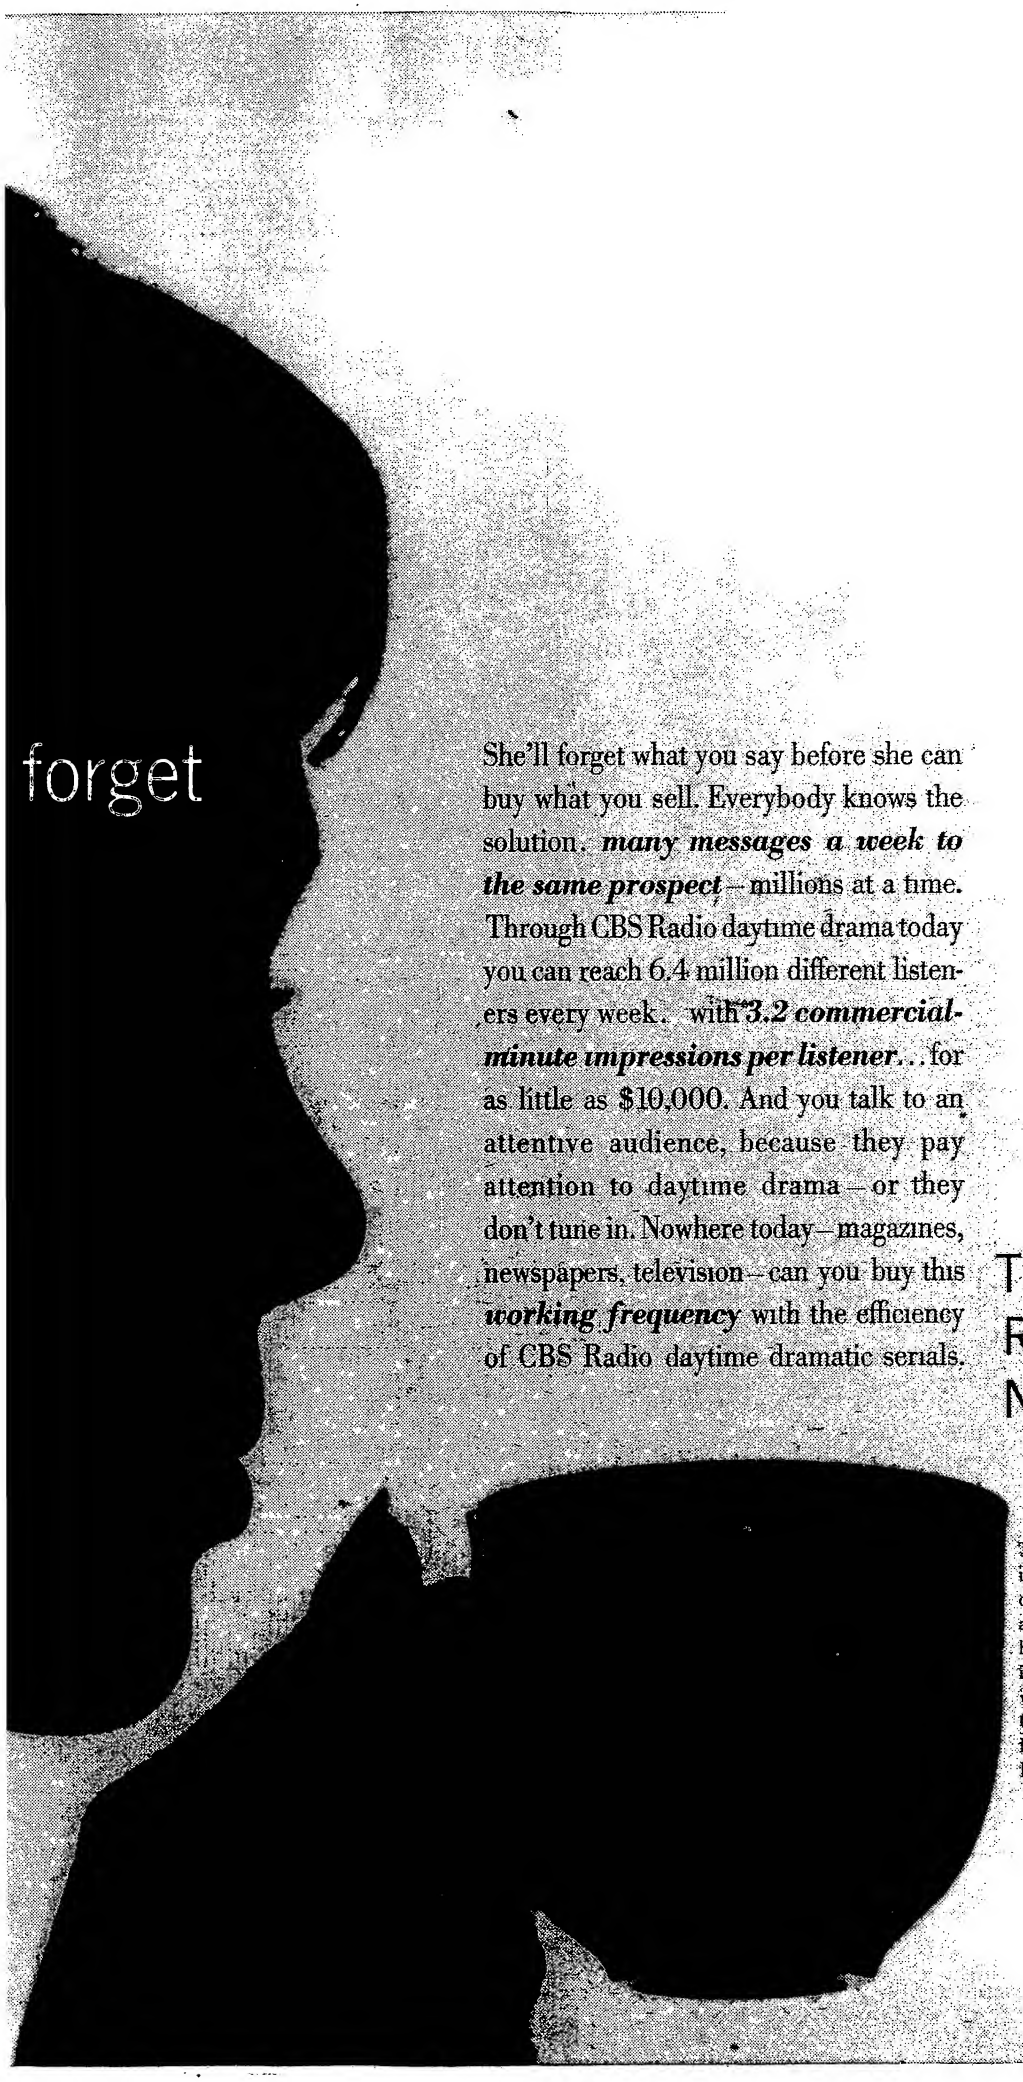
JOE RINES TO AYER, HELMS FAIRY TALES



Hollywood, July 23.



Joe Rines, agency exec and packager, joins the program staff of N. W. Ayer agency this week as production supervisor of the Shirley Temple series of four fairy tales and legends for three Ayer clients—Hills Bros. (coffee), Breck (shampoo) and Sealtest (ice cream).

Glenhall Taylor, veepee of the Ayer Hollywood office, in making the appointment, said Rines would also act in liaison for the agency with the sponsors and Coronet Productions, which will film the series at Screen Gems under executive producership of William Phillipson. Rines has left for conferences in N.Y. at the Ayer agency.

VARIETY - ARB FEATURE FILM CHART

VARIETY's weekly chart, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau's latest reports, on feature films and their competition covers 120 cities. Each week, the 10 top-rated features in a particular city will be rotated.

Factors which would assist distributors, agencies, stations and advertisers in determining the effectiveness of a feature show in a specific market have been included in this VARIETY chart. Listed below is such pertinent information regarding features as their stars, release year, original production company and the present distributor, included wherever possible along with the title. Attention should be paid to such factors as the time and day, the high and low ratings for the measured feature period and share of audience, since these factors reflect the effectiveness of the feature, and audience composition, i.e. a late show at 11:15 p.m. would hardly have any children viewers, but its share of audience may reflect dominance in that time period. In the cities where stations sell their feature programming on a multi-stripped basis utilizing the same theatrical throughout the week, a total rating for the total number of showings for the week is given, the total rating not taking into account the duplicated homes factor. Barring unscheduled switches in titles, the listed features for the particularly rated theatrical filmed show are as accurate as could be ascertained from a multiplicity of station and other data.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

RCA turned in record first-half sales of $564,990,000 for the first six months of the year, bettering by 7% the previous half-year volume of 1956. But earnings rose only slightly, from $20,037,000 for the '56 period to $20,311,000 for the first half of '57. Earnings per share came to $1.35, vs. $1.32 for the first half of '56.

Second-quarter sales paralleled the six-month trend, with the total of $269,217,000 for the quarter running 7% ahead of the same quarter last year, while net profits for the quarter came to $7,501,000 or 48c per share vs. $7,310,000 or 47c a share in the 1956 quarter.

After years of straight staff assignments, CBS conductor Alfredo Antonini looks to hit the commercial jackpot at the web during 1957. Having started with the conducting chores on "Cinderella" last spring, Antonini is now on the verge of taking over maestro chores for several of the duPont specs—particularly the musicals—and for Prudential's "The Twentieth Century." Additionally, he'll probably do some of the "Seven Lively Arts" shows, which aren't commercial yet but probably will be. On the radio side, he's subbing for Percy Faith on "Woolworth Hour" Aug. 4 and 11. Meanwhile, he's done a string of guest concert appearances, having appeared with the N.Y. Philharmonic at Lewisohn Stadium just this past week-end (20), with concerts still to come in Chicago (this week) and Memphis.

(Martha) Rountree Productions, owners of "Press Conference," has figured out a way to interview overseas dignitaries for television without having the battery of a dozen American newsmen leave their Washington tv studio.

The usual three cameras, this time film cameras, are tranied on the interrogators here while a single camera is focused on the interviewee abroad. As the cameras are operating, an overseas telephone wire, recording the queries and answers (as they are being filmed) is kept open. The overseas celluloid is rushed here and spliced with that taken of the reporters. Company can deliver a completed print by this means in 24 hours, it reports.

The Bill Kaufman-edited "Best Television Plays of '57" published by Harcourt-Brace, practically emerges as a "house book" for the Ashley-Steiner stable of writers, with five of the seven scripts represented in the tome bearing the A-S identification. These are "Requiem For A Heavyweight" by Rod Serling (Playhouse 90); "Lee at Gettysburg by Alvin Sapinsley (Omnibus); "The Trial of Poznan" by Alvin Boretz (Armstrong Circle Theatre); "Survival" by Alfred Brenner (U.S. Steel Hour) and "Cracker Money" by Steven Gethers (Kaiser Aluminum Hour).

NBC's "Nightline" scored a coup a couple weeks ago when it landed an interview with Nathan Leopold (of the Leopold-Loeb 1924 thrill-killing combo). Thought it wasn't meant to be an exclusive, it became that when Leopold decided to cancel other tv hearings for fear they might jeopardize his chances while his parole appeal was pending, Jim Hurlbut's half-hour interview with the famous Statesville Penitentiary inmate was then re-broadcast when "Nightline" learned it had the only pre-parole tete-a-tete with Leopold. It was under Hurlbut's grilling that Leopold said, "I'm not looking for justice, I'm looking for mercy."

WMCA (N.Y.) owner Nathan Straus donated $10,000 this week to a Dutch student housing foundation in "respect and gratitude" for the help the Dutch gave Nazi terror victims. First aim of the new foundation is to restore the building in which Anne Frank and her family hid from the Nazis during World War II.

This Is New York

Girlie magazines were given the o.o. on WCBS' "This Is New York." Each night last week, a segment of the hour-long, cross-the-board entry was devoted to various aspects of the cheesecake publication field.

The series got underway on Monday (15) with "New York" host Jim McKay interviewing George Shute, editor and publisher of Carnival Publishing Co., which prints numerous periodicals devoted to the femme form. The session didn't pack too much punch, with Shute pretty much soft-peddling the newstand nudity.

He felt the magazines weren't harmful to youngsters and that the publishers would call a halt themselves if they thought the material was getting out of hand. He also believed the publishers were doing an okay job of censoring themselves. However, he did state he would rather put out a digest, but was going with the demand for girlie publications.

The lineup for the balance of the series, which covered interviews with newstand dealers last night (Tues.), includes session with cheesecake photographers and interviews with High Heffner, editor and publisher of Playboy magazine, and Peter Campbell Brown, N. Y. City Corporation Counsel. Jess.

Controversy

Since he's become tv's most famous interrogator, clever persons have for the sake of publicity—his and theirs—tried to turn the tables on Mike Wallace. But nothing—and that includes the round-table quizzing he got from his replacements on New York's WABD at the time he moved to ABC-TV network and the probing in a recent mag study—came as close to being as tough and agile as Wallace himself as when John Wingate got him alone across a WOR Radio mike Thursday night (18) last for the new series "Controversy."

Wingate, a WOR gabber and one of Wallace's subs on WABD, the chief one at that, has adopted the deliberate, calculated style (even to the inflection and impertinent question) of his predecessor. After

DOWN PAYMENT FOR A HOUSE
Producer: Gus Kristjansen
Writer; Len Peterson
30 Mins.; Thurs., 8 p.m.
CBC, from Winnipeg

Len Peterson, one of Canada's top tv-radio dramatists, has a neatly ironic, if not highly original, tale here which could well be adapted for tv. It's one of CBC's weekly "Winnipeg Drama" series on its Trans-Canada Network.

Chief character is a bored, ill-paid, split-shift trolley operator, Ab Kohler, with a grudge against life. He, his wife and two kids exist in a couple of basement rooms next to the furnace room. He has a chatting acquaintance with the cop on the beat, who lives above and whose official coat and cap Kohler "borrows" one day while he's off duty and the cop asleep.

Kohler, with larceny on his mind but no special plans, strolls to a bank where guards are taking money to an armored car. They see him and feel safe. While they're not watching he lifts a bag and stashes it in a trash can, later gets it and hides it in a furnace hot-air pipe.

All cops off duty at robbery time are suspect but later cleared, and it's announced that all serial numbers are known. Kohler's wife catches him counting the $48,000—disturbingly more than the down payment on a house he'd wanted to steal—and terrifies him into burning it in the furnace. Landlord finds him but doesn't open furnace door; then the cop comes in with tickets to the w.k. benefit ball—also casually mentioning that the bank had slipped up on the serial numbers and had the wrong list.

Kohler buys two tickets with $10 he needs for a snowsuit for his kid, in hope of getting rid of cop in time to rescue some bills—but they're all burned; and he knows he'll never again do anything but drudge along at the clang-clang again.

Weakness of Kohler's character was skillfully pointed up by a sardonic voice, well handled by Meredith Robinson. Wife was nicely played by Joan Barker, and Kohler himself was in the effective hands of an actor called—believe it or not—Melton Snow. Gus Kristjansen's production was suspenseful and crisp. Startling bit of dialog was "You son of a she-dog!"

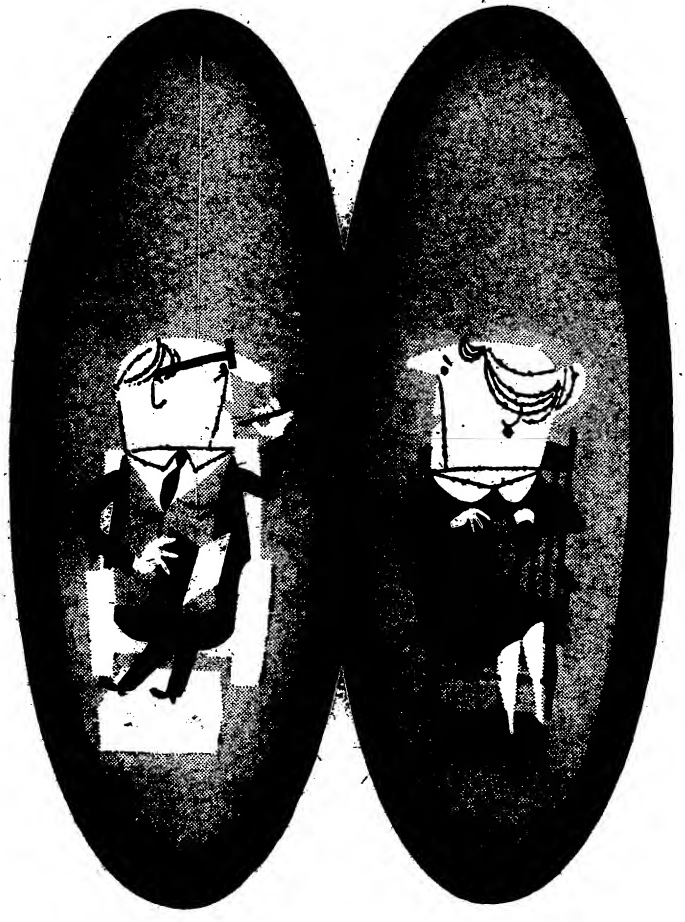
THE VOICE IN THE NIGHT
With Sidney Gross
Writer - Producer - Director: Gross
120 Mins., Sat.; midnight
120 Mins., Sun., 11 p.m.
Participating
WINS, N. Y.

A welcome contrast to late night rock 'n' roll are the soothing tunes favored by Sidney Gross who's been jockeying "The Voice in the Night" on WINS, N. Y., since last March. In keeping with the "restful" music format, he introes his numbers in dulcet tones and handles the pitch for his nine participating sponsors in a similar soft delivery.

But in accenting the quiet touch, Gross at times is a bit too flowery. His use of such "poetic" passages as "employ the forces of modern invention to direct melodic strains to you" may either grate upon some listeners or appeal to them depending upon individual taste.



He programs classical, international, mood, folk and occasional quiet jazz recordings but eschews current pops. It's obviously a musical makeup aimed at luring the more mature listener. Thus it's self-explanatory why "Voice in the Night" has such participating backers as Goody Record Club, Fine Cars (English Ford) and American Tourist Bureau.

Gross, a jazz expert who once emceed "The International Jazz Club" on ABC, has also taken on temporary extra duties. He's doing WINS' all-night show (Mon.-thru-Fri., 12-midnight) in addition to his Sat.-Sun. programs while John Bradford vacations. An hour of "Voice in Night" has been incorporated into the first part of the show. Gilb.

CBS Names Livingston As Samuels Successor

Robert Livingston was named this week to succeed the late Frank Samuels as CBS-TV's Pacific Coast manager of network sales. Samuels, the web's longtime Coast sales chief, died July 7 after a two-month illness.

Livingston has been an account exec in New York for the web's sales department since 1950, prior to which he was sales manager of WBBM, the CBS Radio o&o in Chicago. Livingston takes over the Coast spot on Aug. 1. He'll report to sales v.p. Tom Dawson.

FRED WARING SHOW
With The Pennsylvanians; Frank Simms, announcer
Producer: Waring
Director: Clarence Schimmel
30 Mins.; Mon. thru Thurs., 10 a.m.; Fri., 10-11:30 a.m.
PARTICIPATING
CBS-TV, from Shawnee-on-Delaware, Pa.

Filling in during the next six weeks for the vacationing Garry Moore in this cross-the-board morning segment, Fred Waring, his orch and his glee club have the ingredients of a highly pleasing musical session. Aside from the talent, the setting is standout since the show is originating from the beautiful grounds of the Shawnee Inn & Country Club, near Shawnee-on-the-Delaware where Waring makes his home. Initial show, done alfresco on one of the verandas, made excellent use of the bucolic background.

Although Waring is reportedly prepping some new programming twists for this show, involving nonpro talent from the neighboring musical workshops, the preem stanza only featured Waring's regular troupe. As usual with Waring, the musical fare was melodic and tasteful, with tenor Gordon Goodman getting the solo spotlight on several numbers. The repertory included "Beyond the Blue Horizon," "Unconstant Lover," "Good, Good, Good" and "You're Everything I Love." There was also some chatter with the Shawnee Inn execs which didn't add up to very much.

With the bankrollers of the Garry Moore show also picking up the tab for the Waring show, the stanza was loaded with plugs. Frank Simms came in with the commercials after practically every number. Herm.

ROMPER ROOM SCHOOL
With Connie Sullivan
Director: Phil Beuth
45 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Fri., 8:45 a.m.
Participating
WCDA-TV, Albany

Education and play program for youngsters of three and four has a new teacher in Connie Sullivan —from the Scotia school system— an extension of time from 30 to 45 minutes, and several new sponsors. Miss Sullivan, who works in the studio with six alert, attractive and sometimes noisy youngsters, not only guides them in games, prayer (before eating) and creative effort (via modeling clay, blocks and the like), but also reads a daily story and does the commercials. She is improving in poise and projectability.

An outdoor session, on the station's lawn and with a cow tethered to a fence, brought a welcome change of background and opportunity for nature study, although the kids complained about bugs.

The studio is brightly decorated, if a bit cluttered now, with the added displays of Yankee Super Markets stock. Several toys and gadgets plugged seem to have a "Romper Room" origin. Handling the commercials is no cinch; on one, for a soft drink, an unhibited girl chirped up, "Miss Connie, I once got sick from drinking that." Jaco.

RICHARD LEWELLEN SHOW
With Bill Wolff, Bette Chapel, Johnny Janis, staff orch, others
Producers: Hal Stein and Eli Boraks
Director: Carl Tubbs
60 Mins., Mon.-Fri., 12:30 p.m.
PARTICIPATING
WBKB, Chicago

Onetime Charles Antell pitchman, Richard Lewellen, now has a daily showcasing in the Windy City as host of a quiz and variety mishmash. It's one of those self-conscious, primitive free-wheelers on which everyone seems to be straining for a casual good time, audience and cast alike, and no one appears to succeed. Not the least of the negative factors is the WBKB studio, which looks more like an overcrowded classroom than a television theatre.

Format allows for two giveaway games per show and for two numbers each from the vocalists, Johnny Janis and Bette Chapel. The latter hold up their part in the proceedings well enough. As for the audience doin's, there is a song and photo identification quiz which has the host touring the aisles for the answers and, to climax, a special contest with three participants who are grilled with questions from the daily newspapers. Highest scorer gets a crack at the jackpot question.

By present day standards, the giveaway is anything but generous. Ordinary correct answers are rewarded by sums ranging from $10 in stage money, negotiable after the show for merchandise in the studio. A jackpot of $500 pends for the genius who can answer a stumper worth at least a couple thousand on any of the network quizzers. Biggest winner on show caught (17) made off with $80 worth of gift certificates.

Lewellen, a slow talker and not always a gracious one, weaves it all together with a personality that is sweet and dreary, a kind of hybrid Liberace and Digger O'Dell. But a pitchman he is undeniably. The blurbs bring him to life, and despite the condescending nature of his pitch (the grating references to his sponsors as "the nice folks" and to the audience as "friends," solemnly intoned), he manages to make it indelible. The smoothness of announcer Bill Wolff makes him almost a foil to the star.

The show is now half-sponsored, with Plymouth dealer Hal Opper and Bouchelle Rug Cleaners each underwriting 15-minute segments. Les.

Drop Chester Morris As 'Hotel Cosmo' Lead

Chester Morris has been dropped from the host-narrator part on the upcoming "Hotel Cosmopolitan" CBS-TV soap strip. Web, after viewing the kinnie, initiated substantial changes in the format of the quarter-hour soaper and now isn't sure whether it will use a name actor in the host spot or go along with a lesser-known in a reduced role.

Show is now scheduled to take to the air Aug. 19 or 26 as the replacement for "Valiant Lady" in the noon to 12:15 slot. Show is being produced by Roy Winsor for CBS-TV.

CINCINNATI BASEBALL
With Waite Hoyt, Jack Moran, George Bryson
BURGER BEER, FORD DEALERS, HUDEPOHL BEER
WKRC and WLW-T, Cincinnati
(Midland, J. Walter Thompson, Stockton West Burkhart)

Baseball interest here is highest ever, due to the hectic National League pennant chase with the Cincy Reds in the running and home attendance ahead of last year's alltime record pace. Bargain results for taggers are a reward for their contributions to the buildup.

Burger Beer rates a bow for its 16th consecutive season of sponsorship, with Waite Hoyt the chief miker all the way. Over the stretch Burger has created a radio network of more than 40 stations in Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana and West Virginia. Until last year Burger also was exclusive commercial of telecasts for several reasons. Broadcasts this season are on WKRC, where Hoyt made his local air bow after his great major league pitching career.

For the second year the tv joint sponsors are Hudepohl Beer and Ford Dealers. Sole spieler, George Bryson, a Cincy baseball club staffer, came here last year from the west coast with Mark Scott, who exited. WLW-T originations spread to Crosley and other tv stations in adjoining states.

Hoyt, very popular with listeners through his long service, is with fans on every game of the schedule. Bryson's partial coverage on tv has been stepped up over '56. The growing acquaintance is swelling his rooting section.

As a reliever, Hoyt has Jack Moran, his capable assistant of last year, for third and seventh inning fillins.

PARTICIPATING
WBKB, Chicago

Of five new daytimers which WBKB is unwrapping this summer, this lonelyhearts entry is perhaps the surest to remain when the fall blueprints are drawn. The show is tastefully produced, the advice intelligent, and there's plenty of drama in the mailbag for the hausfrau to bend her imagination to.

Veteran reporter for the local gazettes, Virginia Marmaduke, undertakes her first tv chore as an adviser on personal problems under "pen" name of Ruth Jamison. Not only to cover her identity but to give her a supra-human quality, she's shown only in magnified silhouette, armed with an authoritarian pencil. Miss Marmaduke, if she works as well full face before the cameras as she does in shadow, could well be the local television find of the season. She's articulate, smooth, and clinical but

Alcoa Hour

"Alcoa Hour" departed from its customary straight dramatics Sunday night (21) to try an original musical, "He's for Me." The music was fine, but the musical n.s.h.

Play was the combined effort of Michael Dreyfuss, who did what there was of a book, and Michael Brown, who turned in some pleasant music and occasionally bright lyrics. Dreyfuss' book was a dull, routine affair, with considerable padding of a thin theme about the two boys falling in love with the two girls in the apartment across the hall. The story dragged painfully to a happy conclusion.

But Brown contributed a couple of pleasant if not outstanding love songs (including the "She's for Me" title ditt) and did even better with a couple of novelty numbers like "A Dollar and a Quarter and a Dime" and "They Don't Know What Love Is" (approximate title).

A pleasant and brave cast comprising Jane Kean (a last-minute substitute for Elaine Stritch) and Joan Hovis as the girls and Roddy McDowell and Larry Blyden as the boys gave a spirited performance of the book and music. Trouble was they couldn't make the story move any faster and much of the music was drowned out by the accompaniment.

Director Herb Hirschman got in some nice camera switching on the musical numbers, moving back and forth between the two apartment setups to pick up the singers, but maybe he should have been paying more attention to the audio. He too couldn't do very much to make the story move. Chan.

Ed Sullivan Show

Ernie Kovacs was a much livlier emcee that Ed Sullivan on the show of the latter's name Sunday (21) over CBS-TV. Kovacs added considerably to the proceedings, but there was little spark and no outstanding event on the rest of the layout.

The routining wasn't of the best. For example, after the appearance of the renegade Miss United States, who wanted to be, above all, a dramatic actress, then comes chorus girl Barbara Hall, winner of $64,000 on the show of that name, who achieved her desire to be a dramatic actress in a bit from Noel Coward's "Cavalcade." The kid better not lose her concordance or hang up her dancing shoes yet.

Perhaps the two most pathetic things on the show were Ted Lewis, who blew his lines early in his recitative and never recovered. Tommy Hurricane Jackson came on for a spot of bagpunching and hoofing and didn't qualify in either department.

There were some plus items on this show, concentrated in the early portion. Myron Cohen with several dialect stories came off excellently. Molidors, came in from the Latin Quarter, to do their golliwog turn for good results, and Connee Boswell still impresses as one of the fine singers of the day with her novelty rendition of "Saints Come Marching Home." The puppet background wasn't necessary, but it did provide a change of scenery. Arnold Kirby also scored with his impressions. His ribs of Joe Louis and Pearl Bailey were outstanding.

Kovacs, aside from emceeing brightly, repeated his Nairobi Trio bit and had a very funny interview with Peter Hadley. Jose.

Steve Allen Show

Whether by design or coincidence, the upcoming heavyweight championship fight between incumbent Floyd Patterson and Hurricane Jackson was "previewed" on video Sunday night (21) on the Steve Allen and Ed Sullivan shows. Allen had the champ in his corner while Jackson turned up on the Sullivan stanza. On the Allen show, at least, Allen's interview with Patterson, with ex-champ Joe Louis also sitting in, was an okay plug for the bout, but it was otherwise the same routine stuff except for a brief film clip of Patterson in action in an early fight in his career.

Allen, as so often happens on his shows, furnished most of the top moments. His takeoff on the resort hotel ballyhoo and his burlesques of various quizmasters are the kind of thing Allen does very well and which always add a big lift to his hour. He also contributed a piano solo with orch background for an okay musical interlude.

The guest lineup also acquited itself neatly. Joanne Gilbert scored on her vocal on "Hello, Bluebird," while Hal Leroy again flashed some of his nifty hoofing, both in the tap and soft-shoe grooves. Hollywood actor George Nader joined with Allen in a cute routine about the changing pattern of juve jokes over the generations. Tony Bennett closed the show with a bang. He delivered up with a socko arrangement of "One For My Baby" and then did his current hit, "In The Middle of an Island," complete with a troupe of easy-to-look-at hula dancers from the Hawaiian Room of the N.Y. Hotel Lexington. Herm.

Ed Sullivan in G. E. Back-to-Back Twofer

Hollywood, July 23.

Ed Sullivan will follow himself on television some Sunday night next season as a result of a deal under which he will star in as yet untitled telepic for the "G. E. Theatre" series. Film will be lensed in about two months.

Series telecasts on CBS-TV immediately following the weekly Sullivan variety show.

John Day's Korea Special on Tap

CBS news director John Day is en route back to the U.S. after a q.t. trip to Korea and other parts of the Far East, and is due at his N. Y. headquarters next Tuesday (30). Understood one reason for the trip was to get a news "special" on the Korean situation underway.

Day's been planning a show on Korea for some time, and originally envisioned it as one of the series of specials to be interposed into the "Twentieth Century" show to be sponsored by Prudential next fall. Prudential hasn't yet indicated it wants the Korean show, but Day decided to get moving on the project anyway. Show would cover the arms buildup by the Northern Koreans and the political situation in South Korea, including an analysis of the situation in the event of President Rhee's death.

Day was accompanied on the Korean trip by CBS' new Far East correspondent, ex-Collier's reporter Peter Kalischer, and at least one newsfilm cameraman indicating that some preliminary footage may already have been shot. Another purpose of the trip was to familiarize Kalischer who's taking over the Far East post from Robert Pierrepoint with the setup in Tokyo and elsewhere.

live increase to 37.4%, still a record for the volume of film.)

On a network-by-network basis, ABC will use the heaviest percentage of film, 71.4% of its schedule, and likewise will be least represented by eastern production, the latter accounting for only 14.3% of its total. CBS-TV will be best represented in the East, with 35% of total production (5% of which is represented by two films, the Phil Silvers show and "Harbor Master") but will nonetheless have the second-highest total of film programming with 62.5%. NBC will have the most live programming, 40.4%, but nearly as much of its live schedule will originate from the Coast as from New York. A detailed network-by-network breakdown is provided in the accompanying chart.

While the tabulation is confined to nighttime programming and daytime remains mainly a New York proposition, the Coast is making rapid strides in picking up much of the afternoon stuff as well. NBC, in particular, has thrown an increasing daytime load on its Coast facilities, to the point where over 40% of the web's eight-hour daytime schedule—three and a quarter hours—originates from Hollywood. Only an hour and a half of CBS' lineup comes from the Coast.

kindly, hitting that rare middleground of the personal-impersonal in her advisory role.

Letters—seven of them on segment caught (16)—are fed to her by announcer Fred Kasper, who reads them with earnest sobriety against barely audible organ tones. Problems ranged from the simple boy-girl intrigues to the desperate situation of an unwed mother-to-be, and Miss Marmaduke's counsel, never hackneyed, was sincere and appeared spontaneous. What keeps this show well above the soaper level is its unfailing good taste, the drama soft-pedaled and the emoting always thinner than schmaltz.

Richy Victor's camera work is effective, and Virginia Donahue's script has class. Strength of the show is reflected in one of Miss Marmaduke's woman-to-woman remarks: "If I can help just one girl like you . . . I'd feel my work here was justified." Les.

ubraiding Wallace for a dull ABC show with Sen. Wayne Morse, he got the tv quizmaster to admit it was his own fault, because he failed to "go after abrasion" as he normally does. Wallace contended that sandpapering his guest was the best way to "shed light more clearly on the scene" and "is definitely more interesting, I think."

Wallace reiterated time and time again in the course of the 25-minute radio show that he was out to be the "devil's advocate," playing it down the middle ("we have no right to editorialize on tv," he said) to get at the facts beneath the surface. No question about it, Wallace was articulate, even on the receiving end, and he nicely averted open war in answering re his relationship with John Daly, ABC veep who jettisoned him from appearing on "What's My Line?" which Daly emcees.

Wingate was there with questions about the "sanctimoniousness" of Wallace in the recent Diana Barrymore interview and about how tv sponsor Philip Morris and Wallace might look upon airtime discussion of ciggies and cancer. While one may not always agree with Wallace's answers, he had to be respected for his general openness. Art.

Now that he's got his feet wet in tv, he's got another couple of video projects he's prepping, to follow current "Alcoa-Goodyear" sked. "Possibly also with Four Star, if they're interested." Working in telepix isn't much different than making features, Fellows finds. "It's just like shooting a sequence of a theatrical picture," he sums up. "The greatest thing it's taught me is that you can shoot 13 or 14 pages in a day and still get quality. As for the technicians, there are none better; maybe as good, but not better."

ABC-TV Mulls Sports Show Cross-the-Board

ABC-TV is angling for a regular 7 to 7:15 sports show, to precede John Daly's nightly newscast next fall. While choice of a commentator to do the program is not final, the blueprint for a half-hour of sports-then-news on the network reportedly is.

"Kukla, Fran & Ollie" will go by the boards, to make way for the regular sportscast, after it returns for another five-week run beginning July 29. Gordon Baking will sponsor the puppet stanza on a limited network of New York, Chi and Detroit.

Howard Cosell, presently doing a summertime 7 p.m. sports show on ABC-TV, is one of those being considered for the slot once it becomes a permanent fixture.

Spot Biz Tough, Some Rep Houses Borrowing Coin

Chicago, July 23.

Not that summer is ever a cushy period in the station rep business, a pair of recent network bonanzas is making this a rougher quarter than usual for the spot sellers.

Clearance of the CBS radio network for the $5,500,000 Ford deal knocked out availabilities in prime time for the rep houses, and ABC's television prize of the half-hour late afternoon Kellogg strip took virtually all of the cereal company's $7,000,000 budget out of the spot market. In addition to losing the Kellogg money, the station reps lose availabilities wherever they have ABC biz, as they can't pitch breakfast food clients in the time adjacent Kellogg's. In the Ford deal, which begins Sept. 2, the CBS net is making a wholesale invasion of prime station time with 26 programs amounting four hours and 40 minutes per week.

The reps feel the CBS loss is particularly costly since radio is far more easy for them to sell today than tv. They regard the present season one of the worst in memory for tv spot sales, and it's known that several of the smaller rep houses are borrowing money this summer to stay in business.

Chi WTTW Proves How Educ'l TV Stations Can Earn Their Way

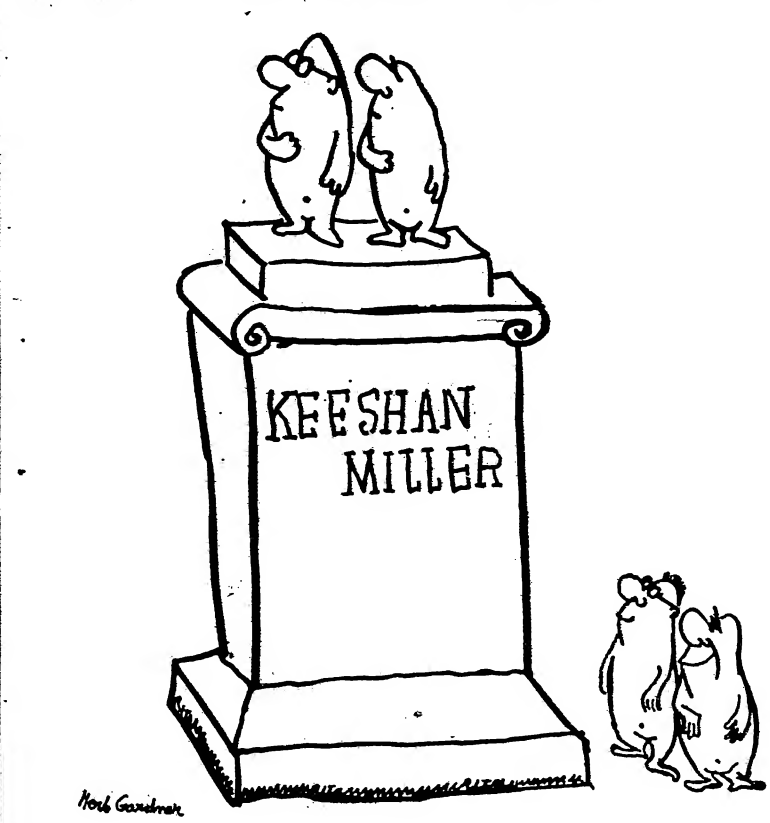
By LES BROWN

Chicago, July 23.

If educational tv continues at its present rate of enterprise, it may soon find itself living in back of the store—but in a comfortable state of self-sufficiency. The gray matter stations, in attempting to earn their own keep, are going into related small businesses in a big way.

Chi's WTTW, setting the example, has at least four sidelines currently and is still projecting new irons to help remove the burden of support from the public pocketbook. Station has found earning power in the sale of kinescope and closed circuit services, in selling its originations to the educational network at Ann Arbor, Mich., and in contracts with educational institutions and industry. Operating only 19 months, the station is now about 40% self sustaining, although it has nearly doubled its original operating budget. WTTW's budget for the new fiscal year is estimated at $723,000, but it is soliciting only $312,000 from the community in the current fund drive. With grants to date totaling almost $200,000, there's only slightly over $100,000 to go.

When Sterling (Red) Quinlan, v.p. of commercial station WBKB here, donated two old kinescoping machines to the educational station, WTTW became the only one of five stations here with kinnie facilities (it had already had a new machine of its own when it started in December 1955). Station has only one competitor hereabouts in the kinnie business, Bry Kinescope Laboratory, and is selling its service via Dick Lewis, formerly of Lewis & Martin Films, at the rate of $7.20 per minute (three minute minimum). Principal customers are ad shops wanting to monitor competitors' blurbs and VIP's who want a copy of their tv appearances.



WTTW's big pitch at present, toward paying its own way, is in providing academic programs at the paying behest of industry. Some of the big industrial plants are incorporating subjects like economics in their company training programs, and with the general scarcity of qualified teachers WTTW is offering to beam the course at a specified hour if the plant will foot the tab for time and costs. The station considers this a potential major area of support, and while it hasn't as yet closed an industrial deal a couple are known to be in the works.

The industrial deals are similar to WTTW's arrangements with the Board of Education, wherein latter pays the station for beaming courses that are accredited by the city's three junior colleges. This fall Channel 11 will offer five courses good for credit towards an Associate of Arts degree at the schools.

Also by fall, the station will have two shows on the educational "network," both of them authorized, paid for and distributed by the Educational Radio & TV Center in Ann Arbor, Mich., a subsidiary of the Ford Foundation's Fund for Adult Education. The cross-country net will get WTTW's series of Bartok's Quartets played by the Chicago-based Fine Arts String Quartet and a sociological series, "Community of the Condemned," narrated by Cook County Sheriff Joseph Lohman, a former college educator. Latter should bring some $50,000 to the station's coffers.

WTTW has received generous help from the four commercial stations here and several large ad agencies. In addition to its kinnie machines, ABC's WBKB also contributed lights, NBC's WNBQ kicked in with a number of sets, CBS' WBBM-TV donated a transmitter, and the indie WGN-TV rents the station its truck. Fairfax Cone, prez of Foote, Cone & Belding, envincing intense interest in educational television from the beginning, has donated writers and artists to help WTTW in its promotional campaigns.

The non-commercial station employs a staff of 50, with additional volunteer help from Northwestern University students who use the station as a training ground. Recently WTTW received permission from the FCC to increase its operating power five-fold, from its present 56,000 watts to 278,000 watts, making its signal comparable to the four commercial stations. That should be accomplished in the fall. The station will then also increase its programing from the original 30 hours per week to a minimum of 50 hours.

scription in New York next year? Celler asked.

"We will start late next year in some parts," he said. He added that wiring will start regardless of baseball contracts.

Have there been discussions with the Yankees? asked Maletz.

"I have had discussions with the Yankees, yes," Fox replied, "and I told them we would be prepared to make an agreement with them whenever they are free to do so." He had told owners of the Giants and Dodgers, he testified, he would contract with them for New York when they are free from sponsored tv commitments.

How many subscribers did he anticipate in New York? he was asked.

Fox replied that there are between 4,500,000 and 5,000,000 tv homes in the New York area. "We figure," he said, "that over a four to five-year period we can reach 85% of the homes.

Rep. Peter W. Rodino (D-N.J.) said his mail indicates opposition to pay tv. People bought sets with the assumption that programs would be free, he added.

Fox replied: "Who had the right to make that guarantee, the set makers? As far as I know, they have nothing to do with producing the tv shows. If they led people to believe they were guaranteeing something they have no control over, I'd say you should bring them in for questioning.

"In Milwaukee, there is no baseball on tv. If I bought my set in New York and then moved to Milwaukee, could I claim I was deprived of free tv. After all, any club owner can decide to stop televising his games. Then the fans have nothing."

But baseball is only one source of pay-tv programs, he emphasized. Skiatron, he said, has made arrangements for "some of the finest cultural attractions," including ballet and opera. Through subscription, he added, opera would become available to many people who cannot afford it now.

"Have you grabbed up 'My Fair Lady?'" Celler asked.

"I wish we had," Fox replied. "But that doesn't mean we won't try."

Zenith's Comments

Zenith Radio Corp. told the FCC yesterday (Mon.) that "the most significant fact" brought out by the initial comments two weeks ago on subscription tv is that the service is inevitable "no matter what action the Commission takes in this proceeding."

In final comments on the agency's request for additional info on the subject of tests, Zenith said the only substantial question now before the agency is "whether subscription tv shall be used to benefit the broadcast industry in its attempts to expand its service and better serve the American public or whether it shall be forfeited through delay to the closed-circuit operators and to the benefits of AT&T and the motion picture exhibitors who are under no legal duty whatsoever to serve the manifold needs of the public."

Only Zenith, among the proponents, filed final comments which the Commission agreed to at the request of the Exhibitors Joint Committee on Toll TV, supported by NARTB.

Exhibitors told the agency the initial comments "clearly establish" that the impact of subscription will transcend the broadcast industry and that the question of authorization should therefore be left to Congress. Commission's finding that it has the authority to permit subscription, said JCTT, is based solely on "ancient and contradictory legislative history."

NBC said it does not believe that the coniments filed by proponents made "a significant addition" to the record. If the Commission was unable to make a decision on authorizing tests when it called for comments, the web asserted, "It is no more possible today to make such a decision."

In additional comments filed yesterday (Mon.), CBS urged immediate dismissal by the FCC of its current proceedings on a trial of toll-tv. Network declared that "no one wants limited trial demonstrations," and also charged that toll-tv proponents have been "vague and unresponsive" in answering questions calling for specific information about their plans.

Network stated that "the concept of trial demonstrations should be abandoned" because "a trial would be wholly meaningless unless it were the equivalent of a general authorization." In terms of length, cost and coverage of the major television markets, any trial would be equivalent to a general authorization, the network declared.

Moreover, "even if a trial which fell short of the effect of full authorization would have significance, the Commission does not have the information which it stated it must have before authorizing a trial," CBS said. None of the proponents gives specific information as to the identity of the stations which would provide pay-tv service, as to the length of time required for a trial, as to terms of sale or lease of decoders or as to programming or program charges, CBS charged. Beyond this, the FCC should first determine "the proper classification of pay television under the Communications Act and the technical standards under which it should operate," web declared.

Cleveland—With WGAR set to do the Cleveland Browns pro football games, Coach Paul Brown will resume his 15-minute weekly analysis. Play-by-play sportscasters will be Bill McColgan and Jim Graner with Ken Coleman and Jimmy Dudley doing the out-of-town telecasts on either WEWS or WJW-TV.

Harris, Upham's Radio Financial News Strip

Harris, Upham brokerage house has placed a 52-week order for a five-minute financial news strip on WCBS, topping one of the busiest sales periods in the station's history. The CBS Radio flagship in N.Y. signed 23 other sponsors to pacts ranging from 52 weeks down to four weeks over the past two weeks.

Financial news strip goes into the 6:40 to 6:45 p.m. strip starting Sept. 9. Albert Frank-Guenther Law was the agency. On its other business, station booked a total of 89 participations, 26 one-minute spots and 21 station breaks per week via the 23 sponsors, with Pall Mall leading the parade with a 52-weeker. Other longtermers include Nabisco, Welch, Maybelline, Pertussin and Pharma-Craft.

'Star & Blurb'

to do it for a couple of grand. Other performers, so high on the Income Tax Bureau's "favorite sons" list, do it for an exchange of free product from the sponsor. Still others, it is reported, are offered so much cash for a one-minute pitch, that it is almost impossible to refuse.

The success of Polly Bergen had a telling if subtle effect on some of the lesser performers who finally broke down and went commercial, temporarily giving up their pure art. Though she was by no means an unknown when she became the Pepsi-Cola tv girl, it is widely felt that getting her face plastered and voice and piped on tv screens from here to East Turtle Switch built her reputation, particularly since the advertisements were considered to be well done.

Of course, advertisers use a you-scratch - my - back - and - my-commercial - will - scratch - yours approach, too. This is a ramification of the Bergen success story. Weede and the cast from "Fella" were reportedly more interested in promoting the show than they were in cash. Weede was said to have told a tradester that now that he's made the White Owl "Most Happy Fella" commercials people recognize him on the street for the first time. Moreover, the blurb, if it hasn't helped the aesthetics, certainly hasn't hurt the boxoffice.

Only Crosby, American Gas and its agency, Lennen & Newell, know why the actor decided to do four commercials, bringing a production team from MPO in New York to Hollywood just for the job, but he could fit into any one of the above mentioned appeals to his intellect, including one not mentioned: a blurb in exchange for his favorite charity.

Houston — Dick Morrison has been named new commercial manager here for KXYZ. He is spending a week in New York City getting acquainted with the station's clients there.

have frequently held off until the last minute in making a choice of shows.

A corollary is agencies rarely ever make a final network program decision unless the sponsor's head office has a big word in the matter, and it's sometimes hard reaching these front offices except with pilot films. , , ,

TPA blueprint is a lot like the one RKO Teleradio salesmen conceived two months ago. RKO, also having weighed the high cost of quality pilots against the certain uncertainty of a sponsor commitment for more than 13-weeks, explained it would do some abbreviated "presentation films" of its own, each added to a group of six full-length scripts and 33 outlines —so that sponsor's will have a clearer idea of how a show will hold up over the long haul.

Difference with TPA is that RKO doesn't seek immediate sponsor specifications before setting to work, but the advertiser can revise or discard any number of the paper programs and thereby have his say as to content.

There have been several other plans to escape making risky pilots, including one by Screen Gems on "George Saunders and the Stars," a filmed anthology, but the only one that has been successful so far was one that eventuated before the recent trend. Don Sharpe sold Procter & Gamble on "Meet McGraw," reportedly on the strength of an idea and a star, Frank Lovejoy. But then agency Benton & Bowles was already sold on using Lovejoy, who had just completed a live summer run as "Man Against Crime" for P&G, in a second detective-type format.

"Lever Variety Show" at 10 on Thursdays; nothing on Friday (but several tint specials), and Perry Como and "Your Hit Parade" Saturdays. Overall, web calculates it will start the new season with 67% more color than at the start of last season.

Meanwhile, RCA Victor today (Wed.) unveils a new "Pict-O-Guide" servicing manual and instruction guide which it believes will mark a major step forward in the servicing and repair of color sets. New simplified servicing technique, RCA feels, will enable independent set repairmen to service color sets as they learned to service black and white in the early days of tv. RCA is demonstrating the new technique at the RCA Exhibition Hall.

Life Mag's Major NBC Radio Spread

Life Magazine, which only a couple of weeks ago signed to coproduce and participate sponsorwise in NBC Radio's new "Life & the World" feature strip, has now gone wholehog in its biggest network radio buy and has purchased one-quarter sponsorship of the network's "News on the Hour." That means Life will get close to 50 commercial exposures a week on the web, since the "News on the Hour" package involves major-minor plugs on half of the 95 weekly five-minute news capsules.

Life will replace Del Monte, which was in for a quarter-sponsorship on a summer-only deal, to plug its new fruit juice line. When the Del Monte pact expires on Aug. 19, Life steps in under a 52-week deal (with the customary cancellation privileges), and continues the web's SRO on the package. Brown & Williamson is in with half of the package, while Bristol-Myers has the other quarter, both having been the original clients with the package when it was launched last January.

Interesting sidelight is that Young & Rubicam, which repped Life in the deal, is also the agency for one of the charter members, Bristol-Myers, with Life in fact picking up what originally had been a B-M portion of the package which was cut back due to budgetary reasons.

ment, to attempt to pressure or intimidate any of you."

In replying to Celler, Chairman Doerfer, with the approval of the full Commission, pointed out that the subscription tv proceedings were initiated more than two years ago and that the actions taken thus far "have not been precipitate, but represent a careful endeavor to examine the questions of law, fact and policy which have been raised, in a manner consistent with the Communications Act." That Act, he reminded Celler, directs the Commission to explore new uses of radio.

Doerfer said the Commission is presently reviewing the initial comments submitted in response to the agency's request for additional info on how tests should be conducted. When these and the final comments which were due yesterday (Mon.) are received, he said, "we will carefully examine the problems involved in a determination of the proper scope of trial demonstrations and the Commission's power under the present law to safeguard the public interest adequately during a trial period."

In view of Doerfer's letter, it now appears that a only a Congressional resolution, either by the House or Senate, would dissuade the Commission from going ahead with tests. Chances of the Celler or similar bills passing this session are virtually nil.

However, it is highly unlikely that the Commission will decide the question of tests before September since the members will be on vacation during August.

GUIDED MISSILE

As every space cadet knows, man today can fly high, wide and handsome. The ceiling's unlimited. Not so with TV shows, though. Often it's hard to get even a good program off the ground without a good push from promotion. Dialmanship is what it's all about. The art of selective televiewing. Once you recognize the importance of Dialmanship, you realize the influence of TV GUIDE. The logic is easy to grasp. TV GUIDE has an impressive hold on the TV household, is right at home with more than 12,000,000 televiewers who'll watch your show*— if you "GUIDE" them! Do so.

Robert Heller To Package a la U.S. For London TV

London, July 23.

After almost three years as its chief management and program consultant, Robert Heller, the former CBS exec in N.Y. has secured a release from his long-term contract with Granada-TV, commercial tv programmers in the north of England, in order to activate his personal company, Kentel Productions, as a packager of live and filmed programs, and consultant to foreign firms engaged in UK telepic production.

The live packaging aspect of Kentel's new activity represents one of the very first major efforts here to establish an independent package producing set-up which parallels the American pattern, lifting part of the creative load off the British tv webs, which heretofore have had to maintain large staffs and costs producing almost all of their own scheduled program output.

First of the live Kentel series are being readied for Fall exposure, and the company is already assisting foreign units making tv film skeins in the UK by setting up their basic organizations here and negotiating their British sales and co-production deals.

Confirmation Of Ford Due This Wk.

Washington, July 23.

Nomination of Frederick Ford as a member of the Federal Communications Commission is expected to be aproved this week by the Senate. Va.) gave testimony in praise of Ford, who is a native of West Virginia.

The Committee will hold another hearing tomorrow (Wed.) to hear Deputy Atty. Gen William P. Rogers who will endorse the appointment. Ford is assistant to Rogers in the Justice Department.

It's expected the Committee will unanimously vote to recommend confirmation of the nomination following Rogers' testimony and that the Senate will act before the end of the week.

v.p. Jerry Danzig already on the Coast lining up guest stars for a variety of shows, even to the point of multiple-show contracts for "Bandstand," "Monitor" and "Nightline." And management has shifted a good part of the network's research efforts over to radio and additionally okayed expenditures for independently-done surveys on audience tastes and needs.

Web's new vote of approval also stems from intangibles, primarily the change from the feeling of hopelessness to confidence. There's not much in the way of expansion in store for personnel and programming, since the web is fully manned and programmed at present. But whereas when management named Culligan to overhaul the network last August in what it considered a do-or-die, last-stand effort, it's now convinced there's more than a good chance for radio to reemerge as a respectable and respected phase of NBC operations.

By fall the show may be cut back to an hour, from 3 to 4, depending on the outcome of ABC-TV's other afternoon program plans. As of the moment, the web is juggling Walt Framer's "Lady Luck" and a daytime version of Don Fedderson's "Do You Trust Your Wife?" the show which recently ended a CBS-TV run with Edgar Bergen as emcee. According to the network, one of them will be used for certain, and if both are kept it has not been decided which will take 4 and which 4.30 on a strip basis.

Okay Ed Lamb's Sale of WTOD

Washington, July 23.

Edward O. Lamb, whose license status was recently cleared by the Federal Communications Commission, was permitted to sell his Toledo radio station, WTOD, last week. Application to transfer the facility, which includes an FM auxiliary, to Booth Radio and TV Stations Inc. for $122,500 had been pending for a long time but could not be acted upon until a decision was issued on the renewal of his tv station, WICU, in Erie, Pa.

Lamb has also applied to sell his radio station, WHOO, in Orlando, Fla. He also has a radio station, WIKK, in Erie.

Purchase of WTOD gives Booth its seventh radio station, the limit allowed by FCC. Company owns four outlets in Michigan (WJLB in Detroit, WBBC in Flint, WSGW in Saginaw and WIBM in Jackson) and two in Indiana (WJVA in South Bend and WIOU in Kokomo).

ROLLAND TAYLOR NAMED FC&B PREXY

Rolland W. Taylor has been named to the presidency of Foote, Cone & Belding, with Fairfax M. Cone moving up to chairman of the executive committee and Robert F. Carney continuing as chairman of the board. Taylor has been vice-chairman of the board and manager of the N. Y. office, and in his new post he'll continue to work out of N. Taylor is a former v.p. of the William Esty agency who joined FC&B in 1947 as an account supervisor, moving to Colgate-Palmolive as v.p. in charge of advertising in 1953 and returning to FC&B in 1956 as a director and exec v.p. in charge of the Gotham office, later that year becoming vice-chairman. NBC Seeks Borge For 'Pied Piper'

Producer Hal Stanley and NBC are looking to sign Victor Borge to play the mayor in their Nov. 26 musical, "The Pied Piper." Already signed for the show are Van Johnson in the lead, Kay Starr for the femme lead and Lori Nelson in a featured spot. Borge's CBS contract is understood to be no obstacle, since it applies only to his one-man show.

Meanwhile, Liggett & Myers, which originally signed for half-sponsorship of the 90-minute filmed color spec, has now decided to go whole-hog and has signed for the full 90 minutes. There's a possibility it may yield half if a suitable cosponsor is found, but if not it's committed for the full route. Exact time of the spec hasn't been set, but it'll either be 7:30 to 9 or 8 to 9:30 on the Tuesday night.

In the event Stanley can't sign Borge, he's considering either Claude Raines or Sir Cedric Hardwicke for the role. Fairy tale was adapted by Stanley, who also collaborated on the lyrics with Irving Taylor to Grieg's "Peer Gynt Suite" music.

Norman Grant Helms NBC-TV Unit Raising Tint Production Standards

NBC-TV has been quietly working to raise the standards of its color production via the operations of a "color quality control" unit which has been in operation the past eight months. The unit, under Norman Grant, director of color productions, works on a dual front, in color program pre-planning and rehearsals, and via an after-the-fact checking-monitoring system.

Operation comprises three key men in New York and the same number on the Coast, with a branch in the process of organization in Chicago. The color control consists of advice on each show in the initial stages of scenic design and costuming, and then in-studio checks on sets, costumes, makeup, lighting and camera and projector setups.

Unit has no specific authority over the producers or directors of the show, or even the technical personnel, and its job is mainly an educational one. It does have some say over the scenic and costuming effects, since the designers report to Grant, but its studio work is mainly advisory. Nonetheless, because the personnel of the color control unit have been working with tint since the beginning, they bear the stamp of authority on all matters tint, and they are listened to.

Nonetheless, Grant says that his unit's job is a tough one for a couple of reasons. One is the feeling by some producers and directors that color gets in the way, that they've got a tough enough time working out the right format, and getting the show on the air each week without worrying about color. The second is those directors who won't recognize color's limitations insofar as lighting is concerned, and who will use all sorts of angle shots which can't be lit properly for tint.

In these cases, Grant feels his position must be that of a diplomat, who slowly must convince the producers and directors of the importance of taking tint into consideration. Next fall, his unit, which until now has been operating mainly with the technical people, will begin to integrate more closely with programming people, and he hopes this will result in more attention to the demands of tint in the creation and staging and formatting of shows.

Key problems in color production, Grant states, are still matters of lighting. Color requires so much light that when a director uses too many angle shots, a great variance in the color picture results. Similarly, when a director wants low-key lighting, a problem arises because of the amount of light needed for the color picture. Grant says these problems can be licked when the director is aware of color's limitations and acts accordingly, and he sees it as his job to educate the directors to these limitations.

Jazz Artists Pacted For 'Crescendo' Spec

Paul Gregory has signed a flock of jazz artists topped by Louis Armstrong for his "Crescendo" kickoff spec for duPont, which Rex Harrison and Ethel Merman will topline. Signed with Armstrong are Dinah Washington, Diahann Carroll, Lizzie Miles and Turk Murphy's dixieland combo.

Harrison will serve as a narrator for the 90-minute special, while Miss Merman heads up the musical comedy section and Armstrong & Co. take over the jazz portion. "Crescendo" is set for Sept. 29 as a CBS-TV Sunday color entry.

Max Factor's Mon. Slot For Mitchell

Time Mondays from 8 to 8.30, bought two weeks ago on ABC-TV by Max Factor, will house Guy Mitchell. The singer's live musical variety show was originally scheduled for a 15-week run on the same network Saturdays at 10, but only eight weeks had been signed for by Revlon, which backed out entirely to make way for the show shift.

Revlon, buying Mitchell, then bought "Walter Winchell File" on ABC-TV, and to accommodate the bankroller the network permitted Revlon to cut back to eight weeks rather than maintain full sponsorship. Since the Winchell buy, there has been frequent talk that Revlon wanted to cancel out on Mitchell completely for budgetary reasons.

Network was in confabs Monday (22) and yesterday on what show to use on Saturday at 10. There was no final decision announced.

Walter Tibbals, new tv veepee of Anderson-McConnell agency, L.A., is currently in N. Y., where he finalized Max Factor deal.

Fort Wayne—Several personnel changes have been announced in Fort Wayne radio and television circles. John Keenan, for the past two years general sales manager for WNEM-TV, Saginaw, Mich., has been named director of sales for WANE-TV. Mr. and Mrs. Douglass Hadley have resigned as program director and continuity director, respectively, of WANE, to join the Don Tipton Advertising Agency, handling radio and television accounts. Both are veterans of radio. Ronald R. Ross has resigned as public service and production director of WOWO, after 10 years, and assumed a new post as general manager of Fort Wayne Television Station WPTA.

BBC Sets Itself Ambitious Goal: Woo People Back to 'Good Music'

London, July 23.

The BBC is joining in the battle to win back the British public to good taste in popular music. Revealing plans for the greatest concentration of dance music the BBC has sponsored on sound radio for more than 10 years, Jim Davidson, assistant head of variety productions, said the basic idea behind the scheme was to broadcast good pop music by topline bands at peak listening hours. This concerted offensive, he hoped, would greatly influence public taste away from rock 'n' roll and the like and back to "good music."

With the support of the BBC, which holds more power over public taste because of its huge potential listening audience, than any other outlet in the UK, British music publishers can now breath a sigh of relief at the knowledge that they have an ally in their bid to boost sheet music sales.

The new pattern of dance music presentation will be introduced on the Light Program during the week commencing Sept. 29. It will cover the range between straight dance music, jazz and skiffle, to oldtime dancing and guitar music. With only one gap on Thursday of each week at lunch time, there will be three regular dance music or jazz sessions every day, Monday to Friday from 1 p.m. to 1.45 p.m., from 6 p.m. to 6.45 p.m. and from 10.40 p.m. onwards. On Monday, Wednesday and Friday, the late night sessions will go on till 11.55 p.m.

Among the bands already scheduled to appear are those of Joe Loss, Geraldo, Eric Delaney, Sid Phillips, Woolf Phillips, Tommy Watt, and Kenny Baker. Almost all the broadcasts are either outside tv transmission hours or at times when tv audiences are at their lowest. Davidson said the reasons for this were obvious.

Negotiations are also on for Orson Welles to star in one or two of the dramatic segments in the Sinatra series. Sinatra show, with William Self producing, goes into production tomorrow at the Goldwyn studios.

NBC's 'True Story' Coin

NBC Radio this week picked up two additional sponsors for "True Story," which switches over from ABC come October under a new five-year deal. All-Sweet Margarine, out of the Swift & Co. plant, and Plough Chemical each signed on for three spots per week.

Earlier, U.S. Steel had inked for a two-week saturation campaign for the end of November for its annual white goods promotion.

No Such Thing As Overexposure If You're Good: Scalpone

Hollywood, July 23.

Price-raising which deprives their clients of "valuable" exposures on tv is "destructive," CBS-TV Coast programming v.p. Al Scalpone told a meeting of the Conference of Personal Managers here. Case in point, Mickey Rooney's renewed career since his appearance on CBS-TV Playhouse 90 "The Comedian," was cited by Scalpone as an example of a "valuable" exposure.

Fear of overexposure on tv is completely unreal and "negative thinking," Scalpone continued. No loss of popularity is evident in such cases as Lucille Ball and Desi Arnaz, Jim Arness, Jack Benny and Jack Webb, despite regular appearances on tv. In some cases, these stars have maintained popularity despite fact in many markets they are competing against reruns of their series as well. "There's only one exposure at a time," Scalpone declared, "and that's the key of CBS thinking today."

In today's entertainment picture, "a young artist with a hit record is a better bet for tv than a nitery act, which may be doing smash business in Las Vegas or N.Y. A hit record reaches millions; word-of-mouth about the nitery act may reach 100,000 people."

Marquee value also applies to tv, and a guest shot by a tv name hypoes a show's rating more than an appearance by other media names. "TV has created its own stars and tv audiences love them. They might do no business in a movie theatre, but conversely, a movie star might do no business on tv," Scalpone observed.

"Hit record artists, however, have a better marquee value than ever before."

The CBS exec closed with a plea for a continued flow of program ideas. Every such submission to CBS receives full attention, he declared.

$1,048,000 TAB FOR BIG 10 TVCASTS

It has been divulged by the U. of Minnesota here that NBC will pay $182,000 for each of the big 10 Conference football games that it'll televise nationally next fall and $80,000 each for the four regional games.

This adds up to a total of $1,048,000 and that'll mean better than $100,000 for Minnesota and each of the other nine schools.

Pitt's Channel 4 Hassle Resolved

Pittsburgh, July 23.

It looks now as if Ch. 4, one of three VHFers allotted to Pittsburgh, will get on the air here before the first of the year via the merger route. One of the five applicants revealed here over the weekend that he has officially agreed to okay a deal that would resolve the long contest for allocation of the grant by FCC.

William Matta, who operates radio station WLOA in nearby Braddock, has agreed to a financial settlement under which he would withdraw from the fight. Two others are believed to be similarly inclined. They are Irwin Community Television, made up of owners and stockholders of WEDO in McKeesport, and Wespen, a group of Pittsburgh and Greensburg businessmen.

The withdrawal of these three principals from the Ch. 4 case would permit the remaining two applicants to work out a jointure by which they would mutually own and operate the channel. They are Television City, Inc., owner of KQV, and WCAE, Inc., the Hearst Corp. which operates WCAE and the Sun-Telegraph newspaper here. It's understood the KQV and Hearst groups are very close to a formal agreement, the only substantial problem remaining being the financial question relating to the ultimate sale of KQV by its ultimate owners. A merger would force the sale of either KQV or WCAE, which is required by law, and since latter is the more profitable station, it's generally expected that KQV will be the one to go.

Ch. 4 is the last unallocated VHF station in the Pittsburgh district. Another local channel, 11, figures to get going by early September. Its original target date was the middle of this month but there have been construction delays. This one also represents a merger—of WWSW, owned by Post-Gazette, morning daily, and WJAS. This agreement was made nearly two years ago (they were the only two remaining applicants after Westinghouse bought WDTV, now KDKA-TV, from DuMont and withdrew from the race) but has been held up until very recently by court fight of WENS, the UHF Ch. 16 here.

Ch. 16 finally pulled out of contention upon the payment of $500,000 by the WWSW-WJAS combine.

BING & SINATRA AS DUO ON EDSEL SPEC

New Edsel auto line out of Ford Motor Co. will tee off with a bang via full sponsorship Oct. 13 of the Bing Crosby-Frank Sinatra spec in behalf of Gonzaga U. in Washington, Crosby's alma mater. It'll be the first major live tv appearance for Crosby as well as the first televised pairing of Crosby and Sinatra.

Show is set for the Ed Sullivan spot, which will be preempted, and will originate from CBS Television City on the Coast. Preemption is a family affair, since the sponsor yielding the spot is Ford's own Mercury division.

Cincinnati — Native Hoosiers have received appointments to four places on the sales staff of WLW-I, Crosley Broadcasting Corp. tv station in Indianapolis scheduled to start operation in mid-September. All of them attended Indiana U before getting into radio and tv in that state. They are Charles D. Linton Jr., formerly of WTTV, Bloomington; Jim Jarvis, ex Indianapolis Broadcasting, Inc., and Ziv Television Programs; Milt Lewis, of WTTV, and Bert Julian, of Chicago and Indiana stations.

How Williamsburg Gets Its TV

Williamsburg, Va., July 23.

You live in Colonial Williamsburg, a carefully restored 18th century town. You want television. But what do you do about the aerials? They didn't have such in the 18th century, and you are not permitted to have them on your rooftop although the nearest station is 30 miles away.

The people of Colonial Williamsburg, one of the historic showplaces of the nation, figured it out to the complete satisfaction of themselves and the purists.

Many of them have tv sets in their homes. As for the aerials, some use rabbit's ears inside the house. Some have elaborate aerials stretched out in their attics. Several have them carefully camouflaged in bushes around back of the house.

At least one family has its aerial stashed away in a replica of an 18th Century smokehouse.

Programs? Stations? There are plenty of those. The latter day Colonial Williamsburgers pull in two stations from Richmond, one from Petersburg, and one from Norfolk.

Carolyn Gilbert In Chi WBBM Exit To Supervise A.G. Talent

Chicago, July 23.

Arthur Godfrey, placing greater stress than ever on the uncovering of new talent, is adding Carolyn Gilbert to his staff as supervisor of talent on all his radio and tv shows. This relieves Janette Davis of her duties in the talent department and enables her to devote full time to producing the Monday night "Talent Scouts" show.

Miss Gilbert resigns from her post as talent supervisor of WBBM and WBBM-TV, the CBS o&o's in Chicago, on Aug. 3 and joins the Godfrey clan on Sept. 1. In the past, she has been music director of "Kukla, Fran and Ollie" on ABC, was one of the originators of (and a participant on) Dave Garroway's early WNBQ show in his Chicago days, and was active in the pre-television years on NBC radio.

WHDH-TV PREPPING FOR PREEM IN HUB

Boston, July 23.

WHDH is a beehive of activity as the transformation of shifting into a tv operation begins. New equipment for Channel 5 is being installed and staffing is beginning.

First to check in at the new operation was Joe Levine, former tv and news editor of the Boston Traveler, who will head the station's news and film departments. Succeeding Levine at the Traveler is Homer Jenks, formerly of Newsweek and UP.

With the new Channel 5 committed as the local outlet for ABC-TV, representation is equally divided and Hub's nine-year-old lack of full network rep now corrected. Channel 4, WBZ-TV, continues with NBC-TV, and Channel 7, WNAC-TV, has CBS-TV.

Channel 9, WMUR-TV, Manchester, N.H., now has ABC-TV, and will continue until the new Channel 5 begins operation.

Jud Kimberg Named 'Lively Arts' Producer

Jud Kimberg has been named a producer on CBS-TV's upcoming "Seven Lively Arts," with Kimberg joining producer Robert Herridge and eight associate producers previously set under exec producer John Houseman on the show.

Kimberg was Houseman's associate producer on several of the latter's Metro films, including "Executive Suite" and "Lust for Life." Previously, he was head of television film production for Campbell-Ewald.

Cooper's Program Slot

New Haven, July 23.

Among numerous changes that have occurred at WNHC-AM, FM, TV since Triangle Publications took over station is recent announcement concerning appointment of Chester R. Cooper as program manager.

Boston—Former Deputy Asst. Secretary of Defense Philip K. Allen of Andover, Mass., was named asst. gen. mgr. for finance of Hub's noncommercial educational stations WGBH-TV and WGBH-FM. Beginning in September, Allen will assist Ralph Lowell, prexy of the WGBH Educational Foundation and trustee of the Lowell Institute, and Hartford N. Gunn Jr., gen. mgr. WGBH, in securing underwriting of the stations operation.

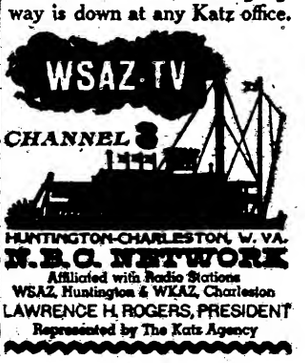
Paul Whiteman TV'er Mulled as ABC Entry

Paul Whiteman is mapping a return to network video which he expects to do out of WFIL-TV, Philadelphia, in the fall, if a deal is made. "Pops Whiteman Presents" was offered to ABC-TV, which has been considering it for a Saturday night slot, from 7:30 to 8:30 or perhaps until 9.

Musical show by Whiteman, associated until a couple of years ago with ABC, will travel once a month to various colleges, rest of the time sticking to Philly. Target is the 16 to 24-year-old age group.

'WAY OUT IN FRONT!

Oldtime steamboat races along our Ohio River Valley were often close, and hazardous to put your money on. Quite different from today's audience race among TV stations. When you put your money on WSAZ-TV, you've picked THE winner. Survey after survey gives the title to this 69-county giant — and the latest Nielsen is no exception. Consider these WSAZ-TV margins over the next-best station:



95,670 more homes per month

99,430 more homes per week

101,130 more daytime homes, weekdays

100,580 more nighttime homes, weekdays

WSAZ-TV steams with comparable popularity across a four-state domain wherein almost $4,000,000,000 buying power awaits advertisers who like to ride with the winner. The gangway is down at any Katz office.

MAJORS CROSS THE TAPE LINE

Mills' Europe-Inspired Book Binge; Also Gets Rights to O'seas Catalogs

Mills Music is entering the book business with publication of three cartoon collections by Punch cartoonist Gerard Hoffnung. Originally published by the Dennis Dobson company in England, the books contain satirical drawings of musicians at work collected under three titles, "The Symphony Orchestra," "The Maestro" and "Music Festival."

Jack Mills, Mills Music prexy, picked up rights to the books on his recent trip to Europe and will market them through regular book channels as well as to music stores. Meantime, Angel Records is prepping fall release of "The Hoffnung Music Festival Concert," subtitled "An Evening of Extravagant Symphonic Caricature," which was presented last year at London's Royal Festival Hall. It comprises offbeat works and weird instrumentation.

Also while overseas, Mills arranged to pick up U.S. publication rights to several old English and European catalogs for the standard and educational market here. Mills stated that numerous important European works in the standard field were awaiting to be dug up and fully exploited in the U.S. market, including 16th and 17th Century compositions.

Among the most important deals Mills made was with the old Paxton Music company of England which contains numerous works suitable for kiddie, band and choral publications. Mills also made a deal with the Otto Kuhl Music Verlag in Germany as well as with the Hans Ghrig firm. In France, Mills arranged with the Enoch & Sons music company to publish a series of songs here. Several similar deals are also in the works with some other French and Italian music companies.

While overseas, Mills also picked up a new song by Hugo Alfven, composer of the click "Swedish Rhapsody." New tune, titled "Swedish Polka," is due for wide disk coverage in the U.S.

Hoffnung, meantime, may come to the U.S. in the fall to present his zany concerts. The Mills book publications would tie in with such a tour, as would the Angel platter.

Roberts' Blues

Veteran lyricist Allen Roberts wrote both the words and music on a new tune for the first time in his career on "Marching Along to the Blues," but he's finding it tough to prove to his friends. On Perry Como's RCA Victor slice of the number, it was credited to someone called "Green." It was a snafu at the diskery.

Leeds Music is publishing.

NAMM Powwow's High Chi Draw In Hi-Fi Lure

Chicago, July 23.

An all-time high in registered attendance was reached by the National Assn. of Music Merchants at the Palmer House here last week. Closing days of the confab brought the total to 8,700.

The elaborate exhibition space this year was virtually monopolized by hi-fi outfits, while television manufacturers, prominent heretofore, were all but absent. Musical instrument manufacturers, still numerically the largest exhibitors, noticed a smaller interest by conventioneers in the exhibits of their industry. Although the attendance at their booths was not as large as previously, sales were quick. The general explanation offered is that standard items like pianos and other band and orchestral instruments do not change much from year to year. These same exhibitors are largely in favor of a biennal affair.

Records and novelty items have not been as widely pushed as previously, but otherwise the Music Merchants' series of seminars, meetings and luncheons have reached the level of smooth functioning where the convention seems to run itself. Amid a period of rising net and gross sales and profits, at least among the larger manufacturers and distributors, discussions during meetings were turned to what was called the narrowing profit margins on the retail end of the business. Small manufacturers showed considerably less optimism than larger concerns over the year's prospects.

Elections returned Paul E. Murphy to the prexy's office and Clay Sheman to the vice-presidency. R. Gregory Durham, head of Lyon & Healy here, was elected treasurer.

Fought 'Lazy' Musicians, Ex-Critic Gets Heave-Ho As Colon Opera Chief

Buenos Aires, July 16.

Ex-critic Jorge D'Urbano has been quietly fired as manager of the Colon Opera House. He's thought a victim to future reconciliation with Musicians Union. Old orchestra was booted by critic on grounds that they were a bunch of prima donnas, too lazy to rehearse, spoiled under Peron and hostile to legitimate discipline. D'Urbano wanted to fire the sloppiest ones but faced a united front.

Time seems to have dimmed memory of the obstreperous tooters' behaviour. An element of national pride entered in that for the July 9 visit of the President of Uruguay there was the embarrassment of presenting the nation's Corps de Ballet with only two pianos.

With the critic-who-dared-try-to-rule given the bounce, another "reorganization" committee for Colon has been appointed. Originally D'Urbano was fully supported by his board.

George G. Ross P.R. Aide To Walter Ross at BMI

George G. Ross, senior script writer at Broadcast Music Inc., has been named press relations assistant to Walter Ross, director of public information. They are not related.

Walter Ross recently took over the public relations spot with the idea of getting BMI's "story" across to the press and public. Meyer (Shap) Shapiro continues as BMI's trade press contact.

WITMARK-TIOMKIN'S 'PARADISE'-PLUS PACT

Dimitri Tiomkin, film music composer, has inked an exclusive pact with Witmark Music, a division of the Warner Bros. Music Publishers Holding Corp.

The first picture score to be covered by the new deal will be Tiomkin's music for "Search For Paradise," Lowell Thomas' new production for Cinerama. Four songs from the score will also be published with lyrics by Ned Washington. Metopera baritone Robert Merrill sings the title song and the three other songs as background for the pic.

Cap's New Phono Line

Hollywood, July 23.

Capitol Records will introduce a new line of HiFi phonographs this week. Line, developed by diskery's recording engineers, includes both portables and consoles.

Retail prices range from $29.95 to $249.95.

CAPITOL ENTERS, COL'S ABOUT TO

Virtually all of the major disk companies will be in the prerecorded tape market this fall. Capitol Records is the latest major to enter this field and Columbia Records is momentarily slated to make the plunge. RCA Victor has been in for a couple of years, while Decca, alone of the "Big Four," is still "watching" developments with no immediate plans in this direction.

Aside from the top labels, over 70 indie companies are already in the field and the catalog of available tapes now runs into the thousands.

Although the tape market is still regarded as being in its infancy, one disk exec stated: 'It has now grown to the point where we can't afford to stay out." He pointed out that disk companies need to develop production experience on quality control, packaging, types of reels, etc., at this point to avoid errors if and when tape catches on in the mass market. Since the raw material, tape, is very costly, production mistakes can add up fast to very high figures.

The development of cartridges has also perked new interest in the tape market. Several companies, including RCA, are prepping easy-to-use tape packages which will eliminate the present inconveni-

Gospel Singing Getting Into The Big Money

Gospel singing, which had a major showcase at the recent Newport, R. I., Jazz Festival, is now being packaged as a big show, similar to the rock 'n' roll layouts, for a national tour of ball parks, arenas and large-capacity auditoriums. "The Big Gospel Cavalcade of '57," headed by Clara Ward & Her Ward Singers, hits the road Aug. 15 for an eight-week jaunt. Willard Alexander Agency is packaging.

Uu to now, the gospel tours usually comprised two or three acts playing churches, open tents and small auditoriums. The "Cavalcade" features more than a half-dozen names and combos. Tour kicks off in Baltimore and will play southern cities for the first two weeks at least.

CARMICHAEL, R&H IN S&S KID SONG BOOKS

Simon & Schuster's Golden Books (for children) is publishing "Hoagy Carmichael's Songs for Children" in October, a $1.95 item for October release, illustrated by J. P. Miller. These originals for modern youngsters range in themes from rocket ships, whales, shooting stars and musical riddles to the junkman's song, grandfather clock and witches.

An A&S Golden Book Giant, at $2.95, due a month earlier comprises 17 songs from R&H musicomedy successes titled "Songs We Sing from Rodgers & Hammerstein," with an introduction by Mary Rodgers, the composer's daughter, arranged for piano by Norman Lloyd, pictures by William Dugan.

Cap's Global Forum

Hollywood, July 23.

Capitol Records holds its initial International Merchandising Forum this week with top recording execs from the diskery world converging here.

Purpose of the conference is to discuss all aspects of Capitol's globular merchandising and sales policies. Reps attending will be greeted by Glenn E. Wallichs, prexy of Cap.

New Union Set Up in Omaha as Rival To AFM; Separating Men From Maestri

Omaha, July 23.

The newly-formed United Musicians and Entertainers Assn. here is preparing to challenge the supremacy of the American Federation of Musicians, business manager Don Cosey claims. The union was organized last May and was incorporated by the State of Nebraska this month.

Cosey said the key policy will be to separate bandleaders from musicians within the same union.

The new union grew out of a protest against policies of Local 70, AFM. Two members, including Cosey, were ousted from the local and 20 others joined the cause.

Cosey said the union has since grown to 109 members. He claimed other locals are organizing in Denver and Los Angeles. Once they recruit enough members they can apply for a local charter from the Omaha association, Cosey declared.

He said he expects the association to grow into a nationwide rival of the AFM. Two other AFL-CIO unionis have already indicated the new union can affiliate with them, he added.

"We don't want to fight the Omaha local but we will if necessary," Cosey told reporters. "And we'll fight Petrillo until he drops."

The chief gripe against AFM policy, he continued, is the national rule that bandleaders are "supervisors" and subject to union membership. That membership, Cosey pointed out, costs a leader 10% of the fee earned by his band during an engagement.

His union, Cosey went on, contends that bandleaders are independent contractors. He said the fee is illegal.

RCA's 2-Speed Phono

Recognition of the disk industry's two-speed setup is being made via a new RCA Victor phono which is geared to play only 45 rpm and 33 rpm platters. Company is marketing five models of the new two-speed machines at prices ranging from $33 to $55.

Most of the automatic phonos now on the market are designed to play three speeds, including the oldstyle 78, while some equipment also is geared to play at 16 rpm, a speed that is used for recording of long books.

Belafonte Riding Wax & P.A.s Into $1,000,000 Circle

By DAVE KAUFMAN

Hollywood, July 23.

Harry Belafonte will gross an estimated $1,000,000 in 1957—by far the best year in the career of the artist whose rise in show biz has been meteoric.

Belafonte grossed around $700,000 last year from his fast-selling albums and single waxings, concerts, personal appearances, and some television.

Singer, currently appearing before SRO audiences at the Greek Theatre, disclosed that thus far this year he has earned $780,000 in signed contract personal appearances and from sales of his albums and singles. His tour, which opened June 5 and ends Sept. 1 and for which he receives guarantee plus percentages as high as 70% in some spots, will bring over $400,000 into the coffers. Total income includes coin from Belafonte's music publishing firm and corporate holdings.

Admitting most of his earnings will go to Uncle Sam with the current income tax structure so high, Belafonte shrugged: "There's nothing wrong with 25% of a million dollars." Actually, his personal income — the net — will be around $150,000 when Uncle Sam gets through, he figures.

Couple of months ago the singer inked a 10-year pact with RCA Victor, a renegotiation of his old contract. Under it RCA guarantees him $100,000 a year over the 10-year span, with royalties being applied to that $1,000,000 overall figure. "If I pass more than a million in royalties over the 10-year period, there is a balloon clause which expands the royalty," he revealed.

Belafonte has earned over $500,000 in royalties since he first signed with RCA about three years ago,

CHAPPELL LONGTERMER WITH VICTOR YOUNG CO.

Chappell Music has made a long-term deal with the Victor Young Music company, founded by the late Hollywood composer-conductor, to handle the latter's publication, exploitation and licensing rights. The Young company, which owns numerous film scores, including the click "Around The World In 80 Days" work, was never set up, personnel-wise, to handle a song catalog on a day-to-day basis. Under the new deal, the Young firm will continue as an entity but, in effect, has given Chappell the rights to handle the business end.

Jacques Biroteau, longtime associate of Young, is continuing in an exec capacity with the Young firm, headquartering on the Coast.

Ella Fitzgerald set for the International Sporting Club show in Monte Carlo, Aug. 4.

Epic in Discount Pitch To Launch Fall Campaign; 27 Distribs at N.Y. Meet

Epic Records, a Columbia Records subsid label, mapped a broad campaign for its fall product at its distrib meeting in New York last week, offering special discounts to dealers and cuffo samplers to consumers on purchases of the company's LPs. National sales chief William Nielsen told the meeting that the fall program was being launched in the wake of Epic's biggest single record month since the company was formed.

Included in the fall sales program are 10 to 15% discounts on new and catalog product for dealers buying 75% of their August quotas. The consumer giveaway will involve a seven-inch LP sampler for every regular Epic LP bought in September. The dealers will get the samplers on the same basis as the consumer.

Also addressing the assemblage of 27 distribs were Arnold Maxin, Epic a&r singles chief; James Foglesong, album a&r topper; Charles Schicke, director of classical repertoire, and Walter Hayum, general merchandise manager who detailed the sales aids that will back up the sampler promotion.

Erroll Garner, Hi-Lo's In Symphony Workouts

Increasingly, symphony orchs are going on a pop and/or jazz kick. Pianist Erroll Garner has been set to play Aug. 15 with the Cleveland Symphony which will be batoned by Mitch Miller, Columbia Records' pop artists & repertoire chief. Garner will perform a group of his own works which were written for a forthcoming Col album, "Other Voices." It's Garner's bow with a symph orch.

Another group due to do their routine with the longhairs is the Hi-Lo's, another Col recording group, which will play with the San Diego Symphony July 30. It's the first time that this symph has used a pop aggregation in one of its concerts.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By HERM SCHOENFELD

Perry Como (RCA Victor): "MARCHING ALONG TO THE BLUES" (Bob Miller*) is an up-tempo marching tempo entry that's due for big returns via this snappy Como workover. "DANCIN'" (Brenner*) is another bright side with good chances.

Sal Mineo (Epic): "LASTIN' LOVE" (Salmin†), a rockabilly ballad with a religioso-romantic peg, gives Sal Mineo a big chance to crack the bestseller lists again. Mineo's thin country pipes are effectively set against a lush choral background. "YOU SHOULDN'T DO THAT" (Salmin†), the uptempo side, also has good chances.

Tommy Edwards (MGM): "WE'RE NOT CHILDREN ANYMORE" (Robert*), a highly melodic ballad but with a juve-styled lyric, gets one of Tommy Edwards' better deliveries and could bring this fine singer back to the forefront. "ANYPLACE, ANYTIME, ANYWHERE" (Skidmore*) is a neat, bouncy entry.

LaVern Baker (Atlantic): "HUMPTY DUMPTY HEART" (Progressive - Pinelawn†), is a charming novelty ballad that could go all the way via this nifty rendition by Miss Baker. "LOVE ME RIGHT" (Progressive-Brookville†) is routine.

Patience & Prudence (Liberty): "YOU TATTLETALE" (Mappa*), a neat swinging ballad with a cute lyric, is done up in this young duo's cool, winning style. It could be a big one. "VERY NICE IS BALI BALI" (Mappa*) is a more offbeat entry, a ballad with an oriental beat.

Charlie Gracie (Cameo): "WANDERIN' EYES" (Lowe-Shapiro-Bernstein*), a strong rockabilly ballad, is sold in the approved style by Charlie Gracie. "I LOVE YOU SO MUCH IT HURTS" (Melody Lane*) is another very commercial side.

The Tune - Weavers (Chess): "HAPPY, HAPPY BIRTHDAY BABY" (Arc†) sounds like the type of rock 'n' roll ballad that can hit with solid impact. The rendition is strictly according to pattern. "OL' MAN RIVER" (Harms*) will survive this interpretation.

Tennessee Ernie Ford (Capitol): "IN THE MIDDLE OF AN ISLAND" (Morris*), a quasi-Hawaiian number, gets another effective slice here and it should be strong competition for Tony Bennett's Columbia version. "IVY LEAGUE" (Snyder*) is a cute piece of material.

Kay Starr (RCA Victor): "MY HEART REMINDS ME" (Symphony House*) a lyric adaptation of the instrumental, "Autumn Concerto," is an excellent class ballad belted effectively by Miss Starr. This number will be around for some time whether or not it's an immediate hit. "FLIM FLAM FLOO" (Starstan†) blends some nursery strains into a fair piece of material. It's from the NBC-TV upcoming production, "The Pied Piper."

Dick Hyman Trio (MGM). "BAND OF ANGELS" (Witmark*), title tune of the Warner pic, has a rich melodic line delineated on this slice by a soprano voice and Dick Hyman's piano. "THE RED HEAD" (Anvil*) is a catching instrumental.

Ivory Joe Hunter (Atlantic): "EVERYTIME I HEAR THAT SONG" (Deslard†), an excellent ballad in the rock 'n' roll groove, is belted to the hilt by blues singer Joe Hunter. "SHE'S GONE" (Progressive*) is an okay bluesy number.

Billy Ward & Dominoes (Federal): "ST. LOUIS BLUES" (Handy*) is another example of a great oldie getting a workover in the rock 'n' roll idiom. Billy Ward effectively exaggerates the blues elements in this blues standard. "ONE MOMENT WITH YOU" (Ward-Marks*) is slow-tempoed ballad pitched up with a very tricky vocal.

Kitty Kallen (Decca): "LONG LONELY NIGHTS" (Arc-G&M*), a far better than average rocking ballad, adds up to a strong bid by Kitty Kallen to get back into the wax race. This version will have competition from Lee Andrews' original version for Chess Records. "LASTING LOVE" (Salmin†) is a good version of the same tune etched by Sal Mineo.

Marty Robbins (Columbia): "TEEN-AGE DREAM" (Acuff-Rose*) is par for the rockabilly type of platters, Marty Robbins' vocal lending whatever extra impact this side may have. "PLEASE DON'T BLAME ME" (Acuff-Rose†) is an equally routine tune.

Jeff Chandler (Liberty): "HALF OF MY HEART" (Columbia Pic*), from the Columbia biopic, "Jeanne Eagels," is a solid romantic ballad delivered by Jeff Chandler in a style that's very reminiscent of Frank Sinatra. "HOLD ME" (Robbins*), the oldie, gets a straight rendition.

Jane Morgan (Kapp): ((FASCINATION" (Southern*), which has come back big via a flock of versions, gets another sweet-styled workout by Miss Morgan, preceded by a long fiddle intro. "MIDNIGHT IN ATHENS" (Garland*) is an instrumental with an exotic flavor projected effectively by the Troubadours, a fiddle combo.

Stan Wilson (Verve): "SWEET ANNABELLE" (Libijont), a pleasing folk-styled number, is sold with a simple, lilting performance by Stan Wilson. "IN THE MIDDLE OF THE ISLAND" (Mayfair*), gets a so-so slice here.

Toni Arden (Decca): "GOOD MORNING, MR. LOVE" (Progressive†) is a bright, offbeat entry with a solid beat which songstress Toni Arden handles with savvy. Could be big for her. "IT TAKES ONLY ONE" (Jungnickel*) is a slow ballad with a good idea.

Roy Milton Orch (King): "ROCKING PNEUMONIA AND BOOGIE WOOGIE FLU" (Ace†) is a rock 'n' roll number that, unfortunately, is not as weird as the title. "SKID ROW" (Jay & Cee†) is an average rocking instrumental.

Gene Vincent (Capitol): "LOTTA LOVIN'" (Song Prod.†) is another one of those rockabilly items in which the performance far overshadows the material. Vincent delivers it with those familliar double-quick vocal quavers. "WEAR MY RING" (Duchess†) is a good slow ballad.

Marty Gold Orch (Vik): "ONE IS A LONELY NUMBER" (Miller*), a pic tune from "LET'S BE HAPPY," is richly produced in this orch and choral arrangement. "ACAPULCO" (Symphony House*) is an arresting Latin-styled instrumental.

Walter Bishop (Web): "GONNA CLIMB TO THE TOP OF A MOUNTAIN" (Jefferson*), a ballad with a light beat, is delivered in okay talk-sing style by composer Walter Bishop against an interesting rhythm background. "DAPPER DAN" (Broadway*), an oldie, is given a similar rendition.

The Vogues (Key) "LEFT-OVER LOVE" (Bel-Air*), a bright rhythm ballad, is sliced energetically by this vocal combo, a sax solo adding the rocking touch. "ALABAMA" (Round Table*) is a fair spelling number.

Randy Starr (Dale): "A DANCE, A KISS AND A PROMISE" (Republict) is a good juve-angled tune slated for plenty of spins via this neat vocal by Randy Starr. "DOUBLE-DATE" (Republict) is another in the same groove with good chances.

Ricky Shaw (Golden Crest): "I'M READING BETWEEN THE LINES" (Gate*) is a solid rocking ballad cut strictly according to style by Ricky Shaw. "TEENAGE MARRIAGE" (Gate*) is routine material.

Album Reviews

Morris Stoloff Orch: "This Is Kim" (Decca). Kim Novak, in the Jeanne Eagels role for the Columbia biopic, is the peg for this excellent musical potpourri of standards played by the Morris Stoloff Columbia Pictures studio orch with Skeets Herfurt's sweet alto sax featured on a flock of tunes. When almost every possible way of packaging this type of medley has been used, this is an original and highly attractive takeoff point, from Miss Novak's photo on the cover to the lush arrangements of the music. Songs include such evergreens as "I Got It Bad and That Ain't Good." "Melancholy Baby," "Sophisticated Lady," "You Go To My Head," among others. There's also a theme song, "This Is Kim," which nicely sets the mood.

Roy Rogers-Dale Evans: "Sweet Hour of Prayer" (RCA Victor). This is a collection of traditional religious songs delivered in straight forward style by Roy Rogers and his wife, Dale Evans, with orch and chorus conducted by Jack Hayes and Paul Mickelson. Songs like "Love Lifted Me," "The Old Rugged Cross," "In The Garden" and others of the same type are appropriately done without commercial gloss. Also in the religioso groove on the Victor label is Stuart Hamblen's rough-hewn, deep-toned delivery of "The Grand Old Hymns." Hamblen himself is a prolific writer of religioso songs, but here sings oldies such as "Old Time Religion," "In The Sweet By and By," "When The Saints Go Marching In" and others.

Keefe Brasselle: "The Modern Minstrel" (RKO Unique). Keefe Brasselle, the latest film actor to make his way into wax, performs in an oldfashioned music hall style and registers with the right kind of special material. In this package, he mildly impresses on the straight standards, such as "I'm Sitting On Top of the World" and "It All Depends On You," but he hits with his broad, energetic workovers of "This Is It For Me," "How Are You Gonna Keep 'Em Down On The Farm" and a medley in which he does takeoffs on Jolson, Durante and Cantor.

"Bill Bell and His Tuba" (Golden Crest). The tuba, one of those instruments which rarely gets a solo role, receives the full spotlight in this set in the hands of a topflight tubist, Bill Bell, who has played with the most of the major symphony orchs in the country. Backed by full orch, Bell gets a remarkable range of sounds out of his instrument on a repertory that goes from pops to longhair. Bell also supplies resonant vocals to some of the numbers, including "When Yuba Plays The Rumba On The Tuba." Another instrument out of the brass band category, the cornet, is showcased on a Decca LP, "Horn of Plenty," featuring solos by James Burke. His technique is flawless in a program of light classical pieces.

"Mexico, Alta Fidelidad" (Vanguard). Recorded in the field by several Mexican folk ensembles, this package is a strikingly colorful collection of authentic south-of-the-border music, vocal and instrumental. The recording quality is fine, but this music has a cultural interest aside from the technical aspects.

Erich Kunz: "Vienna's Favorite Songs" (Angel). Old popular songs from Vienna are revived in excellent style by Erich Kunz, a Continental artist who supplies just the right amount of schmaltz to this repertoire. The vocals evoke the old Vienna mood of romance and sentimentalism even across the barrier of the German lyrics.

Les Berry Orch: "European Excursion" (Urania). The Cook's tour angle has been widely exploited on wax of late and this set also has latched onto the travel theme with 12 different medleys covering various countries of Europe and the British Isles. The instrumentation is bright and the repertory mostly includes semi-classical and folk numbers familiar to wide audiences in the U. S. It's another excellent instrumental wrap-up of the European scene.

Martin Denny Combo: "Exotica" (Liberty). Martin Denny, head of piano-rhythm quartet at the Hawaiian Village in Hawaii, gets an unusual variety of sounds out of his crew and the title of this set doesn't overplay the impact. Denny group goes from bird calls to tom toms in this tastefully done set of offbeat music. It's a sort of jungle mood music album with a swinging beat.

Richard Ellsasser: "Ketelby Favorites" (MGM). The noted longhair organist, Richard Ellsasser, executes a flashing program of lighter pieces, all by the English composer, Albert Ketelby. With the advent of hi-fi, organ music has come into its own and Ellsasser gives depth and color to such numbers as "In A Persian Market," "In A Chinese Temple Garden," "In a Monastery Garden" and other melodic pieces.

Granz's Upbeat Appraisal of Jazz: He Calls It 'A Paper-Money Boom'

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

I was shocked at the lead article with the headline, "Jazz: It's Only A Paper Boom" in the July 3 VARIETY. Let's examine specifically the points raised in it.

1) It's absurd that jazz artists price themselves. Frank Sinatra doesn't price himself; Jascha Heifetz doesn't price himself; Sophia Loren doesn't price herself; Cadillacs don't price themselves. It's simply the law of supply and demand that prices everyone and everything. When I first began presenting major jazz concerts in 1944 it was perfectly true that my salaries were set by bargaining between the artists and myself, and my feeling then, as now, is that the artist should get as much money as possible from the producer; however, I certainly will never pay an artist more than I think he's worth to my show.

As a matter of fact, if anyone should complain about high prices, I should, because it's the entry of newcomers like Don Friedman into the jazz concert field, who, by their bidding, boost the artists' fees. The newcomer sensing a quick buck, must necessarily force prices up—but that, after all, defines competition on any field. [Original story stemmed from Don Friedman's opinion.—Ed.]

2) To say that many jazz tours have fallen by the wayside is a ridiculous generalization, because there aren't that many jazz units making national tours. There are really only two so-called permanent groups, the first and oldest being "Jazz At The Philharmonic," which is my show and on its 18th national tour this September, and the Birdland show, which, I understand, has completed two successful national tours and probably will continue touring next year. There are also the occasional package shows like Ted Heath's of last season, which, strictly speaking, is not even a jazz show, but more of a popular show. I don't know about the Birdland or the Heath shows, but I do know that Jazz At The Philharmonic last year made more money than at any time in its history, and at the same time paid the highest salaries to its artists.

(3) To say that jazz club owners are worse off is to me probably the most pathetic statement. As a matter of fact, more night club owners have turned from one form of entertainment or another to jazz because they know that for the dollar it brings in it's probably the least expensive entertainment; or else they put on the strippers. Again the club owner is not at all concerned about the price of the artist if the artist brings the people in, and if he doesn't then the club owner changes his entertainment—but again the law of supply and demand works efficiently and swiftly.

(4) The fact that Friedman doesn't feel he is able to present new talent is to me proof enough that he needs the big name, and

Debut Records' 20G Suit Vs. RCA, Thaddeus Jones

RCA Victor and bandleader-trumpet player Thaddeus Jones last week were named defendants in a $20,000 damage suit brought in N.Y. Federal Court by Debut Records Inc. Action claims that Jones breached a three-year contract by wrongfully performing for RCA's "Jazz Workshop" under the pseudonym of Bart Valve.

Jones, according to the complaint, was inked to an exclusive Debut pact in 1954. In December, 1955, he allegedly recorded for RCA. Debut charges that it notified RCA of the wrongful waxing but the notice was ignored and the Jones disks were released in February, 1956.

L. I. Plans Second Jazz Fete in '58 Despite This Year's Half-Beat B.O.

The Friends of Jazz Inc., a non-profit outfit which staged the Great South Bay Jazz Festival in Long Island over last weekend, is going ahead with setting up next year's event despite the disappointing attendance at the three-day affair (19-21). About 5,000 attended the festival's five shows or about half the capacity of the circus tent.

The festival's sponsors, who put this year's event together on relatively short notice, believe they can fill up next year with advance planning and promotion. They were encouraged by fete's artistic calibre this year and also by pledges of cooperation from the township of Islip and the various chambers of commerce in the area.

One of the reasons for the poor turnout last weekend was laid to the largest manhunt in Long Island's history for George Larned who was being tracked in nearby wooded area. Many local residents were in no mood for jazz while Larned was in their neighborhood.

Highlight of the festival was the reunion of 23 alumni from the late Fletcher Henderson's orch on Saturday night. This show drew a capacity crowd into the tent. Among the crew members were Don Redman, Coleman Hawkins, Buster-Bailey and J. C. Higginbotham. Gerry Mulligan sat in.

While Epic Records was originally scheduled to tape the performances for LP packages, this label was stymied by the strike of engineers which hit the parent company, Columbia Records. ABC-Paramount is reportedly interested in turning out at least one LP of the festival. The tapes were made by a private outfit.

Nat Hentoff, jazz critic, who handled the commentary and is one of the organizers of the event, said next year's fete would take place at the end of July or beginning of August and would run on successive weekends.

GLORIA PARKER VS. BMI IN NEW 20-MILLION SUIT

Songwriter Gloria Parker filed another suit against Broadcast Music Inc. this week in N.Y. Federal Court, this time for $20,000,000 damages. She charges that BMI has been licensing four of her tunes although she has not been affiliated with BMI for the past few years. The tunes, which she claims "have been played by the thousands of BMI radio licensees," are "My Fair Lady" (no relation to the legit show of the same title), "How Could I," "Never Again" and "Rippling Brook."

Miss Parker was associated with publisher Barney Young in a recent action against RCA, stemming from charges that the company's last stockholder meeting was adjourned before they were permitted to talk. The suit was dismissed in Federal Court. Miss Parker and Young also have other actions going against BMI in charges involving alleged restraint of trade and discriminatory practices.

It's Very Cool for July In Greenwich Village As Jazz Jolts N.Y.'s Bohemia

Although this is July, temperatures in Greenwich Village, N.Y., have been running from cool to cold recently—at least as far as a flock of jazz spots are concerned. The air-conditioned jazz was all over the area last week, except for such traditional dixieland strongholds as Nick's and Eddie Condon's.

At the Village Vanguard last week, the Modern Jazz Quartet and pianist Billy Evans were serving jive on the rocks while nearby, at Cafe Bohemia, there was Miles Davis, a low-pressure trumpeter; and at Basin Street, there was George Shearing, who has preserved his style on ice over the years. Shearing has since given way to pianist Teddy Wilson, who, though from the swing era, never gets into a sweat either.

The Modern Jazz Quartet, one of the most highly rated combos among the jazz cognoscenti, are four guys in three-button Brooks Bros. suits who specialize in "understatement." This is chamber jazz music par excellence, about as far removed from the early ragtime roots as one can get without sounding like the Budapest String Quartet playing a Beethoven opus.

The MJQ, as it is known among the hipsters, are strictly a cerebral foursome with goatees, except for the clean-shaven Milt Jackson on vibes who supplies the instrumental color to the combo's sound. When they want to play pretty, as on an original piece, "We Never Know" (written as background music for a French film of that title), the MJQ is superb in its own quiet way. Occasionally, they might also be suspected of trying to swing a little, but the quartet is careful not to overdo it.

Also on the Village Vanguard bill is Billy Evans, a young pianist who is savvy to all the intricate chords of modern jazz. Herm.

No End to Beguine, Xmas & Easter In 'Yr. of Standards'

For the past 12 months, Cole Porter has been on top of the "standard hit parade," according to the Dr. John G. Peatman survey of standards performed on radio and tv from July 1, 1956 to July 1, 1957 (see chart in this section). In addition to turning up with six of the 35 top standards, a recent Porter song, "True Love," from the Metro film, "High Society," also was No. 1 in the Peatman lineup of most performed current songs for the 12-month period.

In the runner-up spot to Porter in the standard list, Irving Berlin had five songs in the first 35. Porter's standards were "Just One of Those Things," "Begin the Beguine," "From This Moment On," "It's Alright With Me," "I Get a Kick Out of You" and "You Do Something To Me." Berlin's most played standards were "White Christmas," "Easter Parade," "Alexander's Ragtime Band," "Blue Skies" and "God Bless America." Royalties on the latter song are contributed by Berlin to the Boy and Girl Scouts of America.

While Porter and Berlin had the most songs among the top 35 standards, the No. 1 standard was "Tea For Two," the Vincent Youmans-Irving Caesar opus. George Gershwin was represented by two numbers, "It's Wonderful" and "Someone to Watch Over Me," latter with lyric by Ira Gershwin. The old songwriting team of Buddy DeSylva, Lew Brown & Ray Henderson also had two numbers among the top 35 with "Birth of the Blues" and "Come Rain or Come S[illegible]."

Jazz Makes the Grade At K. C. Longhair School In Posh Sunday Bashes

Kansas City, July 23.

Jazz, the pure unadulterated variety, has wormed its way into the staid Conservatory of Music and is getting a very tony showcasing in a series of Sunday evening concerts. The first session had a quintet doing Tal Farlow's "I'll Remember April" and Salisbury's original "George's Blues.'

There was also a vocal stint by Gwin Gray, a Latin number, and an informal session by Betty Miller, pianist, and Milt Abel, on string bass. Then a quintet with four additional horn men did a set of Shorty Rogers' arrangements, and some arrangements originated for the occasion by localites.

Series in the highbrow surroundings is the result of a work on a thesis for a master's degree in history at the U. of Kansas City by Paul Maslansky, trumpet and string bass player here. He is doing a piece about jazz of the 1920's and '30s in Kansas City.

One idea led to another and Maslansky and a drummer friend, Mel Goldblatt, got up the series, with some help from a guitarist friend, Frank Mooney.

Barrett retains rights to all Embee artists and releases and is negotaiting deals with some new talent whom he expects to record here within the next few weeks.

Lilo's 'C'est Magnifique' As Anglo-French Album

Toronto, July 23.

For her first solo album, to be tagged "C'est Manifique" on the MGM label, Lilo (the Marquisa de la Passadiere) will fly to New York from Toronto for the recording (29-30) of French and English songs to be backgrounded by an 18-piece orch. Her arrangers are Nicki Perito and her Parisian lawyer-husband, the marquis.

With Gwen Verdon, Lilo made a previous album of Cole Porter songs from "Can-Can," in which the two were costarred, but the forthcoming "C'est Magnifique" will be the first album soloed by the Parisian singer who is currently in for three weeks at the Royal York Hotel here.

and this applies to the overall million-dollar mark of his new contract. His "Belafonte Sings Calypso" album has sold 1,147,000 copies, and Belafonte remarked: "According to Victor, no single artist has ever before sold a million albums. Shows such as 'My Fair Lady' have, but not a single, they tell me." His "An Evening With Belafonte" and the recently-released "Belafonte" have a combined sale of over 840,000 thus far.

In addition, Belafonte has signed the choir now appearing with him, known as the Belafonte Folk Choir, to an RCA Victor pact and they will cut sides for RCA without Belafonte, although latter will supervise their work. He is also negotiating a tv pact with NBC.

Belafonte Wham $84,500

Hollywood, July 23.

Harry Belafonte set a new Greek Theatre record last week with a walloping $84,500 gross for the first of three sessions at the 4,400-seat ozoner. House is scaled to a $4 top.

Belafonte's production organization is understood to derive approximately $60,000 from the stand under the terms of a reported 70-30 agreement.

Ozoner's all-time record for one week is held by Victor Borge, who grossed $86,400 last year. However, his take was for seven performances against Belafonte's six.

Reactivation in Tenn. For Bob Miller Music

Bob Miller Music, which was bought last year by Lou Levy, head of Leeds Music, is being reactivated in Nashville. Vic McAlpin, former country music promotion manager for Columbia Records, has been named the firm's representative there.

The firm, founded by the late Bob Miller, has an extensive country & western catalog.

Hauser MPA Prexy

Arthur A. Hauser, of Theodore M. Presser Music, was named president of the Music Publishers Assn. at its recent meeting in New York. MPA is the educational and standard music publishers' trade organization.

David S. Adams, of Boosey & Hawkes, the immediate past president, became an MPA veepee. Ben Grassp, of Associated Music Publishers, was reelected treasurer and Irving Brown, of Chappell Music, was elected secretary.

Ella-Satchmo's 'Duo It Again' Verve Album

Ella Fitzgerald and Louis Armstrong, who have a current click album together riding under the Verve label, are pairing on another package this week in Las Vegas where Satchmo is currently playing at the Sands Hotel with Robert Merrill. Norman Granz, Verve diskery chief, is supervising the session.

Armstrong, meantime, is getting the biodisk treatment from Decca Records with release of a five-LP set titled the "Louis Armstrong Biography" in which the jazzman traces his career from New Orleans days with new recordings of his most famous solos. These were sliced last January in a three-week session. Also in the works is a "Satchmo & The Symphony" LP based on his appearance with the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra in London and another package teaming Armstrong with Frank Sinatra.

Satchmo already has more LP time on sale in record shops than any other single jazz artist. Virtually everything he has ever made, beginning with his first disks in the 1920s, is still available on the major labels as well as numerous reissues by smaller indies who have acquired the rights to use the old masters.

Extra Transport Costs May Stymie Brussels For Philadelphia Orchestra

Philadelphia, July 23.

Philadelphia Orchestra's proposed trip to the Brussels Worlds Fair next year and a six-week tour of Eastern European countries are now clouded in a dispute over overlapping schedules. Robin Hood Dell, where most of the members of the Philadelphia Orchestra perform each summer, is scheduled to open June 16 and close July 28. The State Dept. had invited the orchestra to perform in Brussels on the U.S. national holidays, July 2, 3, and 4.

Dell officials refused to postpone the opening of the season until after the July 4th engagement, offering instead a week's intermission at that time to permit the orchestra to return to Europe a second time. The hitch developed as to who would pay the additional $40,000 to $50,000 for the second airplane trip.

State Dept. refused to be responsible for this transportation and a plan by Dell President Frederic R. Mann to raise the money by subscription was given a cool reception by members of the Philadelphia Orchestra Assn.

A plan to have a substitute orchestra fill in at the Dell while Philadelphia Orchestra members performed in Europe brought protests from officials of Local 77, American Federation of Musicians.

Romeo Cella, Local 77 president, said his group would approve a three weeks' delay in the opening. Dell officials have been reluctant on this, pointing out that August is very precarious for weather and the difficulty they would face in obtaining top talent.

Nancy Whiskey Exiting Chas. McDevitt Skifflers

London, July 23.

Nancy Whiskey is quitting the Chas. McDevitt skiffle group. Only recently back from the States where the combo's version of "Freight Train" has registered a hit, Miss Whiskey hopes to make a return U.S. appearance under the Fosters' Agency banner in the fall.

At present the outfit is on a vaude tour, and the songstress has agreed to stay with them on the remaining dates.

Inside Stuff—Music

Although the pop calypso trend has long since faded, the Trinidaddians still feel that the idiom will hold its own in the U.S. if an "authentic dance" could be introduced. Patrick S. Castagne, a Trinidad calypso expert, has put out a folder with calypso steps and songs which Leeds Music published in its book "Calypso Is Like So," and which will be reproduced in the revised edition of "Land of Calypso," by Charles S. Espinet and Harry Pitts. A flock of Trinidad calypso experts are due to come to the U.S. in the fall with the hope of reviving interest in that musical idiom.

Edward James Silvers Jr., 29, of the Fats Domino band, was given a six months' suspended sentence and a $250 fine last week at Eugene, Ore., after pleading guilty to illegal possession of narcotic drugs. The rock 'n' roller was arrested July 10 after a deputy sheriff said he had purchased some marijuana cigarettes from him with marked money. The sheriff was in plainclothes. A charge of selling narcotics is still pending against Silvers, but he was permitted to rejoin the Domino band in Seattle. The outfit had played in Portland and Eugene prior to the arrest.

Eddie Cantor waxed a nostalgic album of 14 numbers for a Vik album due this fall, under Henri Rene's baton, titled "The Best of Eddie Cantor." While this treats with his trademark songs, a followup album, due a month later, titled "Not For Children," has another connotation. This LP would be a reprise of the pop hits of the 1920s, meaning that anybody this side of the teenage set would not have the nostalgic recall of this batch of tunes.

One of the prime motives for sponsorship of "Miss America" contestants is to beat the drums for some one or some thing—so "Miss Nebraska" carried the idea one logical step further over the weekend on the Coast. Third runner-up in the contest, Carolyn McGirr inked a deal with batoneer Manny Harmon to work as a drummer in his orch. She'll make her debut July 28 at the Palladium for the Arthur Murray Gold Medal Ball.

The Japanese are getting into the jazz festival act via a tieup between Don Friedman, producer of the N.Y. Jazz Festival at Randall's Island, Aug. 23-24, and Ricon cameras, a Japanese product. They're co-sponsoring a nationwide contest for the best photo on a jazz theme. Cameras and jazz albums are among the contest giveaways.

Radio Musician Seeks 12G for 'Hickok' Reuse

Los Angeles, July 23.

Superior Court confirmation of a $12,636 arbitration award for radio reuse of music on a transcribed show was sought by musician Richard D. Aurandt in an action brought against David Hyre and David Hyre Productions. Suit is based on services Aurandt performed for the "Wild Bill Hickok" series on Mutual.

In his petition, Aurandt claims he performed on 274 half-hour "Hickok" shows between 1952 and 1954. In 1955, discovering the shows were being repeated, he filed a claim with the Musicians Union for repeat coin due under his contract. Union allowed him $12,616 in an arbitration settlement but, the complaint states, he has not yet collected.

Cooper Rides Anchor

Jerry Cooper, veteran singer who has been doing some tv shots recently, is coming back into the wax picture via a deal with Anchor Records.

His first coupling will be "Music Sets Me Free" and "Lucky," the latter introduced by Cooper about 10 years ago.

Germany's Pfennig-Wise Songsmith; Gietz Drew Big 125G for '56 Output

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt, July 23.

Thirty-three-year-old Heinz Gietz, who's probably top composer of musicals and hit records in Germany, raked in 500,000 German marks ($125,000) last year—but it took the scoring of five musicals and half a dozen hit records to do it. He expects to up his income to 800,000 marks ($200,000) this year.

With four pfennigs (1 cent) generally paid to the composer for every platter sold, the German record industry figures that any platter which sells over 200,000 copies rates as a "best seller" in Germany—and Gietz had half a dozen in that category during last year, mainly hit tunes from films.

Composing all the music for a musical film generally draws a fee of about 15,000 German marks ($3,750), and one good record from a film can bring in more revenue than that.

The young composer, who's done 11 musicals in the last three years, has writen all the music for the Caterina Valente films—and she's No. 1 popular German female singing star—plus which he's scored the recent films starring Peter Alexander, top German male singer.

His biggest record sellers last year were "Dreamboat of Love," the Caterina Valente tune from her film "Bonjour Kathrin," which sold 900,000 copies on the Polydor label, plus several thousand additional platters on other labels.

Other hits he did last year were "Smokey" and "Oklahoma Town," neither one from musicals. The two, which were back to back, sold over 1,000,000 copies bringing him eight pfennigs per platter.

Top Italo Seller

"Come With Me to Italy," another song from "Bonjour Kathrin," sold over 200,000 copies, and another eight pfennig duo that sold 500,000 was "I Know What Pleases You," backed by "Haven of Our Dreams."

Over 18,000,000 platters of Gietz songs have sold in Germany in the last four years, and last year his tune, "Oho Aha," was the No. 1 record in Italy as well.

Only a few of the Gietz songs have gone to the States—Paul Francis Webster did the American lyrics for "Believe in Love," from "Bonjour Kathrin," and Victor, Decca and Mercury pressed it.

"Americans have so many big towns that a musical trend can sweep the country rapidly," Gietz believes. "Here, we're a country of small towns, and people aren't exposed to the new music so much. With government-controlled radio and tv, there is less competition to induce something different—since the government prefers to emphasize culture to playing popular records. Disk jockeys are relatively unknown here, and songpluggers are totally unknown.

"So we don't find the rapid switches from rock and roll to calypso, for instance. People still like the old romantic songs, schmaltz. A record has a longer popularity run here than in the States, though, for it isn't overexposed.

"If you could record an old Italian love song with an underlying mambo beat, you'd have a sure sale in Germany. Every person dreams of making a trip to Italy, and they've heard enough about the mambo to want a modified version of it.

"Neckermann is the 'Sam Goody' discount house of Germany—he does a cover job on any popular tune, using an unknown artist, and sells thousands of platters for 2.85 German marks (about 71c.) instead of the standard four marks ($1) per disk."

Jazz Finally Hits For Central Park With $4,500 Bow

After a series of disappointing boxoffice attractions, "Theatre Under the Stars" at New York's Central Park Wollman Memorial Theatre, has found a commercial formula in jazz. Gross for the opening show Monday night (22) totaled around $4,500, the biggest take for any night at the theatre to date. Attendance was 2,500 at a $3 top. Performers included Billie Holiday, Erroll Garner, the George Shearing combo, Lester Young, Joe Jones, Miles Davis, Sonny Stitt. Gerry Mulligan, also booked, could not make opening night.

Previous attractions at the al fresco showcase were a ballet show; the operetta, "Rosalie," and, just prior to the current jazz layout, "The Cotton Club Revue." Monte Kay and Pete Kameron are producing the jazz show for the Central Park operation which is running under the Michael P. Grace and Chris F. Anderson banner.

MGM Records Pacts 4

MGM Records has bolstered its talent roster with four new signings. Pacted were singers Wilhelmina Gray, Don Hudson and Donn Reynolds and the Guy LaSalle orch.

The LaSalle orch has several albums in the works in addition to a new single, "By The Bend of the River" and "Pinwheel," just released.

Eddie Lane orch returns to the Hotel Roosevelt, N. Y., Grill when it reopens Aug. 1 after a two-week shutdown for renovations.

Domino's 104G In 30 Coast Stands

San Francisco, July 23.

Fats Domino, rock 'n' roll artist, grossed $104,000 in 30 days for Oakland promoter Mannie Schwartz on a tour that concluded last week.

Domino was the only attraction on the string of dates which began in Bakersfield, Calif., June 17 and stretched as far north as Vancouver, Wash. No concerts were played, only dances, and despite the publicity given melees at rock 'n' roll affairs, promoter Schwartz claims there was not one incident during the whole tour. "It could have been a Sunday school group," he said.

Domino got a guarantee of $1,000 against 50% for every night of the week. "We only failed to go into percentage on three nights," Schwartz said. For his end, Domino received $46,405, Schwartz said.

The biggest night was June 22, a Saturday, at the Civic Auditorium in Sacramento. Domino grossed $8,175 for the biggest take at that hall for a dance since 1944. In Fresno, he also broke the house record for a dance gross, clocking $7,725 on the previous Friday night.

Smallest house on the entire tour was Salem, Ore., where Domino only took in $1,400. At Coquille, Ore., population 4,000, Domino drew $3,387 in a midweek date. In Tulare, Calif., on a Tuesday night he drew $3,450 and on a Monday at Anderson, a whistle stop in northern California, $2,394.

'Outside' Riot in Dallas

Dallas, July 23.

Bloody knife fights and gunfire erupted from a mass of 6,000 Negro and white rock 'n' roll fans outside the Sportatorium here following a show headlining Fats Domino. Six persons, including a young woman, were stabbed or beaten.

The fights were not in the auditorium but outside following the show when the crowds were on their way to the parking lots to their cars or making for home.

Police late in the week are still trying to untangle the confused chain of events.

with from-rags-to-riches routine. Two years ago Johnny Jordaan was a $17 a week singer in the neighborhood cafe. He won a contest, and now is one of Holland's most popular singers, who is building up a market in Belgium and Germany and now aims to conquer America as well.

Jordaan is a pseudonym from Jordaan area in the heart of old Amsterdam. He's recorded 20 songs, which sold around 1,500,000. Of one of his hits, "Bij Ons In De Jordaan" (With Us In The Jordaan) German and English (Capitol Records) versions has been made, under the titles "Komm Mit Nach Amsterdam" and "It's Great To Be In Love." as Johnny Jordaan only speaks Dutch his text is written in phonetics.

Shelly Secunda, son of Sholom Secunda, who wrote the music to the 1930s hit, "Bei Mir Bist Du Schoen," is following in his father's footsteps as a songwriter. He's had his first song, "To Whom It May Concern," cut by the Morrison Sisters for Decca. Latter label also had the "Bei Mir" hit in 1937 with the Andrews Sisters. The song, originally written for the Yiddish theatre, was around about 15 years before it became a hit. Both father and son are ASCAP members.

Cadence Records will be sitting on the fence in the rating battle between Ed Sullivan (CBS-TV) and Steve Allen (NBC-TV) Aug. 4. Label has artists on both shows that night. Sullivan's tapped Cadence's Everly Bros. ("Bye, Bye Love") and Kirby Stone ("S-S-S'Wonderful") while Allen is riding with label's Andy Williams ("I Like Your Kind of Love").

Although George Shearing exited MGM Records for the Capitol label about two years ago, MGM is still turning out large quantities of Shearing disks. Currently, MGM has issued a series of seven EP platters on the jazz pianist, topping Capitol's Shearing releases in both albums and singles for the last couple of years.

"Green Grow the Lilacs" was taken back to Mexico by soldiers released from U. S. jails after the war of 1846-7 (which won U. S. California and New Mexico), according to Max Ferguson on Canadian Broadcasting Corp.'s "Rawhide Show." They sang it as "Gringo the Lilacs," and from that sprang the term "Gringo" for Americans. Ferguson, who intersperses his comedy shows with unusual music, played disk of it by Robert Wagner Chorale.

Band Review

JOE REICHMAN ORCH (8)
Hotel Muehlebach, Kansas City

The Terrace Grill of Hotel Muehlebach has brought in Joe Reichman and his orch for the third straight summer, making an eight-week stand. This means emphasis will be on music for dancing, and floorshows will be of a lighter calibre for this period.

The essence of this session, of course, will be the Reichman piano fingerings, established over a couple of decades and now reknowed to dancers in these parts. They turned out in goodly numbers for the opening, and biz bids to be perky right through the hot weather.

The piano work is rounded out by a crew of seven including trumpet, trombone, a pair of reeds, string bass, drums and a second piano. There is much featuring of solo work by Vaughan St. Clair on trumpet and Charles McCamish on trombone, in keeping with the Reichman view that it is the melody that counts and the customers' requests that are paramount. The book is largely standards and current pops on the melodious side, plus a string of Latins to vary the dancing.

Reichman has long been a favorite here, and the deluxe downstairs dinner-dancing room should be well frequented for his tenure. That also means heavy traffic on the dance floor, and the trend was in full swing at opening. They come as much to hear the Reichman pianistics as to dance to the rhythms, and the maestro obliges with plenty of variations and fancy work.

During the Reichman engagement the floorshow has been trimmed to a single act, for this fortnight the turn being the DeMatiazzis, novelty turn. Reichman leads off the show with a melodious rendition of "Around the World," and then brings on DeMatiazzi, who introduces his duo of dancing "dolls." What appears to be a pair of mannequins dancing around to his directions turns out to be his femme partner in a trick costume as a frivolous ballroom pair. It's a distinct novelty and good, but too brief to carry the show in this room. Quin.

Tunesmiths Gladys Shelley and Jacques Belasco have cleffed 10 songs for the Xavier Cugat-Abbe Lane filmusical, "Cafe de la Musique," which starts rolling in Madrid Oct. 1.

ences involved in threading tapes onto the machines.

Another factor promoting tape is stereophonic sound. Stereo, which uses a double-channel setup that adds new dimensions to mechanical sound, is regarded as "here to stay" since it is the most important development in the field of recorded sound since the introduction of the slow speeds, 33 and 45 rpm, almost 10 years ago. Although stereo disks have been made, the future of the stereo field is seen as tape.

Currently, the high prices, especially for the sterco tapes, are a limitin factor. The sterco tapes for a full-length symphony, for instance, usually start at about $10 and go upwards to $16 to $17. Full-length operatic recordings would run over $20, as against about half of that for the same music on disks.

Capitol entered this tape market this week with 13 stereo packages, priced from $9.95 to $16.95. In addition to 11 straight musical reels, the release also includes "A Study in Stereo," a showcase of the medium's sound range; and "Intro to Stereo," an explanatory excusion through this hi-fi realm.

Capitol, along with Angel Records, both of which are part of the British Electric & Musical Industries (EMI) combine, are in line to handle a large stereo catalog available through the British EMI label, His Master's Voice (HMV). Latter label was persuaded to make stereo tapes a couple of years ago by RCA Victor when those two labels were still affiliated.

therefore why shouldn't the big name ask for as much money as he can get? Does Friedman expect to present a concert at Randall's Island, for example, and gross the huge figures that I read in VARIETY and not give the artist the proper share? Or, as he says, putting a concert on at Carnegie Hall costs between $3,500 and $4,500. Well, isn't this the same for the classical promoter putting on a Heifetz or a Rubinstein or a ballet—or for that matter isn't it the same for anyone putting on anything? Incidentally, I find with "Jazz At The Philharmonic" that it is perfectly simple and possible to present new talent in an admixture with established talent.

(5) I must, as a record manufacturer who is also a concert promoter, take a dim view of the conclusions that album sales hurt concert grosses rather than help them. If anything, the record album together with the disk jockey presentation of that album excites people and creates new markets for the visual appearance of that artist.

(6) I can only say that if Friedman accuses the jazz musicians of lacking professional savvy, I'm afraid the same thing must be said for some jazz promoters. It's not true that you can't get them to rehearse, because I know I can get my jazz musicians to rehearse at any time I want them to, and, by the way, Friedman uses many of these same people. It's also very simple to keep friends and relatives from coming backstage and from disrupting the performance, as he puts it. To accuse the jazz artists of being a bunch of prima donnas doesn't evidence professional savvy. I can't think of any first-rate artist in any art form who isn't, if you like, a "prima donna." Mario Lanza has that reputation, and I can think of thousands of promoters, especially myself, who would love to present Lanza in anything he chooses to do.

I read that Maria Callas throws a tantrum and this makes her increasingly the darling of all the promoters and doesn't in any way impede her performance. The same can be said of literally any other art form and artists. In 15 years of putting on jazz concerts with artists of different stature and different salaries, I have yet to have one of them ask me how he was being billed, whom he followed, and whom he played with. Ella Fitzgerald, for example, whom I suppose can be called the star of "Jazz At The Philharmonic," has never gotten any bigger billing than her accompanist, much less bigger billing than the other soloists.

Peerce's 'Lucia' Record

Metopera tenor Jan Peerce is sailing for Rome this week to star in a full-length waxing of Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammermoor," opposite Roberta Peters, for RCA Victor.

He's due to return to the U.S. Aug. 16, and on Aug. 20 he opens a four-week stand at the Desert Inn in Las Vegas.

Jimmy Ricks to Decca

Jimmy Ricks, formerly lead voice of the Ravens, has joined the Decca talent roster.

Gene Goodman, head of the Arc. and Harmon music firms, is managing Ricks, who has been working recently as a solo.

Talent Talking Back to TV; Seek Shorter 'Exclusivity' in Vaudeo Rise

By JOE COHEN

Variety talent is set to have one of the biggest tv seasons in years. With summer vaudeo at a peak and with fall prospects looming big, talent agencies expect that the cafe acts working the variety shows will be getting considerably more loot.

The percenters indicate that with the increased number of shows set for the fall, clearance will have to be decreased from the present three weeks between each show to no more than two weeks, if the rise isn't to be too drastic. Under present operating conditions, the agencies accede to a protection clause guaranteeing the top-rated vaude-varieties that the artist will not appear on another network show for a three-week period in front of the contracted display, and for eight days afterward. Thus, under present conditions, an act can be limited to one major show monthly. However, that's if the act gets the highwest possible price in the field.

Supply and Demand

The agencies point out that with the limited supply of acts and the increased number of shows, the one-month clearances will be impossible unless the price of talent goes up drastically. The talent sellers are talking about a two-week period in front of the show, with some diminishing of the eight-day hiatus following a network airing. Frequently, top-rate vidshows have voluntarily permitted shorter periods before and after the shows, but only when some concession is made either in price or a repeat date at similar coin.

Agencies frequently have to make the choice of whether to sell an act to one show with a heavy budget but with maximum clearance, or to several small shows at lesser coin but with smaller clearances. Frequently, a turn can make more on the latter, but that has to be weighed against the prestige angle. However, in the fall with the number of effective guests dwindling instead of growing, prices will be higher, but the percenters are determined to cut down the time of waiting periods between shows in return for only a comparatively moderate rise.

One of the reasons lies in the fact that in New York, for example, the nitery talent wars are attracting a lot of names to the area. The date-diggers hope to gain additional coin via vid-dates for the talent, and thus shorter clearance is necessary.

Currently, a show like "The Big Beat" uses seven singers on a single half-hour airing. Ed Sullivan and Steve Allen still require guests. Julius LaRosa and Vic Damone shows are also keeping the agencies hopping.

More Vaudeo

However, in the fall, the tentative lineup calls for a considerably higher total of vaudeo dates. NBC-TV for example, will have Allen, Dinah Shore, the Chevy show, George Gobel & Eddie Fisher, Tennessee Ernie Ford, Perry Como, Dean Martin, Gisele MacKenzie, in addition to its spec schedule. CBS will have Ed Sullivan, "The Big Record" and "Shower of Stars," while ABC-TV, which is going all-out on the number of new vaude shows, will have, among others, "Top Tunes and New Faces," Pat Boone, Frank Sinatra, and Guy Mitchell.

It's a heavy lineup and the talent agencies will be hard put to supply a sufficient number of names to meet all requirements. The only way that they can hold down the price of acts for video is to permit them more playdates.

Pennsy's Cattle Expo With Rodeo Attached

For the first time in its history, Pennsylvaina will have an international open livestock exposition to be held Nov. 12-16 at the Pennsylvania Farms Show Building, Johnstown. A rodeo to be produced by Tommy Steiner has been signed for the event.

State of Pennsylvania has provided $50,000 toward exposition premiums through its Dept. of Agriculture.

Babbitt's Cafe Break-In

Los Angeles, July 23.

Harry Babbitt, a CBS Radio personality on the Coast for the last few years, has been set for a three-week stand at the Statler here, opening Aug. 8, as his initial date on a nitery trek. He broke his act in over the weekend at Hesperia Inn.

Babbitt, formerly a featured vocalist with Kay Kyser, expects to swing east for a series of cafe dates. During his absence, his CBS show will be on tape made in advance.

J. Ray's $400,000 Around the World From Here to Dec.

Johnnie Ray's time for the rest of the year is virtually all spoken for. Ray, who planed out to England on Monday (22), has approximately $400,000 worth of work until the end of the year, which will take him half-way around the world.

Ray has been signed for a tv spec in London for Val Parnell, July 25. Three days later he opens in Blackpool. He'e also set for a concert in Rome July 31 with other dates in Italy until Aug. 10. After that he'll work a series of concerts in Germany along with some tele appearances. On Aug. 16, he does a gala at the Sporting Club, Monte Carlo, thence to Ostend for another gala, and back to England for a swing of dates before planing back to the U. S. Aug. 25 in time to play the Michigan State Fair, Detroit, Aug. 30, and Kentucky State Fair, Sept. 9. Then a swing around the Tivoli circuit in Australia. On his way back he'll stop off at Honolulu, and back to the U. S. for a two-weeker at the Cocoanut Grove, Los Angeles, Sept. 25.

The singer will have two dates on the Ed Sullivan tv show which will emanate from the Coast during that period. Included also in his itinerary will be a four-weeker at the Desert Inn, Las Vegas; El Morocco, Montreal; Latin Casino, Philadelphia, to be followed by five weeks at the Town & Country Club, Brooklyn, Dec. 3.

BELAFONTE SANS PIC AT MPLS. RADIO CITY

Minneapolis, July 23.

"An Evening With Harry Belafonte" has been booked into United Paramount's flagship 4,100-seat Radio City Theatre here for three nights and a matinee, Aug. 15-17, without any film.

The no-pic engagement will be similar to that of the two nights and a matinee recently played at the same house by Victor Borge. For the three performances Borge grossed a whammo $32,000 at $5 top, the scale also prevailing for Belafonte.

Injured Mary Sawyer Wins $15,500 From R.R.

Boston, July 23.

Mary Sawyer of nearby Westboro, Mass., nitery singer who was injured in a train crash as she was on her way to New York for a date three years ago, won a $15,500 settlement from the New Haven Railroad, it was revealed here Friday (19).

Her train collided with a tank car at Putnam, Conn., on July 12, 1954. She suffered a skull concussion, severe shock and facial cuts.

Lou Walters Serves AGVA With Lien to Bar Return Of 5G Bond to Matsoukas

The tangled affairs of the Oklahoma Semicentennial Exposition, held a couple of weeks ago in Oklahoma City, hit another phase.

Lou Walters Enterprises, which produced the show, served the American Guild of Variety Artists with a lien holding up return of a $5,000 check deposited with the union by Nick John Matsoukas, who was in charge of the shows and who hired Lou Walters to produce the layouts.

Money was originally deposited with the union by Matsoukas to cover certain salaries, which were paid by expo officials. Walters sent over additional coin to cover other salaries when the expo held out $10,000 of Walters' coin to cover ASCAP payments plus some other claims that might arise following the pullout of the show. Walters contends that it's the responsibility of the house to pay ASCAP.

Meanwhile, Walters states that since he holds a contract with Matsoukas which guarantees payment, he made a bid for the AGVA bond.

OTTAWA-HULL AREA'S 'BOOM OF CENTURY'

Ottawa, July 23.

The Ottawa-Hull area is currently enjoying its biggest show biz boom of the century, with seven spots using shows and at least five more with dancing in the class category. Niteries include the Gatineau, Chaudiere and Fairmount clubs, the Circus Lounge of the Ottawa House (an intimate room featuring jazz artists), and the Interprovincial Hotel, all on the Quebec side of the Ottawa River. In the capital itself, the Auditorium and the Coliseum play units regularly, most recent being the Hank Snow Show, booked into the Coliseum by CFRA, local indie radio station.

Danceries include the Chateau Laurier Hotel's Canadian Grill, Standishall Hotel, Glenlea club and the St. Louis Hotel, with lounge groups in Standishall and Chez Henri.

Rocky Marciano on Bill At Chi's Italo Festival

Chicago, July 23.

Rocky Marciano, The Vagabonds, and Carl Ravazza are toplining the Italian Festival at Maywood Park which begins tonight (Wed.) through Aug 4.

Others on the bill are Billy Falbo, Nicki & Noel, DiMara Sisters, Tanya & Biagi, Lenore Sutton Dancers and Henry Brandon orch.

Vegas-by-the-C-Note, Or Wildwood's Record $24,000,000 in Bank Deposits

By CHARLES V. MATHIS

Wildwood, N.J., July 23.

Recognition of this resort as the Vegas-by-the-Sea (coined by VARIETY), sans wheels of misfortune, continues apace. Editorial recognition has been given by such syndicated columnists as Walter Winchell, Danton Walker and Burt Boyar. Boyar, columnist with the Morning Telegraph, devoted several paragraphs to the new development of supermarket-like entertainment in the Wildwoods.

Frank Brookhauser, WCAU-TV personality, Philadelphia Evening Bulletin columnist and magazine writer, has been visiting here compiling data for a full page color spread in the Sunday, July 28, Philadelphia Bulletin under the heading, "Las Vegas by-the-Sea."

The success of the big name policy in the Wildwoods is indicated in dollar-&-cents by local bank deposits. Three local banks report deposits as of July 17 amounting to over $24,000,000, an increase of about $2,000,000 over the same date last year. The Marine National Bank alone reported a jump of $1,000,000.

In fact, many night club owners who were not open in June will reconsider before next season. Those clubs that were open enjoyed a banner three weeks of business during June, even before the official July kickoff.

In one respect, the talent war has sad repercussions. Some sources have circulated vicious and unkind rumors about competitive operations. Stories about mythical and fantastic cover charges have been rife. However, in spite of the rumor-mongers, business has been at such a high level that any complaints are unjustified.

The truth of the matter is that top attractions are drawing top returns but those on modest budgets must content themselves with more modest returns.

Free parking, an attraction not offered elsewhere on the island, is aiding the Beach Club at Diamond Beach Lodge. 1,500 cars can be parked only a few feet from the club entrance. Ted Lewis, his revue and the "Calypso Carnival" are starred until July 26 when the Four Aces move into the 3,100-seater. A possible resurgence of the dance band is indicated here where Charlie Spivak has been filling the dance floor nightly. Ray Eberle opens today (Wed.) for the rest of the season.

Napoleon Reed has been signed for an appearance at Layre's Dutch Kitchen in his first local date. Local singer Frank Verna (Decca) has joined the Andrews Sisters and comic Dusty Brooks in the current show at the Club Bolero. Tony Bennett moves in Friday (26).

Charlie Gracie has opened at Eddie Suez's Club Avalon and will leave late this week for six weeks of appearances in London, including the Hippodrome. Danny Ryan has also joined the Avalon show, along with the Giovi Bros.

Tony Martin is rounding out a click run at Oscar Garrigues' Manor Hotel Supper Club and is being succeeded by Joni James, Gary Morton and the Mambo Aces.

Jerry Lewis, future headliner at the Manor, has been invited to be grand marshal of the resort's 47th annual baby parade and pageant on the boardwalk.

Schnoz Disbands Unit

Washington, July 23.

The Jimmy Durante package, which has been playing Carter Barron Amphitheatre for the past fortnight, breaks up after concluding its D. C. engagement tomorrow (Wed.) night.

Durante is slated to fly to the Coast, immediately afterward, to his home in Beverly Hills. Eddie Jackson returns to Encino, Calif, where he is building a new home. Jack Roth, Durante's longtime drummer, goes home to Carmel, N.Y., and pianist Jules Buffano goes to L. A. where he lives.

Featured singer Sonny King opens at the Fontainebleau in Miami Beach, as a single, commencing July 30.

Hub's Blinstrub Back From Vegas With Name Pacts

Boston, July 23.

Stanley Blinstrub, boniface of Blinstrub's 1,700-seater, w. k. for its hot disk chirp and piper format, is back from Las Vegas where he inked big names for his bistro next season.

Blinstrub said he has commitments for Peter Lind Hayes, Jimmy Durante, Sammy Davis Jr., with dates to be set. He said Jane Froman will open the South Boston spot on Sept. 30; and the Mills Bros. are booked for Oct. 7; Dennis Day, Oct. 21; and Tony Martin, Nov. 15. Also set, he stated, are Patti Page, Frankie Laine, Tony Bennett, Teresa Brewer and other room faves who have been playing the spot for past several seasons.

The Moro Landis line of 10 femmes, initiated at Blinstrub's with a new electronic lighting system this past season, continues. New construction going on in the club, which is open for dining and dancing during the summer months, calls for installation of a hydraulic device to raise and lower the railing around the stage, and a new checkroom with electronic checking device.

HOUSE WAYS & MEANS OK'S HALVING CAFE TAX

Washington, July 23.

House Ways and Means Committee voted last week to slash the 20% excise on cabaret tabs to 10% and to wipe out the 10% manufacturers excise on Children's phonograph records costing 25c. or less.

Committee followed the recommendation of its subcommittee which acted the week before. The House is expected to vote favorably this month on the tax bill. However, the Senate will not get around to considering it until next year.

With Damone Cancelling, Omaha Pacts Contino

Omaha, July 23.

Local civic org Ak-Sar-Ben last week signed Dick Contino's orch to replace Vic Damone as co-featured attraction on its Aug. 6-7 show for members. Ben Blue and his crew are also on the same bill.

Damone used the cancellation privilege in his contract due to taking over the Wednesday night Arthur Godfrey CBS-TV spot. A strange twist is that while Ak-Sar-Ben lost Damone, it gained Godfrey, who will headline the World Championship Rodeo in Omaha Sept. 20-29.

Don Romeo, who is booking the Contino-Blue show, also has pacted Vernon Bumpy & Co. for the dates.

Chicago's 'Southside Story'

By DAVE LEVADI

Chicago, July 23.

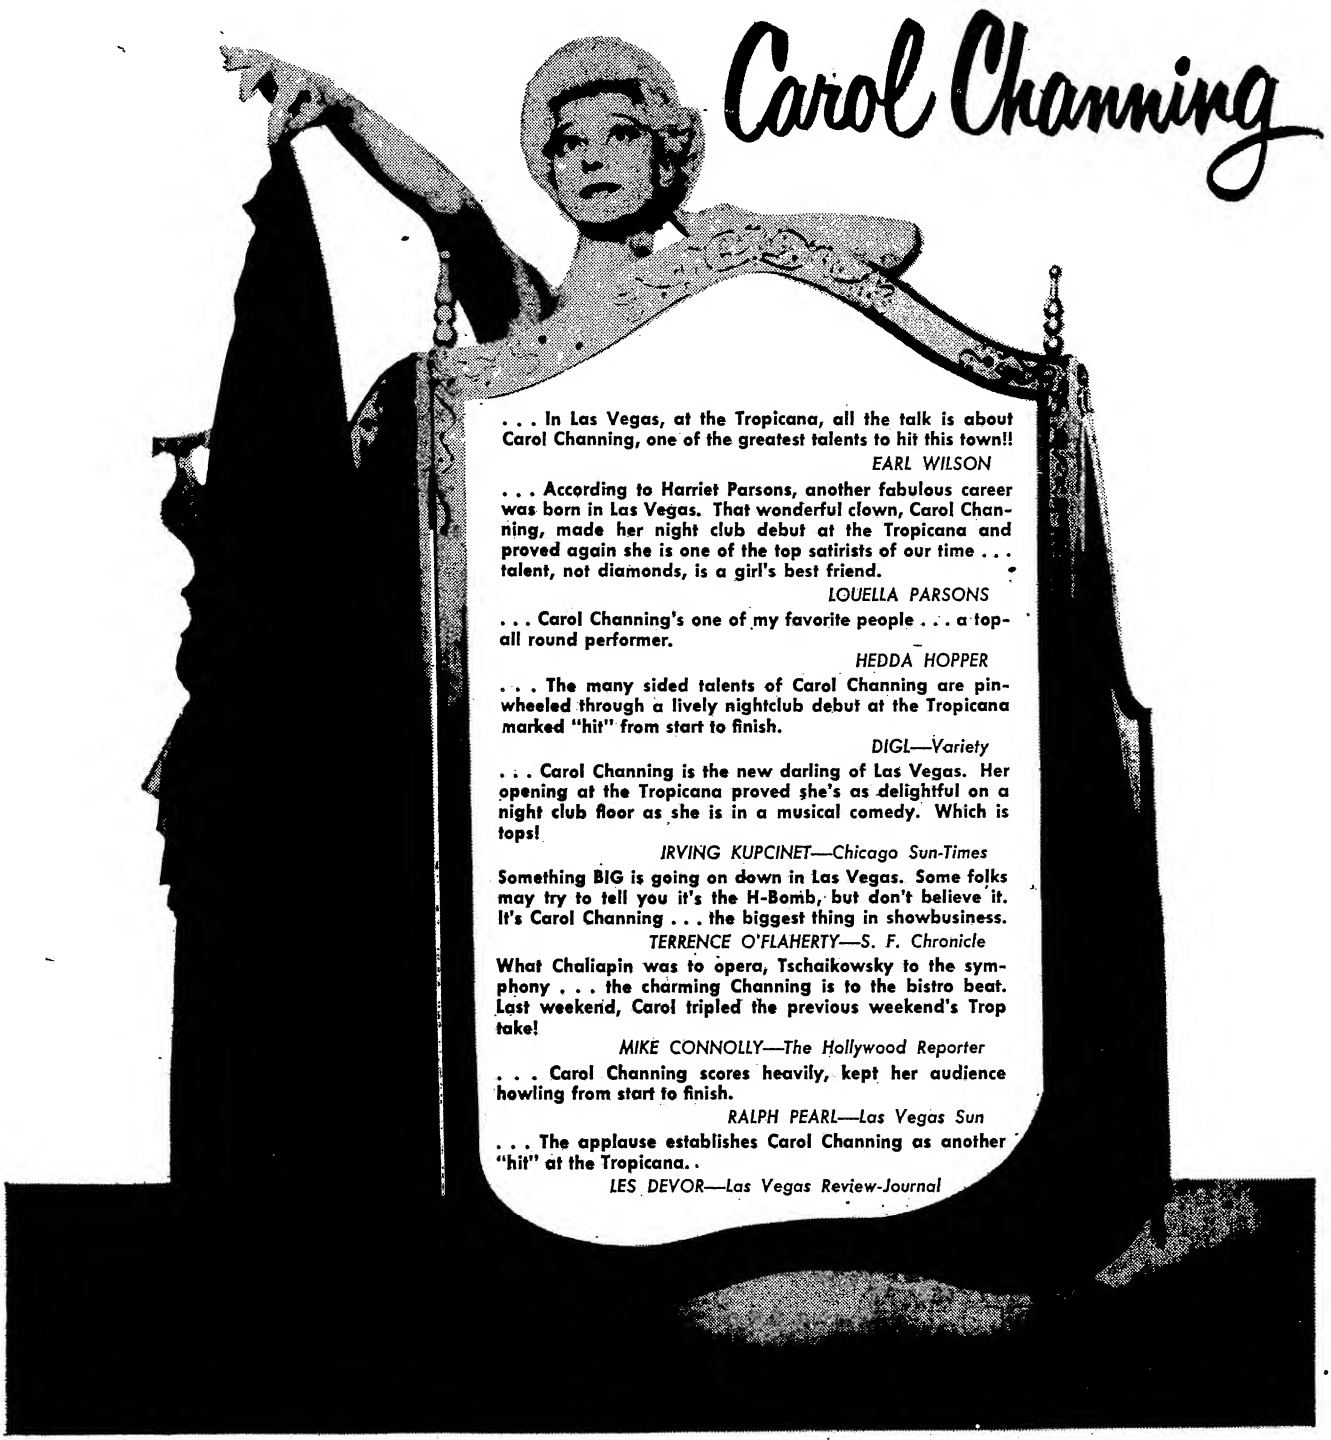
One bright spot on the cafe scene here is Chicago's Harlem-like southside. Jazz groups, finding the going rougher on the near northside, now get bookings in the neighborhood clubs at the other end of town, all the more advantageously where skin pigment is of less account. Production numbers, also absent in the recent years of disappearing theatre shows and mushrooming Rush St. intimeries, are a constant feature at several of these establishments.

Oldest and still best known of nite spots which sprang into existence when sepia talent and patronage was hardly sought after by class spots here is the Club De Lisa. Opened in 1933 with the repeal of Prohibition, entertainment policy as established by the three De Lisa brothers has gone substantially unchanged.

Full productions with acts, leg line, and band have continued to the present. So have most of the employees. Red Saunders has been running a seven-piece band there for 21 years. One of the waitresses grudgingly admits she remembers when John Barrymore used to drop in at the old club across the street.

The De Lisa's cellar headquarters burned down in 1941. Thirty days later, a new structure seating 708 arose on the parking lot across State St. Since then the new Club De Lisa hasn't shut its doors.

Current patrons may be witnessing the end of a tradition at De Lisa. No cover or minimum has ever been charged and the current four-week show may be one of the last of its kind, price-wise and in content.



A topnotch tap team, Oliver & Richards, could take their turn on almost any stage. An eye-popping bundle billed as "Black Velvet" does a strip routine graced by competent pelvic gymnastics and potent come-on expressions. Headliner on this show, "Little Miss Cornshucks," wouldn't appeal to a hotel room crowd, but her cornball ingenue pipings, while garbed in something between a 1920's swim suit and diapers, has gotten her a return date here.

Eyeing Name Bills

But competition has become keen for the De Lisa, and the management is on the prowl for name acts. It's reported that negotiations with Associated Booking Corp. are going on, which would result in a series of high-priced shows for the club. The De Lisa has featured both white and colored acts, and its large seating capacity and stage could put it in

Onward & Upward With Miami Beach —And Lou Walters' Copa City Rivals

The Miami Beach night clubs are coming back strongly this year, and possibilities again exist that the competition from these spots may further enliven the battle for attractions currently being waged by the hotelmen in that area.

With the Lou Walters takeover of Copa City, Miami Beach, plus the continued operation of the Latin Quarter, in the Palm Island area, by E. M. Loew, Walters' former partner in New York and Miami Beach, who became the solo operator of the Latin Quarter, N.Y., after Monday (22), a lively battle for business and names is expected from that end. In addition, it's reported that Nat Harris, former general manager of the Latin Quarter, N.Y., and later operator of the Harem, also N.Y., in which he was once partnered with Walters, is seeking to buy into Florida's Ciro's. In addition, there's likelihood that the Cotton Club (ex-Beachcomber) will be leased by a partnership comprising Norman Schuyler and songwriter Benny Davis.

Latter development is a direct result of disagreements with the estate of the late Murray Weinger on payment of percentages to Davis and others. Weinger, who died shortly after the preem of the show, is said by Davis to have made an agreement with him that in addition to his weekly stipend for royalties and writing on the production of the first "Cotton Club Revue," which amounted to $300 weekly, he was to receive a percentage of the profits. Since there was nothing on paper to that effect, only the $300 weekly payment went to Davis. Consequently, he and Schuyler, who had a piece of the previous Beachcomber operation, will open the second edition of the Cotton Club show.

Walters' project on the site of the late Copa City will be relabeled Cafe de Paris with a French show format similar to the one he's been using for many years at the Latin Quarters in New York and Miami Beach. Spot will open on Dec. 15 with organizations booked for the first few months as paid previews. No talent has yet been lined up.

One of the problems in connection with Walters' takeover of the Copa City is the possibility that Walters may be stuck with $10,000 owed to Jane Powell, by a previous Copa City management.

'Benny Goodman Day'

Benny Goodman is getting an official "day" in his hometown of Stamford, Conn., Aug. 6, when he and his band will play a benefit for the Sight Conservation Fund.

The local Lions Club is sponsoring the event.

Atlantic City Down To 3 Negro Niteries In Foldo of Paradise

Atlantic City, July 23.

Competing with three other sepia night clubs, Club Paradise, once one of the brightest Negro spots in the resort, has quietly folded its show, keeping only its bar open.

Olivette Miller and husband Bert Gibson had been producing "Highlights Revue," two-hour show featuring skits with Miss Miller's father, F. E. Miller, and Manton Moreland with a no-cover, no-minimum policy (see House Review of Central Theatre, N. Y.). Customers found show okay, but business on other than weekends was not enough to cover cost of producing.

Spot is owned by Cliff Williams and Ben Alten, who also have the Club Harlem, which is doing good biz with Lou Bibeau Fontain producing the Timmie Rogers Show, "No Time for Squares." Club Harlem is in mid-city, half block from Atlantic Ave., resort's main stem, and has become a fixture with the vacationist in the past dozen years when it has always offered a good show.

Paradise, on other hand, with exception of two years ago when Larry Steele and his unit were in for season, has been a "dead house" with no attraction for either white or colored nitery customers other than its bar. Both spots are airconditioned. They offered no food, only beverages.

Cotton Club brought in Count Basie for one-night stand Tuesday (16).

Fourth sepia night spot and new this year is Topsy's, located in Inlet section and offering Frankie Crane's "Blues on Parade" revue featuring Faye Richmonde, Alma Dunning, Pinkie Lee, Prince Darnell & Mateeth, and Helen DeCarlo.

Saranac Lake

By Happy Benway

Saranac Lake, July 23.

First barbecue of the season was held on the Will Rogers hospital lawn and made possible by Bob (Mello-Larks) Smith and Elna Oliver of Crescent Amusement Co. Assisting at the shindig were John Gurba and Frances Franks.

William Hartnett of Ottawa (he graduated here in class of '54) stopped off to gobble a couple of our hamburgers at the barbecue, while Joe Bishop (class of '51), formerly with Mark Warnow's orchestra, and his frau Virginia, a yesteryear soubret with Milt Schuster's tab show down south, took time out to mitt the gang.

Ned Shugrue, Will Rogers hospital fund executive, and his wife in with Dr. Edgar Mayer, consulting medico of the Variety Clubs hospitals, enroute to Dr. Mayer's Camp Kildare near Faust, N. Y.

Anything can happen here. Bob Cosgrove, Columbia Pictures' N.Y. staffer, came here for a checkup, got an all-clear and the following week he caught a bad cold which turned into a slight touch of pneumonia. Bob is back at the Will Rogers taking the usual rest cure.

After a short try at the cure here, Charlotte Eiselman, nitery entertainer, motored back to Long Island City with her husband and will continue the cure routine at home.

Louis Blanco, whose sister Sylvia White is connected with Allied Artists' foreign department, hit the jackpot following his first medical clinic, rating a 10-day furlough that he will spend at home and at Belmont Park.

'NO BOOZE' EDICT FOR HUB'S RADIO CITY AREA

Boston, July 23.

Liquor around the border of Hub's "Radio City" project, the Prudential $100,000,000 development and Boston's great hope for an economic comeback, was nixed by the Boston Licensing Board last week.

Clergy, property owners, civic leaders, public officials and residents of the Back Bay jammed the BLB hearing room to protest proposed liquor spots on the fringes of the project.

Petitions to transfer two liquor licenses from downtown Hub to Huntington Ave., near the new centre, were rejected by the BLB. The board's decision was announced after a stormy protest hearing at which business and civic leaders charged that the Back Bay development area would be turned into another skid row if the petitions were approved.

Board chairman Clarence Elam said there appeared to be "no evidence of public need or demand at the present time" for more liquor places in the area.

Hayes & Healy's Busy Cafe, TV, 1-Niter Sked

Peter Lind Hayes & Mary Healy, who closed a run last week at the Sands, Las Vegas, and opened at the Riverside in Reno for a fortnight, have been set for a busy summer and fall nitery-clubdate-tv schedule. After their Reno date the Mr. & Mrs. comedy duo will return to New York, with the male member of the act pinchhitting for Arthur Godfrey's morning television shows for four or five weeks starting Aug. 12. The subbing chore is part of Hayes' "make like Godfrey" pact with CBS.

Up ahead, Hayes & Healy will head the talent lineup for the shindig being put on by the Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Co. as part of its nationwide 50th anniversary celebration. The team's participation in the golden jubilee takes in the Greensboro (N.C.) area, Aug. 7, with Gov. Luther H. Hughes tapped as chief guest. The duo will appear on the season's preem in October of the Danny Thomas show on CBS-TV.

LaVern Baker Needling Her Nibs on Day, Date

Wildwood, July 23.

Although this resort normally schedules fireworks shows from barges anchored just offshore in the ocean, some unscheduled pyrotechnics nearly erupted when two longtime principals in a show biz feud were booked at rival night clubs here.

Yes, it finally happened. Georgia Gibbs and LaVern Baker were engaged to play the same city at the same time. Miss Baker took advantage of the coincidence to unleash verbal barrages and snide remarks about Miss Gibbs from the Club Bolero stage. However, Her Nibs managed to remain discreetly quiet about her rival in her shows at the Manor Hotel Supper Club. But one fact probably eased the tension for both—they were both playing to packed houses with essentially the same basic song material.

Revoke Philly License

Philadelphia, July 23.

The Pennsylvania State Liquor Board has revoked the license of the Glass Door night club here for presenting lewd shows. Revocation is effective July 30.

The club was charged with permitting lewd, immoral or improper entertainment; permitting entertainers to mingle with customers and having illegal signs on the outside of the premises, advertising entertainment.

Inside Stuff—Vaude

Arthur Godfrey is making one of his hobbies pay off. A tyro horseman, he's been signed to appear at the Grand National Livestock Exposition at the Cow Palace, San Francisco, Nov. 1-10. Tele performer will work with his horse Goldie, which he has exhibited previously at major horseshows in New York, Harrisburg and Toronto. Godfrey will work all evening and matinee shows except the finale when the results of the judging are announced. To take part in this display, Godfrey's teleshows will originate from San Francisco for two weeks.

The stinging criticism of Hollywood by Minneapolis Star and Tribune newspapers' executive editor, William P. Stevens, because of its failure to heed the sheets' request for important personages for the "Aqua Star Night" show promotion, an annual feature of the local Aquatennial, apparently has borne fruit. At any rate, Jayne Mansfield is coming in from the film capital to headline the show which for the first time will be held indoors, at the Auditorium, July 26. She's easily the biggest film star yet for the affair.

In a VARIETY interview last year, prompted by industry squawks anent alleged discrimination by the dailies against films and in favor of tv, Stevens commented that Hollywood forgets that cooperation is a "two-way street" and usually wants to take without giving. He cited various instances of lack of such cooperation in addition to the "Star Night" show's troubles.

The old familiar theatre lure, "8 Big Acts Vaudeville 8," is now seen in all ads for the large, prosperous east-end Mocambo Cafe in Montreal. No names mentioned, but "All American and First Time Presented in Canada" follows. Also "3 Orchestras for Dancing, 3 Emcees, 3 Shows Nightly." "No cover, no minimum."

Fertitta Bros. Throw in Towel In Wake of Galveston Cleanup

Galveston, July 23.

The severity of Attorney General Will Wilson's shutdown of Galveston gambling spots is evidenced in the announcement by the Fertitta brothers, heirs to the Sam and Rose Maceo empire, that they have called it quits.

"You can't fight city hall, and if that's the way Will Wilson wants it, that's the way it will be," Anthony Fertitta said.

Fertitta said he is going into the contracting business in Louisiana and brother Vic is going into the cafe (restaurant) business in Galveston.

"Neither of us has any intention or plans to operate a club in the foreseeable future. Any report that we will open in Las Vegas or be associated with any club out there is silly.

"We have had offers to go into business out there, but not since we have closed up in Galveston. We've also had offers to open up in Cuba, but we're not interested in either place. Galveston is our home, and if we can't operate a club here, we just won't operate."

All of which leaves the Balinese Room, plush Fertitta property, sitting high and dry on the shores of the Gulf.

"Both Vic and I have been asked by a number of people to reopen the Balinese as a 'bottle deal,' with unlimited membership, like other places in Texas. This we will never do," Fertitta said.

The one-time boniface said even though open, Galveston had been a "clean town."

"We haven't had any juvenile delinquency problems and our officials have kept out the hijackers and murderers."

$2,000,000 Loss to City

Fertitta estimated $2,000,000 a year would be lost to the Galveston economy by the shutdown and said 700 persons had been dropped from his payroll alone.

The pullout marks the end to a 80-year era begun by the Maceo (uncle of the Fertittas). Ben Bernie, Guy Lombardo and Phil Harris all played the Hollywood Dinner Club in the early days. When the Hollywood was closed by a cleanup injunction in the '30s, the centre of operations shifted to the Balinese. Sophie Tucker and Joe E. Lewis were seen there regularly.

Public opinion in Galveston is divided on effect of shutdown. Some merchants report their business is better; others are hurt. The owners of the 50-odd clubs faced with the state charges have asked for jury trials in hopes of sympathetic treatment from citizens. General mood of grim present, uncertain future is prevalent among all club owners, but they generally reflect the view of Fertitta.

"When the people want me to open again, I will," he said.

Intercontinental Dickers Dominican Republic Inns In Ambassador Bowout

The Intercontinental Hotel Chain, a subsidiary of Pan American Airways, is currently negotiating with the government of the Dominican Republic for the takeover of the Jaragua and El Embajador Hotels, Ciudad Trujillo. Hotels in the past have been operated by the Ambassador chain, which is apparently stepping out of the picture. It's presently planned to use native entertainment in these inns.

The Intercontinental chain is expanding its foreign hotel operations. It's opening an inn in Curacao in September, and will move into San Juan, Puerto Rico, in January. Present operations include Tamanaco, Caracas; Tequerdami, Bogota; Del Lago, Maracaibo; Nacional, Havana; Reforma, Mexico City; Carrera, Santiago, Grande, Belem, Brazil; and Victoria Plaza, Montevideo.

"Pajama Game," which has been doing a brisk biz at the Riviera Hotel, closed last week, but moves down the Strip to the Dunes for an Aug. 1 opening.

Cast, which includes Larry Douglas, Betty O'Neil, Buster West and Barbara Bostock, remains intact with the exception of Tally Brown, who opens a lounge act at Riviera July 31, teamed with Shecky Greene.

Deal for "Pajama Game" was made by Dunes prexy Major Riddle. Current Dunes show is Larry Steele's "Smart Affairs of '58," starring Eddie (Rochester) Anderson.

Nev. 1st Qtr., $27,000,000

Carson City, July 23.

Nevada gaming has reported a gross of $27,482,200.17 during the first three months of 1957—the usually "quiet" period of the year. The casinos paid the state $1,186,181.06 in taxes.

The figure indicated an increase in gross over the same period last year of $1,400,000.

U. S. Senate Okays Bill Allowing Karl Hansen (Tokayers) to Stay Here

Washington, July 23.

The Senate has passed a bill to permit Karl Hansen, of the Tokayer Troupe, current at the Palace Theatre, N. Y., to remain in the U. S. A bill permitting Hansen to stay in the U. S. under the Danish quota was first introduced by Sen. Clifford P. Case (R.-N.J.). Otherwise Hansen, together with his wife and daughter, would have been deported on Aug. 1.

U. S. Immigration Service had claimed that Hansen had altered the birth certificate of a member of the troupe, Benny Sorehson, who was a year younger than the minimum in which he could work in the U. S., when the group first came over in 1951. Hansen said he had hired Sorenson through a newspaper ad, and was later able to prove that the alteration had been done by Sorensen's father. Sorensen, who was not affected by the deportation proceedings, has since left the act and is now a jockey at Belmont Park.

SHAW AGENCY HITS CHI CAFE JACKPOT

Chicago, July 23.

A heavy hunk of Chicago's current cafe bookings have been snatched out from under the sales talks of the major booking outfits by the relatively small Shaw Artists Corp. office here, operated by Jim Fleming.

Agency, which deals mainly in sepia attractions, has placed chirper Sallie Blair in the headline slot at the Black Orchid, Oscar Peterson at the London House, and Dizzy Gillespie at the Blue Note. These are all downtown bookings. In the southside clubs, Shaw has Bill Doggett at the Crown Propellor and Big Joe Turner at Roberts Show Lounge.

Shaw's dominion in the Windy City heretofore has mainly been in the southside bistros.

McGaw Circus' Big Biz And Big Setbacks in Ia.

Omaha, July 23.

Bill McGaw's Motor Circus took its lumps at Playland Park in nearby Council Bluffs, Ia., last week despite the fact the turnouts were near capacity.

First Ernie Kuntz, 24, the show's top motorcycle stunter, banged into the fence and was hospitalized with a deep forehead gash.

Then Deputy Sheriff H. J. Carter seized three of the show's cars under a distress warrant issued by the Iowa State Tax Commission for non-payment of the state sales tax. Circus officials later turned over a check for $2,306 to get the autos back.

Said Carter: "They had a cage full of lions there but I figured it was better to attach the three automobiles."

LOGAN FAMILY REACTIVATES

Combined Nostalgia, Rock 'n' Roll and 80-Year Old Panto

Glasgow, July 23.

Logan Family, relatives of Ella Logan, are back in show biz here after two years' absence in the hotel and cafe trade.

Ma and Pa Logan, otherwise May Dalziel and Jack Short, are staging a short summer stint at the Metropole Theatre. Their daughter-in-law, Grace Logan, wife of comedian Jimmy Logan, is arranging the dance routines. May Dalziel is sister of Ella Logan and mother of Jimmy Logan, young Scot comedian.

New show links oldtime songs and acts with current rock 'n' roll, and is pulling in good biz. In the company is Carrie Bernhart, a pantomime principal boy 60 years ago, and now in her 80's.

EMA Interprets Legal Opinion As Exempting N.Y. Group From Licensing

Members of the Entertainment Managers Assn., organization of club-date bookers, are at odds with N.Y. City on the question of whether EMA members must have employment agency licenses. Nat M. Abramson, EMA prexy, is informing his membership that after 20 years of taking out the permits, they will no longer be required to do so.

Abramson explained that members of the organization do not deal directly with the acts. They generally go through agents who already have the city license, and act as producers for the shows they present.

Abramson also stated that club-date bookers started taking out the city license during the depression when the then N.Y. commissioner of licenses, the late Paul Moses, told EMA that the department was in need of revenues and therefore asked the club-daters to comply.

However, Abramson said that EMA counsel Theodore F. Kuper has told the organization that Mayor Wagner and license Commissioner Barnard J. O'Connell "want the city to receive every penny that it properly due the city, but not one cent to which it is not legally entitled." It's on the basis of these talks that the EMA is informing its members not to take out any city permits.

Abramson also said that an opinion handed down by Herman Scheckner, counsel to the Dept. of Licenses, stated that "persons acting in a managerial capacity or as principals in connection with the hiring of entertainers are not required to have a license under the Employment Agency Law."

Juliette's salary will be split 50-50 by CCE and Barnes-Carruthers.

This will be the first time in almost 20 years that the CCE grandstand show has not been produced and supplied by George A. Hamid (GAC-Hamid). The 1957 exhibition will also silde into a retarded dating, previous CCE opening Aug. 18 for a week.

World of Mirth will again supply the midway. Featured for the eight days will be the United States Army Band, scheduled to play one concert each day on the CCE bandstand.

Waldorf-Astoria, N. Y.

Lionel Hampton Orch (16), Diahann Carroll, Haitian Moon Dancers, Bela Babai Orch; $3-$4 cover.

The Starlight Roof of the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria is having one of its more successful seasons with its jazz policy. Combo of Count Basie and Sarah Vaughan, which started this summer series, provided a lot of business for the roof, and now Claude C. Philippe is pursuing this tangent further with pairing of the Lionel Hampton band and Diahann Carroll.

The Hamp has one of the more exciting crews around, both in the type of music and in its presentation. He's one of the more active holdovers from the golden age of the swing era when he was one of the original quartet in Benny Goodman's band. Hampton hasn't allowed his talents to go stale. He's continued to grow, the music is modern, melodic and moving without the customary violence that has seeped into the more avante-garde maestri.

Hampton is able to communicate a lot of liveliness and power without blasting the customers out of the room and is similarly capable of beating out an enticing brand of rhythm for dance purposes. At the vibes, he purveys a brand of jazz that gets the crowd on his side. There's a brand of pucklishness mixed in with his offerings when buttressing a central theme with numbers picked out of the air. There's a spot of drumming and pianistics to round out the display of his musicianship. Any error in the show is on the side of personal virtuosity; his colleagues should have a longer session to themselves.

Miss Carroll has been a promising youngster for years. Now she apparently is seeking to be a promising woman. She's in that twilight area of artistic adolescence. Her demeanor and looks are that of a girl, but her manner indicates that she wants to soar a bit higher, so instead out comes a lot of musical inhibitions. At the present state of development, she's in a tough spot. Her dilemma is best illustrated in a song written for her by Phil Moore, in which she'd like to leave girlhood behind her. However, there are times when an essential charm comes through. Although, she doesn't seem to do as well with sophistication, the elements that indicated big things for her for a number of years still come through, especially in tunes such as "The Bee Song" from "House of Flowers" in which she was the ingenue lead.

The relief music is by Bela Babai who provides a colorful brand of dansavation in Latin, Viennese, or what-have-you motifs. Jose.

Fairmont, San Francisco

San Francisco, July 19.

Mills Bros. (4), Ernie Heckscher Orch (11); $2 cover.

The Mills Bros. are back at their old stand in the Fairmont's cavernous Venetian Room and offer a pleasant, if unexciting, 35 minutes of nostalgia spiced by what they're pleased to call "jump tunes." Their 10 numbers include a variety of record hits, such as "Glow Worm," "Paper Doll," "Up A Lazy River" and "You Always Hurt The One You Love"; a nice barbership version of "On the Banks of the Wabash," the novelty "Knocked-Out Nightingale" (Mendelsohn's "Spring Song") and a couple of newer, sweet pops songs.

They do their familiar band imitation in "Basin Street Blues," tack words to the big-band "Opus One" and generally get a generous mitt from the crowd, and especially from the big butter & egg men from Dubuque.

There's no denying, however, that the Mills' style and nomenclature are a trifle dated: to call their version of "Glow Worm" a jump tune is like calling Les Brown's "Sentimental Journey" a real swing number. Fact is, the Mills Bros. are an astute commercial team, the Guy Lombardo of the male quartets, and a pretense at anything more simply diminishes their stature.

Ernie Heckscher's band backs nicely, and does an elegant 20-minute medley from "My Fair Lady" as show's opener. Show will remain through Aug. 14. Stef.

Royal York, Toronto

Toronto, July 16.

Lilo; Johnny Lindon Orch (11); $3.50 cover.

Co-star of Cole Porter's "Can-Can," the blonde and curvaceous Lilo maintains that "on voice, I would not hire me" but she is not as bad as her self-estimation. In fact, she is a gaminesque personality and animated Esquire-calendar type whose vigorous shout-style vocalistics, interpolated with nostalgic ballads, holds the otherwise staid carriage-trade who are paying $3.50 cover charge to get into the posh 500-seater Imperial Room of the Royal York Hotel.

Lilo, the brown-eyed Parisian import who, in private life, is the Marquisa de la Passadiere, is a lady of charm and talent who is breaking in a new routine here, with her French lawyer-husband-business manager, and Nicki Perito doing her arrangements, and rehearsing Johnny Lindon's 11-piece band.

She is doing a strip in reverse; Lilo opens in silver, sequined briefies, then into a hook-on skirt. The finish has her in a rich shoulder-wrap for a fully-clothed personality who has to beg off, her other interpolations being the lady in top-hat for balloon distribution to the customers for her "Poor People of Paris." For further table-hopping, in checkered jersey and black velvet beret, she reprises her singing newsboy stint, passing out French-English language tabloids of New York and Paris news stories and pix.

She opens, in French, with "If You Love Me"—in a blue light—then a hair-clutching and arm-stretching calisthenics of the "Can-Can" medley, alternating in shout-style and tender singing. She also works in a Chevalier imitation, complete with strawhat, of "Louise" and a tempo change to "It's the Wrong Time."

Lilo is hep on carefree Gallic styling and showmanship aplomb that had her cafe customers, when caught, begging for more. McStay.

Sands, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, July 19.

Robert Merrill, Louis Armstrong, Velma Middleton, Bob Kaye, Copa Girls (12), Antonio Morelli Orch (15); produced by Jack Entratter; $2 minimum.

Jack Entratter's idea of teaming Robert Merrill and Louis Armstrong is still paying off. The boys are back for another go at the Copa Room, and biz is booming.

For his half of the show, Merrill tosses a neatly balanced repertoire with his rich voice that sounds better than ever. "Cosi Cosa," "September Song" and "It Ain't Necessarily So" are among the offerings. He clicks as a comedian with his impreshes of various pop singers doing opera, and gets loudest mitting with the "Figaro" aria from "Barber of Seville," and the prolog from "Pagliacci."

Armstrong & His All Stars (6) sock solid into such faves as "Sleepy Time Down South," "Back Home Again In Indiana," and "When The Saints Go Marching In," latter embellished with the famed distinctive voice of Satchmo himself. He also lends his horn and pipes to a newie, "Now You Has Jazz." Velma Middleton, a big girl with a big voice, wrings the best out of "Kokomo" and "The Blues." She adds to the festivities with a downright droll bit of terping. Billy Kyle is on piano; Barrett Deems, drums; Squire Gersh, bass; Edmund Hall, clarinet, and Trummy Young, trombone.

The Copa Girls (12), with imaginative choreography by Bob Gilbert & Renne Stuart, powerfully fronted by the voice of Bob Kaye, frame the show which unites Merrill & Armstrong in the finale—with former coming out of Met Opera stagedoor and latter ditto from Birdland. They go a Gallagher & Shean routine, change roles, and the result is upper-level showmanship.

Antonio Morelli and his orch deserve a hefty round of cheering for the flair with which they blend the all-musical show. Duke.

Ottawa House, Ottawa

Ottawa, July 19.

Don Elliott, Wyatt Reuther Trio; no admission or cover.

Don Elliott is one of the most versatile and accomplished musicians to play this area. Currently on the stand at the Circus Lounge of the Ottawa House, he works a socko tune stint to great mitting, collecting kudos for his versatility and musicianship equally. Elliott's favorite instrument is vibes and his style with the hammers is unique, but he also exhibits ability with French horn and trumpet, intermittently playing vibes and a horn simultaneously.

Although the stanza is unusual, there's no sense of gimmickry; it's all music, and standout. Backing is by the house group, Wyatt Reuther Trio, which Elliott gives plenty of scope in his sessions, pointing the solo finger frequently at Reuther on bass, Richard Wyands on 88 and 17-year-old clicko drummer Doug Johnston. This bill closes July 27. Gorm.

Copacabana, N. Y.

Toni Arden, Lou Nelson, The Versatones (3), Tom Rockford, Marilyn Cooper, Jeff Bolton, Copa Girls, Michael Durso and Frank Marti Orchs; staged by Douglas Coudy; music and lyrics, Durso, Mel Mitchell, Marvin Kahn; costumes designed by Sal Anthony; $6 minimum.

Toni Arden's stint at the Copa is a refreshing and rewarding experience. No gimmicks, no hypoed arrangements, no public baths, no peeling—just plain singing as only Miss Arden can provide. Thrush is one of the most versatile songstresses currently plying her trade. Apparently there isn't a style that Miss Arden hasn't mastered.

Blessed with an exquisite voice that shows evidence of professional training and nurturing, Miss Arden captured and held the opening night audience. She had to beg off after 45 minutes and some 16 numbers. Gowned simply and tastefully in a short formal and displaying an engaging and winning personality, she establishes an immediate rapport with "It's Almost Like Being In Love."

As far as the customers are concerned, she can do no wrong as she effortlessly sings her way through a batch of standards, a couple of not-so-well-known tunes, and an Italian and French medley. Depending on the song, Miss Arden can belt, caress, or jump—all with equal and appealing proficiency. Her only deviation from a wholly gimmick-less act is a duet and waltz around the floor with her brother, Jan, the use of a parasol for "Pennies From Heaven," and the donning of a beret for the French medley. However, these are done so simply that they are hardly noticeable and do not interfere with her basic assignment—singing.

Included in Miss Arden's repertoire is her new Decca recording, "It Takes Only One." In addition, she commands attention with "You Stepped Out of a Dream," "Autumn In N.Y.," "How About You," and "Let There Be Love." She's a welcome addition to N.Y.'s summer festival and should keep the turnstiles clicking for many weeks at Jules Podell's emporium.

Filling the comedy spot in the new Copa session is Lou Nelson, a fast-talking standup funster. Nelson gets off to a slow start as he throws one-liners, kids tv commercials and the short life of video performers, traffic conditions, women drivers, doctors, nurses, and hospitals. However, before moving into his impression of an oldtime song & dance man, he has the audience with him and the laughs start pouring out faster and with more gusto. He closes to a strong mitting.

The Versatones, a Negro trio, have successfully made the switch from the intime boites to the vast Copa expanse. Lads blend nicely in variety of numbers, including "Great Day," "Wagon Wheels" and a pair of calypsos—"Marianne" and "Banana Tree." There is a pleasant manner in their personality and style that is appealing.

Tom Rockford, Marilyn Cooper and Jeff Bolton blend in expertly with singing and terping for the production numbers with the always perfectly-groomed, handsomely-costumed Copa line of lookers. Michael Durso's orch lends solid showbacking and doubles with Frank Marti's Samba Band for customer dancing. Holl.

Americana, Miami B.

Miami Beach, July 21.

Paul Winchell with Jerry Mahoney, Trudy Richards, Pete Pedersen, Jackie Heller, Lee Martin Orch; $5 minimum for non-dinner guests.

Paul Winchell is making one of his rare appearances on a nitery floor with this stand at the Bal Masque. His impact on audiences has already brought him a bid by the Tischfreres for a return in winter season. Winchell and his two wooden vis-a-vis, Jerry Mahoney and Knucklehead, comprise a solid, offbeat act for the cafe circuit which invites more frequent excursions from his video program—if Winchell could arrange his schedules to allow for such datings.

The material contained is of top comedy pattern, the dialog in the sophisticated nitery idiom, albeit containing enough of a smattering of material to please the youngsters who are around for the dinner sessions. Winchell's technique is a far cut above the few ventriloquists playing the cafe or television guest route. His voice tranference is brought off with an ease and skill that create the illusion of listening and watching a "live" Jerry Mahoney engaging in the quippery and mugging which ensue once the team is in full swing. Extra fillip comes with tune injects that add much to the growing reaction. Intro of Knucklehead during closing moments is a good change of pace and allows for hypoed yocks. End result is comeback clatter from the auditors.

Trudy Richards is a personable thrush with a cheery, breezy style applied to some oldies and musicomedy standards that haven't been kicked around too much. Winder, "Love For Sale," serves aptly as the payoff to a pleasing canto.

Pete Pedersen is in the better grade of harmonica specialists, but tends to inject overload of worn chatter and waggery in earlier portions of his act. Withal, the summerites laughup his ya-ta-ta at enough points in his routining to warmup the workover of classic and pop compos he purveys on the mouth organ.

Little Jackie Heller is an integral part of the Bal Masque format, emceeing in solid, winning manner and serving up a group of cleffings in smooth, easy tenor. Lee Martin and his orch are an important item in the overall pic. Joey Bishop, Margarita Sierra and the Reyes take over on July 27. Lary.

Beach C., Wildw'd, N.J.

Wildwood, N. J., July 18.

Ted Lewis, Cathy Basic, Elroy Peace, Bobby Winters, Art Johnson, Sol Klein conducting Charlie Spivak Orch (17); $4 minimum.

Weaving his own particular brand of mellowed and experienced showmanship, Ted Lewis is making his first appearance in Wildwood-by-the-Sea at the 3,100-seat Beach Club of Diamond Beach Lodge. The high-hatter appeared a bit ruffled due to the large size of the club, but his experience and nostalgia more than compensated for the minor upset.

Lewis can seem to do no wrong. He even moved some of the ringsiders to stand and applaud, which is high regard in a night club.

He opens with "Be Yourself," followed by "A Most Unusual Day." Next, he brings on Cathy Basic. She, too, sticks closely to the favorites of yesteryear, offering "After You've Gone," "Beautiful Doll," "Smiles" and "Mr. Wonderful." Lewis returns to offer "Shine" and a clarinet version of "Tiger Rag" which he says sold 5,500,000 copies on records. Next, Paul White offers his version of "Woodman, Spare That Tree."

"Sunny Side of the Street" and "Just Around The Corner" mark Lewis' return. He then goes into "Whiffenpoof Song" which is hoked up with a delightful comedy inning by White. This bit, involving a "swish" routine, is well received, a reception not usually accorded this type material in the Wildwoods. Lewis closes with "When You're Smiling."

Sol Klein ably conducts the Charlie Spivak orch (17). Bill is in for 10 days. Math.

Eden Roc, Miami Beach

Miami Beach, July 20.

Roberta Linn, Wally Griffin, Bobby Brandt, Henry Tobias, Mal Malkin Orch; $3.50 minimum.

Rushed in to replace Eydie Gorme, who bowed out at last minute due to pleurisy attack, Roberta Linn is playing an unexpected return date in the Cafe Pompeii and hitting with full impact on the summer crowds. She tops an audpleasing lineup, to stamp the bill one of the better of the "second season" series here.

A standup songstress who knows how to choose a balanced routine of standards and specials, Miss Linn grabs attention from walk-on and sustains mitt build throughout her diversified stint, highlighted by an Al Dubin compo rundown (she's his niece) and topped by a deftly worked out gown doffing to trim torso and eye-catching gam display. Miss Linn's pro delivery and handling of the cleffings build the way to the big bowoff.

Wally Griffin has discarded his pianistics to concentrate on new act comprised of gag series and group of comedy-lined lyric spoofs. He's a winner when he's working over an inventive takeoff on the "My Fair Lady" score as applied to new text on the Red Riding Hood tale. When he essays the norm for comics—patter—it's a melange of old and occasionally new, sparking a fair load of laughs, thanks to fresh mien and manner.

Bobby Brandt's nimble hoofery and acro twists set matters off at a breezy pace, his canto is a crowd pleaser from first heel & toe patterning. Henry Tobias, house emcee, makes for a gracious conferencier and Mal Malkin and his crew are invaluable adjuncts to musical matters. Arriving July 25 are Dick Haymes along with the Blackburn Twins & Collins. Lary.

Ambassador Hotel, L. A.

Los Angeles, July 17.

Nat King Cole, Bud & Cece Robinson, Freddy Martin Orch (17); $2-$2.50 cover.

Over the years, Nat King Cole, always a performer's performer, has been rising steadily in public esteem as well. Right now, thanks largely to a succession of discliicks and his network television show, he's hotter than he's ever been. These factors alone would indicate a ropesup four-week stand at the Cocoanut Grove; what guarantees it is Cole's performance, a sock 50-minute song presentation delivered with ease and skill that is well-nigh perfection in cabaret entertainment.

If there's a complaint to be voiced, it's only that Cole does only one piano number, an excellent exercise on "Just One of Those Things." Otherwise, save for an occasional few bars to emphasize his lyrics, he's a standup singer—and a fine one. Not the least of his effectiveness is the fact that he is an excellent musician, who knows melody and how to treat it. Too, he has impeccable musical taste, excellent enunciation and topnotch phrasing and the numbers he offers represent a melange of the best that has been written over the years, ranging from such standards as "There Goes My Heart," "But Not For Me" and "Stardust" to "Why Can't A Woman Be Like A Man," which gets an excellent delineation.

As a fine showmanly stunt, Cole has resurrected a long-discarded practice, singing the refrain as well as the chorus on some of the numbers. It's an effective gimmick that helps create a nostalgic mood as well as showcase the material. He gets topnotch backing from his own trio, Charlie Harris on bass, John Collins on guitar and Lee Young on drums, in addition to the fine work of the Freddy Martin orch.

Martin crew opens the show with a five-minute "Holiday in Paris" medley that wins plaudits. Only other act on the bill is the song & dance team of Bud & Cece Robinson. They're appealing and energetic but there's a tendency to corn the material too much, particularly on a "Greatest Invention of Them All" routine that permits showcasing of the softshoe, Joe Frisco's jazz dance and a rock 'n' roll takeoff. Ten-minute terping earns ringside attention to set the stage effectively for Cole. Kap.

Riviera, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, July 19.

George Gobel, DeCastro Sisters, Dorothy Dorben Dancers, Barry Ashton, Ray Sinatra Orch; $3 minimum.

George Gobel low-pressures his way through a high-pressure performance in the Clover Room that assures his being on the night club scene for a long time to come. The droll comic clicks with the same buffoonery that characterizes his tv show—but here the material appears especially well-tailored and selective. Gobel holds the spotlight for 45 minutes and works at a deceptively fast pace to the delight of all in the house.

Opening in his typical offhanded manner, Gobel then does an uproarious takeoff on stage props. He banters about women and marriage and goes headlong into a discourse on various forms of the dance. Seven performers from the Dorothy Dorben Dancers (18) are used by Gobel in his self-styled explanation of the steps.

The button-sized comic closes by singing "Sipping Cider Through a Straw," accompanying himself with a guitar and concluding with an outburst of yodelling.

The four-week engagement closing Aug. 14 marks Gobel's first Las Vegas appearance in four years, at that time as an added attraction at the Sahara. He does everything mirthfully well and the Clover Room boxoffice should skyrocket if only through the thousands of Gobel tv fans.

The DeCastro Sisters (3) pack an extra wallop in the Sammy Lewis-production by presenting nine lively songs including their RCA Victor disk hit, "Teach Me Tonight." Their clever novelty numbers—"Birth of the Blues" in cha-cha and a takeoff on the Diamonds singing "Little Darling"—go over especially well. Other numbers are "Look on the Good Side," "Eyes Wide Open,' a Pepsi Cola commercial in Spanish, "I Know Plenty," and Presley-patterned "Heartbreak Hotel" and "Hound Dog."

Two production numbers are presented by the Dorothy Dorben Dancers, featuring the talented Barry Ashton. Highlight is a rhythmatic "Love In the Shade of a Banana Tree" with Ashton cha-cha'ing. Digl.

Flamingo, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, July 16.

Anna Maria Alberghetti, Alan King, Carla Alberghetti, "Mama" Alberghetti, Don Kirk, Mary Menzies, Flamingoettes (10), Lou Basil Orch (18); produced by Hal Belfer; $3 minimum.

The Alberghetti name, coupled on the marquee with "extra-added" Alan King, spells out four weeks of bullish biz for the Flamingo Room during this peak period of the Vegas holiday season. Such an abundance of talent is rarely imbued in a single family as it is in the Alberghetti clan—Anna Maria's unique vocal range which lends itself effectively either to pops or classics, Carla's remarkably crystal-pure tones, and "Mama" Alberghetti's meticulous technique on the piano. (The youngest member of the family, 14-year-old Paul Alberghetti, although not present at this engagement, has showed up in past Vegas sessions with a keen musical flair as the prodigy of his father, the late maestro Daniele Alberghetti.)

Supported at the keyboard by Mrs. Alberghetti, Anna Maria and Carla, in their last tandem engagement on this circuit. (Carla retuns in the fall to bow as a single), evoke rafter-shaking response as they unveil an inspired repertoire running the gamut from pops to standards to classics. Anna Maria's vocal gymnastics in the classical vein are cued to themes and variations and "Gianina Mia."

From her motion picture and tv background, she draws the savvy which instructs her to effectively inject a throb into "They Wouldn't Believe Me" and "I've Got a Crush On You," and to invest a certain amount of histrionics into "Fala Nana Bambina" and "I Could Have Danced All Night."

Carla Alberghetti enriches "One Fine Day" with a poignantly definitive vocal commentary of the Puccini classic. She further indicates that she is readly to embark upon a solo career as she engenders tumultuous response with the blending of her exciting musical prowess and mature expressiveness to "Love Is Where You Find It." Opening night (11), this coupling was the top mitt warmer. Anna Maria and Carla contrast voices to additionally uptempo the show in a pair of duets, "Mutual Admiration Society" and "La Danza." "Mama" Alberghetti signals hoots for a "more!" in her solo, an off-beat switch from classical piano to an 88 workout with boogie woogie.

Alan King, long a fave in this saloon belt, revives his imaginative monologies to produce sustained yocks. New is his brief roasting of the gyrations of Elvis Presley ("... he's the only man in America who wears out his clothes from the inside"), while the remainder of his act leans on his gems about the Vegas gambling, urban life, television and his classic discourse on domestic problems.

Don Kirk's big voice and Mary Menzies' crisp terping guide Flamingoettes in opening "Reflection Waltz," a holdover from the previous show. Lou Basil's orch, augmented by a string section for the Alberghetti turn, ticks off show's score flawlessly, while the maestro himself applies a vigorous and learned baton to the more difficult passages of the Alberghetti repertoire. Duke.

Slate Bros., H'wood

Hollywood, July 18.

Eddie Barnes, Betsy Duncan, Lenny Bruce, Gil Bernal Orch (4); 2-drinks minimum.

Smack dab midway on La Cienega, busiest restaurant row anywhere, the Slate Bros. (3), comedy hoofers, have pitched their bistro on a site that La Vee couldn't cut it. From the looks of Wednesday night's (17) opening turnout and the made-over intimacy of the room seating around 150, both the potential and promise are there. Talent floored by the freres, moving in progressive fashion which stops in between, is both quantatively and qualitatively superior to any boite hereabouts in its own class. No food, only drinks. Can't compete in the commissary division but should catch the spenders after they've had their fill of calories.

To help the Slates off the ground, the Friars and their ladies turned out enmasse and as many awaited the second show outside as saw the first show inside. It posed a problem, however, for the talent. A tougher audience rarely assembles, stags and roasts excepted, and some of the performers were hard put to rise above the babble of tongues and give evidence of not being out of their class. Comic Lenny Bruce felt it deepest and couldn't raise more than a titter. He needs sharper material and shouldn't try to get laughs reading behind a newspaper. (Bruce departed after one night amid conflicting reports on whether it was voluntary or involuntary.)

Eddie Barnes, a saloon singer from the Florida resorts, is a natural for this layout. With the pixie phizz of an Abe Schiller, he gives off with straight songs while rapping the keys feverishly if not artistically. Gil Bernal is on the stand with three sidemen and aside from his own saxing takes a turn at song impressions, his best being Billy Daniels. Betsy Duncan, a redhead with the sweet face of Shirley Temple, is a pleasant singer but should update her repertoire. For a late drop-in it should be a popular rendezvous for the rounders. Helm.

Black Orchid, Chi

Chicago, July 16.

Sallie Blair (4), Paul Gray, Joe Parnello Trio; $1.50 cover.

One of the largest ensembles ever to crowd onto the vest pocket Black Orchid stage opened to only a slightly larger head-count at the tables. Headliner Sallie Blair has been a largely unknown quantity in Chi, while Paul Gray has not appeared at the Orchid since this bistro changed hands.

Miss Blair brings three of her own musicians to back her, along with two members of Joe Parnello's house trio. The wide-eyed thrush scores a hit with sultry pipings, dynamic, animated and free from harsh vocal and facial contortions. This brightly garbed eyeful sings with a housewarming abandon similar to that of Eartha Kitt. She overworks a few mannerisms by the end of her turn, and softens the enthusiasm she sparks at the beginning. A few less trills and growls wouldn't hurt this girl a bit. Her arrangement of "Old Black Magic" becomes a meaningless potpourri of tunes without any connection, and it hardly makes a fitting encore. Thrush has personality and class that shows through when she gives it a chance. A little pruning should heighten this turn considerably.

Gray ad libs on his life and hard times as a comic to hold his audience for 35 minutes. He keeps the house relaxed, but the effective quips are too widely spaced for a really tight act, and the response fades before it has something to grow on. The straightfaced humorist, who occasionally lapses into a warm clownish expression, adds a couple of songs to his free-form routine that serve him well.

Larry Storch and Abbey Lincoln move in Aug. 8. Leva.

El Rancho, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, July 19.

Joe E. Lewis, Roberta Sherwood, Nejla Ates, Renee Molnar Dancers (11), Dick Rice Orch (11); produced by Tom Douglas; $3 minimum.

Joe [illegible] hose name is synono[illegible] Rancho Vegas, is back [illegible] eeks of hookey at Lak[illegible] s got his usual warm [illegible] mitting, and table-pc[illegible] m first-nighters and is su[illegible] o keep the room jammed at each show during his stint which lasts through Sept. 3. (He then strays for a while before returning at Christmas.) Lewis' very funny parodies, masterfully assisted by 88er Austin Mack, include a brand new one, "Is There A Lawyer In The House?" Top yocks reward his gag, "They were going to do my life on Playhouse 90, but when they got through cleaning it up, nothing was left but a spot announcement."

Roberta Sherwood's presence on the bill makes this a double-barreled attraction. Sans mike, she makes her entrance from audience singing "Love Is A Many Splendored Thing," and immediately captures attention and appreciation of bistroites. With her own unique charm, she offers such numbers as "Always," "Who's Going To Be My Sunshine?," "You're Nobody Till Somebody Loves You," "Mary," "Marianna, Nina" (in Italian), "Bill Bailey" and her trademark, "Up Lazy River." Miss Sherwood accompanies herself with her now-famous battered cymbal which she swats with a drum brush, and gets topnotch assistance from Red Newmark at the piano, and Ernest DeLorenzo, guitar.

More icing is added to the cake by Nejla Ates, the exotic Turkish undulator who slithers down a rope onto a stage full of dancing girls. Not only does the scantily-clad Miss Ates demonstrate muscles tuned to the tempo of the music, she chirps "Embraceable You" and chats with the assemblage in both Turkish and English. Duke.

Harrah's, Lake Tahoe

Lake Tahoe, July 20.

Louis Prima, Keely Smith, with Sam Butera & The Witnesses, Bel-Aire Trio; $2 minimum.

This highpowered act, now termed a "lounge act" in the trade, has to do a slightly different job here under slightly different circumstances. Louis Prima and Keely Smith take over for six hours of 45-minute stints in Harrah's theatre-restaurant, starting at 1 a.m. The night shift begins shortly after the curtain is drawn on the final "early shows" of the evening.

So (1) it really isn't a lounge at all in which Prima and Miss Smith work. And (2) as far as Harrah's is concerned, and the fans too, this isn't a room one drifts in and out of for cocktails. This is another show, with a full room for each set.

The unusual arrangement pays off in all-night crowds. The 10-week stand, with another four weeks to go is in the midst of Tahoe's big summer season.

Featuring everything from Prima's own familiar high-pitched vocals, Miss Smith's deadpan plus her delightful chanting, Sam Butera's wild saxing, Jimmy Blount's clean, smooth trombone, and Bobby Morris, exciting drum whipping, the stanzas are mainly loud—a proved remedy for late-night lethargy.

Comedy is all the intimate type—joking among the crew members, with Prima and his wife riding each other's mannerisms. Newcomers are not hep immediately to the bored, nose-rubbing, eye-scratching nonchalance of Keely Smith and Prima lets them discover it for themselves. And his missus, apparently fed up with Prima's prancing and jumping, only points up this facet of the leader's personality.

Butera, who never opens his eyes in his gymnastic saxing or singing, is the wildest member of the crew, while Blount blows up a storm with "Blow, Red, Blow." Drummer Bobby Morris is spotlighted most on "Sing, Sing, Sing," eventually dropping the sticks and working with fingers to a gradually diminishing tapping. Pianist Willie McCumber takes up the trumpet to add more brass if the occasion calls for it, and bassman Tony Liuzza slaps the almost continuous beat into the group.

Credited with starting the lounge trend, Prima and his crew evidently are going to retain their place among the top. Their flashy, free-for-all fun, with some driving music, has an important place and a unique position on the nitery circuit.

The Bel-Aire Trio, filling in between Prima stints, is hardly expected to keep the room full, but they nevertheless provide pleasant enough pop vocals, and instrumentals.

Earlier show stars Sarah Vaughan, a definite click in this room, a highly improved funnyman in Will Jordan, and the charming little pooch "Nicky," who belongs to Jay Nemeth. Del Courtney has the house band chores here until late August. Mark.

Beverly Hills, Newport

Newport, Ky., July 19.

Sue Carson, Rusty Draper, Del Ray, Donn Arden Dancers (10), John Juliano, Gardner Benedict Orch (10), Jimmy Wilber Trio, Larry Vincent; $3 minimum, $4 Sat.

Another topnotch floorshow for Greater Cincy cafe society has been assembled for this two-framer by John Croft, talent handicapper for northern Kentucky's lush Beverly Hills. Variety lineup is co-headlined by Sue Carson, "the sophisticated imp," and Rusty Draper, a trusty troubadour, and for good measure has Del Ray, a young man of many tricks.

Miss Carson, trim blue-eyed brunet and sweet in a cerise chiffon gown, surprises with clever "naughty nice" material which she sells 100%. Enlivens a 35-minute route with songs and satire of teenagers and the smart set. Rings the gong with mimes of Pearl Bailey, Lena Horne and Billy Eck. an Edward R. Murrow interview.

A first-time visitor, Draper piles up rooters in a jiffy with personality, neat appearance and his distinctive delivery of songs and fast handling of electric guitar and uke. Racks up biggest applause on "Guitar Boogie" and his identifying "Freight Train."

Del Ray's 17-minute magic cycle puzzlers include gloved card shuffling, endless production of lighted cigarets, radar gimmicks and his trademark drinking toy bear, Butch. Adds to his local popularity. Andrew Sisters head the show opening Aug. 2. Koll.

Lou Walters Says It With 'Ziggy' For Final Fling at Latin Quarter

With the present show at the Latin Quarter, an era comes to a close. Lou Walters, associated with this venture in partnership with E. M. Loew, leaves that outfit after 15 years, to go into business for himself in both New York and Miami Beach.

The Latin Quarter and Lou Walters have been virtually synonymous. It's been an association that has profited both the Latin Quarter, Broadway and Walters. The Stem has been enriched with a lot of tourists since the preem of this spot. Walters' brand of showmanship and Loew's backing have constituted a parlay that changed the flow of nitery traffic in New York City. The spot was the scene of a batch of successive failures. Not long before Walters and Loew came in, the site housed George White's Gay White Way and prior to that the Cotton Club had moved in from Harlem to try its luck on Broadway.

The new show is an appropriate swan song for Walters at Broadway's Latin Quarter. It's a modernized cafe version of "The Ziegfeld Follies" which he presented during the winter season at the Miami Beach edition. As a result of its long Florida run, it's come into New York in an unusual state of smoothness. In the production numbers, the routines have been ironed out so that they run with precision and ease. The production singing, is by Bob Kennedy abetted by Gillian Gray and they have a lot of good numbers to work with, most being those from the various editions of "Follies." The music, of course, has never gone out of circulation and some of the presentations constiute a recollection of the old master.

Latin Quarter, N. Y.

Lou Walters production of "The Latin Quarter Follies," with The Szonys (2), Morlidor Trio, Jack Durant, Debonairs (5), George Matson, Bob Kennedy, Gillian Gray, Line, Jo Lombardi Orch, Buddy Harlowe Trio; choreography & staging, Mme, Natalie Komerova; costumes, Freddie Wittop; $6 minimum.

While the production went off excellently, some last-minute patching had to be done, to keep the show up to the usual LQ quality. On the opening night (18), the female member of Francois & Giselle Szony contracted an eye ailment and couldn't appear. It also occurred to Walters that a mite of comedy wouldn't be amiss in this proceeding and he held over Jack Durant for an additional period. Of courses, with the Szonys, one of the better ballet dance turns, the layout will have a stronger keystone. But even without them, the show can stand on its own and still provide an aura of fullbodied entertainment.

Newcomers here are the Molidor Trio, comprising two girls and a lad in a golliwog getup. The male in the rag doll outfit seemingly has a boneless body. He's contorted in all directions and is able to stand on his feet following the manipulations by his amazon coworkers. They get excellent appreciation.

Another of the turns, the debonairs, now down to five boys, similarly get a hot mitt with their interpretation of the mechanical age. They've been here on several previous occasions and click with their usual efficacy.

Also on the holdover side is George Matson, the disk pantomimist with a laugh-getting gallery of femme characters. Durant constitutes the other major holdover. The pairing of Chickie James and Simon McQueen as the twin emcees is a picturesque part of the show. These two femmes, despite the masculine tone of their names, come out nuder and nuder with each successive announcement. At show caught, it did happen—one of the girls spilled over completely.

The line routines are produced by Mme. Natalie Komerova and they fill the floor nicely. The costumes by Freddie Wittop are imaginative and the proceedings come across entertainingly. The Jo Lombardi orch showbacks with authority and the Buddy Harlowe Trio reliefs.

With this layout, Walters makes a strong exit. It's unlikely that this brand of entertainment will hit Broadway for some time. The production chores following this show will be helped by Donn Arden, who last produced in the N.Y. area at the now defunct Bill Miller's Riviera, Ft. Lee, N.J.

Walters plans to come back to to the N.Y. nitery scene. He's mulling a new location, and thus he'll continue to be an entity in the Manhattan cafe orbit. He'll also open a night club in Miami Beach on the site of the old Copa City and which will be called Cafe de Paris. However, the bulk of the Broadwayites mourn the fact that the Latin Quarter and Lou Walters are no longer together. It was a winning parlay in the amusement industry. Jose.

LQ Staff's Kudos For Lou Walters

At a party given for Walters Monday (22) following the late show he was feted by the LQ staff. Walters said he was leaving a healthy institution, and that institutions have a way of having the times pass them by. He would rather go out with the Latin Quarter on top. However, he promised to be back one of these days on Broadway, a statement which started a wave of speculation in the audience as to the possible location.

The LQ already has a leasehold on the across-the-street spot which last operated as Bop City and which, in its day, was called the Hurricane, Zanzibar, Vanity Fair, Harem, etc. The old Iceland will now provide competition to the LQ when the Old Roumanian moves there from its present downtown location in October. The only other site in the area is ex-Diamond Horseshoe in the Paramount Hotel which made a lot of money for Billy Rose.

The informal shindig had Joey Adams tastefully emceeing, and brought up acts including George De Witt, Lynn Christie, Sid Gould & Ralph Young, Jane Kean, Yasuko. Daily Mirror columnist Lee Mortimer almost broke down in saying his farewell, and World-Telly columnist Frank Farrell also spoke.

Probably the most heartfelt tributes came from the staff. Gigi Ancona, the LQ maitre for many years, was too emotionally overcome to complete more than a couple of sentences. Eddie Risman, associated with Walters for many years, said that a part of his heart goes with Walters, and one of the waiters, in a thick Slavic accent, provided a touch of old world courtliness in declaiming his farewell. Busboys, stagehands, musicians and the chorus girls were represented by various gifts.

In his finale, Walters said, "I leave with no regret. I sold only because I wished to sell. I am interested in show business and I want to see, in my own way, what the stage can do to take people out of themselves. I'll be back one of these days."

Palmer House, Chi

Chicago, July 16.

Trio Shmeed, Professor Backwards, Bob De Voye Trio, Ben Arden Orch (10); $2 cover.

The Empire Room's plush settings are well suited for production turns, and two new ones to the room, Trio Shmeed and Bob De Voye Trio, fit aptly. Professor Backwards (Jimmy Edmundson) is back on familiar ground here. The current show is solid enough for the Loop's biggest hotel room, but the spark that somewhere in the show stimulates a burst of spontaneous applause is lacking.

Trio Shmeed, two brothers with French accents and a blonde sister who is heard continually through the 30-minute turn but only on the yodels, voice their way through r&r, calypso and dixieland in a unique treatment of yodelling and close harmonies brought from Switzerland. Most of the material is specially composed or arranged. A few French and German songs complete the bill. One of the brothers spends a few minutes at the piano and clarinet and would be welcomed back for more of the same.

Patter between numbers is fast and generally lively, while the choreo is smooth and varied. The two gents are garbed in the festive colored and ornate vests and trousers representative of the Alpine natives, while the girl appears in contrasting colored dresses.

Professor Backwards works through a comic routine of philosophic pretentions, warming his audience for well handled feats of

New Acts

ROBERTA MACDONALD
Songs
15 Mins.
Le Cupidon, N. Y.

Roberta MacDonald, now auditioning the nitery field, is a fugitive from legit. She indicates that she has the makings of a cafe singer. Her approach to her chores is direct. She has a forceful way of singing without obviously punching and shows an attractive personality.

Miss MacDonald essays a wide variety of tunes in a session that indicates her durability on the floor. She has a series of offbeat songs along with an occasional tune with just enough indigo to provide spice. Miss MacDonald still needs experience in this field, but she can ultimately become eligible for the hotel circuit. Jose.

LOS MARTIN (3)
Juggling
8 Mins.
Palace, N.Y.

An Argentine import, Los Martin is a razzle-dazzle male juggling turn tossing a variety of objects about for spectacular results. Fast paced throughout, they manipulate Indian club whilst exchanging headgear and knock the hat off a femme assistant via some speedy club tossing.

Their piece de resistance comes in the finale when the pair don blindfolds and what appear to be asbestos suits to unerringly toss several blazing torches back and forth with nary a miscue. A turn with a wealth of visual appeal, Los Martin have a wide horizon on vaude, niteries and tv. Gilb.

SYD & PAUL KAYE
Comedy
35 Mins.
Chaudiere, Ottawa

Unlike many imported acts, Syd & Paul Kaye use comedy material and business that sits happily with customers on this continent. From England, where they played top spots, they show little evidence of the "music hall" humor so many British comics exhibit. Their material is clicko and they collect heavy guffaws and solid mitting throughout.

Staging is good and the duo works hard to sell the mixture of gab, acro, chant, terps and gimmicks they knit into a strong session good for niteries, stage and television. Gorm.

Fred Allen

York, my present home, and Massachusetts fighting over my estate when I am gone, and right now I'm a fugitive from rigor mortis.

"I earned my money in public when the lights were up. I can't make a living now in Massachusetts. I can make more money catching runaway horses in Mattapan (Boston suburb) than in show business here. There isn't any show business in Boston any more."

When Long tried to persuade Allen to retain his residence in Massachusetts because he was a credit to the state, the comedian said: "I suppose if a person was out of Massachusetts and his mind wandered, you'd tax him. I don't ever intend to come back to Boston in this life. I may in some other life come back as a reincarnation, possibly as James Michael Curley."

That ended Allen's status as a citizen of Massachusetts. He had been a legal resident until 1947, and in 1949, came to Boston for the highly publicized visit with Long.

The comedian, whose real name was John F. Sullivan, and who died March 17, 1956, never lived in Illinois, but the state inheritance tax was filed in Cook County because of property he owned there. Allen left his estate in trust to his widow, Portland Hoffa. His will was filed probate in New York.

Allen evidently realized that if he had continued to keep legal residence in his native state, Boston would have gotten more out of his estate than his wife.

Estate Put at $1,341,421

Chicago, July 23.

An inheritance tax return filed with the Cook County (Ill.) clerk calculated the estate of late radio-tv comedian Fred Allen at $1,341,421. Though Allen's will was filed in New York City, the inheritance return was filed here because Allen owned three pieces of Illinois property valued at $62,982. It was filed under the comic's real name, John F. Sullivan.

Allen left his entire estate in trust for his widow, Portland Hoffa, who frequently appeared on his radio shows. Federal inheritance tax on Allen's estate was $141,411.

Bob Hope

"I Found Grace in the Eyes of the Lord." Fisher, who flew in from a Monte Carlo gala (which the Rainiers attended) did "Around the World," "Want to Go Where You Go," "Cindy" and participated in a "Sheik" parody with Hope as the relentless monarch and Miss Miller as the captured infidel.

Miss Miller on her own did "Too Darned Hot" and number with Hope in which he wants to soft-shoe to "Tea for Two" while she wants to cha-cha-cha. Marie McDonald wowed 'em, in golden evening gown, with "Could Have Danced All Night" and "Wrong Time." There was another Casbah skit with Hope as the powerful badman who controls everything including U.S. army, in which Miss McDonald did Mata Hari, FBI agent, and with Crosby as officer and Caroline Brooks as B-girl. Gen. Lewis L. Mundell, commander of post, came on to thank performers in the finale.

Sylvian Taplinger, agent for Timex, flew from N.Y. to inspect show which Mort Lockman directed.

'Little' Lindy's

to the opening of the new restaurant and the switch of Leo Lindy's (ne Lindenman) attention to that spot.

During the prohibition era, Lindy's was a dry spot strictly. However, the most notorious mobsters of that era used to meet and eat at Lindy's. Later, the gambling element also showed themselves partial to Lindy's food. In recent years, the music publishers, many of them located across the street in the Brill Bldg., have been the dominant element during the luncheon hours.

Over 30 waiters and cooks were given notice last week. It's understood that the lease on the spot ran until next spring, but steady losses led to the decision to close now.

The founders of the original Lindy's were, besides Leo Lindy, Joe Kramer (whose son Jack Kramer still has a share of the operation); Howie Horowitz (who later was represented in the Broadway sector with his Howie's restaurant), and Mannie Kalish.

Brando Incident

entire pot of hot water over the front of his trousers—and was obviously in tremendous pain.

He leaped from the chair and grabbed a siphon de l'eau—seltzer bottle to us kids—dropped his pants right in the middle of the bar—and proceeded to douse the burned area with the cold bottle of seltzer. Fortunately he was wearing shorts, but anyway there were shocked and amazed "how could he do a thing like that?" expressions all over the room.

Brando required medical attention (he later had to enter the American Hospital, at Neuilly, near Paris—ed.)—and meanwhile back at the Prince de Galles the Americans from Hollywood reunion in Paris came to an abrupt end.

So this is what happens when good friends get together in Gay Pareeee. However, what the heck do you expect when an American orders tea in Paris!! Better the French wine industry doesn't hear of this! Robert B. Weiss.

Night Club Revues

chalk and blackboard. The drawling professor gets his heftiest response on this bit and varies it with a reverse rendition of "Happy Birthday" and some spontaneous dismemberment of the English language, all well received.

Bob De Voye, formerly a member of house booker Merriel Abbott's dancers here, returns now with his own terp trio. The male members of the group work with top precision to keep the strikingly featured femme in a classy series of aerial maneuvers. Act gets a warm response for grade A smoothness of execution. No frills or flash on this act, just class.

Replacing Charlie Fisk's house band is Ben Arden's group featuring a quartet of strolling violinists. The emphasis on strings rather than brass makes for more relaxed listening, but the strolling foursome could be better spotted so as not to interrupt the dance music. The fiddles, incidentally, are American-made Fawicks, being used for the first time by a pops band. Sound of the band is well balanced for this room and the general response opening night was good. Hildegarde comes in Aug. 8. Leva.

Trinidad Yacht Club (Port-of-Spain)

Port-of-Spain, July 15.

Jean Coggins & Her Trinidadians (10); $1 cover.

This sophisticated song-and-dance troupe is killing the customers who flock ashore from the Alcoa cruise ships on their swing around the Indies and South America. Troupe studied under Bosco Holden, brother of Geoffrey, who scored in the recent TV show, "The Bottle Imp." If audience response is any criterion, the Trinidadians would be top crowd-pleasers in any Las Vegas or New York boite.

They do torrid terping in authentic island costumes in two numbers, the "Beguine" and the "Shango." With nothing but drums they shake the rafters with a calypso mambo, and a really wild clambake called the "Wake," which just about hypnotizes the islandhoppers. Team climaxes their evening-long stint with the Trinidadian rage, the "Limbo."

This is a dance that has to be seen to be believed. Each dancer in turn calypsos up to a bar which is, at first, about a foot from the floor. Then bending backwards, he has to dance under the bar without touching it or falling on his spinal cord. The bar is successively lowered for each dancer until the "Limbo" champion of Trinidad, Henry Trim, goes under a bar that is only seven inches off the floor. This gives the act a smash close.

Troupe operates with a Trinidadian band for Yacht Club shows, but have tux and will travel sans rhythm section. A topline floor show in every respect. Arch.

Gatineau Club, Ottawa

Ottawa, July 19.

Fred Barber, Ann Nichols, Barry Dale, Graig-Daye Dancers (6), Champ Champagne Orch (8); $1 admission.

Except for chorus line, house band and chanting emcee, it's two acts that manage to keep the current (to July 25) Gatineau Club show on a high standard throughout. Billtopped is Fred Barber, standout impressionist, who fills his 36 minutes with more than 25 apings, ranging from Como, Godfrey, Groucho, Sinatra, Lanza, Laine, Eckstine, others, to Martin & Lewis in chant and Liberace as a victim of a Senate investigating committee. Barber never permits his mimicry, singing or gabbing to be sloppy or loose. His performance is consistently high-level and continually interrupted by applause.

Ann Nichols takes over the Gatineau's big floor in a single that showcases her abilities as terper, 88er, drummer and some warbling. Femme works hard and gets big results, tapping while keyboarding, doing a challenge drum bit with the house drummer and a rock 'n' roll item in canary and tap with a prop guitar.

Craig-Daye girls open three new routines in clicko costumes that are lavish and spectacular and in excellent taste and smart design. Barry Dale exhibits nice pipes in a brief (seven-minute) solo item, also chanting with the line and emceeing the show. Champ Champagne house band showbacks neatly and plays for dancing. Gorm.

Music Hall, N. Y.

First four days (18-21) of the Music Hall's new show employed the U.S. Air Force's golden anniversary as a fulcrum for a spirited session. Layout is characteristically titled "Blue Yonder" and pretty nearly sends there, at least in the case of USAF's Drum & Bugle Corps, which, in a resounding medley, blasts them out of their chairs. Maybe it was the acoustics, but surely no hearing aid was needed for the workouts directed by Lt. Edwin Daugherty and T/Sgt. Truman Crawford. Of higher "commercial" stature is the Air Force's Ceremonial Drill Team with S/Sgt. Vergil E. Hankins riding herd. Group is snappy, precise and right on the ball in handling the polished bayonets while on the drill. It's a martial spectacle. Serving further to carry out the flighty theme is a replica of a Wright Model B Plane of 1907 vintage (the country's first military plane) planted right onstage. Here, the Hall's Glee Club provides a suitable motif, there's a trumpet solo by ASAF'er Harold Groff Jr., and tenor George Sawtelle sings the quasi-hymnal "The Eyes of God," new tune by the Hall's Al Stillman and cleffing partner Robert Allen.

In "Outer Space," Conrad Ludlow fronts the Ballet Corps in a spritely number. In the opener three pegs ahead, Raymond Paige takes the Symphony Orchestra through an overture labelled "Jet Flight," a new work by Rayburn Wright. There's a couple of spotted "At Ease" comedy numbers in Wes Harrison, with skillfully done sound effects from the beat of horses to the drones of planes, and George Carl, rubber-legged eccentric dancer who ends off by practically walking on his knees (he's actually on his toes and heels).

The Rockettes steal the show—they usually do—as dancing WAFs in their feets of derring-do-it-yourself, directed by Emilia Sherman. Show's finale is a tremendous tableau combining the USAF troupes and all mh hands and introducing planes as accompaniment on a side screen. This is a colorful finale. In between, the Hall makes with the by-now traditional steam curtain effects, rear-screen projection and phosphorescent costumes. The technical advisor was Capt. Bruce McCamish, USAF. Trau.

Queen's, Blackpool

Blackpool, Eng., July 16.

James Brennan presentation, with Vic Oliver, Anne Shelton, Terry Hall, Jimmy Clitheroe, Bob Hammond's Cockatoos, Musical Elliotts (3), Jimmy Currie's "Waterfalls of Scotland," Vanda Vale, 16 Nap Hand Lovelies, Jack Walker Orch.

Vic Oliver, longtime vaude comedian on the U.K. beat, is headliner in this holiday layout with Anne Shelton, established English thrush. Combo, while offering little new or novel, is a strong one, backed by some of the surest of vaude acts.

Oliver, using familiar fodder, and aided in sketches by Vanda Vale, David Ludman and Betty Foe, pleases outfronters. He opens his first bit with screen slides tilting comedy-wise at his own babyhood and youth. Also, goes serious with piano item, Peggy Thompson vocalizing "Ave Maria" in luminous setting.

Miss Shelton, blonde chirper, with Johnny Spence at the ivories, selects fave tunes like "When I Fall In Love," "Around The World" and "St. Theresa of the Roses" for good audience reaction. Gal winds on a rousing note with a toast to "Absent Friends."

Terry Hall scores with young and older customers in skillful vent work, using his tv puppet "Lenny the Lion," and exits to strong palming. Jimmy Clitheroe, diminutive comedian, injects local flavoring with North-of-England comedy, impersonating the irrepressible, impish small-boy of most households; he has Bert Lindon as foil. Musical Elliotts, father, mother and daughter trio, work their familiar musical-cum-comedy stint.

Bob Hammond makes his white cockatoos ring bells, play on a seesaw and fire cannons in novel specialty, garnering some of the show's top mitting. First-half finale is "Aquascope," a reproduction; via a Jimmy Currie water device, of a roaring Scottish waterfall, with pipers, drummers and chorines marching down through the imaginary glen as gallons of water pour down into below-stage tanks. Gord.

Palace, N. Y.

Tokayer Troupe (5), Donna Grescoe, Roy Douglas & Dori, Los Martin (3), Milt Douglas with Priscilla, Bob Whalen, Patrice Helene & Jan Howard, Pat Rooney Sr., Nick Francis House Orch; "Gun Glory" (M-G), reviewed in current issue of VARIETY.

Pat Rooney Sr. headlines the bill this week and he can do no wrong. He struts, softshoes and clogs with an energy and abandon that belie his years. Reprised are his familiar "Daughter of Rosie O'Grady" routine and his takeoff on Joe Frisco imitating Rooney, among others. It's a nostalgic windup to the eight-act sesh that registers handsomely on the applause meter.

In addition to Rooney, familiar faces dominate the layout with exception of Los Martin, a male juggling duo who are reviewed under New Acts. Tokayer Troupe, Danish teeterboard turn, click neatly as the opener via their triple somersaults off the seesaw plus a multi-somersault into a basket chair aloft.

Violinist Donna Grescoe deftly handles her instrument in a coupla classical numbers and wraps up her stint to good returns with a highly animated "Chicken Reel." Vet ventriloquist Roy Douglas follows in the trey with some amusing banter with dummy Eddie Echo and femme assistant Dori. His forte is a duet with the alter ego. He elicits good mitts.

Milt Douglas and Priscilla, back for the umpteenth time, are still making with the rapid-fire patter with a Western Union counter as a prop. Their material remains basically the same, but Douglas' fine timing and nonchalant delivery plus the peppy assist of his femme partner make this a brisk comedy turn.

Bob Whalen, an Irish tenor whose voice is perfect for such ould sod ditties as "Did Your Mother Come from Ireland?", that one up in favor of more contemporary airs. Best of his numbers is "Street Where You Live," nicely sold and earning plaudits.

Satirical ballroom team of Patrice Helene & Jan Howard wham 'em with their terp takeoffs. Their "Slaughter on 10th Ave." bit is particularly effective with the turn's depiction of rock 'n' roll characters. Some of Miss Helene's lines, however, are a bit too risque for this house which has a family trade clientele.

Nick Francis' house band backs the show nicely. Gilb.

Central Pier, Blackpool

Blackpool, Eng., July 23.

Morecambe & Wise, Joan Turner, Kenny Baker, Dennis Spicer, 3 Deuces, Maureen Rose, Eddie Grant, Three Belles, 8 Orchid Room Lovelies.

Eric Morecambe & Ernie Wise, quick-gabbing comics, head this stronger-than-usual vaude layout. Pair click strongly with well-timed crosstalk. Morecambe, bespectacled comedian, adds to pace effect with almost breathless gasp. Duo have familiar but surefire fodder that garners maximum yocks in intimate-style seafront vaudery.

Joan Turner, comedienne-impressionist, ranges through operatic tunes to low comedy. Exits to solid palming.

Kenny Baker, established trumpet player, scores with "Basin Street Blues" and also his own version of "Carnival of Venice."

One of show's strongest items is by the Canadian all-male harmony group, "The Three Deuces, who register with top impact via numbers like "Love Is Many-Splendored Thing," "Sit Down, You're Rockin' the Boat," and particularly "Rain, Rain, Rain." Ray Marlowe, act's lead singer, is heard to top advantage in "Ole Man River," and trio wind with "When the Saints Go Marching In," descending into auditorium for maximum results.

Dennis Spicer adds to layout's individual strength with a polished vent offering, scoring with "What Is A Dummy?" Three Bells are moppet femmes who have some distance to go before making the vocal trio grade, but youthfulness is on their side. Eddie Grant has comedy potential, and Maureen Rose is pleasing chirper who spoils act with baby-talking announcements. The eight Orchid Room Lovelies are decorative line. Gord.

Roxy, N. Y.

"Fiesta at the Roxy," starring Maria Antinea, Mario Alvarez and Enrique Montoya, with Nancy Lee Parker, Manuel Del Toro, Virginia Morrison, Roxyettes, Skating Squires, Roxy Orch conducted by Robert Boucher; produced by Robert C. Rothafel; choreography and staging, Anolyn Arden; musical director, Boucher; scenic designer, Bruno Maine; costume designer, Winniford Morton; "An Affair to Remember" (20th), reviewed in VARIETY July 17, '57.

The Roxy is slipping on its artificial ice this session. It's just that some production themes aren't particularly suited for blader treatment. "Fiesta at the Roxy" falls into that category. The bullfight motif of this Spanish-styled offering takes an incongruous look, with the spotlighting of skating matadors, toreros and other Latino types.

The show is best when it switches to shoes and from production numbers to individual specialties. That's when the three south-of-the-border headliners come into play. They're Maria Antinea, Mario Alvarez and Enrique Montoya. Miss Antinea, top-billed on the program, sings several numbers, mostly in Spanish. An occasional English lyric is tossed in, but not very clearly. Nevertheless, she registers effectively with a vigorous performance and smart delivery.

It's Alvarez, though, steals the show. His energetic flamenco footwork is strictly standout. His youthful appearance and virile manner also impress as being a natural femme-pleaser. Montoya, a singer-guitarist, also does a good job, particularly in one number where he's backed by six colorfully-garbed dancing girls.

But, once back on the ice, the show loses appeal except, possibly, for those who just enjoy watching skaters whirling and gliding regardless of the situation. On that count, the skating Roxyettes and Squires are in satisfactory form. Winniford Morton's costume designs are attractive, especially in the vividly colored capes used to dramatize certain dances.

Bruno Maine's single set, depicting the entrance to a bullfight arena, is satisfactory, while the orchestra, batoned by Robert Boucher, does okay on a "Fiesta Flamenco" overture and the balance of the approximate 45-minute show. The running time is adequate considering that the film lasts nearly two hours. Jess.

Hippodrome, Blackpool

Blackpool, Eng., July 23.

Ken Dodd, Jill Day, Stan Stennett, Les Marcellis (2), 2 Pirates, Gordon Needham, Michael & Shirley Davis, Lisbeth Lennon, The Rockettes, Royal Singers (6), Maurice Bromley Orch.

Ken Dodd, eccentric, toothy English comedian, scoring with zany mock-singing act, and Stan Stennett, goofy-style comedian from Wales, are the two main funnymen in this summer layout, but clash by reason of style similarities. It is bad casting for both to headline in same show.

Dodd has much comedy potential, using his barbed-wire hairstyle and rabbit teeth for yocks, and registering in travesties of "Road to Mandalay" and "Drinking Song." Stennett tilts at horse-opera humor with goofy cowboy offering, and plays variety of instruments. He has talent but is badly placed in current layout.

Jill Day, blonde looker, has eye-catching appeal and exudes s.a. in attractive setting, with asset of costly shimmering gowns. In well-chosen songalog she gives out pleasantly in such tunes as "Love Is The Thing," "Rock-A-Billy," "Mr. Wonderful" and "True Love," and also scores with "Singin' the Blues" and, to wind act, "Somewhere in the Great Beyond." Distaffer has improved considerably in confidence and presentation since last time in this show biz town.

Marcellis, Continental male twosome, offer strong acro-slapstick, using chairs and table for somersaults and falls. Two Pirates contribute their familiar pseudo-acro offering, diminutive member of act being hoisted aloft via wires while posing as acrobat. Their act at show caught was overlong, and they also were featured too frequently elsewhere. Michael & Shirley Davis grace the scene with terping, Lisbeth Lennon is a cheerful soubret, and the six Royal Singers showback with male harmony. The Rockette girls form the line, and Maurice Bromley batons the orch.

Sketch stints and the giveaway spot (with members of audience being invited onstage to win prizes in a nightly quiz) are handled by Gordon Needham. Harry Bright has directed for Tom Arnold and Jack Taylor in somewhat disappointing layout, which is not aided by unhelpful format and acoustics of theatre, normally a cinema. Gord.

Miller & Gibson presentation of "Highlights," with Miller & Moreland, 4 Tops, Vi Kemp, Helen Wood, Leslie Scott, 2 Zephyrs, Line (10); "Hidden Guns" (Rep), reviewed in VARIETY March 7, '56.

The Central Theatre, across-the-street from the Palace, has gone on a vaude policy with a package show. Its entry into the realm of variety shows was no doubt influenced by several factors including the difficulty of getting pictures that will sell, and the word that the Palace would retire from stage-shows. Instead, the Palace is remaining on the vaude standard on a week-to-week basis, and so for the first time within many years, there is competition on the same block.

The Central's entry into vaude comes through a layout produced by Miller & Gibson, the harp and tap team. It's a plesantly gaited show which belies its low budget. This all-Negro card has a lot of good elements, with the acts having served with distinction in other situations.

The production is geared to make the most of the personnel. There's a 10-girl line with a male quartet serving to squire the girls about. The costumes may have seen better days but they are still decorative and make the show a bit more interesting.

The headliners of this bill are Flournoy Miller & Mantan Moreland, who spend a little time recalling the glories of their past, and who come out ahead with the long-distance poker game skit, which gets its quota of laughs. Olivette Miller & Bert Gibson harp and hoof with ability, and similarly make a big splash in the applause column.

There are some surprises on the bill, particularly Vi Kemp, a contortionist, who finds herself in some unbelievable predicaments with her body-bending. She gets a prolonged mitting. Another surprise is the singing of Helen Wood, who hits a wide range from pops to opera. Leslie Scott, other singer, also does well. The Four Tops back Miss Wood on one occasion, and in their own spot do well with a quiet and restrained type of singing that requires a knowledge of harmonics. The Zephyrs go into some picturesque tap formations and excel when terping in a comedy vein.

A nine-piece orch backs the show capably. Jose.

Pix 'Desk Set'

off the names of 10 of the most promising young actors on the company's lot, he'll probably be unable to name the 10 most promising young executive on the company's payroll. Unlike other industries which annually comb the college campuses for alert graduates for executive training programs, the policy of the film biz has been a hit and miss one. Very few companies scan their lists of employees to uncover promising execs to groom for moving up. Too infrequently, if an important job opens up, a company can only think in terms of an executive from another firm.

When Vogel assumed the helm of Loew's Inc., he promised a program of developing young executive talent. Since then he's been beset by a struggle for sheer maintenance of his own position.

Not only does the lack of young executive manpower show itself in the production-distribution operation, but it also manifests itself in the theatre end. Perhaps the most pressing problem faced by the theatre chains is "competent" house managers. The key word is quoted. Few young men are anxious to take on theatre managerial jobs at the present time when they can receive much higher starting compensation in other industries. Gone, too, apparently is the glamor of a generation ago.

'Thanks, Dad'

Some argue that young executive talent is plentiful but top echelon declines to provide opportunity. There is no policy respecting observation, recommendation, promotion or shifting to different departments if an opening exists. Resultantly, promising execs are left in a rut in certain jobs. They either stay there and lose morale or get out when better opportunities beckon.

Nepotism of the past and the stranglehold held by the founding fathers is sometimes blamed for the exec situation. However, with the industry undergoing revolutionary changes at the present time, these things ought to alter. There are favorable omens. The naming of Alex Harrison, a man still in his 40's, as general sales manager of 20th-Fox is pointed out. Universal perhaps has been the most active company in promoting from within the organization. For example, Universal's pub-ad department is manned by executives who are in their 30's and 40's. A majority of them have come up the ladder within the organization. Charles Simonelli, eastern pub-ad chief, started as an office boy less than 15 years ago. Ditto Herman Kass, national exploitation chief.

Another example of U's policy is the plucking of Al Mendelson from the pub-ad department, and making him assistant sales manager of United World Films, U's commercial film subsidiary. The sales manager of United World Films, Norman Glick, was manager of the Park Ave. Theatre not too many years ago. In addition, all of U's promotions in the sales department have come from within the company. Many branch and division managers were former bookers and salesmen.

U's pub-ad department follows a policy of giving its staffers added prestige and responsibility after they've been with the company for a number of years. For example, Jerry Evans was recently named eastern promotion manager and Paul Kamey was designated assistant eastern publicity director. Both posts are newly-created ones. It's felt that by moving these staffers up, it makes the transition to top posts much easier when they open up. At the same time, it gives these men added prestige outside the company and makes them available and "wanted" for important jobs outside of Universal. For exable to shift from U to the pub-ad ample, Sheldon Gunzberg was v.p. post at Walter Reade Theatres; Ed Aaronoff to publicity for MCA-TV; Maurice Segal to assistant publicity manager of United Artists, and Guy Biondi to field chief for Mike Todd's "Around the World in 80 Days."

be asking to buy American pictures. Question then arises what the U.S. industry policy should be.

Increasingly, film executives lean to the view that the Hollywood product should be shown anywhere possible; that, by indirection, it is the best propaganda weapon the country has, because—in many ways—it is also the most subtle.

Yet, it is quite certain that industry policy will be guided largely by the view of the U.S. State Department. Latter frowns on any trade with the Red Chinese.

It's felt that, if relations of some sort are established with the Reds, latter will likely follow in the pattern of the Soviet satellites in seeking contact on the "cultural" level.

There has been no known official request for American films from the Chinese Reds. There are reports, however, that sometime back some of the individual companies had nibbles from the Chinese via Hong-Kong. Several of America's allies, notably Britain, maintain diplomatic and commercial relations with the mainland Chinese.

Most International Paris Season

Also One of Best in French Capital History, But Heat Halted Summer Extension

Paris, July 16.

This has been the most international and one to the liveliest legit seasons in Paris history, but it couldn't survive one of the worst heat-waves in local annals. There had been talk of several shows trying to make a run of it through the summer, but a solid week of 90-degree weather brought the traditional rash of closings. Theatres aren't air-conditioned here, and even the hits lay off in summer.

The season was full and prosperous, one of the best since World War II, with some 65 productions, plus holdovers such as "Love of Four Colonels," Monsieur Masure," plus the Folies-Bergere and Casino de Paris shows staying on. Paris has 60 theatres, in contrast to 40 in London and about 30 in New York. Most of the local houses have been open almost constantly during the 1956-57 season.

Import-export trade took brisk things foreign was symbolized by a four-month international festival at the Sarah Bernhardt Theatre (temporarily renamed Theatre of Nations) which brought legit, opera and ballet companies from Italy, East and West Germany, England, U. S., Jugoslavia and Israel. Vivien Leigh and Shakespeare Memorial Co. in "Titus Andronicus" from England, Eugene O'Neill's "Long Day's Jounrey Into Night" (with its Broadway cast) from US, and Habimah Co. in "The Dybbuk" from Tel-Aviv.

Three American plays did fine biz all season. These three were Robert Anderson's "Tea and Sympathy" with Ingrid Bergman, William Faulkner's initial play, "Requiem for a Nun" and Tennessee Williams' "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" (which the critics nixed, but the

Equity Sets New Off-B'way Scale

Minimum salaries off-Broadway are still climbing. Under the terms of a new Actors Equity contract going into effect next Sept. 1, the wage minimum will be as high as $75 weekly for some performers. That represents a 150% increase over a $30 minimum in effect two years ago.

Last year, however, the union instituted a sliding scale minimum based on weekly grosses, and at the same time made substantial increases over the prior $30 salary requirement. The upcoming hikes effect only the larger operations and are limited to $5 in each case. Besides the boost in salaries, the union has also raised rehearsal pay $5 to $15 weekly. The rehearsal minimum was $5 two years ago.

The new contract salary minimums are as follows:

Dramatic Companies Gross	Wkly. Salary
Under $3,000	$40, no raise
$3,000-$3,500	$50, no raise
$3,500-$4,500	$65, up $5
Over $4,500	$75, up $5
Musical Companies Gross	Salary Wkly.

Claudia Cassidy Back At the Barricades For Local-Bred Chi Legit

Chicago, July 23.

Now that Chicago again has its own opera company and a first rank symphony orchestra, Chicago Tribune music and drama pundit Claudia Cassidy has returned to her old campaign for home-grown legit. She took off in a blistering attack on the theme in her regular column recently. "Broadway leftovers," she wrote, "will never take the place of culture here.

Debunking the theatre's reputation as "the fabulous invalid," Miss Cassidy rhetorically asked. "What's fabulous about theatrical invalidism when it consists for the most part of belated, rundown, miscast versions of Broadway shows, many of which were no great bargain when they were new? Our theatre is less a romantic invalid than a broken down wreck."

Pointing to the rather early expiration of "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" in what she terms "a Tennessee Williams town," she intoned, "Chicago has returned with notable disinterest the contempt in which the whole abortive booking held Chicago." She accused the Playwrights Co. of mishandling a valuable property by sending "Cat" here with "an inferior troupe" and by constantly replacing replacements with replacements.

To raise the level of legit here from the trucked in impostors" of the general "invasion of mediocrity," Miss Cassidy proposes the creation of a resident theatre, not unlike Canada's Shakespeare theatre in Stratford. "Turkeys," she says, referring to opera, "are less a sorrow, knowing that the Lyric is extending its realm of front rank opera . . . Who knows, if we had that theatre on a similar basis, it might even develop that long desired resident ballet."

The embattled reviewer for the self-styled "world's greatest newspaper" didn't mention last season's sad attempt to operate a local legit stock company at the Studebaker Theatre here. That enterprise received ample newspaper exploitation, but failed to excite sufficient patronage, and finally closed after taking a financial beating.

MEYER WEISGAL SETS 'FIRST BORN' ON B'WAY

"First Born," Christopher Fry's comedy-drama done in London during the 1955-56 season, has been optioned by Meyer W. Weisgal, who plans to present it on Broadway this winter under the sponsorship of Producers Theatre.

Weisgal's last Broadway presentation was the religious spectacle, The Eternal Road," done in 1936-37 in partnership with Crosby Gaige.

TIP Named to Rep BTA In Legit Booking Deals

TIP (Theatrical Interests Plan, Inc.) has been engaged as legit booking negotiator and consultant for Broadway Theatre Alliance, Inc., the legit booking subsidiary of Columbia Artists Management, Inc. It gets a $1,500 annual retainer plus a fee for each week's booking for each show.

As a starter, TIP is laying out the road dates for the touring company of "Auntie Mame," which is being sent out early in the fall by the firm of Charles Bowden, Richard Barr & H. Ridgely Bullock Jr., under a sub-leasing deal with Robert Fryer & Lawrence Carr, producers of the original Broadway troupe. Constance Bennett will star in the road edition.

The tour of the bus-truck version of "No Time for Sergeants," also booked by Broadway Theatre Alliance, was set before TIP was engaged for the negotiating function. However, all future tours arranged by BTA will be handled by TIP. The latter company also plans activities in producing, theatre operation and other phases of legit. It is selling common stock to the public. Ted Ritter is president of the group.

The first of the offerings, "Dial M for Murder," was put on at the Club last night (Tues.). A special theatre dinner is served at the Club prior to the performance and although the Club is a membership operation, it's open to all who want to attend the legit offerings.

In Houston, It's Merely The Air Conditioning Season for Stock Cos.

By BURT SCHORR

Houston, July 23.

This is the frenzied season for most stock managements, the period when, having brushed out the dust and cobwebs, they're frantically enticing vacationers to their guest-star packages or locally produced revivals. They're the innumerable strawhats, including both hardtop and tent, and the summer is when they have their brief time in the sun.

But for Houston's two year-around stock theatre, the Alley and the Playhouse, this is merely the time when their air-conditioning does full duty. That, plus the fact that they have no competition from touring Broadway productions, is the unique feature of Houston legit. Local playgoers aren't season-conscious—they go to the theatre all year 'round.

The 220-seat Alley Theatre, according to director Nina Vance, is financially comfortable. The 10-year-old operation grosses around $100,000 a year, although this year has been "somewhat below average." The company works under an Equity contract providing for six permanent resident actors and 50% union membership in all productions.

The 300-seat Playhouse, a few blocks away, is a relatively recent addition to the local legit scene. It has had strenuous economic upsand downs, and is currently less secure financially than the Alley. Its producer, Herbert Kramer, who has a pre-World War II European theatre background, won't discuss the spot's grosses, except to say that he is getting by without gifts, subscriptions or other form of subsidy.

As an indication of the professionalism of her venture, Mrs. Vance notes that the Alley provided about 500 weeks' employment for Equity members during the year ending last April. "Since we're required to have only six permanent resident professionals, that means we job a number of additional ones regularly," the producer says.

The Alley went Equity three years ago, which was about the last time it had to pass the hat. It lives entirely on b.o. take. A drama school it maintains, with about 90 students of all ages, is mainly "to educate a theatre audience," and brings in no revenue worth mention.

The quality level of productions at The Alley is so high that local "volunteer helpers" are not sought. They can come in as full-time Equity apprentices, however. The Alley is the only theatre in the Southwest that offers apprenticeships, one of the few in the nationoing offering them year-'round.

When The Playhouse opened under Kramer's direction, the company was almost entirely from out-of-town. Now, with one exception, the reverse is true—with many comings and goings in between. "Our audiences don't ask who's coming from New York," says Kramer, who is accustomed to tailoring scripts to suit his audience tastes. "They don't care for names, and they don't mind revised plays."

One other big factor on the local theatre scene is the nonpro musical, Theatre Inc., where "South Pacific," "Oklahoma" and "King and I" have racked up 12-15 week runs. Director Johnny George has recently brought in Christopher Hewett from New York to direct "Pajama Game," which closed last Saturday (20) after setting a house record of 10 weeks. In rehearsal under Hewett's direction is "The Boy Friend."

Encore Rebuts London Preem Boos

London, July 23.

An unusual audience demonstration at the end of the opening of "Oh, My Papa" at the Garrick last Wednesday night (17) compelled the management to raise the curtain some minutes after it had been hurriedly dropped, when boos were mixed with first-nighters' cheers.

A small gallery clique made its voices heard as the artists were taking their curtain calls and the boos came through loud and clear, despite the overwhelming cheering from the stalls and circle. After the curtain had been dropped, the stalls audience refused to leave the theatre and continued with its applause until the two principals came out to reprise the title song and then the entire company joined in to receive an uninterrupted ovation.

It is believed to be the first time that such an incident has occurred in a West End theatre on opening night.

Obviously dated, but with a curious continental charm, "Oh, My Papa" has eventually hit the West End many years after its first Swiss presentation. Jack Hylton snapped up the rights as soon as the musical was staged by the Bristol Old Vic Company a few weeks back. It should pay off without too much difficulty, but whatever success it may achieve in London would hardly be repeated on Broadway.

The production starts off with the advantage of a title song that has been popular over a considerable period and is easily the best tune in the show. As delivered by Rachel Roberts, with the support of three principal male characters, it has a distinctive zing and a surprisingly fresh appeal.

Miss Roberts also has two of the other best tunes in "The Pony Song" and "He Is My Man," while a lively contrast is provided by Laurie Payne's rendering of "Hocus Pocus." The main romantic ballad, "Our Love Will Stay This Way," is sincerely sung by Sonia Rees and Roy Skelton.

Apart from one or two changes, the cast is the same as that originally featured during the Bristol Old Vic run. Among the new elements is a warmhearted and thoroughly charming performance by Miss Rees, who acts with the right degree of naivete and has a pleasant singing voice. Skelton, another addition to the cast, sings well enough, but has an immature look.

Angela Anderson, who also joins the London cast, has a comparatively minor role as one of three aunts. Miss Roberts easily collars top acting and vocal honors and Peter O'Toole walks off with the one comedy role. Phyllida Law turns in a lively vocal performance as the cook. Laurie Payne rates for his singing, but his acting is not of matching quality.

The book is flimsy even by musical comedy standards, with a story line of even less consequence than usual. The main scene is the celebration of a 60th birthday party, to which all the family, except the black sheep, are invited. But the uninvited guest inevitably shows up in the person of a circus owner, accompanied by his new wife. A circus fantasy, in which the various relatives appear, either as clowns or animals, has a pleasantly naive appeal, but is a little on the long side. Indeed, the entire production has a leisurely style, though not out of keeping with the nature of the story or music. Myro.

Odd Man In

London, July 17.

Henry Sherek presentation of three-act (five scenes) comedy by Claude Magnier. Stars Muriel Pavlow, Donald Sinden. Derek Farr. Staged by Harold French; decor, Michael Trangmar. At St. Martin's Theatre, London, July 16 '57; $2.20 top.

Jane Maxwell	Muriel Pavlow
Mervyn Browne	Donald Sinden
George Maxwell	Derek Farr

In many ways "Odd Man In" is the legit manager's dream. A cast of only three and a simple single set mean limited operating costs, even when a trio of top local film names share starring honors. Henry Sherek can, therefore, anticipate an early payoff and a profitable run for this French comedy-farce even though the play is probably mainly suited to British tastes. Indeed, it looks a questionable proposition for transfer to the US.

A considerable amount of ingenuity, both in writing and staging, has been necessary to sustain the plot over three acts. Inevitably, there is evidence of padding, but the hard-working and resourceful players rarely miss an opportunity of extracting the maximum response. Basically, the plot is a variation on standard bedroom farce, with sufficient new twists and provocative situations to keep the action at a concentrated pitch.

The opening scene sets the pattern for the whole show. A woman living in the country takes a sleeping draught, while she's walking in her garden to give the drug time to take effect, a stranded motorist enters the cottage to phone a garage and, unwittingly helps himself to the remains of her sleeping drug. He's soon asleep on the divan and shortly later the woman returns and, in the half light, also stretches out on the divan without noticing the stranger. Her husband, returning unexpectedly to the cottage, finds them in this compromising position.

The remaining two-and-a-half acts extend the plot in various preposterous ways, but all laugh-provoking. The three stars work well and hard, but as the intruding motorist Donald Sinden easily has the most acceptable part. Derek Farr's blustering husband is in typical vein, but Muriel Pavlow doesn't too readily suggest the type of girl who would change husbands on 24 hours' acquaintanceship. Harold French's racy staging deserves full marks. Myro.

Ride a Cock Horse

Blackpool, Eng., July 10.

H. M. Tennent Ltd., Gn association with Sydney Box) presentation of two-act (six scenes) comedy, by William Rainow. Stars Wilfred & Mabel Pickles. Staged by Wallace Douglas; setting, Michael Weight. At Grand Theatre, Blackpool, Eng., July 10, '57; $1 top.

New comedy, in for a summer run at this vacation spot, is flavored largely for regional audiences. It pulls out the standard stops, and shapes as lively localized fun, with limited appeal elsewhere.

The play is a vehicle for Wilfred and Mabel Pickles, man-and-wife team who have a north-of-England reputation for their man-in-street radio and tv interviews. Pickles handles the role of a widower who is custodian of the town hall and conductor of local brass band, which is threatened by an orchestral group organized by a young schoolmaster. Complication ensue when the teacher falls in love with the bandsman's daughter.

Mrs. Pickles is relaxed and natural as the wealthy widow who finally finances the brass band after a disastrous fire has ruined its instruments and uniforms. John Gale makes a handsome young schoolmaster, and small-town characters are portrayed in good homely northern accents by Jack Howarth, Norman Bird, Allan Bracewell and Aubrey Beechan.

A scheming Welshman is overplayed by Richard Curnock, and Peter Hodgson makes fairly credible a well-meaning local simpleton. Barbara Clegg has the right lack of sophistication as the bandsman's daughter.

Wallace Douglas' direction is adequate. Michael Weight's decor catches town hall atmosphere, and the stage effects of an adjacent fire are well done. Gord.

Sammy Cahn and Jimmy Van Heusen have been signed to do the music for the legituner version of "The Captain's Paradise."

Mielziner, as Producer of 'Hunting,' Making 'Comeback' After 21 Years

Jo Mielziner doesn't think he has rocks in his head. Contrary to what some of his friends have suggested, he doesn't believe that he was nutty to branch out from scenic designing to take on the manifold headaches of being a producer. In fact, he plans to continue combining the two careers.

With "Happy Hunting" a candidate to continue on Broadway into the fall, Mielziner has two new shows on his production schedule, "Chaparral," a play by Valgene Massey, and "Dream Girl," a musical version of teh Elmer Rice comedy. His designer slate also lists those two items, plus "Square Root of Wonderful," Carson McCullers drama to be presented by Saint Subber and Figaro, Inc., and "Miss Lonelyhearts," Howard Teichmann's dramatization of a Nathaniel West story, to be produced by Lester Osterman Jr. and Alfred Glancy.

As the designer of 221 Broadway shows, including a remarkable number of Pulitzer and Drama Critics Circle prize-winners (besides having an almost unbelievable record as best-designer-of-the-season in VARIETY's annual poll of the New York drama critics), Mielziner figures he's already familiar with producer problems. Designing involves virtually all elements of the theatre, he's learned.

"I've always thought of it as 'producing' a good setting," he says. "Designing requires much more than simply creating the original painting of a stage set. Getting the sketch onto an actual stage by a given date and making it work in three dimensions requires the ability to inspire others to do their best, persuading them to accept your problem as theirs. Those are the basic qualities of a successful producer.

"The dictionary defines a theatrical producer as 'the person who exercises general supervision over

Eddie Horton, 70, Sez 'Veteran' Label Spoils Otherwise OK Reviews

Saratoga, N. Y., July 23.

Edward Everett Horton, who's been acting for 48 of his 70 years, dislikes being called a "veteran." In an interview with Martha Brooks over radio station WGY, Schenectady, during a recent guest appearance in "Reluctant Debutante" at the Spa Theatre here, the comedian complained that critics sometimes spoil an otherwise good review by using the word "veteran."

"To me," he explained, "'veteran' signifies a man who has fought in a war and is finished, a man who has had it, who is in a home." Age has no bearing in evaluating a performance, Horton said, but he quoted film actor Joel McCrea as declaring that a man of 40 shouldn't try to act like one of 20 on the stage. He is not impressed by the youthfulness of symphony conductors or actors who play Hamlet, he concluded.

Horton recalled that in his first days as an actor, while touring as a stage manager, he was told by the late star Louis Mann that the town in which they were appearing "needs a good street-sweeper and you are a natural for the role."

Jessie Matthews' Play With Ex-Husband Hale

London, July 23.

Jessie Matthews and Sonnie Hale, who were divorced in 1944 after a marriage lasting 13 years, are to do their first play together since 1939. They are co-stars in the comedy "Nest of Robins," which opens at Liverpool next Mon. (29).

Miss Matthews has just returned from a 20-month tour of Australia and South Affica.

Which Review D'ya Read In Atlantic City Press

Atlantic City, July 23.

Legit-minded readers of the Atlantic City Press pay their money and can take their choice these days. That is, for most shows at the two local strawhats the daily prints a regular morning-after review and then a keep-'em-happy re-review a couple of days later.

The angle is that the reviewers who've been assigned to cover shows at the Chelsea Playhouse, in the Chelsea Hotel, and the Gateway Playhouse in suburban Somers Point have tended to be somewhat tougher than in previous years, and there have been squawks. The sheet's editors have backed them up, but the amusement department has been assigning other staffers to do feature-review pieces to salve the strawhatters.

Maney Tells Off Nearly Everyone

Television "nauseates" legit pressagent Richard Maney. If that's hardly news to familiars of the ballyhooer for "My Fair Lady" and countless previous Broadway shows, it's at least notable that the opinion was expressed on television. It and various other outright assertions were voiced by Maney in a guest appearance last Thursday (18) on the "Home" program over NBC-TV.

Practically nobody in legit likes tv, the p.a. declared. "They loathe it, and only economic necessity forces stage actors to take video work," he said. At the mention of radio, the vet tub-thumper inquired sardonically, "What's radio?"

Television has "tremendous potential," he conceded, but argued that thus far "baseball and football are about the only things it treats properly." It hasn't figured out how to "cut" such sports events, he claimed, so it doesn't mutilate them as it does dramatic shows by cutting a fine two-hour play into a poor one-hour telecast.

Maney has a low opinion of films, too, he told "Home" hostess Arlene Francis. The screen, with its "blacklists and taboos" has little authenticity, and he has no desire to be associated with it. "In trying to please everybody, Hollywood ends by pleasing no one," he suggested.

Legit, he believes is the "only free institution in the entertainment world, with no blacklist or taboos." It is "shrinking and shriveling," he admitted, but although it may continue to contract, it will never die. "The theatre is flattered by imitation, but it can never be replaced or equalled by mechanical gimmicks and gadgetry."

The studio audience audibly enjoyed the interview, applauding and laughing at his digs at television and pictures. Miss Francis and others of the "Home" cast appeared to take it all in stride, too.

TO OFFER 'STRANGERS' FOR LONDON, THEN N.Y.

After holding the script under option for several years while the author worked on revisions, Roger L. Stevens is going ahead with a production this fall of "The Strangers," by John Hall. The play will be done in London in partnership with British producer Donald Albery. A Brodaway presentation would follow.

"Strangers" was premiered a fortnight ago by the Bristol (England) Old Vic and "The Lizard on the Rock," an earlier play by the same author, was also tried out recently by the Birmingham (England) Repertory Theatre. Hall has never had a production in London.

CONCERT AGENCY VS. LEAGUE UNIT

On the basis of expansion plans of new Broadway Theatre Alliance Inc., the legit booking field may have open competition for the first time in more than a quarter-century. Alliance is not only booking a whole season of split-weeks and one-nights, many on guarantee, for the bus-and-truck tour of "No Time for Sergeants," but is organizing local subscriptions along the lines concert organized audiences of its parent company, Columbia Artists Management.

With the demise last spring of the Shubert-controlled United Booking Office under the terms of a Government consent decree, it appeared for a time that the legit booking field would have open competition, and there was some concern in Broadway producer circles over the possibility of chaotic conditions.

The producers, acting through their organization, the League of N.Y. Theatres, set up an agency, the Independent Booking Office, with Harold Goldberg as general manager. A number of road theatre managements also set up an agency, the Legitimate Independent Theatres of North America, and the two outfits were apparently about to square off in competition. However, the League group has since absorbed LITNA, using the latter's offices at 1501 Broadway and with Goldberg heading the operation. The Shuberts have their own booking office for their own theatres.

Meanwhile, Columbia Artists Management, a major booking

In Central Park Until 1960, Say Grace-Anderson

Michael P. Grace and Chris F. Anderson, who've turned a proposed legit musical season in Central Park, N.Y., into a show business whatsis, are planning to continue their outdoor summer venture until 1960, when their "license" expires. Grace emphasized that last Sunday (12) morning in an interview by Bill Leonard on WCBS-TV's "Eye On New York."

On the same show, Joseph Papp, another Central Park producer, expressed confidence that his cuffo-admission New York Summer Shakespeare Festival can survive heartily in the outdoor location. Papp, a CBS staffer, noted that his association with the venture is essentially a "labor of love" and that $30,000 had been raised from various donors to get the enterprise going.

However, Papp tagged a shortage of funds as being responsible for his cancelling a tour of parks in the city's other boroughs and confining his activity to Central Park's Belvedere Tower area. Since the telecast, Papp has also reported that another $6,500 is needed to continue the season beyond Aug. 15.

In regard to Grace and Anderson, the continuation of their Theatre Under the Stars venture at the park until 1960 may be questionable. A court action by tent operator St. John Terrell to have their grant revoked is still pending. Another negative factor is the thus far generally unfavorable press reaction to the varied entertainment project.

Non-Pro Groups a New Market For Orphan Scripts by B'way Authors

The amateur legit circuit is opening up as a market for filed-in-the-trunk scripts by established playwrights.

The situation stems from a shortage of new plays for non-professional production. This dearth in fresh product, attributed mainly to a decreasing supply of suitable post-Broadway releases, has spurred the formation of a new firm for the specific purpose of licensing unproduced plays by recognized authors for amateur production.

The new outfit, tagged Simon's First Folio Plays, has been launched by Bernard Simon, legit pressagent and operator of Package Publicity Service, which supplies ready-to-use ballyhoo and advertising material on properties available for non-pro presentation. Simon's expansion into the playleasing field was cued by the results of a survey he conducted among the more than 4,000 of his amateur group subscribers.

The study indicated that 85% of the community and college theatres haven't enough recent Broadway-produced plays to fill their production needs each year. In line with this shortage, the non-pros also expressed willingness to produce at least one play a year that had not been given a prior Broadway outing, but had originally been intended for the Main Stem rather than the "hick section" of some amateur play catalog.

Simon had originally suggested to a conference of mid-western community theatre directors at Elmhurst, Ill., that they apply to New York play agents for scripts that weren't being picked up for Broadway presentation. He found out that this had been tried, but that the agents apparently weren't interested in handling leases running from $75-$150 each. This

Another 'Earnest' Being Readied for Tele Shot

While one musical version of Oscar Wilde's "The Importance of Being Earnest" is touring the strawhat circuit, another has been picked up by the Theatre Guild for tv production on "U. S. Steel Hour." The video edition has book and lyrics by Anne Croswell and music by Lee Pockriss. Titled "Who's Earnest," it's scheduled for Oct. 9 presentation and may be done later on Broadway by the Guild.

David Alexander has been set to direct the "Steel" presentation, which will have Martyn Green and David Atkinson in lead roles. They, as well as Alexander, Miss Croswell and Pockriss are managed by Hillard Elkins.

The current barn version of the Wilde comedy, tagged "Half in Earnest," was adapted by Britisher Vivian Ellis and stars Anna Russell.

Deborah Kerr As 'Lucrece' Costar?

London, July 23.

Deborah Kerr may make her first appearance in a speaking part on the London stage as costar with Vivien Leigh in "Pour Lucrece," Christopher Fry's adaptation of a Paris success by Jean Giraudoux. She is being sought for the role and is actively interested.

The play is being produced this fall by H. M. Tennent, in partnership with the Playwrights Co., and is slated for Broadway later with the same costars. Laurence Olivier is a possibility to direct.

Miss Kerr's only previous stage appearances in London were as a member of the ballet ensemble at Sadler's Wells in 1938 and subsequently as a walkon in outdoor Shakespeare productions in Regent's Park. Since becoming a name in British and Hollywood films she starred on Broadway in the original production of "Tea and Sympathy."

'ZULEIKA' FOR GLOBE? YEN AUDREY HEPBURN

"Zuleika," the current London musical version of Max Beerbohm's old satirical novel, "Zuleika Dobson," may be the opening show at the reconverted Globe Theatre, N. Y. The house, recently purchased by Producers Theatre (Roger L. Stevens, Robert Whitehead and Robert W. Dowling) from the Brandts, is being extensively reconstructed and will be ready for reopening as a legit musical spot next January.

Audrey Hepburn is being sought for the title role in the Broadway edition of "Zuleika," and a director must also be engaged. An entirely new production will be done here by Producers Theatre. The show has a book and lyrics by James Ferman, with score by Peter Tranchell.

Want Yul Brynner For Sartre's 'Lucifer' Lead

British director Peter Brook and Broadway producer Roger L. Stevens would like to get Yul Brynner to stay in their contemplated presentation of "Lucifer and the Lord."

British playwright Lucienne Hill has adapted Jean-Paul Sartre's original Paris drama, but Brook's staging comitments will probably delay production of the show until the fall of 1958. It's figured on doing it in London prior to Broadway.

Who, Me? Sez La Merm At Charge She Insists On Black-Haired Actor

Ethel Merman positively does not dictate the hair color of the other players in "Happy Hunting," at the Majestic Theatre, N. Y.

Informed that Gene Wesson, a supporting actor in the cast, had claimed he could not dye his hair from its present iron grey to its original black because she insists he keep it the way it is, the star commented, "I haven't anything to do with it. It's between the management and him. For all I care, he can appear baldheaded."

The storm-over-a-dye-job came to a head Monday night (22) when the show's general manager, Herman Bernstein, gave orders that understudy Clifford Fearl should go on in place of Wesson in one of the newspaper-reporter roles. The matter was referred to Actors Equity yesterday (Tues.), with indications that unless the union intervenes, Wesson will be dropped from the show.

Wesson, with black hair, has been in the cast of "Hunting" since its opening last winter. He recently had his thatch tinted iron grey in order to be screentested for a role in the Diana Barrymore biopic, "Too Much Too Soon." He didn't get the part, but has allowed his hair to remain the lighter shade.

Early last week it's reported, "Hunting" stager Abe Burrows gave orders that Wesson should have his hair re-dyed its original black. He neglected to do so, however, even after the stage manager gave him a specific reminder last Saturday (20). His explanation, given to a columnist late Monday night, was that he was "caught in the middle" of a situation between Fernando Lamas, featured male lead in the show, who wanted him to keep his hair iron grey, and Miss Merman, who he said insisted he dye it black.

Shows Out of Town

A Part of the Blues

Hollywood, July 20.

Stage Society musical presentation of sketches by Langston Hughes, in two acts (24 scenes), conceived and directed by Walter Brough. Recited by Davis Roberts; narrated by Jakie Deslonde. Musical director, Herb Isaacs; sets and costumes, Madga Harout; choreography, Sylvia Lewis. At Stage Society Theatre, July 19, '57; $2.20 top.

Reader ..... Davis Roberts
Narrator ..... Jakie Deslonde
Ensemble ..... Victor Cheltenham, Davis Roberts, Jakie Deslonde, Juney Ellis, Sol Gold, Kim Hamilton, Dorris Hankerson, Magda Harout, Herb Isaacs, Clayton Machmer, Marilyn Miller, Margaret Muse, Helen Segal, Barbara Slate
Musicians ..... Joan Beckman, William De'ak, Sol Gold, Danny Segal

The Stage Society presents offbeat experimental works which stir up the imagination of the local legit scene. Work of this group is always ingenious and painstaking, and very often intriguing and effective, and that characterizes this platform recital of poet Langston Hughes' work.

But ingenuity can go only so far. "A Part of the Blues," billed as a "musical portrait" of Hughes, suffers most of the faults of a platform presentation—mainly formlessness and has strong appeal to only a specialized audience. This is not to discredit Hughes' work, which contains humor, incisive social commentary (especially on America's racial problems) and beauty of language and imagery. However, not all of this translates well, visually or aurally.

Also, the Stage Society house is a hard one for an actor, because of the combination of excessive street noises, bad acoustics and uncomfortable seating.

The two acts, each approximately one hour long, including 19 sketches in 24 scenes, are almost entirely readings from Hughes' works, interspersed widely with spiritual tunes and folk songs. Certain of Hughes' verses have been set to music by Herb Isaacs; some are read-recited excellently by Davis Roberts; others are acted, danced and/or sung by the fine ensemble group. Also on the platform (which gets crowded at times), is a four-piece instrumental group, which swings out nicely in bop and jazz rhythms to accentuate Hughes verbal patterns.

The staging reflects skill and inventiveness. Noteworthy are Walter Brough's (who also created format) direction, Isaacs' music, Madga Harout's bright and ingenious unit sets and costumes, and Sylvia Lewis' gay and attractive choreography.

Aside from Roberts and Jakie Deslonde, who narrate autobiographical portions, cast ensemble is uncredited individually, but they all perform well. Kove.

The Daring Darlinis

Bern Mueller Production of a two-act (five scenes) musical drama by James Wright, with music by Arthur Schutt and Dee Hansen. Directed by Fred La Porta; musical director, Schutt. At Ivar Theatre, Hollywood, July 9, '57; $4.40 top.

Cast: Carol Brewster, Hal Brun, Chip Carson, Charles Puzo, Lo Ray Anderson, Eddie McLean, Joe Callahan, Elizabeth Burgess, Beverly Mueller, Myron Natwick.

Hollywood, July 10.

This is a poor musical show poorly done. The story involves a circus aerial act under the control of a psychosomatically-crippled former trapeze artist. The script, music, direction and most of the performances are quite bad, but the voices of Joe Callahan and Myron Natwick, and the pantomime of Charles Puzo rate favorable notice.

The show's opening night was unorthodox as cast members peddled panda dolls and programs before the performance, and there was a piano solo during the lengthy intermission. Entire evening runs about 40 minutes short of standard for a musical show.

Vivien Leigh Continues Drive for St. James's

London, July 23.

Vivien Leigh is continuing her campaign to save the St. James Theatre from demolition. She arranged to meet last week with the new owner of the house, which is to be pulled down to make room for an office block.

The owner reportedly expressed sympathy, but said he could see no alternative but to go ahead with the plans to build offices on the site. However, the actress has declared, "They are not going to pull this theatre down. There will be trouble if they do."

Meanwhile, veteran actor-producer Lupino Lane, in a letter to the Daily Express asks, "Why all this fuss about the St. James's Theatre, when there was hardly a murmur over the passing of the Gaiety Theatre after I had put my all into reopening it? Perhaps I was not a 'gifted actress.' "

Sparkplugging efforts to arouse public opinion to keep the St. James's from being torn down, Miss Leigh joined actress Athene Seyler and News Chronicle drama critic Alan Dent recently in a parade through the streets to attract attention by ringing bells and displaying posters. She was also ejected from the House of Lords for interrupting a debate to shout a plea for the theatre.

LUNT-FONTANNE OKAY 'OLD LADY' IN LONDON

Although contracts haven't been signed, Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne have agreed to star in "The Old Lady's Visit," Maurice Valency's adaptation from the German of Friederich Durenmatt. They will do the drama in London in the fall as a presentation of Producers Theatre, in partnership with the West End management, H. M. Tennent.

That apparently ends any remaining prospect that the Lunts might go through with their previous plan to appear in London in "The Great Sebastians," the Howard Lindsay-Russel Crouse comedy-melodrama in which they starred on Broadway during 1955-56 and on tour last season.

B'way's Angle-Shooters Baffled by Angle-Less Times Survey of Legit

The extensive legit theatre survey by Harrison Salisbury, starting on Page 1 and jumping inside for almost a page in the June 8 issue of the N. Y. Times, has been the subject of considerable speculation in the trade.

There was no special significance of the piece and no connection with the current "New York Is a Summer Festival" promotion campaign. The Times has been running surveys on various subjects at intervals of about a month, and this was merely one of those.

When the project was first considered the Times management consulted Brooks Atkinson, the paper's drama critic and department head. He strongly endorsed the idea and approved the selection of someone outside the drama department, in this case former Moscow correspondent Salisbury, for the assignment. Atkinson and the top management reportedly were enthusiastic over Salisbury's job, not only for its comprehensiveness but for the non-insidey approach, which they felt was more comprehensible for the general reader.

There was some amusement among Times editors over the extremes to which some people in legit managerial circles went to figure a special angle for the story. One suggestion which caused an especial chuckle at the Times was that the assignment constituted a preliminary move by the sheet's top brass to groom a successor to take over as critic when Atkinson gets around to retiring.

Lines for Some Summer Theatre Apprentices

By day, they're suntanned, bugeyed brats
Sloshing color on next week's flats;
Comes night, they don their powder and paint
And make like crazy at what they ain't.

But day or night, or night or day,
They're adorably cute in their naivete:
Too bad they have to outgrow their britches
And turn into such Broadway witches!

Inside Stuff—Legit

There was an unusual ceremony recently in Los Angeles in connection with the closing of the tour of "The Matchmaker." Because the show's scenery had been imported, the Government had to be sure it was destroyed. The Thornton Wilder comedy, based on a couple of old Continental plays, was first done on Broadway about 20 years ago as "The Merchant of Yonkers." It was a flop then, but Wilder revised it and, as "The Matchmaker," it was done at the Edinburgh Festival and then in London, with scenery by Tanya Moiseiwitsch. Those were the settings that David Merrick and the Theatre Guild brought from England under bond for the Broadway production, and which the Government had to be sure were destroyed.

Unique experiment in staging, utilizing simulations of film techniques, will be tried out in the next few weeks by Tracey Roberts' Playwrights Workshop in Hollywood. Group will present "Third of a Man," a screenplay by Robert Lewin, who was nominated for an Academy Award last March for "The Bold and the Brave," his first screenwriting effort. Workshop group will follow the screenplay directions, playing long shots at a distance from the audience and closeups nearer the footlights. Two groups will play simultaneously to indicate cuts from one scene to another. Only concession to stage technique will be a partial narration.

"The Summer of the 17th Doll," a current hit in London, will be brought to Broadway this season as a unit, including the cast and physical production. The Theatre Guild and the Playwright Co. (the latter representing Roger L. Stevens) will present the Ray Lawler drama, the first play of Australian authorship or with an Australian cast ever to be done in London. Incidentally, the Guild and Playwrights will share in the proceeds from the recent film sale to Hecht-Lancaster. (See separate story, film section.)

McGill U. Revue at Stratford, Ont.

'My Fur Lady' (No Relation to B'way Musical) Will Tour Trans-Canada With Pro Cast

Stratford, Ont., July 23.

Something else new has been added to this growing mecca of show business. Having thrived on Shakespeare, with supplementary shots of film festival, longhair and pop music, this once-obscure railway centre has just added a professionalized college-bred legit revue.

The latest arrival, which opened last night (Mon.) for at least a two-week run at the 1,000-seat Avon Theatre here, with the blessing of Stratford Shakespeare Festival officials, is titled "My Fur Lady" and, title suggestiveness notwithstanding, it has no connection whatever with that certain Broadway musical comedy hit. In fact, the title analogy is proving to be a handicap.

It's hardly news any more, at least to the readers of VARIETY, that "My Fur Lady," produced last winter at McGill U. in Montreal, had a two-week student run at the 450-seat Moyse Hall on the campus, and reopened in May for a 10-week commercial run. The scale was $2-$2.50 until the house was air-conditioned, after which the price was straight $2.50. There were turnaways every night of the Montreal engagement, but after two matinees failed to go clean the afternoon performances were dropped.

The original-cast score, cut out by a McGill U. student, Colin Kerr, as a $5.25 LP, has sold over 2,000 copies and, as pressed by Decca, is second in eastern Canadian album sales—"My Fair Lady" (what else?) being first. An EP edition of one of the show's satirical sketches, "How to Write a Canadian Poem," done by Donald MacSween, has just been released.

Despite the success of the revue and its songs and the album, the music has not been published because neither BMI Canada nor CAPAC, the Canadian performing rights association, will license it until the show title has been cleared with the "My Fair Lady" management in New York. The latter have been contacted, but have not answered.

The title, "My Fur Lady," was the idea of Timothy Porteus, co-author of the book. The title character is Eskimo Princess Mukluko. (Presumably it's a Canadian joke. —Ed.) The revue is presented by Quince Productions and the McGill Graduates Society. Writers and composers get royalties, and everyone working in or on the show got $40 a week in Montreal, and $65, plus transportation, on tour. Profits go to the McGill Alma Mater Fund.

Quince Productions consists of Brian Macdonald, a McGill grad regular employed in Montreal tv, as the show's director, and four McGill law studes, pianist James Donville, author-actor Porfens, author Donald MacSween and author Erik Wang. All original cast members were McGill studes, including Nancy Bacal, who's had professional strawhat experience in the U.S. Some of the undergrads have since withdrawn and been succeeded by pros.

If the revue catches on here it will run indefinitely. It's then slated for a trans-Canada tour. For the Stratford engagement, the Avon Theatre rental is $2,100 a week, including union stage crew (the house is discontinuing its regular film policy), and the local musicians are being used, at $154 a week each, which is cheaper than using tooters from Toronto and paying standby fees to the Stratford union.

The show's operating budget for the two-week stand totals about $20,000 and the house can gross about $35,000. Margaret Ness, of Toronto, is pressagenting the upcoming tour, with Gail Jaccaci handling publicity for the Stratford engagement. Ads for the tour are being placed in 13 papers in 10 cities.

Non-Pro Groups

led to the survey and the subsequent formation of his licensing firm.

On plays handled by First Folio the authors will retain all their first-class rights and if the property is picked up for Broadway production it is then withdrawn from amateur release. The first play to go into the Folio catalog is "The Shoemaker's Children," a Phoebe and Henry Ephron comedy previously optioned for Broadway production. The leasing rights were obtained from literary agent Miriam Howell.

As an indication of the yen for new plays on the amateur circuit, Simon cites the situation in Shreveport, La. The town, with a population of about 130,000, seldom gets a touring show, but two community theatres and two colleges in the area present at least 28 plays a year.

The hitch there, Simon notes, was explained to him, as follows, by John Wray Young, executive director of the Shreveport Little Theatre and president of the Southwest Theatre Conference: "None of these four groups can put on a play that any of the others has done within the preceding five years. And they simply can't find 28 new plays to do each year.

"All that Broadway provides is perhaps 15 to 18 suitable new scripts. So, a hot competition exists between the four groups for the really desirable scripts that have had Broadway runs. But, after one Shreveport outfit has done a play, no other will touch it again for years.

"Thus, for lack of new plays, the Shreveport theatres have no choice but to fall back on old plays —modern classics of Shaw, Ibsen, Galsworthy, or revivals of Broadway hits of 15 to 20 years ago, such as 'Three Men on a Horse' or 'You Can't Take It With You'."

Dream of 'Service'

London, July 23.

How's this for service? A couple of London theatregoers arrived at the Vaudeville Theatre recently after a heavy downpour. Both were wet to the skin. But before they were allowed to take their seats to watch "Salad Days," they were supplied with dry clothes, and the manager arranged for their own clothing to be dried aid ironed before the show was over.

A letter of appreciation was sent to the London Evening Standard by one of the grateful patrons who said; "This is the sort of personal attention I am sure could help to save the theatre which is supposed to be dying."

'Lady' Huge 112½G, 'Fanny' Big 52G, 'Sgts.' $33,900, S.F.

San Francisco, July 23.

Four legit houses grossed almost $200,000 here last week, with the second stanza of "My Fair Lady" at the 3,300-seat Opera House accounting for well over half the total. First week of "Fanny" did close to capacity at the Curran and the third week of "No Time for Sergeants," building steadily at the Geary, did great business.

Only "Reluctant Debutante," in its second week at the Alcazar, looked slim. "Diary of Anne Frank" is due Aug. 26 at the Alcazar.

Estimates for Last Week

My Fair Lady, Opera House (2d wk) ($5.50-$5.90; 3,300; $115,000) (Brian Aherne, Anne Rogers). SRO $112,500; previous week, SRO $112,200; subscription cuts house potential slightly.

Fanny, Curran (1st wk) ($5.50-$5.90; 1,756; $57,000) (Claude Dauphin, Italo Tajo, Doretta Morrow). Great $52,000; subscription limits the gross slightly.

No Time for Sergeants, Geary (3d wk) ($4.40-$4.95; 1,550; $36,000). Very big at almost $33,900; previous week, $31,700.

Reluctant Debutante, Alcazar (2d wk) ($3.85; 1,147; $27,341) (Reginald Gardiner, Brenda Forbes). Thin $9,100; previous week, $7,000 for five performances.

'DR. LAO' 17G 2D WEEK, EDGEWATER TENT, CHI

Chicago, July 23.

"The Circus of Dr. Lao," starring Burgess Meredith, grossed around $30,000 on its two-week tryout at the Edgewater Beach Playhouse here. The comedy-drama, which ended its run at the tent operation, last Sunday (21), nabbed about $13,000 on the first stanza and approximately $17,000 on the second frame. The Gwyn Conger Steinbeck-Nathaniel Benchley adaptation of Charles G. Finney's novel was produced by Noel Behn.

"My Three Angles," starring Walter Slezak, is current at the canvastop.

'Li'l Darlin' Limp $37,000 2d Wk. of Dallas Repeat

Dallas, July 23.

State Fair Musicials' third offering, "Texas, Li'l Darlin'," with Jack Carson, closed its second stanza Sunday (21) with a modest $37,000, failing to better the initial week. Musical comedy was top grosser here in 1951, grossing $81,600 in 14 performances.

"Annie Get Your Gun," starring Gisele MacKenzie, opened last night (Mon.) for a two-week run. Revival of the Irving Berlin tuner features William Shriner, David Aiken, Adnia Rice and William LeMassena.

Hildegarde in 'Can-Can' $40,000 at K.C. Starlight

Kansas City, July 23.

Starlight Theatre production of "Can-Can" with Hildegarde in a legit role, pulled a moderate $40,000 for a seven-night run ending last Sunday (21). The star contributed fine singing and lightweight trouping, sticking to the score and doing no specialties.

"High Button Shoes" was undequoted the previous week, getting $47,000, not $40,000 as reported. "By the Beautiful Sea" opened last night (Mon.), with Lillian Roth, Webb Tilton, Susie Watson and Danny Carroll.

B'way Back on Slide; 'Girl' $53,900, 'Fella' 28½G, 'Yanks' 22G, 'Sgts.' 20G, Merman $36,600, Ritchard $19,600

Broadway was down last week, reversing the previous stanza's climb. Receipts dropped substantially for five of the 10 entries on tap, with weekend business particularly bad.

The only capacity entries were "Bells Are Ringing" and "My Fair Lady."

Stratford, Conn., July 23.

The American Shakespeare Festival Theatre grossed around $33,000 last week on eight performances split between "Othello" and "The Merchant of Venice." Of the two shows, "Merchant," starring Katharine Hepburn, is stronger than "Othello," starring Alfred Drake.

The two shows nabbed $33,400 the previous frame, while "Othello" soloed the fortnight before that, taking in $20,100 its first week and $21,500 the second. The scheduled Aug. 3 opening of "Much Ado About Nothing" has been postponed to a matinee Aug. 7.

Olney, Md., July 23.

"Holiday for Lovers" wound up its second and final week at Olney Theatre with $6,500 gross, up $800 from the initial stanza. The strawhatter between Washington and Baltimore is having a profitable season so far.

It's now definite that Paul Douglas will not return in the fall as star of "Hole in the Head," so stager Garson Kanin and the Producers Theatre are seeking a name replacement. The Arnold Schulman play won't return to Broadway, but will probably open in Chicago as the start of a season-long tour.

Emmett Callahan withdraws next week as company manager of "Happy Hunting" to take a simlar assignment with "Rivalry," so general manager Herman Bernstein will double as company manager for the Ethel Merman musical.

Legit Booking

agency in the concert field, formed its subsidiary Alliance firm, to enter the legit field, starting with the split-week and one-night tour for the bus-and-truck edition of "Sergeants." With that route almost completely laid out for the full 1957-58 season, Alliance has begun booking a somewhat similar tour for the upcoming second company of "Auntie Mame," to be sent out by Charles Bowden, Richard Barr & H. Ridgely Bullock, Jr., with Constance Bennett as star.

The significant aspect of Broadday Theatre Alliance plans, however, is not the emphasis on split-week and one-night dates, but rather that the new agency intends to book other shows into the regular key legit cities for extended engagements, and that it is organizing its own subscription setups in many local cities, along the lines of the concert business. The combined League—LITNA outfit, lacks comparable facilities for split-week and one-night booking and can offer only the Theatre Guild-American Theatre Society subscription in the principal cities.

The tour laid out by Alliance for the bus-and-truck company of "Sergeants" is impressive. This is the troupe currently at the Alvin Theatre, N. Y. but after laying off and rerehearsing, it will take to the road in a new production specially designed for quick taking in and out, with fixed lighting, etc. Meanwhile, the other "Sergeants" company currently in San Francisco after nearly a full year on the road, is filling a route laid out originally by the old UBO and more recently by LITNA and IBO.

The fact that the additional touring edition of "Sergeants" will travel by bus and truck will enable it to play numerous engagements beyond the reach of rail lines, including guarantee bookings at universities, schools and for civic groups. A novel angle is that for stands of more than one night, the guarantee performance will be the opener, so it will be to the local sponsor's interest to push that night's sale. For most engagements, attendance normally picks up for the final performances, so the openings are apt to be light, and local managements generally like to guarantee the final shows.

Central Park

legittuners as originally announced, Grace and Anderson have been adlibbing with one operatta ("Rosalie"), a ballet program ("Manhattan Magic"), a nitery origination ("Cotton Club Revue") and, as of last Monday (22), a "Jazz Under the Stars" presentation. "Rosalie was generally rapped as a fiasco, while the ballet and bistro offerings weren't too enthusiastically received.

Practically all the Grace-Anderson presentations have been last-minute bookings, and in the case of "Rosalie" allowed for an apparently inadequate one-week rehearsal period. The production team apparently intend continuing their deviation from legittuners. They're now trying to get Joe Franklin to create a stage version of his "Memory Lane" WABC-TV show for park presentation. The offering would have Franklin emceeing the revue-styled show of old-timers.

Meanwhile, there have been some shifts in the production staff for the Grace-Anderson operation. Paul Vroom has been appointed general manager, with Ed Scanlon succeeding Al Rosen as house manager, Lee Martinez succeeding Roy Jones as company manager, and Dave Lipsky succeeding Dick Weaver as pressagent.

Richard Clemer, longtime producer-director for NBC, has been set as production coordinator for the Seven Arts Center, N.Y.

Mielziner As Producer

the production of a play.' Call him impressario, director, manager, dictator, controller, administrator, superintendent, overseer, inspector, organizer, pilot or promoter —he's something of all of them.

"I prefer the French word, entrepreneur, which has no exact synonym in English, although it means 'one who undertakes to carry out any enterprise.' The entrepreneur organizes various departments, but he also stimulates —or should, if he has taste—the creation of all the elements that go into a show. Above all, he must be a business man, walking the tightrope between a natural desire to dazzle with splendor and a prudent regard for his own and his backer's money.

"Actually, of course, 'Happy Hunting' wasn't my first dip into the producer ocean. With my brother, Kenneth McKenna, I presented a comedy, 'Co-Respondent Unknown,' which was a 121-performance success 21 years ago. (McKenna, at that time an actor, is now story editor of M-G-M. —Ed.)

But that still didn't explain why after all these years, he should elect to enter the riskiest field of activity in the contemporary theatre, he was reminded. Mielziner nodded and smiled slowly: "Well," he said after a pause, "I'm not sure myself, but perhaps I felt that at least once in my life I wanted to accept a challenge and see if I could rise to it. I'm not a gambler by nature. But perhaps there's something in what Bernard Shaw wrote, 'The roulette table pays nobody except him who keeps it. Nevertheless a passion for keeping roulette tables is unknown'."

"Or maybe Moss Hart expressed it more succinctly recently when he called the Broadway Theatre 'a floating crap game.' In any case, the fact that 'Happy Hunting' lists me as sole producer means not that I wanted all the credit and all the profit, but rather that I wanted the satisfaction of making the decisions and would shoulder full responsibility if it turned out badly.

In what ways is producing different from designing? "Primarily, I suppose, it's that whereas the designer mostly works according to a set of specifics and ultimately from a detailed blueprint, the producer deals to a large extent with intangibles, in some cases the basic one being his own initial concept of the show.

"In the case of 'Happy Hunting,' for example, I learned a year ago that Ethel Merman might be willing to do a new show after her three-year absence from Broadway. That set me in motion. But instead of working from a blueprint, as I would have as a designer, I found myself gambling on the sole premise of Ethel's availability, gambling on booking a theatre and announcing an opening date before the book was written, the music composed or the cast engaged."

Back to School

Mielziner feels that producing a large Broadway musical has taught him at least a few things he was never aware of as a designer. "I've come to realize that no single element is the essential one to a show. Moreover, once you sense the problems of others you are likely to acquire a general awareness that will improve your work in your own special field, artistically and economically, in the future. Thus, after producing a show of my own, I feel as if I'd gone back to school for a refresher course, and I have a hunch I'm better equipped to design for other producers.

"Maybe the best thing about being a producer is a sort of stage-struck one," Mielziner admits. "It's not just the matter of the greatly increased personal contacts I have as a producer. Most of these associations would have ended with the New Haven tryout if I were only the designer.

"As the producer, however, I'm a privileged character. I can hang around backstage or out front every night without question. And I can call up anyone connected with the show any day and talk over any of the artistic or financial elements. Imagine having a license to talk shop anytime I want—when shop is the theatre!"

Paris Season

public ate up heartily), while Eduardo de Filippo's "Sacres Fantomes" ("Blessed Phantoms"), a Neapolitan comedy-farce, hit the jack-pot and is braving the hot weather.

Among the year's smashes were Marcel Achard's comedy "Patate" ("Potato"), which Gilbert Miller will stage in New York and which 20th Century-Fox has purchased for the screen. Also Felicien Marceau's "L'Oeuf" ("The Egg"), bought by Wolfe Bros. for London stage production and subsequent film version.

Other clicks have included Michel Andre's "Virginie," a shipwreck farce, Andre Roussin's dramatization of an Italian novel, "La Mamma," with Elvire Poesco as a screaming Sicilian mother distressed over her son's reported impotency, and Andre Langs "Voyage a Turin," with Pierre Fresnay and Yvonne Printemps.

Jean Anouilh's "Pauvre Bitos," a bitter satire on modern France, broke even despite a critical drubbing and the author, pleased with the boxoffice response, remarked, "What a failure for the critics."

Top musical was "Irma La Douce" (book by Alexandre Breffort and music by Marguerite Monnot, who has composed many Edith Piaf numbers), a comic operetta about a Montmartre B-girl and her man. "Irma" may be seen on Broadway during 1957-58, with Renee Jeanmaire in the lead role.

Several revivals joined some of new entries in hit class. Among the most successful were Sacha Guitry's 1914 "Faisons un Reve" (played on Broadway 35 years ago as "Sleeping Partners"), with Robert Lamoureux, Danielle Darrieux and Louis de Funes; "L'Ecole des Cocottes" (seen on Brodway as "The Gold fish" back in the 1920's), with Jacqueline Gauthier; ouis Verneuil's "Mademoiselle Ma Mere" in an arena production, and Henri Varna's revival of "The Merry Widow."

While French plays are regaining popularity abroad, American and British plays are showing better returns in Paris. Among translations from the English scheduled for coming season are O'Neill's "Long Day's Jounrey into Night," and "Moon for the Misbegotten" (possibly with Ingrid Bergman).

Other English language items on the future list include "Visit to a Small Planet," "Separate Tables" (in Andre Roussin adaptation), "Romanoff and Juliet," "No Time for Sergeants," "Thunder Rock," "Potting Shed" (translated by Jean Mercure) and "Janus."

James on "Hemingway At Work"; Gore Vidal's "Visit To A Small Planet"; Richard Gehman on "The Writer"; George Jean Nathan's treatise and others.

2 Writers' Handbooks

"The Writer's Handbook," edited by A. S. Burack, editor of The Writer (which Boston publishing house also publishes this $5.95 volume) and "Writer's Market," edited by Aron M. Mathieu and Joseph A. Alvarez (Writer's Digest; $4.50) are parallel volumes, issued almost coincidentally. The first also lists 1,000 markets for manuscript sales, and the second book puts accent on 3,000 such markets. Both embrace not only book houses and periodicals but run the gamut from broadcasting to Hollywood, legit to music publishers, cartoons, fillers, poems, etc.

The Burack-edited book supports its marketing catalog with byline pieces by name writers on how-to. Both are primed for the tyro scrivener and both have practical values that make the cost investment worthwhile. Abel.

Mass. Anti-Obscenity Bill

The Massachusetts Senate Ways & Means Committee has reported favorably on a bill for establishment of a seven-member, unpaid advisory commission to assist the attorney-general in preventing the sale of obscene comic books and other objectionable literature. This commission would be known as the Obscene Literature Control Commission.

Its seven members would be appointed by the governor and would include representatives of the three major faiths, one educator, and three persons "qualified" by education and experience. The commission would meet monthly and would be paid travel expenses.

On the other hand, a bill to censor the sale of obscene comic books and other objectionable matter was killed in the Massachusetts Senate by 32-7. The House-sponsored measure would have set up a seven-member unit to assist the attorney-general in that matter. A cautious note was sounded by Sen. William E. Hayes, who said: "The censorship of books has been kicked around and legalized for many many years. We have a law on the subject. The Legislature should be very cautious in handling this matter.

Newsday's Show Biz Taxes

Newsday, Long Island daily, has published a special promotion piece comprised of a series of five articles by staff writer Francis Wood that show what happens to the earnings of show biz names, athletes, etc., who land in the high surtax brackets.

Title of the series, which originally ran in the daily July 8 to 12, is "Can You Afford A Fortune?" and details the tax pitfalls for anyone hitting the jackpot, whether via a quiz show or a bestselling novel. Also spotlighted is the "art of taxmanship," particularly in the show biz world where income may be high for only a relatively few years. Noted are such devices as capital gains, incorporation, the package show deals, etc.

The Metropolitan Opera's Francis Robinson has his "Caruso: His Life in Pictures" due, via Thomas Y. Crowell Co., this fall, an elaborate $6.50 item. It took years to compile the photographic layout. Also included will be a complete discography of Caruso by John Secrist, foremost collector of Caruso's records in the world.

Also from Crowell in November is the 1957-58 edition of "Modern Publicity," edited by Frank A. Mercer.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Viewed longrange, Hollywood's success has been the old vaude formula worked out in years instead of weeks. Producers are convinced that the secret is variety. And of course it is. Except for certain breakfast foods, brands of snipes and shape of hammers, people seem to get tired of the same thing day-after-day.

As proof of Hollywood's devotion to variety I saw "Fear Strikes Out" and "The Delicate Delinquent" in the same house on succeeding nights. Both were made by the same company. You couldn't get a wider spread of appeal if you tried, and in both instances Par certainly tried.

I was particularly interested in "Fear Strikes Out," not only because I have known the writers of the screenplay since they were knee high to a grasshopper but because I seem to have been rabbit-punching the errors of psychiatrists for at least 20 years.

But time has worn my biases a little thin around the edges, so when I went to catch "Fear Strikes Out" I wooed a student nurse to go with me to see Anthony Perkins go crazy in a very plausible way, driven to a complete and fortunately temporary mental breakdown by a loving father who wanted his son to exceed even Ted Williams and with the same Boston Red Sox. You know, the kind of guy who blows his top now and then, and sometimes seems to go off his rocker completely, but can always make up for it to the fans by batting .400.

This student nurse was a daughter of ours. A beautiful doll, she had been recently transferred in her senior year from Mercy College in San Diego to Patton State Hospital in San Berdoo for three months psychiatric training, and since she was home for the weekend I thought I would take her on this busman's holiday.

She watched Anthony Perkins as if he were her own patient and afterwards said, "You know, that kid showed schizo tendencies in childhood. Schizophrenia is not a matter of a simple split personality. We study eight types.

"Jim Piersall, was more the paranoid-state type, the ones who can't get along with employers or fellow-employees. In his case it was with members of his own ball team. He was caught in a psychiatric pincer movement and finally crushed. He blamed his father who would praise nothing but 1,000 in fielding and catching. In short, the impossible."

Typical American Psychosis

To excel in sports is a typical American ambition and thus Piersall's problem became human and understandable. In nine cases out of ten, a mental breakdown would not have resulted but he was the 10th case, and since it actually did happen to him while a member of the Boston Red Sox it has a documentary believability of the March of Time.

Piersall's breakdown is shown in very logical steps from boyhood, aggravated by a father trying to force his son into being the kind of success he never was himself and ultimately breaking down the boy in his vicarious drive for success. The paranoidal collapse, treatment, ultimate recovery and return to the Red Sox outfield is strictly from Cinderella, but since it all happened in the last few years one can't quarrel with the plot.

The picture contains few of the horrors of "The Snake Pit," "Home of the Brave," "I'll Cry Tomorrow" or "Monkey On My Back," but it is a fine study in tensions, pressures and ambitions, and what they can do to people not geared by a strong mind to eliminate these tensions from their life and work.

Since 12% of the present population is doomed for a mental breakdown, it's too bad a picture like "Fear Strikes Out" hasn't had the boxoffice success of, say, "Giant." Everybody gambles on the hunch that the butterfly net will miss him, but the percentage against his escape is higher than at Las Vegas.

As small proof of the widespread ignorance in this field, a governor about 20 years ago tapped me to be the civilian head of a state department of institutions. We housed 27,000 mentally ill, hundreds of the blind and thousands of juve delinks. All of them were handled in much the same way. That is to say, like felons. The mentally ill were hauled by cops before judges, committed, and, if they got well, were ultimately paroled or discharged. Witnesses testified for or against them. The billings haven't changed much since. To phraseology at least, it still seems to be a criminal matter to become mentally ill.

Don Quixote Scully And The Guv

I suspect the governor picked me for this service because I had graduated from 30 hospitals in seven countries. I hate to think he didn't know the difference between my alma mammys and state hospitals for what in those days were called the insane. My first mistake was in not pointing out the booboo to him.

What struck me on a first tour of inspection of our houses of correction for eyesight, morals and minds was that the doctors in the main seemed crazier than the patients. The top croaker of them all was a Russian with all their latter-day paranoidal symptoms.

He and I hit it off like oil and water from the start. Within a year we were throwing everything but shock treatments at each other.

The governor sought to save the situation by offering to create another department and have me head it. It seems he had a secret fund and could reach down into the bag and do this. But I told him he should never have let me see how badly things had been run where I was. I suggested he fire the Russian psychiatrist instead.

When I got to the hotel I discovered I had picked up his briefcase instead, the one which was so hot he slept with it under his pillow! I was in a fine spot to make a deal, but Mme. Scully was with me and she made me return the briefcase without peeking! You get an opportunity like that once in a lifetime. Some months later I was fired for injecting this small measure of fidelity and loyalty into power politics.

But having no dignity, I refused to blow. Instead I went on a sit-down strike in the state building for 10 days, guarded by a 300-pound wrestler who offered his services in the hope that right and might could lick psychiatry! We had more fun than a campus reunion. State police blocked entrance to our office. Radio men got on the roof and dropped mikes down three stories to interview us.

In the end, of course, the courts upheld the government's right to fire as well as hire. But my Russian bete noir kept up a running fight for two years, using the state's resources to do so. Before the governor himself was heaved out of office, the psychiatrist followed me out and shortly afterward died. R.I.P.

But in those few years I learned a lot about psychiatrists, patients and treatments. I certainly shook the healers to their heels in an attempt to teach them that mental illness was not ordained so that they could have glass-topped mahogany desks to sit behind and patients to treat like criminals.

The places were never the same after my short period as a reformer. In fact, they changed the department's name, yanked the reform schools out from the department's control and even changed the name of one of the reform schools where the kids seemingly had their pre-induction training for their Ph.D's at the state prison. I even caused several of the goons running one reform school to be clinked for their brutalities.

People to this day stop me on the street and recall with affection my short term as the Don Quixote of this field of human misery. It always warms me to be so well remembered as the guy who tried to institute "a new deal for dopes." I haven't the slightest doubt I so described it, but at least the press bunch could have been pals and misquoted me. I would have done as much for them had our positions been reversed.

Southside Story

good position to bid for name talent playing in Chicago.

The competition faced by the De Lisa is right in its own neighborhood, Roberts Show Lounge, which after a year and a half of operation with big names has enlarged its seating capacity to 1,200. Like the De Lisa, it does not share the problem faced by Rush St. bistros of poorly attended late shows. First show at both places doesn't go on till an hour before midnight and neither place is apt to be full till early in the morning. Unlike the De Lisa, a $1 admish is charged and no food is served.

Big Joe Turner headlined the last Roberts show, but normally names like Louie Jordan, Dinah Washington, Gene Krupa and Australian Jazz Quintet, are headlined. Here with the backing of a seven-peice band, the five-girl house dance line will start off the show. Rubber-legged Johnny McAffe handles the terps, the band does a number and the way is clear for the star. Patronage here, too, is mixed with low prices and name artists drawing conventioneers as well as local nite owls.

Jazz On Upbeat

The biggest entertainment impact in this Negro neighborhood is probably in the jazz field. Until recently the southside had virtually no outlets for name jazz artists, even duting the Rush St. boom (exception, of course, being the Roberts). A new policy at the Sutherland Hotel is to bring in top combos into its 300-seat lounge. Unlike its neighboring show clubs, the Sutherland begins its program at 9.30. Launched only a few weeks ago, this room is already doing good business, currently with Dorothy Donegan.

Farther east, Ed Cohen has been operating the Crown Propellor for 18 years. Too small to feature top musical names, the little bar-enclosed platform is showcasing such names as Bill Doggett, who just finished previously contracted engagement there. Mixed groups patronize the Propellor, but Cohen notes that his heavy business is always in the late hours when Rush St. is normally getting ready for bed.

Operators of the various southside spots, which more and more are approaching the standard night club formats, are currently seeking to book acts on a cooperative basis with other non-competitive nitery operators. The upshot of such a move would be to afford more continuous playdates for acts and a wider range of acts for Chi spots in the future.

terview in which he voiced his complaint that "nobody will give me a chance to show I'm an actor, got nothing there, either," he said:

"Three generations have come along since I joined the Gang in 1931, and to thousands I'm still a chubby little boy with a lisping voice." Of all the old gang, "Alfalfa" (Carl Switzer) probably is doing best of the bunch, Spanky said. "He married well and now he's a farmer—raising alfalfa, I guess—in Kansas, a place called (you aren't going to believe this) Pretty Prairie. Darla (Hood) is singing on the Coast—has some calypso stuff going. "Buckwheat" was in the Army, but I think he's out now.

McFarland made two appearances at a drive-in theatre here on a bill with a double feature of "Goodbye My Lady" and "White Feather" with two Little Rascal comedies. "It was a so-so house," he said.

important plants is located, rejected an interview by Wallace with Charles (Commando) Kelly. Previously, WAVE axed an interview with Eldon Edwards, Grand Wizard of the Atlanta Klu Klux Klan.

Philip Morris said that WAVE-TV, though not a basic ABC-TV affiliate, will still carry some Wallace shows. But feeling is that even partial loss of the important Louisville market is one good reason for serious reconsideration of the show.

Other factors are the occasional tight scrapes that the sponsor is exposed to by the daring questioning done by the titlist. Though a lawsuit was brought against Wallace and ABC-TV and not PM, repercussions to a Mickey Cohen interview gave the bankroller several days of acute worry. The Edwards show, Wallace himself suggested in a recent interview in which he was on the receiving end, caused mild concern all around, but that the sponsor came through with flying colors and so did the show: There were no regional complaints.

Because PM is paying so little for the half-hour package (around $10,000 a week for production), ratings are deemed the least of its problems. Wallace has pulled 10s, 11s and thereabouts on occasion, and while this is not comparable to NBC or CBS competish, it doesn't add up to a bad cost-per-1,000 buy for PM.

shutters clicked and tv men ground away, the birds took off into the early morning mists. That is all except one name "Triple Streak."

Triple Streak had developed a stubborn streak and headed for the nearest light pole. And there he sat for the next two hours. The other two birds circled once, looked at their non-flying friend, and headed for Chicago.

As the sun got hotter, Triple Streak decided that he'd be better off elsewhere and he, too, lit out for Chicago. 16 hours and 20 minutes later he arrived in Berwyn, a suburb of Chicago. He had beaten the other birds. In fact, only one of the other two ever showed, proving that the early bird, while he may get the worm, does not always get it first — or something.

Both TWA and the News got good coverage in newspapers along the birds' routes by notifying the papers as to what times the birds would be over their locality. John Corris of TWA's Chi office handled most of those details.

The flight, incidentally, came off the same day that the Navy broke the coast-to-coast jet record with a lapsed time of a little more than three hours—as the crow flies.

Brooklyn Exhib's 'Live Longer' Rule: 'Cancers' Out His Cigaret Machines

Albert L. Greene, manager-owner of the Avenue U Theatre, in Brooklyn, is at it again. This time he has discontinued the sale of cigarets in his theatre because of the cancer scare.

Greene is the guy who chromium-plated 12,000 pennies to protest the city's tax bite on theatres. He's also the one who sold 15c subway tokens for a dime to stimulate business. And he's the one who tried to test the ban on bingo.

All these "stunts" brought Greene considerable "notoriety" and a couple of run-ins with the "authorities." Now he's got local storekeepers and the tobacco industry on his neck. According to Greene, he's been visited by a representative of the tobacco industry who expressed fear that Greene's personal campaign may spread to other theatres. Greene's decision to halt cigaret sales at his theatre broke the wire services, and, as a result, he's received letters from many sections of the country commending him on his action.

However, Greene stated that he's not quite ready to put up the "no smoking" sign in his theatre because of fear of the boxoffice results. He hopes, he said, that he will eventually be able to take that drastic move.

At any rate, Greene put up a sign by his candy counter: "Live

R&H Yen Legit Project; No Interest in Toll-TV; Has Too Many Problems

Hollywood, July 30.

Rodgers & Hammerstein have no project for legit. They're looking for something likely, and might do a stage musical version of "Cinderella" for the 1958-59 season, after the rights to their tv adaptation revert to them next spring, when CBS has the option of repeating it as a spectacular.

That was indicated last week by Oscar Hammerstein 2d, who was here en route to Hawaii for the start of shooting of the screen edition of his and Richard Rodgers' musical, "South Pacific." The lyricist and co-producer also said that any decision about a musical

'Dear Liar' Play About Shaw-Mrs. Pat Letters Bows

Boston, July 30.

"Dear Liar," two-act, two-character play by Jerome Kilty, based on the correspondence between George Bernard Shaw and Mrs. Patrick Campbell, will be preemed in a single performance tomorrow (Wednesday) in Kresge Auditorium at M.I.T., Cambridge, sponsored by the Harvard-M.I.T. Summer Series.

The play was tested before a small aud in Chicago previously. Much of the text used has never been published, Kilty says, and was given to him by a friend who smuggled it out of France in 1940, when Mrs. Campbell was dying and wanted it saved.

Southern Solons Rap 'Censorship' Of Foster Lyrics

Washington, July 30.

Additional irate members of Congress are getting into the hassle over network orders to eliminate such words as "darky," "massa," "old black Joe," etc., from the songs of Stephen Foster.

Issue flared up less than a fortnight ago when two Florida congressmen—D. R. Matthews and Robert Sikes—whose state song is "Suwanee River," charged "censorship" and demanded to know on what authority the networks were undertaking to change the lyrics. Rep. Charles C. Digge (D., Mich.) a Negro, retorted that this was no censorship, but "just a matter of good taste."

National Association for the Advancement of Colored People declared that it "certainly objects to any term which denotes a racial slur."

Latest to add their objections to the deletions are Reps. James A. Haley (D., Fla.), Frank Chelf (D., Ky.) and John Watts (D., Ky.).

GIANT STATUS OF TV SYNDICATION

By ART WOODSTONE

Accenting the tremendous growth of the new "show biz upstart," the syndicated telefilm industry owns an estimated $239,832,200 in programs. With the new season but a few weeks off, the 271 series represented by this grand total are being pitched with renewed vigor by 40 syndicated companies at an array of stations and local, regional and national spot advertisers in television.

The estimate is derived from a survey by VARIETY, the first of its kind to be published on the cost of production for syndication (see chart in TV Film section). The 271 program series, ranging in variety from mysteries to musicals, in length from three to 60-minutes are the accumulation of 10 years of production, editing and negotiation by the firms which are in the one of the more difficult and, the most exhaustive of all selling areas in television.

There are $151,505,200 worth of programs made specifically for first-run sale in syndication. A small part of that total is in film which was re-edited from theatrical issue for use on local television, while $9,829,000 of the sum is designated for half-hour telefilms now in production.

Some $88,327,000 of the total $239,832,200 is the cost of 55 half-hour program series that first ap-

3,500 Actor Jobs, Highest in Years

Professional actor employment in legit during July hit its highest mark in years. The weekly Actors Equity count on membership activity in theatrical productions climbed to 3,500 early in the month. That represented over one-third of the union's total membership and was 1,500 above the annual employment average.

A boost in actor employment, although not as high as the 3,500 figure, is usual for the summer months, when strawhat jobs open up throughout the U. S. and Canada. This year, for instance,

Mexico Spurns Deal For Island Gambling

Mexico City, July 30.

The Mexican government's anti-gambling policy remains unchanged. The administration has firmly nixed a tempting proposition made by Aristoteles Onassis Socrates, the steamboat tycoon, to lease Guadalupe island, in the Pacific, off Ensenada, the Baja California state resort just south of San Diego.

Swanky gaming spot would have been serviced by Socrates' vessels.

State Dept. Pipes Up With 'Satchmo For the Soviets'

Washington, July 30.

Louis Armstrong, whose goodwill ambassadoring around the world for the past few years has been done strictly on an unofficial basis, is now set to go into Russia and Russian-dominated lands under the auspices of the U. S. State Dept.

The Satchmo swing through the Soviets has been pencilled in for next April and State Dept. officials are attempting to line up dates in the Commie lands over a five or six-week period. Thus far, no bids for Armstrong appearances have been made, but if the current relaxation of international tensions continues, it's expected that the jazzman will have no lack of Soviet dates.

Armstrong, who is already set for a South American junket on a private basis, will also cover Africa for the State Dept., which wil pick up the whole tab for this tour since grosses are not slated to be a factor in the heart of that continent. Armstrong, incidentally, is understood to be working at about half of his usual rates on the Government projects. Joe Glaser, head of Associated Booking Corp., is handling the specific booking details for Armstrong.

New York Times is set to do a "cleanup" job on its movie page. Paper feels that some of the ads it's been running on foreign films in past months have exceeded the boundaries of good taste, and a tightening-up is in order.

Paper's advertising department execs met in N. Y. yesterday (Tues.) with several agency and independent distributor representatives to explore (i.e., explode?) the situation. Powwow was called by Vincent Redding, manager of the Times advertising acceptability section.

Confab spotlighted a situation that has long bothered the film people, and particularly the indies who feel they must sell imports on the "sex" angle. Problem is the lack of a standard applying equally to the metropolitan press. Thus one paper will accept an ad while another will reject the same layout as too provocative.

Pressed for details of the meeting last week, Redding wouldn't go beyond issuing the following one-sentence statement "We have a concern regarding the propriety of some moving picture advertising and have invited a small group of persons associated with the industry to gather with us at an informal meeting and discuss the matter."

Film Producers Assn. In Bid For a 'Show Biz Grover Whalen'

New York Film Producers Assn., covering only one segment of Gotham entertainment, started the ball rolling yesterday (Tues.) toward getting Mayor Robert F. Wagner to appoint a fulltime industry representative in city government. The man being sought was described as a "Grover Whalen of show business," a city official who would do more than simply coordinate the administration of film, theatre, tv and radio but "someone who can stir up interest over visiting fireman, location shooting or whatever."

Mexico Cuts Race-Bias Scenes; Fears Attacks on U. S. Tourists (And Texans) Following 'Giant'

Mexico City, July 30.

"Giant" will play Mexico cut from 138 to 90 minutes. Carmen Baez, subdirector of the National Cinematographic Board confirms the deletion of the anti-Mexican scenes showing race prejudice in a Texas roadside shortorder cafe and at a Houston social function. Racial bias loomed large in the original Edna Ferber novel and in the film as directed by George Stevens for Warners.

While Mexicans are fully aware of the third-class status of their nationals in Texas many who saw the film in the States testified here of their doubts. Though racial snobbery is condemned in the film, the prominence of the theme was distasteful to Mexican pride. More to the point: officials here feared a reaction against American tourists, especially those from Texas, should the feature unreel intact before the Mexican masses.

At 71, L. Wolfe Gilbert Cautious on Next Moves And Hollywood Alacrity

Hollywood, July 30.

L Wolfe Gilbert is balking at selling both film and tv rights to his autobiographical tome "Without Rhyme or Reason" because of the current conflict over differing versions of the same story in different media.

Rowson Productions, Helen Ainsworth-Guy Madison indie, has been dickering for the rights to the book, which could become a top song cavalcade feature or tv spectacular, utilizing many of the tunesmith's top songs. Gilbert contends that by selling separately and permitting an early tv version he can virtually force an early production of the film, rather than having it sit on a shelf for years.

"They might take seven years to make the picture," Wolfe declared. "I could be dead by then—like what happened with Kern, Romberg and Cohan.

"I'm three score and ten. Next Aug. 31 I'll be three score and ten plus one. I wanna be around to see the picture."

Balis made the acceptance on the basis of Robin Hood Dell president Frederic R. Mann's statement that the Dell would adjust its 1958 season "in any way" so the orchestra can accept the trip.

NEW BOOK PUBLISHER ADOPTS TV-SELL IDEAS

Andersonville, Ga., July 30.

Ivan Obolensky, president of McDowell, Obolensky Inc., a new Manhattan book publishing firm, spent two days here last week shooting motion pictures for television designed to promote a new book about the Andersonville War Between the States prison stockade.

The book the films are scheduled to promote will be titled "This Was Andersonville" and was written by John McElroy, a former journalist who was captured in the fighting in 1863 and spent 15 months in the prison camp, where more than 15,000 Yankee prisoners of war died.

"This tv-filming is an entirely new promotion idea," Obolensky explained, "and we hope other publishers will follow suit in an effort to help solve book-sale promotion difficulties.

"We plan to make a three-minute short subject to offer to various department stores for their television promotion programs.

"We also will shoot sufficient footage for a 28-minute film suitable for a half-hour tv program and for a movie documentary short," he said.

Obolensky is the author of the novel "Rogues' March" and his partner, David McDowell, is a former senior editor at Random House. Henry Staden heads selling end of the new firm.

PRAGUE LESS DRAB

USSR Mission, USA Tourists Pep Up Czech Capitol

Prague, July 30.

Prague revisited, after a quick, comfy wing-in from Paris in two hours via Air France and waiting to go on to Warsaw, looks considerably livelier than last year. Bunting red flags and pictures of B & K (Russian's) left over from their visits, helps. There appears to be more cars in the streets and there is not so much feverish ogling of western cars.

City still has its quaint mittleuropa architectural charm and music blares from the many first floor beer gardens which are late danseries. Barbara is a more moocy cellar club reminiscent of post war Paris days. More up to date Western music is heard everywhere and r 'n' r also gets its comeuppance via the slower unaccented Czech band ways.

Definitely more American visitors and by buying a certain amount of CEDOK coupons, usable for hotel payments at 14 crowns to the dollar, one is allowed to change an equal amount at the 20 to a dollar rate. This makes things fairly bearable for U.S. tourists. A meal at a top restaurant thus runs only about $3 and it makes nitery prices quite reasonable. Film houses are breaking out with more Western pix though Russo fillms still get a top play. Expectation for U.S. films is high. People seem better dressed and store windows well stocked. Women look better too.

British Question Quiz Game Coin

London, July 30.

A questioner in the House of Commons last week failed to get any info from the Chancellor of the Exchenquer on sterling payments to the U.S. in royalties for radio and tv parlor games. The Treasury admitted that separate figures of dollar expenditures on transactions of that kind were not available.

The questioner then asked whether "Twenty Questions" was included and whether the government was aware that it was on record that Mrs. Taylor taught this game to Lord Palmerston in 1786. That query provoked laughter in the House, as did the followup statement by Harold Wilson, who pointed out that Lord Palmerton was only two years at that time, though he was always a little precocious.

In a more serious vein, Wilson (who is the main Opposition spokesman on financial affairs) said many members shared the concern of the original questioner. Most of the games had been played for perhaps hundreds of years, and it was fantastic that anyone should copyright them.

Press Agent's Vacation

By TOM WEATHERLY

Oh, I yearned for the days of long ago,
When I'd hie to the peaceful wildwood,
And relax as the hammock swung to and fro,
Recalling sweet joys of my childhood.

So I sought again that tranquil spot
To recapture the thrill of those summers;
But the blooming place was a parking lot
For a barn full of Times Square mummers.

So I packed my kit and got out fast,
As quiet and sly as a gray mouse:
Now I really have the peace of the past—
In an empty Broadway playhouse!

On Statues for Sime's Square

By FRANK SCULLY

Oslo, July 30.

To suggest Broadway could borrow anything from this land where nature supplies the bright lights (in summer, anyway) might get one into passport trouble in the future. But I am risking it. It's this matter of statues.

They're all too few around Sime's Square. Except for Father Duffy, haloed by a Celtic cross, a passing peasant would not remember any. He would have to go as far east as Bryant Park to see even a poet immortalized. There is a rumor circulating (by me at least) that I pressured this choice because I was graduated magna cum nothing from a high school named after the old editor of the New York Post. But I certainly had nothing to do with the shabby way the people who made Broadway are remembered.

Eugene O'Neill and George M. Cohan could be honored, since they're both been dead long enough to be beyond controversy. The same would hold true of Clyde Fitch, George Broadhurst, Robert E. Sherwood, George Gershwin and John Barrymore. Sculptors are hardly overworked around Manhattan and this would be an opportunity to spread some of the sour cream over their bagels.

Actor Gets A Statue

What moved me to this patriotic bender was on observing how Norwegians honor their writers. I hunted for days to find a statue to an unknown general to place a wreath at his horse's hooves, but all except one, were statues to writers. The one exception was to an actor.

The best the actor's elbows could get him was at the back or stage entrance to the National theatre. At the front or main entrance were kingsized statues in bronze to Bjornstjerne Bjornson and Henrik Ibsen. A third over to the right immortalized Ludvig Holberg, a comedy writer. A fourth in the centre of the park was one to Henrik Wergeland, a sort of Patrick Henry poet; the fifth was to Johannes Brun, the actor who just made it outside the stage entrance. In the King's park there is a sixth to Henrik Abel, a brilliant mathematician who died at the age of 28. I hear there is a statue to a general up near the King's palace but I didn't attempt to invade his privacy to find out.

The only statue in the Studenterlunden park which excited a measure of controversy was Ludvig Holberg's. Hailed as the Moliere of the Scandinavian peninsula, he seems to have achieved most of his notoriety in Copenhagen and is therefore claimed by the Danes. But he was born in Norway and spent the first 20 years of his gay life here.

Across the main street from the National theatre in front of the University of Oslo are two more statues and they, too, honor writers. The first was erected to the memory of Peter Andreas Munch, the nation's foremost historian, and, later, one went up to immortalize Anton Martin Schweisgaard, a classmate of Munch's, who wrote on economics.

Scully Circus Moves In For Bow

In the historian, the Scully Circus has a special interest because he is the great-great grandfather of our trained fleas from heaven. He and Bjornson were pals in Rome about 100 years ago. To the outside world Norway produced only one playwright and that was Ibsen, but to Norwegians he is as dated as a palm tree and has always lacked the human juices which flowed most freely from Bjornson.

In the National theatre, while members of the Storting were debating the merits and demerits of introducing tv into their native land, Grieg's version of Ibsen's "Peer Gynt" was being performed and after the tumult had died down in the legal debating society, the National swung over to one of the oldies of Ibsen's disciple—Shaw's "Mrs. Warren's Profession." It might be spruced up and modernized if called "Mother Was A Bagslinger," but that would be an insult to Norwegian womanhood, because they all swing bags. There's practically no home delivery in Oslo and all shopping seems to end with a woman carrying oversized and overloaded shopping bags.

But the Norwegians find Shaw, as they find Ibsen, a little dull, even

Talent and Brains Stand Up For New Sadlak Tax 'Break'

Hollywood, July 30.

A new tax reform bill in the House of Representatives, a measure which would give showbiz individuals and companies a tax break by slicing unfair surtaxes, among other things, is being endorsed in an all-out industrywide campaign. Screen Actors Guild was the first to endorse the objectives of the bill sponsored by Rep. Sadlak (R.-Conn.).

In addition, the Motion Picture Industry Council is mailing copies of the legislation to its members, and MPIC will take the matter up at its next meeting, in August. Exact date of the session hasn't yet been set.

Bill will also come before the Hollywood AFL Film Council, and it's expected that the council, along with other show biz elements, will okay the bill.

John Dales, national exec secretary of SAG, said: "We have endorsed the objectives of this bill. We are for a tax reform which will help production instead of causing it to go abroad. At the moment the trend in that direction is pretty dangerous. Anything we can do to encourage writers, directors and actors to stay here should be done. The objectives of the bill seem to be right. A tax reduction bill is necessary to encourage business." Dales said SAG had called attention of MPIC and the Film Council to the projected legislation.

Sadlak bill would reduce individual and corporate income taxes to a maximum of 42% by annual reductions made over a period of five years. Individual income tax on the first $2,000 of net income—which is paid by all taxpayers—would drop from the present 20% to 15%. Gradual reductions would also be made in all the progressive surtax rates. Bill would compel big federal spending programs to compete against regularly scheduled income tax reductions, would, in effect, put a brake on future spending plans.

Of particular interest to show biz—and to the sports world—is the proviso whereby the top rates of taxes, both personal and corporate, would be trimmed to 42% from the present 91% top. Legislation is designed to moderate the tax impact on individuals and on small and growing business and to eliminate the tax barrier to starting new businesses.

Screen Directors Guild does not yet have the measure on its agenda, but is expected to look into the matter soon.

Foreman's Superstition

London, July 30.

Carl Foreman has set Aug. 7, as starting date for his production of "Stella," the first picture under his four film deal with Columbia.

It will be exactly six years to the day since Foreman's last feature assignment. "High Noon" went into production on Aug, 7, 1951.

Fault Washed-Up Tales, Not Stars: Wald Riles Scribes

Hollywood, July 30.

Producer Jerry Wald and Hollywood screenwriters became involved in a brannigan, with the writers blasting Wald for his statement that "the trouble with Hollywood is not washed-up stars, but washed-up stories." Wald also asserted Hollywood should film topical pix, but said these weren't being written by the screenwriter who "lacks the courage to go out and develop an original piece of material on their own."

As proof, he said of 62 submissions to 20th-Fox since July 1, 30 were westerns, 20 mellers and only one topical in subject matter. None of the material showed any real originality or freshness, he insisted.

A spokesman for Writers Guild of America West screenwriters branch and writer Ivan Goff had earlier scoffed at Wald's reference to topical pix, Goff pointing to the producer's last two pix, "An Affair to Remember" and "Peyton Place" as a refutation of his own statement.

To this Wald answered he was

'Woman in Dressing Gown' To WB; Yvonne Mitchell 'Best Actress' at Berlin

Warner Bros. has acquired Associated British Pictures Corp.'s "Woman in a Dressing Gown" for U. S. distribution and plans to give the film a prime buildup, including "A" dates and an extensive promotional campaign.

It's the first associated pic to get domestic handling via Warners since "The Dambusters," which turned out to be generally disappointing. WB has a large interest in the ABC circuit in Britain.

"Woman in a Dressing Gown" was one of the British films shown at the recent Berlin festival where its star, Yvonne Mitchell, won the prize as best actress. Special meeting was held at the WB homeoffice last week to discuss important handling of the British release.

Berlin Festival To Cut in 1958

London, July 30.

Yielding to pressure from visiting delegations and hard pressed newsmen, the Berlin Festival authorities are already considering steps to limit the number of entries at next year's junket. There was general agreement that this year's total of 100 titles, including 40 full length features, resulted in lowering the standard of festival entries.

An alternative proposal, now under consideration, would limit entries to one per country, with the festival authorities reserving the right to invite eight additional features. Any change in the selection system, however, would need the endorsement of the International Federation of Film Producers, who have given the Berlin fest an "A" rating.

Even the new formula, however, could lead to a surfeit of product. In the recently concluded fest, there were 42 participating nations and, while a few limited their entries to shorts, the majority submitted full length features. The limitation per country, however, would inevitably lead to some reduction, as the major producing nations, among them America, Britain, France, Italy and Germany, submitted several pictures.

LIVE MUSICAL FEATURE ON DISNEY AGENDA

Hollywood, July 30.

Walt Disney enters the full-length live-action musical field this year with "Rainbow Road to Oz," a multi-million dollar feature based on the Lyman Frank Baum stories. It is tentatively scheduled to go before the cameras in Nov.

Bill Walsh has been assigned to produce, Sidney Miller to direct and Dorothy Cooper to develop the property.

PUBLIC RESPONDS TO 'IMPORTANCE'

Any search for the reason behind the ups and downs of the American film boxoffice can lead to anything from (a) sound logic and (b) valid reasoning to (c) purebunk theory and (d) the ancient alibi. One thing is for certain in picture business: The roadshow epics are still the mainstays of the downtown cinemaland.

All product has gone through a trial period spanning the allegedly (according to distributors) months of May and June, and then spilling over into July 4th and midsummer when all companies had their top releases out in hot competition.

Some of the standard presentation new entries did fine, notably 20th-Fox's "Island in the Sun" and United Artists' "Pride and the Passion." Many ranged from fair to dissappointing. The three roadshows, "Seven Wonders of the World" (third in Cinerama's fancy-dress travelogs), Mike Todd's "Eighty Days Around the World" and Cecil B. DeMille's "Ten Commandments"—have hardly moved from the top-notch b.o. levels they've been maintaining for months.

And as they go on and on, and the money apparently heads for new records, it's now abundantly clear that one segment of the picture industry is convinced that the way to the real cleanup is the roadshow approach. Chances are that some producers will seek to market their wares on this basis even though the pictures don't qualify, quality-wise. But that's another story.

Cleanups

For economic dramatics, consider some of the figures. "80 Days" in just 31 engagements (none of which has terminated) has amassed $4,320,000 in domestic distribution revenue. This is the money accruing to the producer and distributor after deduction of theatres' overhead expense.

The income figured on the same basis for "Commandments" is nearly $8,500,000 in the first 125 engagements.

In trade terminology, any film that can gross $4,000,000 or over in the entire playoff of the domes-

'Noah's Ark' (Zanuck-1929) Salvaged and Re-Edited By Backloggers for Theatre Dates

'Sneaked' in 1951

Hollywood, July 30.

World's record for the greatest time lapse between sneak previews of a film has been set by Howard Hughes.

Hughes held a sneak preview of his "Jet Pilot" for the first time back in 1951 in Santa Ana, Cal. Film has been in mothballs since then—until eight weeks ago when it was sneaked in Salt Lake City preparatory to its scheduled release.

Elapsed time between sneaks: roughly six years.

Apparently there's still gold in some of old silent footage lying idle in the vaults of the motion picture companies. An experiment by Associated Artists Productions, the television film firm which acquired the Warner Bros. backlog, may well start a stampede of careful scrutiny and pruning of many of the old silent films.

With its takeover of the WB library, AAP acquired a large number of silent films. Not quite sure of what could be done with the dated footage, AAP staffers screened all the material and came up with a novel idea which apparently is being converted into boxoffice dollars. It selected a 1929 film—"Noah's Ark," written by Darryl F. Zanuck and directed by Michael Curtiz.

The picture, an important biblical spectacle of its day was converted for modern-day use by the preparation of entirely new version. It was edited down from 141 minutes to 71 minutes. A new treatment was prepared by Robert Youngson, who was formerly with Warner-Pathe and who has received considerable attention for his making old silent films usable in today's market. A new script was prepared and a narration was added to the 1929 "Noah's Ark." In addition, sound effects and music were added to enhance the picture.

Upon completion, the picture was turned over to Dominant Pictures, AAP's theatrical distribution subsidiary. Heretofore, Dominant's activities has been mainly concerned with the theatrical distribution of the old WB films before they were shown on

Home-Toll Video Partisans Crow At Ad-TV Grief

Reports that the major television networks are having difficulties selling out their time this fall are being received with an "I told you so" air by the proponents of home-toll video.

Latter have for years been predicting that the spiralling cost of sponsored tv programming would reach a "point of no return" at which sponsors would start hesitating.

"Another year or two and the situation will become critical," exulted one pay-tv advocate this week. "It's as inevitable as tomorrow's sunrise, and no amount of nework propaganda is going to change the facts."

Big toll pitch, of course, is that when that "point-of-no-return" is reached, the only way out will be via some system of tollcasting. Point was made emphatically by all three of the pay-as-you-see systems in their original briefs sub-

Skeptical Points As to Home-Toll

This is how the trade sees and hears and appraises the renewed Skiatron, pay-see, "boxoffice in every home" and kindred show biz items, spurred of the moment by the Giants' and Dodgers' aspirations for quarter-in-the-slot, toll-vision income, if, as and when they desert the Gotham environs.

Item: It is said Matty Fox already has realized a $2,000,000 profit by selling off a block of stock to others who have confidence in the pay-see potential.

Item: With so many kids adept at do-it-yourself, from tv to hi-fi to hot rods, how can any of the systems protect themselves at bootleg gadgets that could, with not too much difficulty, unscramble the picture?

Item: Whether the payoff is by IBM cards, a bill, or coming around to collect from "the boxoffice in the home," as in the old days of the gas meter collectors and even today's electric meter readers—a manpower item which is greater than the utility which is basically charged for—wha' hoppens there? Some months it may run into dollars, some months it may be a meagre few quarters.

The trade leaves those problems to the progenitors of the sundry systems.

Cool Weather Ups Trade, '80 Days' Still Champion, 'Affair' 2d, 'Passage' 3d, 'Stockings' 4th

Break in torrid weather in several sections of country this session, especially the profitable Atlantic seaboard, is spelling better biz in numerous key cities covered by VARIETY. New, strong product naturally is helping.

"Around World in 80 Days" (UA) again is b.o. champ by a healthy margin though closely pressed by "Affair to Remember," which was rated a potential boxoffice winner last week. "Affair," second, is hotsy to great in a majority of spots.

"Night Passage" (U), heard from considerably last week, is capturing third money. Its showing does not include some $80,000 on initial week playing outlying first-run in 22 nabes and ozoners of Chi area. "Silk Stockings" (M-G), third last week, is winding in fourth.

"Seven Wonders of World" (Cinerama) is finishing fifth. "Pride and Passion" (UA), with added dates this week, is pushing to sixth spot. United Artists reported all-time four-week record gross, for world preem playdates in N. Y., Chi and Los Angeles. This beat the best previous UA pix released in the same three keys.

"10 Commandments" (Par), starting first subsequent engagements in four key city areas at a terrific pace, still is very big in key cities to cop seventh position. "Loving You" (Par), out for first time to any extent this week, is landing eighth place.

"Delicate Delinquent," also from Paramount, is copping ninth spot while "Sweet Smell of Success" (UA) is winding up 10th. "Bambi" (BV) (reissue), "Curse of Frankenstein" (WB) and "Love in Afternoon" (AA) are the runner-up pix in that order.

"Hatful of Rain" (20th looms potentially big as a newcomer. It is sock in Minneapolis and stout in N. Y. at Victoria. "Band of Angels" (WB), okay in N. Y., is solid in Cincy. "Midnight Story" (U), also new, shapes fine in Balto and good in Denver.

"Monte Carlo Story" (UA), another newie, looks fair in Philly. "Run of Arrow" (RKO-U) shapes good in K. C. Though heavier exploited, "Can Success Spoil Rock Hunter?" failed to measure up in Minneapolis.

"Lonely Man" (Par), slow in Omaha, looks fair in Cleveland. "Fire Down Below" (Col), modest in Washington, shapes okay in Philly.

"Kronos" (20th) looms okay in Toronto. "Beau James" (Par), fine in Omaha, looks okay in L. A. and N. Y. "Tammy and Bachelor" (U), brisk in K. C. and Washington, is rated big in Louisville.

"Bernardine" (20th), oke in Philly, looks good in Buffalo. "Joe Butterfly" (U) is good in K. C.

Gwenn Davenport's Novel Bought Before Publicat'n

Gwenn Davenport's upcoming comedy, "Bachelor's Baby," has been acquired by 20th-Fox for $75,000. Book is to be brought out by Doubleday next year.

It's a yarn about an indispensable secretary who has a baby, which then becomes part of the office staff.

Title of the book will be changed for the film.

ONCE SECRETIVE, LOEW'S FORCED TO FEUD IN GLARE OF PUBLIC SPOTLIGHTING

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Despite the cliche of the day that the behind-scene plottings and sub-plottings in the Loew situation exceed any work of fiction ever concocted in the literary broom closets of Hollywood, and despite the distaste of Wall Street bankers and brokers for washing dirty linen in public, and their possible exertion of influence to hush things up, it is now the conviction of one body of observers, in and out of Loew's itself, that the war must go to a decision under the open spotlight and glare of the public opinon arena.

Concentrated as it necessarily is upon the divers personalities and motivations drawn up for the must-bust-somebody battle, it's still not the least significant element of the present muster that the Loew "ins" will have to save themselves, their regime, their prestige and their futures by recourse to public relations tactics. The oddity lies in the fact that Loew's was long the least confiding of the film companies in respect to inside stuff.

It is easy in after-sight to declare, as is now the talk in the industry, that for years Loew public relations thinking aimed for a minimum of discussion about some of the autocratic decisions at the top and some of the family connections at the middle of the then pile of goid which have since, to mix the metaphor, come home to roost.

Overshadows Coast Case

Possibly nothing one-half as dramatic as the present crescendo unto showdown has ever come to light in the 60-odd years of film history. The fight for control of the lion's den and the accompanying snarls and roars have definitely overshadowed what would otherwise be the reigning sensation of the moment: namely Samuel Goldwyn's suit against all the California circuits now in the Federal Court of San Francisco.

It was a distaste for a public donnybrook which led Joe Vogel to seek a compromise with the Canadian roadbuilder multimillionaire, Joseph Tomlinson. The quirk in this instance was that Tomlinson had first started buying Loew's after being "romanced" by Loew's own treasurer, Charles Moskowitz, in Florida. Tomlinson had subsequently soured on the company, apparently partly in spontaneous criticism of its performance and partly inflamed and embittered by Stanley Meyer, the young man with a mission to rise in life above his own self-characterized status as "shovel boy."

It follows that no company can want and no chief officer can get on with his everyday tasks while a knockdown battle rages. But the public relations dictate in the brilliant white light of hindsight is now clear: there was a hopeless impasse between what Tomlinson-Mayer-Meyer were after and what Vogel was trying to accomplish by his own methods and timing.

Spade-Calling

Typifying the old school tie of Loew public relations by reticence was the original objection raised to the book, "The Lion's Share," written by the N. Y. Times film critic, Bosley Crowther. Even after its recent publication there was considerable head-shaking that so much inside stuff should become public information. Yet Crowther was discreet as only a Times man can be. Though his work is possibly the only full account of Loew-Metro background in book form, it is relatively mild compared to the about-to-be-circulated August issue of Fortune.

After Fortune's roundup and spade-calling the case for secrecy is done. Advance knowledge of the piece indeed is believed to have prompted the sudden blast against his "tormentors" issued some 10 days ago by Vogel. This blast might still have been a public relations necessity, however, since the special meeting of the Loew board members in the Metro studios at Culver City had been pure claw and fang stuff. A good deal of the charge and counter-charge at the Coast meeting was a reprise of another bit of practical evidence against the impracticality of banker taste in bottling up the story—namely VARIETY's own considerably

'I'm Not Yellow'

The trade has long been asking the laconic question, "Where will it get Joe Vogel—in the end?" with the proper wise-guy accent on "end," and the Loew president is not blind to it.

"What kind of a yellow-bellied so-and-so would you think I'd be?" he tells intimates, to accent that he's no quitter; that now that he's in it he wants to fight his problem through.

Those in the film trade who know of Vogel's progress from theatre usher to prexy in his 40-year career can only root for him. But they also know that "the downtown end," proxy fights, bankers' approvals, etc., are factors not to be taken for granted.

Feud Costs Metro Pending Contract With Lancaster

Hollywood, July 30.

Agreement was reached here whereby the Hecht-Hill-Lancaster Companies will deliver six additional pictures to United Artists in 1958-59 beyond the present three features remaining under an earlier contract. Releasing deal involves a production outlay of $26,000,000.

An earlier all-but-signed deal for Hecht-Hill-Lancaster to produce four features for MGM (with Burt Lancaster to star in an additional two) has gone into abeyance due to the current internal strife at Metro.

"The Rabbit Trap," which was to have been one of the four films made by for MGM, will now be among the new sextet to be made for UA.

In addition to "Trap," by J. P. Miller, for which John Dighton is now doing the screenplay, the following five properties comprise the new HHL deal with UA: "The Unforgiven," by Alan LeMay, which J. P. Miller is screenplaying; "The Catbird Seat" of James Thurber which Billy Wilder will direct from a George Axelrod screenplay; "Ballad of Cat Ballou," by Roy Chanslor who is doing his own screenplay; "Kimberley," based on the novel "Tell It On the Drums" by Robert Krepps, which Sir Carol Reed will direct from a Philip Yordan screenplay; and "The Rock Cried Out," also to be directed by Sir Carol Reed, based on a short story by Ray Bradbury who is writing the screenplay.

Of the six pix listed, Burt Lancaster will star in four — probably "Trap," "Unforgiven," "Cat Ballou" and "Kimberley."

Still to be delivered under the older agreement are: "Run Silent, Run Deep," Clark Gable-Burt Lancaster starrer rolling Sept. 3 under direction of Robert Wise; "Separate Tables," which goes in November with Rita Hayworth, Deborah Kerr, David Niven and Burt Lancaster starred under Delbert Mann's direction; and "The Way West," by A. B. Guthrie for which Clifford Odets is prepping the screenplay. Latter property is budgeted at $5,600,000 and will star James Stewart and Lancaster.

Robert S. Benjamin, UA chairman of the board was here to consummate the deal.

60 Theatres Ready For 'So. Pacific'; Hammerstein Negative at $5,000,000

Holywod, July 30.

With 60 theatres equipped and ready to show it, beginning early next year, the film version of "South Pacific" could conceivably set an all-time industry record by recouping its negative cost of around $5,00,000 plus advertising and exploitation costs of another $1,000,000 and be off the nut, exclusive of royalty payments, within six to seven weeks after opening. Estimate of the phenomenal payoff is based on normal sales and distribution rates; in view of the expected impact of the film, these rates might be altered to quicken the recoupment.

Sixty-threatre spread was revealed here by Oscar Hammerstein II in discussing plans to roadshow the film in 1958. Analysis of his figures indicates the quick payoff potential, although Hammerstein himself carefully avoided any discussion of the subject. He emphasized, however, that it is planned to have the film open, virtually simultaneously in the 60 Todd-AO houses.

Average seating capacity of the houses is 1,250 and the film will play a 12-show per week policy. On these figures, and using the normal boxoffice structure for roadshow attractions, "South Pacific" could gross $1,800,000 per week if it plays at capacity, as it is expected to do. It probably will be so'd on 90/100 terms, leaving $180,000 to exhibitors, $51,000 to Magna at the five-cents-per-seat royalty for the Todd-AO process and $1,569,000 to be cut up between 20th-Fox as distributor and Rodgers & Hammerstein as producers. Figuring a 25% distribution charge as normal for a film such as "South Pacific," this means a possible return to the film of $1,176,750 per week. Thus, at capacity, the entire outlay would be recouped in the first six weeks of the anticipated lengthy run. Allowing time for areas in which the film fails to apen at full capacity and allowing for extra and presently unforeseen expenses the entire cost would still be recouped in a maximum of seven weeks.

Ironically, prospects are that "South Pacific" will gross more in its initial week than the majority of Hollywood production gross in their entire runs.

Length of the film has yet to be determined, he said, commenting that "there is no magic number of

A Credo for Re-Building

The "right" candidates for the top spots, as officers and directors, are the bankers' concern right now.

"One thing is certain," says one Wall Streeter, "when the new Grand Central Terminal was being built we still had to find a way of keeping the trains running. Meantime the building was being erected. It's the same at Loew's. We must maintain the production line, keep the business going, and build a stronger structure, all at one and the same time.

Faces on the Cutting Room Floor

[Or Who Can Follow the Plot Anyhow?]

So many angles were rumored, partly confirmed, partly denied, untrackable or unbelievable last week and at the beginning of this week that insiders were approximately as confused as outsiders. Who was about to do what to whom?

Briskin Briskly Hustled

Item: Louis Nizer, special counsel to Loew's Inc., is said to have "killed" Edwin Weisl's candidate, Samuel J. Briskin, for executive vicepresident. Attorney Weisl's firm, Simpson, Thacher, & Bartlett are also attorneys for Lehman Bros. Vogel also nixed Briskin.

Briskin, vet exec with Columbia Pictures until he became head of a director-controlled Liberty Pictures (Leo McCarey, Frank Capra, George Stevens and William Wyler), sold out to Paramount, on a stock swap deal. Eventually Briskin became an independent producer on the Par lot. He has not been physically too well in recent years but lately is considerably recovered.

Judge Goldstein's Question

Item: Former Judge Louis Goldstein, now on retainer to the Lowenstein Foundation, met with Nizer and Leon Lowenstein, at 1440 Broadway, the New York headquarters of the foundation, which owns 200,000 shares. Vogel was suddenly called to the Coast last Thursday night (25) on an important picture deal which would revitalize the Culver City plant and Nizer subbed for him. Lowenstein wanted to know whether Nizer was more concerned with protecting Vogel than the company's welfare and Nizer stated he was working for the good and welfare of Loew's Inc.

Look For Usual Winners—Lawyers

Item: All concerned agree that if the stock "starts to act sloppy" that "it's bound to become a lawyers' field day" as sundry so-called "stockholders' protective committees" and other independent groups start to act up.

Fighting Is Bad Form!

Item: Robert Lehman and Vogel conferred last week and Andre Meyer, head of Lazard Freres, now abroad, is in constant communication by overseas telephone. At first expressing themselves as "standing by" it is now expected that they have the obligation to advance some program to protect the 400,000 shares of Loew's that they represent. Vogel was startled by Lehman's conservative banker opinion, when the Loew president went downtown for advice, that he thought it was foolish to expose the internecine situation to the public; that the gauntlet thrown to the Joseph Tomlinson-Stanley Meyer-Louis B. Mayer group "was perhaps a serious sign of weakness."

Buy Me No Headaches

Item: Arthur B. Krim, president of United Artists, and Robert S. Benjamin, chairman of the board, when approached some time back for a UA-Loew's merger, felt that any such move would "be buying a studio headache," in light of the large nut that the Culver City plant carries. Louis Nizer and they constitute the Phillips, Nizer, Benjamin & Krim law firm. Louis Phillips is special counsel to Paramount. All, thus, have strong film industry knowledge from an intra-trade vantage point. Whatever their personal attitudes, F. Eberstadt, underwriting the new UA public stock issue, nixed the move on the ground that UA was "a good clean situation and doing very well as it was." Lazard and Lehman envisioned Krim, Benjamin and Vogel as "the ideal three-man team to bring Loew's back into its former glory."

Wiesenberger's Point of View

Item: Wall Street investments house head, Arthur Wiesenberger, who also represents a large block of Loew stockholders, reportedly was offered a spot on the board, including chairmanship of an executive committee, but he, like Loewenstein, prefers to remain off. However he is reported to have said that "anybody owning 50,000 shares and more should have priority about getting a place on the board."

Mrs. Lasker Says 'No'

Item: Mary Lasker, widow of adman Albert Lasker, founder of Lord & Thomas which became Foote, Cone & Belding, was approached to go on the new Loew Board, but declined.

What of Tex McCrary?

Item: Tex McCrary the television personality who operates on the side as a public relationist was about to get back into the Loew's situation, per one rumor. He was originally PR mouthpiece for Joseph Tomlinson and Stanley Meyer.

See Enigma in Heller Report Switch; Now Favors Retention of Vogel

In a surprise switch that had enigmatic overtones, Robert Heller & Associates, the management consultant firm called in to survey the Loew's Inc. operation, issued a new report late Friday (26) which supplanted all previous appraisals submitted to the corporation. The new report indicated that prexy Joseph R. Vogel was the best man for the top job of running the company and that all he needed to place Loew's on an even keel was an effective majority on the board of directors.

The new Heller report came as a surprise, for the management firm's earlier submission was critical of Vogel and his management and went so far as to suggest that Vogel be replaced as president by producer Sam Briskin. Its stated by an educated source that the Heller company made the initial recommendation although no members of the firm had ever met Briskin. When Vogel issued his blast against Joseph Tomlinson, Stanley Meyer and Louis B. Mayer last week, he charged that "an individual representative of a management consultant firm was used to suggest to the board that it remove me and other key executives."

Said to be playing a leading role in advancing the candidacy of Briskin is Edwin Weisl, partner in the law firm of Simpson. Thacher & Bartlett, which are the attorneys for Lehman Bros., the Wall Street banking firm with a substantial financial interest in Loew's. Weisl, a member of the board of Paramount, is also reported to be Stanley Meyer's and Louis B. Mayer's personal attorney. Weisl's association with Briskin stems

Boston, July 30.

Trans-Lux, now playing the Swedish import, "Naked Night," is in first run after 17 years of second runs. The 730-seater will show art films.

"Naked Night" heavily exploited in local newspapers and in Swedish press in the territory, grossed $9,000 for its first week and a new house record. Trans-Lux started in Hub as a news reel and shorts theatre.

DREAD BANKER RULE AT LOEW

Vogel Preps Blue Chip Bd. for Sept. 12

Norma Shearer (Thalberg's Widow) and Gen. Omar Bradley Reported in Lineup

Norma Shearer and Gen. Omar Bradley reportedly have agreed to accept posts on the new slate of directors which Loew's prexy Joseph R. Vogel will propose to the stockholders at the special meeting called for Sept. 12.

Vogel, it's said, has assembled a "blue chip" board which he will officially announce some time next week. It's asserted that he has selected individuals and received acceptances from an entire slate of outside directors who, with the management directors, would make up a 19-man board. Frank Hatch, head of the Boston office of Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborne is listed as onother Vogel nominee.

Mary Lasker, widow of adman Albert Lasker, has also been approached by Vogel to serve on the board.

If Vogel's board is approved by the stockholders on Sept. 12, Miss Shearer a former Metro star and widow of Irving Thalberg, Metro's production chief during the company's "golden" years, will be the fiirst woman ever to serve on the board of a motion picure company. Her appointment, regarded as a dramatic move, is expected to rally a large segment of femme shareholders to support the management. Gen. Bradley's acceptance is also seen as an important plus for the Vogel forces.

'Island's' Grief Mild

There seems to be more smoke than fire in the loud Southern threats against the showing of Daryl F. Zanuck's "Island in the Sun" below the Mason-Dixon line.

According to 20th-Fox, the film's distributor, picture has played everywhere without any undue incidents. It's had several Southern dates, including Miami, Louisville and New Orleans. Film has been banned only in Memphis.

Churubusco & Quake

Hollywood, July 30.

Mel Welles, producer-director of Ararat Productions telephoned here that only "slight damage" had been suffered at Mexico City's Churubusco Studios in Sunday's earthquake.

Indie is locationing in Mexico for "Killer's Cage," first of scheduled lowbudgeters, is only Yank unit currently there.

Leo's Treasures Inspire Dreams

There was no crisis in Loew's until the end of World War II. Indeed Loew's alone of the great film combines went throngh the depression wringer intact, unlaundered by bankruptcy. Some of the shock of the present time relates to the "strong" company now showing weakness.

Blame the delay in recognizing and adjusting to television. Or the uncertainties incidental to divorcement. The fiscal dive from 1946 to 1956 is, of course, the essence of the c-r-i-s-i-s-, to wit:

$18,690,000 annual net to $4,840,000.

$3.66 a share to 91c. a share

As a publicly-owned holding, Loew's was more vulnerable than other film companies to "raiding." It remains to be seen whether the reputed 5% stake of Joseph Tomlinson can seize the control. The assets of Loew's remain formidable. Among these:

Loew's International Culver City Studios (190 acres). Leases on library films to tv. Rights, negatives, other assets up to $225,000,000.

VERBALLY VOGEL'S SHOW BIZ'S BOY

By ABEL GREEN

Over the past weekend and continuing there was plenty of midnight oil burning in Wall Street and in the country estates of such diverse groups as Lehman Bros., Lazard Freres and Arthur Wiesenberger among others on the Loew situation. These three groups control some 700,000 shares among them.

Edwin Weisl of the Simpson, Thacher & Bartlett law firm has been openly advocating Samuel J. Briskin for the top spot and huddled all day on Monday (29) with Robert Lehman, head of the banking house bearing the family name. Lehman openly asked Wiesenberger for support of Briskin as the possible new president of Loew's Inc., in an effort to end the strife between Joseph R. Vogel, president, and the dissident Joseph Tomlinson-Stanley Meyer group. Wiesenberger nixed it, as did Vogel last week when the idea of bringing in veteran film man Briskin as a top exec was broached.

Wiesenberger is said to have proposed a completely new concept for the solution of the management hassle. Andre Meyer, head of Lazard (no relation of course to Stanley Meyer), is currently abroad. Lehman suggested that Wiesenberger "meet Briskin" but the banker acted disinterested.

The debacle, the threat of "lawyers' field day," the possibility of further legal entanglements, etc. caught the banking houses completely off-base and, as one expressed it, "like children running around with their heads cut off." Lehmans has 150,000 shares and controls 200,000 more; Lazard likewise has 350,000 shares; and Wiesenberger's investment trusts have a ditto amount.

As another banker puts it, "The fact that nothing specifically is

Fortune Mag Profiles Loew's-as-Is; Sympathetic to Vogel But Sees Him Out-Foxed by Tomlinson's Javits

Mayer on Meyer

Fortune article,. (August) comments on sharpness of attack made by the Joseph Tomlinson faction on Loew's prexy Joseph R. Vogel. While Louis B. Mayer "hailed Stanley Meyer as 'a bold, aggressive man, tough as a bull.' But when asked if he really considered Meyer competent to run MGM, Mayer proclaimed: I'd bet you $100,000 he could not do it—but give me a year to teach him what I know, and I can make him the most gilt-edged property in Hollywood today.'"

Louis B. Mayer: 'Vogel's a Fool'

Hollywood, July 30.

Louis B. Mayer has hit back at charges that he was master-minding a "plot" to seize control of Loew's from the administration led by Joseph R. Vogel. Mayer called Vogel "a fool who doesn't know what he's talking about" and contended that if he had wanted control of Loew's he never would have left his job as studio head.

"I don't think he's capable of filling the post," he snapped. "I'm told he was a fool to accept it."

Mayer admitted he was giving advice to Joseph Tomlinson and Stanley Meyer, but added he's also giving Vogel advice.

Loew's much-badgered president, Joseph R. Vogel, emerges as the "hero" of a comprehensive Fortune survey of the "fantastic struggle" for control of the motion picture company. The artcle by Emmet John Hughes, published yesterday (Tues.), is a timely appraisal of the Loew's situation at a point when the battle for control of the company cannot much longer continue.

Hughes presents a knowledgeable and fact-packaged review of the conditions that led to the current struggle. He discusses the conditons in the industry that brought about many of the changes and the administration of former prexy Nicholas M. Schenck which Hughes sees as attributing to Loew's downfall. He is sharply critical of the triumvirate of Joseph Tomlinson, Stanley Meyer and Louis B. Mayer and their efforts to take over control of the company.

Meyer, per Fortune, set out to stalk the lion early in 1956 when he suspected that the company could be captured. He discovered that his personal attorney represented Lehman Bros. and he conferred with Robert Lehman. However, says the story, neither Lehman Bros. nor Lazard Freres seemed impressed with Meyer's managerial ability.

Meyer, Hughes continues, then learned about Tomlinson from a Wall Street acquaintance. He succeeded in bringing Tomlinson and Louis B. Mayer together. "Meyer," Hughes indicates, "knew well L. B.'s bitter and abiding resentment over the way Schenck had treated him in 1951."

Meyer miscalculated when he thought that Mayer's name would

Cloak-and-Dicker In The Corridor

('Rump' Directors Meeting at Loew's State Offices)

By HY HOLLINGER

The Joseph Tomlinson-Stanley Meyer faction on the Loew's Inc. board, consisting of five directors, met as scheduled yesterday (Tues.) at Loew's New York home-office and took actions which Loew's prexy Joseph R. Vogel and Louis Nizer, attorney for the Loew's management, immediately characterized as "brazen" and "illegal."

The actions of the alleged "rump" group included the "election" of two new directors—former Metro production chief Louis B. Mayer and independent producer Samuel J. Briskin; the temporary appointment of Tomlinson and Stanley Meyer to vacancies on the executive committee; the suspension of all functions and activities of the executive committee; the limitation of all deals made by Vogel to a maximum of $25,000, and for only one year's duration; repudiation and a demand for the immediate withdrawal of the preliminary proxy material filed with the Securities & Exchange Commission calling for a stockholders' meeting on Sept. 12.

Vogel's Pronunciamento

Vogel, in a statement from the Coast, said the Sept. 12 meeting will take place despite the efforts of the Tomlinson group to block it. "If the plotters had any confidence in their position why should they be afraid of the stockholders' decision?" Vogel asked. Vogel further declared that Louis B. Mayer, whom he termed "the conspirator behind the scenes," is now out in the open. He added that it proved that the charges made against L. B. Mayer, Tomlinson and Stanley Meyer were "true" and that it is L. B. ambition to "seize control of the company."

Attending the so-called "rump" meeting were Tomlinson, Stanley Meyer, Louis Johnson, Ray Lawson and K. T. Keller. Only management representative present was Irving Greenfield. secretary of the corporation.

Johnson, former Secretary of Defense in the Truman administration, served as chairman of the Tomlinson-called "board" meeting. The directors were flanked by a flock of lawyers, including Milton Pollack, recently named as Tomlinson's attorney; Arthur Logan, a Delaware attorney presumably called in to give an opinion on Delaware corporate law since Loew's Inc. is incorporated in that state; and several other lawyers, including a representative from Johnson's Washington law firm, Steptoe & Johnson.

Mayer and Briskin, who waited in the corridor of Loew's 11th floor board room, were called into the meeting about 15 minutes after the session was called to order at 10.30 a.m. The meeting lasted about one hour. When the Tomlinson group emerged, they refused to issue any statements and referred all inquiries to Pollack. Latter also rushed to the elevator and refused to answer questions, saying a statement would be issued later in the day. At 2.15 p.m., Pollack called the press to Tomlinson's suite in the Hotel Sherry-Netherland and gave the Tomlinson group's version of what took place at the meeting via a handout.

According to Louis Nizer, the Tomlinson meeting was "illegal" since seven directors, which according to the company's bylaws constitute a quorum, were not present. Nizer stressed that "no official and binding business" could be transacted at the meeting and he insisted that there is no provision in Delaware corporate law by which an exception to the bylaws could be made. Although he said he could not give details, he declared that "all sorts of legal proceedings" are being prepared against the Tomlinson faction.

Tomlinson's Stance

Pollack took a different view of the legality of the Tomlinson session. He said that, pursuant to Delaware corporate law, a majority of the members of the board are authorized to fill the vacancies on the board. This, he maintained, was carried out by the "board" unanimously when they fill two out of the four vacancies.

Then with Briskin and L. B. Mayer "declared elected" and attending the meeting, "a quorum" of seven were present, according to Pollack. Although he did not say so specifically, the intimation was that this situation made the meeting legal and as a result the "board" could proceed with company business.

In demanding that the proposed Sept. 12 stockholders' meeting be called off, the Tomlinson faction declared that it "would not serve the best interests" of the company. The Tomlinson group further resolved that it disapprove and forbid the expenditure of any funds or the utilization of company employees and other resources for the solicitation of proxies.

Press Relations

Loew's management got the jump on the Tomlinson faction in getting its story across to the press. Greenfield immediately reported to Nizer and gave him a quick report of what transpired at the meeting. Later Greenfield also reported to the press, declaring that he had informed the Tomlinson board members that, according to the bylaws of the company, the meeting was an illegal one. Nizer immediately called the Coast and conferred with Vogel who gave him a statement to issue to the press. Vogel stated that "we will hold everyone who participated in this plot legally responsible."

The Tomlinson forces, which originally controlled six men on the board were down to five when they arrived for the meeting. This resulted from the resignation of Fred Florence, whose exit from the board was announced by George L. Killion, a pro-Vogel director, on the Coast on Monday (29).

Lehmans For Briskin

Meanwhile, it was learned, that Briskin's candidacy is being supported by Lehman Bros., the Wall Street banking firm involved in the Loew's situation. Robert Lehman, it's said, is devoting fulltime to the Loew's problem. In addition, in the absence of Andre Meyer, head of Lazard Freres, Pierre David-Weill, senior partner of the banking house, has come from Europe and is reported to be taking personal charge of the behind-the-scenes manoeuvering in the battle for control of Loew's.

The banking interests, it's understood, although supporting Briskin's candidacy, feel that his appointment will not provide the final answer of what will happen or what should be done to straighten out the tangled Loew's situation.

Vogel's Exec Committee

The supporters of Joseph R. Vogel immediately ignored all actions taken by the Tomlinson group. The executive committee, which according to the management now consists of Vogel and George L. Killion, now that Ogden Reid and Frank Pace Jr. have resigned from the board, named Killion as chairman of the exec group succeeding Reid.

The executive committee, in addition, designated William H. Parker and John L. Sullivan, Vogel supporters on the board, along with Vogel, as a proxy committee to solicit proxies for the Sept. 12 meeting.

The committee also approved the borrowing of Audrey Hepburn from Paramount to star in Metro's "Green Mansions."

This is the kind of snappy, crackling farce that Hollywood hasn't had too much of in recent years. In converting the stageplay "Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter?" to his purposes, Frank Tashlin—who's practically a one-man band on this picture—has turned out a vastly amusing comedy that has all the earmarks of a bangup success.

There have been many in the trade who, in recent years, have deplored the lack of screen laughter. Well, this film has a bellyfull. Granted, it may strike some civilians as too much of a private joke on Madison Ave. and television, and the pace isn't even, but the whole shapes up as a well-acted, extremely funny film that doesn't shrink from slapstick in the grand tradition.

Picture bears comparatively little resemblance to the George Axelrod original, but it's to be doubted that there'll be any complaints on that grounds. Tashlin, who produced, directed, wrote the screen version and scripted it, has an ear for the gags and an eye for situation comedy. Combination clicks down the line and is helped by sock performances, notably by Jayne Mansfield and Tony Randall.

This is Randall's second excursion into the bigscreen realm (did "Oh Men, Oh Women" for 20th). His roots are in tv and the stage. "Rock Hunter" should establish him as a promising screen comedy talent. He's a fellow who knows timing, and his clowning has a slightly sophisticated touch that hits bullseye. The picture rests largely on him, and he carries it through with nary a slip. Thanks to some fine shading, he manages to make the transition from hilarity to serious moments without losing the sense of credibility.

It's not his fault that, towards the end, the whole gag is overworked and some of the sequences tend to become tedious. There the blame falls on Tashlin, who didn't know when to call a halt to a good thing.

Miss Mansfield (deliberately, or not, looks and moves and sounds like Marilyn Monroe), does a sock job as the featherbrained sex-motivated movie star. She's stunningly dressed (with all the expected exposures) and is handed some very strong laughlines which she delivers competently. Her appeal is mostly visual though.

Tashlin has fashioned a funny credit for the credits, which are introed by Randall. Trouble is that this kind of opening takes the play away from the names. Nevertheless, it sets a fine mood, and immediately establishes Randall as the boy with the laughs.

There's also an "intermission," with Randall coming out to comfort those who are used to tv commercials. Sequence lampoons the tv picture, as do the credits via a satirization of video commercials. In the end, Groucho Marx comes on for a briefy. Clowning throughout ranges from the broad to the sophisticated, so everyone should get their money's worth.

Story has Randall as a tv commercial writer about to be fired because his agency is threatened with the loss of its big lipstick account. He saves the situation by getting the endorsement from a famous movie star. In the process he almost loses his fiancee, becomes a big "success" (symbolized by his getting the keys to the executive washroom), has the screen queen fall in love with him, and ends up running a chicken farm.

Supporting roles are all very well cast. Betsy Drake is cute and displays a strong sense for comedy as Randall's fiancee; Henry Jones, adagency v.p., coaxes from the sidelines and delivers some rather lengthy speeches; Joan Blondell is standout in a small part and Britain's John Williams is vastly amusing as the ad agency head who actually wants to be a horticulturist. Lili Gentle is appealing as Randall's teenage niece and Mickey Hargitay is properly pompous as the Tarzan he-man who triggers Randall's troubles.

Film is full of plugs for upcoming pix from 20th, and goes all-out in advertising TWA. Screen ought not to be as obvious as all that in plugging a commercial service.

Joe MacDonald's lensing is top-notch and the De Luxe color is crisp and sharp. Georgia Carr does the Bobby Troup "You Got It Made" number in calypso style. Settings of the picture are plush. Producer Tashlin obviously was determined to shoot the works for director Tashlin, who in turn knew how to handle scripter Tashlin. Combined efforts help to make "Rock Hunter" the kind of film that should pack 'em in during any weather—rain or shine. Hift.

Jungle Heat

Cardboard characters filmed in Hawaiian locale. Secondary bookings and results indicated.

Hollywood, July 23.

United Artists release of a Bel-Air Production. Stars Lex Barker, Mari Blanchard; features Glenn Langan, James Westerfield, Rhodes Reason, Miyoko Sasaki. Producer, Aubrey Schenck. Director, Howard W. Koch. Screenplay, Jameson Brewer; camera, William Margulles; editor, John A. Bushelman; music, Les Baxter. Previewed, Jan. 22, '57. Running time, 75 MINS.

Dr. Jim Ransom ..... Lex Barker
Ann McRae ..... Mari Blanchard
Roger McRae ..... Glenn Langan
Harvey Mathews ..... James Westerfield
Major Richard Grey ..... Rhodes Reason
Kimi-San Grey ..... Miyoko Sasaki
Felix Agung ..... Glenn Dixon
Kuji ..... Bob Okazaki
Corporal ..... Jerry Frank
Kaemi ..... Daniel Wong
Folger ..... Andrew Gross
Jules ..... Yun Kui Chang
Freight Agent Attendant ..... Kunio Fudimura
Expectant Mother ..... Leo Ezell

Despite scenic opportunities of Kauai Island, in Hawaiian group, where pic was lensed, this emerges as distinctly minor-league offering. (Potboiler) can't aspire to better than secondary bookings.

Story by Jameson Brewer is notable only in invincible stupidity of all characters. Tale has to do with Japanese fifth column on eve of Pearl Harbor. Leo Barker is medico sympathetic to problems of native workers; also fighting machinations of local planter James Westerfield, head of Jap underground.

To island come Mari Blanchard and husband Glenn Langan, latter a dense troubleshooter sent out to straighten sugar plantation's labor problems. Contemptuous of natives, he's easily mislead by Westerfield. Gory finale has Westerfield and his fifth column wiped out by Barker and National Guard major Rhodes Reason. Langan perishes in the turmoil, leaving a clear romantic field for Miss Blanchard and Barker.

Barker fills bill of standard heroics ably enough and Miss Blanchard is decorative, although foolish role hampers her thesping. Westerfield plays the villain with old-fashioned, lip-smacking gusto, an effective approach to the idiotic plotting. Langan can't do much with badly-drawn part. Reason is okay as the major and Miyoko Sasaki, as his Japanese wife, impresses in short footage.

Direction of Howard W. Koch misses nary a cliche, but then, neither does the script. Technical credits are adequate. Kove.

Walk Into Hell
(COLOR)

Exploitation entry with documentary overtones. Shot in New Guinea. Okay b.o.

Patric Pictures release of Southern International Ltd. - Discfilm production. Stars Chips Rafferty, Francoise Christophe, Reginald Lye; features Pierre Cressoy, Sgt. Major Somu, District Officer Fred Kaad. Produced by Rafferty; director, Lee Robinson; screenplay, Rex Rients; camera (Eastman Color), Carl Kayser; editor, Alex Ezard; music, Georges Auric. Previewed in N. Y. July 17, '57. Running time, 93 MINS.

Steve McAllister ..... Chips Rafferty
Dr. Dumarcet ..... Francoise Christophe
"Sharkeye" Kelly ..... Reginald Lye
Jeff Clayton ..... Pierre Cressoy
Towalaka ..... Sgt. Major Somu
District Officer Fred Kaad ..... Himself

This goes under the heading of exploitation though actually "Walk Into Hell" is more of an adventure travelog. It's done in color, with a definite story line, and benefits from some excellent photography of the New Guinea locale.

Producer Chips Rafferty, who also stars, has brought a lot of elements together in this film, and some pan out into exciting sequences. Picture won't collect any critics' awards for best performances, but it stands to please the action fans and it has, as an added plus factor, some very realistic sequences involving the natives.

There's one impressive scene where a large crowd of fierce-looking warriors performs a wild dance on a field. Actually, they've been put up to it by Rafferty who needs the area trampld down so a light plane can land.

Story has Rafferty take a French woman doctor, Francoise Christophe, and an old adventurer, Reginald Lye, into the New Guinea mountains after Lye reports he has found oil in a remote region. It's Rafferty's job to establish an airfield and a base before the rainy season starts. On the trip they rescue Pierre Cressoy, an elephant hunter, who has killed a white bird sacred to the natives. The little expedition almost gets wiped out as a result.

Director Lee Robinson has staged some good action, and while the performances are far from believable, at least they don't get into the way of the story. Carl Kayser's camera work, with the inevitable attention to bare native bosoms, is of top quality and catches some fascinating glimpses of New Guinea and its people. There's also a spine-chilling sequence involving a snake attack on Miss Christophe.

Rafferty as the laconic leader of the troupe is good. Miss Christophe is attractive without being convincing, and Lye does okay with his part. A number of native soldiers play themselves. "Walk Into Hell" has a good title and intriguing backgrounds. It's a natural for the exploitation trade. Hift.

The Fuzzy Pink Nightgown

Mild comedics with Jane Russell, Ralph Meeker, Keenan Wynn; so-so boxoffice.

United Artists release of Russ-Field (Robert Waterfield) Production. Stars Jane Russell, Ralph Meeker, Keenan Wynn. Features Fred Clark, Adolphe Menjou, Una Merkel, Benay Venuta, Robert H. Harris. Directed by Norman Taurog. Screenplay, Richard Alan Simmons; based on novel by Sylvia Tate; camera, Joseph La Shelle; editor, Archie Marshek; music, Billy May. Tradeshown in N. Y. July 19, '57. Running time, 87 MINS.

Laurel Stevens ..... Jane Russell
Dandy ..... Keenan Wynn
Mike Valla ..... Ralph Meeker
Sergeant McBride ..... Fred Clark
Arthur Martin ..... Adolphe Menjou
Bertha ..... Una Merkel
Daisy Parker ..... Benay Venuta
Barney Bayliss ..... Robert H. Harris
Television Announcer ..... Bob Kelley
Disk Jockey ..... Dick Haynes
Flack ..... John Truax
Lieutenant Dempsey ..... Milton Frome

There's flimsy excuse for "Fuzzy Pink Nightown" as title for this latest from Russ-Field Productions; indeed, Jane Russell dons such a garment for no apparent reason other than to connect the title with the picture. It was the name of the original novel where presumably such attire was more important and, perhaps, this also justifies its use with the film.

Anyway, "Fuzzy Pink Nightgown' is a mild comedy that has the names of Miss Russell, Ralph Meeker and Keenan Wynn to help it collect modest returns in the general market. And to mention that title just once more, it, too, should assist.

Basic idea played around with in the Alan Simmons screenplay, based on the Sylvia Tate book, had a good deal of comedy potential. It's about a Hollywood star, Miss Russell, who is kidnapped just before her new picture, "The Kidnapped Bride," is to open. Her abductors are Meeker and Wynn and they're playing it for real, i.e., it's not the publicity stunt Miss Russell at first suspects. But they come to fall for the gal and prefer to call the whole thing off. She wants them to go through with the kidnapping for otherwise the public would suspect it actually was a shabby headline-grabbing gimmick from the start and her career would be ruined.

This kind of situation, to be gotten across with sufficient comedy effect, required a clever satirical treatment or sharp delivery of snappy dialog. But neither is the case. The amusement comes but intermittently; for the most part the writing is unimaginative and Norman Taurog's direction is routine.

Miss Russell, Meeker and Wynn are adequate under the circumstances—that is to say they're trapped with a commonplace script. Same obtains with Adolphe Menjou as film studio boss, Fred Clark, who plays a detective, and Una Merkel, Benay Venuta, Robert H. Harris and others on and off the scene.

Joseph La Shelle's camera work, Billy May's music and other credits are standard. Gene.

Capsule Foreign Film Reviews

Protevousianikes Peripeties (The Girl From Korfu) (GREEK; COLOR). Olympus Film Corp. production. Stars Rena Vlachpoulou, Stephanos Stratigos, Anny Bol, Kulis Stolingas. Directed by Jannis Petropoulakis. Screenplay, Ilias Limberopoulos; camera (Eastmancolor), Vasilis Maros; music, Menelos Theofanides; editor, Jean Uenet. At Berlin Film Fest. Running time, 84 MINS.

"Korfu" with a budget of about $80,000 and reportedly the most expensive Greek pic to date, comes to the screen as an item which clearly reveals the Greek producers' efforts to follow the West European pattern. It has an operatic-type plot centering around two village beauties who come to Athens where they get mixed up in all sorts of comical situations.

Only a few folk dances distinguish this film from West European run-of-mill productions. There is, however, some ease about this feature which makes it sympathetic though not very entertaining. Hans.

The Valley of Lost Soul (CHINESE). Cathay Film Productions Ltd., Hongkong production and release. With Yien Chuen, Lin Dai, Chen Yu Shin, Kao Chan, Yang Yih Moh, Wan Lan. Directed by Yien Chuen. Screenplay, Dick Yee; camera, Fan Jai. At Berlin Film Fest. Running time, 91 MINS.

A rather simple boring tale centering around love, seduction and jealousy, fails to cause much excitement. Principal characters are two hostile brothers and an orphan. The latter takes the good brother home as her husband. While the film grants the curious patrons some interesting insights into Asiatic habits of love and life, this item hardly stands a chance in the world market. Hans.

The Wedding Day (KOREAN). Sudo Film Co. (Lee Byung Il) production. Directed by Lee Byung Il. With Kim Sung Ho, Cho Mi Ryung, Kim Yoo Hi, Choi Hyun. Screenplay, Oh Yung Chin; camera, Lim Byung Ho; music, Lim Won Shik. At Berlin Film Fest. Running time, 81 MINS.

A remarkable entry from this small nation. This is a charming tale of a man who by mistake marries his daughter's bridegroom with a sweet maid-servant. Although a far cry from western mentality, this one offers plenty of hilarious situations which really click. A refreshing outsider among the festival entries, this pic won't be forgotten so easily. Special praise goes for the camera-work which includes some impressive shots. Film garnered considerable applause in Berlin. Hans.

Arashi (Father Love) (Japan). Toho production and release. Stars Chishu Ryu, Kunio Otsuka, Akira Kubo, Izumi Yukimura, Kinuyo Tanaka. Directed by Hiroshi Inagaki. Screenplay, Ryuzo Kikushima; camera, Tadashi Limura; sets, Taeko Kita and Kan Ueda. At Berlin Film Fest. Running time, 105 MINS.

This is a story of a high school teacher who, after the death of his wife, has to raise his four children by himself. It's a well directed and appealingly-acted film with many humorous and human touches. The only handicap for western audiences is the length. While Chihu Ryu deserves praise for his outstanding portrayal of the father, a special word goes to Izumi Yukimura, the darling of the Berlin festival who contributed a lovable portrayal of Ryu's daughter. In all, a film which doesn't reach the quality of Japanese masterpieces but nevertheless contributes to the prestige for Japan's filmmaking. With some cuts, it seems to have possibilities for situations outside Nippon. Hans.

Akirombo Kaido (The Horse Boy) (JAPANESE). Toei Motion Picture production and release. Stars Isuzu Yamada, Shuji Sano, Motoharu Ueki, Shinobu Chihara, Tamami Fujii, Kenji Sunkida. Directed by Tomu Uchida. Screenplay, Yoshitaka Yoda; camera, Teiji Yoshida; music, Shiro Fukai; editor, Nobufaro Miyamoto. At Berlin Film Fest. Running time, 95 MINS.

Japan's "Horse Boy" is another contribution to the currently popular parents' problem. It's a passionate accusation of a young boy against his mother who had to leave him for reasons of "representation."

Film borders much on sentimentality but remains entertaining and even amusing at times, thanks to the lovable acting of Motoharu Ueki who, portraying the title role, nearly steals the show. Although much about this Japanese production appears strange to western audiences, there's no doubt that its general appeal won't be limited to Japanese patrons only. Hans.

Bakaruhaban (In Soldier's Uniform) (HUNGARIAN). Hunnia Film production and release. Stars Ivan Darvas, Margit Bara; features Sandor Pecsi, Vali Karompai, Bela Barsi. Directed by Imre Feher. Screenplay, Miklos Hubay from novel by Sandor Hunyadi; camera, Janos Badal; editor, Mihaly Morell; music, Tibor Polgar. At Karlovy Vary Fest. Running time, 90 MINS.

There is no political aspect in this, and with a U. S. distributor ready to handle an unusual pic without worrying about whether its origin will militate against it, this is it. It has the quality for American arties plus entertainment values for some regular spots.

It occurs during the first World War. A journalist, who only has to wear his uniform twice a week, meets a servant girl so garbed, and turns from a flirtation into love. She works for the family of a girl he has been linked with before. Finally it is time for the truth and the girl walks out leaving the weak hero behind.

Film has verve and is brilliantly directed by Imre Feher, who blends satire, gentle comedy and a slightly bitter denoument. Ivan Darvas and Margit Bara are excellent as the leads, turning in some of truest love scenes seen in Eastern pic. Direction, acting and technical aspects are tops to further enhance this unique pic. Mosk.

Lissy (EAST GERMAN). DEFA production and release. Stars Sonia Sutter; features Hans-Peter Minetti, Horst Drinda, Kurt Oligmuller. Directed by Konrad Wolf. Screenplay, Alex Wedding from novel by F. Weiskopf; camera, Werner Bergmann; editor, C. Gottchalk. At Karlovy Vary Fest. Running time, 90 MINS.

With East German pix probably to get entry into the U.S. soon, this pic brooks interest. It examines the early growth of Naziism via a poor family during 1932-34. Ideological aspects do not swamp a growing drama of awareness, and the people remain real to give this a jolting effect. It is strictly for specialized and language spots in the U. S.

Lissy is a young girl whose weak husband turns to the Nazis—where he is unable to find work. Film details her growing hatred of it and her final desertion from her husband because of it, as it grows into a scourge. Sonia Sutter gives depth to the girl character while the rest of the cast helps make this a telling pic of troubled times. Direction is solid, if only surface at times, and technical wrap-up is fine. Mosk.

Donne Del Giorno (The Girl of the Day) (ITALIAN). Lux Film production and release. Stars Virna Lisi, Haya Harari; features Serge Reggiani, E. Cegani, V. Sanipoli, Franco Fabrizi. Directed by Francesco Maselli. Screenplay, Cesare Zavattini, A. Sarioli, F. Bemporad, Maselli; camera, Armando Nannuzzi; editor, Mario Serandrei. At Karlovy Vary Fest. Running time, 90 MINS.

Film digs into the harsh world of show biz success. A girl fakes an attack to get some publicity, but situation gets out of hand and she is forced to name her attackers, a group of suspicious men picked up by the police. The girl finally breaks down and tells the truth.

This is well mounted, but only rarely becomes dramatic and effective. Pic shapes mainly for specialized spots in America. Direction is careful and poised and denotes a new talent in Francesco Maselli. Haya Harari and Virna Lisi are excellent with Miss Harari carrying the brunt of the thesping. Production dess is fine. Mosk.

Bliket (High Up) (RUSSIAN; COLOR). Mosfilm production and release. With Nikolai Rybnikov, Inna Makarova, Gennaid Karnovich, Vasili Makarov. Directed by Alexandre Zarkhi. Screenplay, Mikhail Papava from novel by F. Vorobiev; camera (Sovcolor), Vasili Monskhov; editor, Abram Friedin. At Karlovy Vary Fest. Running time, 93 MINS.

This Russo film again treats work as its theme, but it has enough individual characters to attract some interest. It remains a small possibility for the U.S., however. Film concerns the building a giant blast furnace and the lives of the people working it. People fall in and out of love and one worker exen falls off duty.

Characters are nicely drawn and acted while special effects and process work on the building sites are well done. Color is fine. This is another example of some better Soviet filmmaking. Mosk.

The Man Called Demon (JAPANESE). Nikkacu Film production and release. With Mihashi, Michiyo Aratama, Izumi Ashikawa. Directed by Eisuke Takizawa. Screenplay, Toshio Yasumi; camera, Minoru Yokayama; editor, Masuro Sato. At Karlovy Vary Fest. Running time, 100 MINS.

Film deals with a poor man who takes over a bagnio in the Japan of the 1900's only to become ruthless and obsessed by money. Pic is a journalist account of the legal prostitution setup, and this becomes the film's main interest.

Otherwise, it is well made if plodding for Western tastes. Only chance for Yank spots is via exploitation of its central theme. It is well acted and technically of high calibre. Mosk.

Paddy Chayefsky sez he'd like to have Edward G. Robinson repeat his legit role in the picturization of "Middle of the Night" but he's "a little high priced." The writer also would like Marlon Brando and Marilyn Monroe for bit parts yet . . . Chayefsky's concern about money, incidentally, brings up a point. Remember (not too long ago) when an author cared only about the flexibility of his typewriter and let the studio worry about costs?

CZECHS FORGET PLEDGE TO CUT

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Karlovy Vary, July 30.

When the 10th annual Czech Film Festival closed here last week the handling of the prizes again pointed up incurable party-line habits here. Having said they would reduce from 25 to 4 the multiplicity of the awards, which cheapen the value of Karlovy Vary recognition, the judges restored the cuts. There were 15 prizes handed out, plainly in a comradely desire to shine up some Communist apples.

From the standpoint of Karlovy Vary's prestige with the western countries the backsliding from promises to softpedal ideology and accent artistry could not be worse. In effect almost all the "important" films were rewarded for their participation.

Tendency of Reds, with their training in dialectic and propaganda, showed in the attempt to bring the French film "Celui Qui Doit Mourir" (He Must Die) to the local festival. Only the good sense of the French producer, Jules Dassin, balked the scheme to use the Karlovy Vary to rebuke Cannes for slighting the picture. Dassin wanted no such "kiss" from the Commies which would have obscured the message of his film. Having been entered in Cannes the picture was, in any event, not admissable to another "A" festival, as the Czech politicians were reminded. They themselves had used that very point against the Americans in refusing to unreel U.S. features already exhibited at other continental film festivals this season.

India, as a neutral country, not in the Red orbit but not pro-American, was given the grand prize for "Jagte Raho" (Under Cover of Night.) This Indian feature had some merit but its mixture of allegory, satire and social criticism does not completely come off. It was not, therefor, entirely satisfying as a grand prize winner.

There was also a Special Jury prize for the Red Chinese film "New Year Sacrifice" as well as three other top jury awards to "Hannibal Tunar Ur" (Professor Hannibal), the Soviet's "Bbicota" (High Up) and the East German "Lissy." All were unusual films, but the Russo entry did not deserve so high a prize.

Acting awards went to Frenchman Yves Montand for "The Witches of Salem" the film version of Arthur Miller's "Crucible," and to an old Bulgar actress, S. Arnaud, for the Bulgar-Russo pic "Urok Istoriji" (In the Face of the World). Best direction went to Andrej Munk for the Polish pic "Czlowiek Na Torze" (The Man on the Rails) shaved with Vladimir Pogacic for the Yugoslavian pic "Veliki I Mali" (The Big and Small).

All the above films were reviewed here for VARIETY.

Shorts prizes went to France's "Nuit Et Brouillard" (Night and Fog) on World War II German concentration camps and the Russo "Geysers and Volcanos.

On the organizational side the festival was quite well handled save for exasperatingly slow service in the one dining room. Documentation was good and a daily bulletin kept participants abreast of the fest happenings.

Abruptly Rated as 'A' Festival, San Sebastian Very Lacklustre; Will Barcelona Steal Franchise?

By HANK WERBA

San Sebastian, July 23.

The San Sebastian International Film Festival opened last Sunday (21) at the Teatro Eugenia Victoria with a least-likely-to-succeed tag among this year's festivals. Only 14 countries are represented, of which only nine have entered full-length features.

An American delegation of one inaugurated proceedings when Jack Lamont, overseas chief of Ellis Arnall's Society of Independent Producers (SIMPP), came on stage to keynote "A Kiss Before Dying" (Crown Productions, '56 for United Artists release).

Premiere, rich in Basque hospitality and folklore, failed to reveal those elements expected from a fest with a class "A" seal. Absence of quality pix, foreign stars, Spanish brass and personalities of stature left a jump-off question mark about San Sebastian's future.

Mayor Juan Pagola, fest prexy, told VARIETY his committee had less than two months to prepare from the date Int'l Federation of Producers Associations (FIAP) revealed major rating for the Biscay Bay beach resort city. Pagola was also hamstrung by picayune government subsidies totalling 400,000 pesetas from three separate ministries and decision of Spanish film producers to withdraw a 300,000 peseta ($7,000) subsidy granted last year.

Mayor Pagola also attributed fest lacklustre opening to the concentrated number of festivals in competition in the Cannes-Venice time span. He prefers bi-annuals on a rotation basis to give each fest its full day of glory.

Motion Picture Export Assn. boycott of San Sebastian has caused local resentment here. Pagola opined that full dress MPEA participation would have helped the Yanks considerably in winning Spanish support for an amicable settlement of the two-year-old dis-

Belgians Worry As Expo's Film Event Held Up

Paris, July 30.

The Federation of International Associations of Film Producers has still not given the forthcoming Brussels Film Festival, part of the overall Belgium World Art Fair next year, an "A" rating, and is, in fact, holding non-participation over the heads of the organizers. This could sabotage the festival and Belgian reps are worried.

Belgian sources maintain that Federation is using its sanction as a weapon to get better remittance rates, for the foreign films in that Kingdom. They say that Paris' supremacy in the Federation is also one of the reasons since the French have a big stake in the Belgian film marts and want more takeout money.

Presently, Belgian only allows $6,000 out of country on a picture.

Sex for Europe's Taste, 'Companionship' for U.S.

London, July 23.

Inspired by the front page story in VARIETY May 22, datelined Munich, that there was not enough sex in American films for European tastes, Carl Foreman is to make a dual version of certain key scenes in his upcoming production of "Stella." One version will comply strictly with the MPA production code and will be made available for the American market. European exhibs will be able to take their choice of the alternative.

In the original Jan de Hartog novel, the two principal characters in "Stella," to be played by Wilon the Continent, will also be given obviously living together. In the alternative version, they will be shown together in bed.

Exhibitors in Britain, like those liam Holden and Sophia Loren, are a choice, although the British version will, naturally, be subject to the censor's certificate. In recent years, the British censor has taken an adult view of such scenes and there have been a number of cases in which they have passed shots showing men and women together in bed.

Holden arrived in London last weekend to start location work on "Stella," but Miss Loren is not due until the picture goes into Shepperton Studios in two months or so. The film is the first under Foreman's recently concluded four-picture deal with Columbia.

Could Be Billy Graham's Influence

Omaha, July 23.

The coffers of Omaha's three top downtown theatres, the State, Brandeis and Orpheum, were all $2.50 richer last week when a nagging conscience apparently caught up with a resident of nearby Council Bluffs, Ia.

Managers Kermit Carr, Ed Force and Don Shane each received a United States postal money order for that amount, and unsigned notes with the orders read, in neatly typewritten letters:

"Do not return the enclosed money order as this is a false name and address. This is for restitution. When I was over 12, I used to claim my age as being under 12 for a few times."

48 Films Ready For Cameras As Coast Speed-Up

Hollywood, July 30.

Major studios, shaking off the doldrums of the last six months, are getting into production activity. A total of 48 films are set to go before the cameras, as compared with 35 at the same period last year.

For the first six months of 1957, the majors have turned out 95 films, as compared to 73 for the indies. In the upcoming spurt, however, this ratio is sharply increased, the majors scheduling 39 films to nine for independent producers. Surge puts the majors ahead of last year's activity when, at the half-way point on the calendar, the studios had completed 103 films to 50 for the indies.

Leading the production spurt among the majors is Columbia with 11 properties poised for Aug.-Sept. production. They are "Rescue at Sea," "The 7th Voyage of Sinbad," "The Grasshopper," "The Screaming Mimi," "The Roses," "The Slicks," "The Lineup," "Too Young," "The Kiss-Off," "Outlaws of Painted Canyon" and "Jukebox Saturday Night." (Incidentally, Col also led the majors during this same period last year with 9 pix).

Following closely behind is 20th-Fox with 9 films for the two-month period. "Fraulein," "Hell Bent Kid," an untitled western, "South Pacific," "Singin' Idol," "A Certain Smile," "Our Love," "The Day of

H.O.s Hamper K.C. But 'Joe' $11,000; Lewis Light 6G, 'Arrow' 13G

Kansas City, July 30.

This week shapes as moderate all around, with holdovers in several situations. However, "Joe Butterfly" in three Fox Midwest houses shapes good while "Run of Arrow" in a preem in four Dickinson locations is doing okay, coupled with two second run films. "Tammy and Bachelor" is pleasant in second week at Uptown, after playing a week in four Fox Midwest theatres. "Delicate Delinquent" in second stanza at the Paramount is light. "Tarzan and Lost Safari" is dull at Midland. "Around the World in 80 Days" at Tower and "Cinerama Holiday" at the Missouri both continue strong.

Chicago, July 30.

Lagging Loop biz this week shapes as natural result of lack of major entries with most holdovers in their final days. "Monte Carlo Story" at the Esquire has prospects for a fat $11,000. Only other starter is "Hot Rod Rumble" and "Calypso Joe" at Monroe, fair $3,500.

Second framers run fair to good. "An Affair to Remember" holds well at the Oriental. "French Are Funny Race" is potent at the little Cinema. "Prince and Showgirl" is dullish at United Artists, while "Delicate Delinquent" looms modest at the Chicago. "Giant Claw" with "Night World Exploded" is the first bill in months to be held a second frame at the Grand. "Curse of Frankenstein" looms big in second Roosevelt round.

San Francisco, July 30.

First-run biz is good here this stanza, with "Pride and Passion" looming great in second week. "Affair To Remember" shapes okay in first holdover session, as does "Silk Stockings," also in second. One of few new entries, "I Was Teen-age Werewolf," is rated fancy at St. Francis. "Delicate Delinquent" is passable good for second frame. Longrunners, "Seven Wonders," "Around World" and "10 Commandments" all are doing fine. "Green Man" tops arty theatres.

Omaha, July 30.

A fat "Beau James" at the Orpheum is getting the most coin among downtown first-runs this week. "Bambi" is collecting the kids' play at the State and is rated hefty; "Prince and Showgirl" is slow at matinees but perks at night to shape strong at the Brandeis. "Lonely Man" is thin at the Omaha.

Ninth week of "Around World in 80 Days" at the Brown will beat the previous stanza. Third week of "Tammy and Bachelor" at the Kentucky is sock as is the Mary Ann, where second week of "Curse of Frankenstein" looms big.

BALLY BOOSTS 'RAIN,' 'LOVING'

Minneapolis, July 30.

Presence in town of James Stewart and Jayne Mansfield for Star-Tribune newspapers' Aquatennial show, the large amount of free space given to them by those dailies and end of the summer celebration which had so many counter attractions, as well as the powerful array of pictures, newcomers and holdovers, is spelling a boxoffice shot in arm currently. In their 51st and third weeks, respectively, both hard-ticket pix, "Seven Wonders of World" and "Around World in 80 Days," continue to prosper mightily, latter racking up mostly sellouts.

However, one new pic, "Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter?" looks slim at Radio City. "Hatful of Rain" is sock at bandbox World. "Delicate Delinquent" is nice on moveover. "Silk Stockings" is only moderate in second round. "Rain" was another heavily plugged pic.

United Paramount's stunt in opening its State nearly four hours earlier than usual, at 8:30 a.m., and advertising that the first 100 in line would be admitted free (as star Elvis Presley's guests) on the first day of "Loving You," paid off in a big way. It got the pic away fast, with a big week in sight. Fact that more than 100 were ahead of them didn't discourage other Presley fans from staying and paying their way. The early line was all youngsters, except for a pair of sixtyish women.

Estimates for This Week

Academy (Mann) (847; $1.50-$2.65)—"Around World" (UA) (3d wk). Likely to hit its present near-capacity pace for a long time to come. Big $17,800. Last week, $18,000.

Century (S-W) (1,150; $1.75-$2.65)—"Seven Wonders" (Cinerama) (51st wk). Its staying power is remarkable. One week from a full year and still way up in money. Terrific $14,500. Last week, $16,000.

Gopher (Berger) (1,000; 85-90)—"Man on Fire" (M-G) (2d wk). One fresh arrival, "Will Success ion. Light $3,000. Last week, $4,000.

Lyric (Par) (1,000; 85-90)—"Delicate Delinquent" (Par) (m.o.). Here for six days after eight Radio City big ones. Nice $6,000. Last week, "Bernardine" (20th) (3d wk), $4,000.

Radio City (Par) (4,100; 85-90)—"Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter?" (20th). Jayne Mansfield getting wholesale attention and gave it a big opening. Sagged after that for poor $7,000; pulled after 6 days. Last week, "Delicate Delinquent" (Par), $15,500 in eight days, including $5,000 opening day when Jerry Lewis appeared on stage four times and scale was tilted to $1.50.

RKO Orpheum (2,800; 75-90)—"Silk Stockings" (M-G) (2d wk). Moderate $6,000. Last week, $7,500.

RKO Pan (RKO) (1,800; 75-90)—"Trooper Hook" (UA) and "Hidden Fear" (U). Mild $3,800. Last week, "Bop Girl Goes Calypso" (UA) and "Big Caper" (UA), $4,000.

State (Par) (2,300; 85-90)—"Loving You" (Par). There apparently still is a big army of Presley fans and they're turning out strongly for this one. Big $10,000 or close. Last week, "Beau James" (Par), $7,500.

Suburban World (Mann) (800; 85)—"Bed of Grass" (Indie) (2d wk). Satisfactory $1,400. Last week, $2,000.

World (Mann) (400; 85-$1.25)—"Hatful of Rain" (20th). This well regarded and heavily plugged pic may build. Socko $6,000 or near. Last week, "La Strada" (Indie) (2d wk), $2,300.

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net; i.e., without usual tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include the U. S. amusement tax.

Break in Heat Bolsters B'way B.O.; 'Passage' Fast $25,000, 'Silk' Slick 160G, 'Affairs' Hotsy 100G, Both 2d

With the backbone of the year's worst heat wave broken early last week, cooler weather dominated most of last seven days, and this will give Broadway first-run business a much stronger tone currently. While not favored by many newcomers, some houses are holding close to last week's figures or actually topping them this stanza. Rain was a plus factor, too. Sunday trade, which was favored by some rainfall and threat of same, climbed higher than even the most optimistic had expected.

Pacing the new entrants is "Night Passage" at the Mayfair with a fast $25,000 in initial round. "Constant Husband," newcomer at the arty Plaza, is heading for a fine $9,600. Another arty entry, "Passionate Summer," hit nice $9,000 opening stanza at the Paris. "Lovers' Net" finished its opening week with a good $9,600 at the Little Carnegie.

Still champ is "Silk Stockings" with stageshow, second session at the Music Hall heading for a sock $160,000. Also big is "Affair To Remember" with stagebill at the Roxy, where $90,000 is in prospect for initial holdover round. Reissue of "Bambi" is holding at smash $13,000 in second week at the Normandie. "Young Don't Cry" with vaudeville looks nice $16,200 opening frame at the Palace.

"Hatful of Rain" held with strong $25,000 in second stanza at the Victoria. "Pride and Passion" looks to actually top the previous week with a good $35,000 in current (5th) session at the Capitol. "Sweet Smell of Success" likely will round out its fifth frame today with a big $19,000 at the State, same as fourth week.

"Band of Angels" looks okay $23,000 for third week at the Paramount, and will go a fourth before bringing in "Curse of Frankenstein" with a midnight preem Aug. 6. "Rising of Moon" is holding in sensational style with $8,500 or close in third week at the tiny 55th St. Playhouse.

Hard-ticket pictures still are being helped by the influx of summer visitors to N. Y. "Around World in 80 Days" continued at capacity $37,100 in 41st week at the Rivoli. "10 Commandments" looks to perk to a big $44,000 in current (37th) round at the Criterion. "Seven Wonders of World" held with $30,300 in 68th session at the Warner, where it is now in its 69th week.

Estimates for This Week

Criterion (Moss) (1,671; $1.80-$3.30)—"10 Commandments" (Par) (38th wk). The 37th frame finishing tomorrow (Thurs.) looks to hit sock $44,000 for 15 performances. The 36th was $41,000 for 15 shows. Continues on.

Fine Arts (Davis) (468; 90-$1.80) — "Light Across the Street" (UMPO). Opened Monday (29). In ahead. "Torero" (Col) (10th wk), was fair $3,600 in 6 days after $4,300 for ninth round.

Globe (Brandt) (1,500; 70-$1.50)—"Face in Crowd" (WB) (9th-final wk). Final round of five days was only meagre $4,000. Eighth full week, $5,000. House closed after Sunday (28) performance.

55th St. Playhouse (Moss) (300; $1.25-$1.50) — "Rising of Moon" (WB) (4th wk). Third frame completed last night (Tues.) was solid $3,500 after $9,500 for second week. Only fast turnover, and terrific take over weekends makes

'Affair' Sockeroo $19,000 in Philly

Philadelphia, July 30.

Mid-city houses are marking time with double features and holdovers this session but newies, "Pride and Passion" and "Hatful of Rain," are due in midweek. Continued heat wave is doing biz no good at many locations. "Affair To Remember" shapes great at the Fox to pace newcomers. "Fire Down Below" is rated okay in second Stanley round. "Seven Wonders," now in 66th week at Boyd, is set to play nine more weeks.

Bass, Golding to Speak for Film Biz

But KCOP Panel Found 'Is Advertising Too Suggestive?' Hard to Cast

Hollywood, July 30.

After being rebuffed by several industryries who refused to take up the cudegel to defend to the Motion Picture Producers Association Ad Code on an Aug. 11 debate on KCOP, Dan Lundberg has finally set a pair of panelists but their positions on the code won't be known until air time. Agreeing to discuss the question "is film advertising too suggestive?" are Saul Bass, film ad consultant, and David Golding, ad-pub v.p. of Hecht-Hill-Lancaster.

Church objections to "degenerate film advertising prompted the debate in the first place, said Lundberg, who is moderator. Program coordinator Rosemary Orme said "Lou Greenspan of the Motion Picture Industry Council refused when we asked him to speak out for the Code; we approached the MPAA, but they referred us to Universal, saying that studio was the only one with its ad department located here, so would be best qualified to talk about the code. At U, they told us ad-pub director David Lipton was in the Far East, and his assistant, Clark Ramsey, said he wouldn't speak about it—that Lipton was the logical one. No one else at U would appear on our show. Jerry Zigmon, coast manager of Paramount theatres, said he didn't even know there was such a code, and he checked with MPAA which told him there was.

"It may not be a pro and con discussion. We have lined up two persons tentatively, but can't yet disclose their names," remarked Miss Orme.

Jimmy Stewart Sees Too Many Legiters 'Stylized'; Friends Vs. Audiences

By JAMES L. CONNORS

Albany, July 30.

James Stewart, during a stopoff in Albany last week for a press-radio-television luncheon to promote "Night Passage," expressed disagreement with two widely-accepted ideas. The first: that experience in stage acting is highly beneficial for screen work. The second: actors in motion pictures suffer from the lack of applause which is regularly accorded legitimate performers.

Stewart indicated that too much emphasis has been placed on the value of stage training, for motion picture trouping.

"To me, stage actors often seem to be 'stylized,' and not 'natural' when it comes to acting in films," Stewart said. He appeared in a number of Broadway plays and starred in one or more, before going to Hollywood.

With time, the "stylized" manner of stage footlight-acting tends to disappear, on the screen, Stewart implied.

Contrary to oft-expressed belief, the 49-year-old star stated that film actors do not particularly miss the applause which comes from live performance. They are compensated by the appreciation and esteem of their fellow artists, in the relatively small companies that are a part of film production.

Because this is "such a disjointed affair," an actor needs and receives the friendship and good will of his colleagues. They are bound together by ties of mutual affection and esteem which makes up for "audience applause," Stewart said. Their approbation is sufficient.

Todd Loses Tax Plea

Los Angeles, July 30.

Mike Todd's plea to reduce the unsecured property tax on the assessed residual value of $1,526,900 for the negative of "Around the World in 80 Days" was turned down by the Board of Supervisors, sitting as the Board of Equalization. Tax amounts to $105,064.46.

Board held the valuation was properly based on the value inherent in the property, over-riding Todd protests that the firm had made only 60 prints and did not intend to make more.

'Goodman My Pal'

[Sex Fadiman]

In reporting the sudden death last week of Jack A. Goodman, senior editor of Simon & Schuster and N. Y. literary eyes and ears for Jerry Wald of 20th-Fox, reference was made here to Goodman's versatility, brilliancy and occasional pugnacity.

Clifton (Kip) Fadiman, fellow member with Goodman of the Writers' War Board, objects to the statement that he and Goodman "detested each other" and asserts to the contrary a friendship of 28 years. He points to a new Fadiman book due for fall publication via a deal consumated by Goodman last winter.

An entry of new Italian films is also being completed.

NO WAGES, NO CREDIT, JAY RICHARDS SUES

Los Angeles, July 30.

Failure to get a post as associate producer on "Baby Face Nelson" cued a $12,500 lawsuit in Superior Court.

Action was brought by Jay Richards, who charged Alfred Zimbalist and Irving Shulman had agreed to give him the job at $250 per week, plus screen credit. Agreement was mentioned in the pact between Zimbalist and Shulman, he contended, although he had no pact.

Richards sued for $2,500 in lost salary plus $10,000 for loss of prestige for not getting screen credit. Zimbalist-Shulman Productions, and United Artists were named co-defendants.

Wald Wants Late Star's 'Underworld, U.S.A.' For 20th

Hollywood, July 30.

Producer Jerry Wald is negotiating with the Humphrey Bogart estate for "Underworld, U.S.A." property in which Bogart had planned to star in and to co-produce with Walter Wanger. Actor died last Jan. 14. Allied Artists would have released the Bogart film.

Wald, now an indie producer at 20th-Fox, wanted the property when he was exec producer at Columbia, and he and Wanger were bidding for it. When Wanger lined up Bogart and a package, Wald exited the deal, but after Bogart's death Wanger notified Wald the property was now available.

Consequently, Wald is negotiating with Morgan Maree, who was business manager for Bogart. Original story is by Joseph Dineen.

Bobby Watson visiting in Springfield, Ill. (home town) told reporters that he cleaned up during Adolph Hitler's time as his most-active cinematic mimic. Since then he's returned to bits.

Canada's Stratford Festival (Sans Recognition) Seen Worthwhile By Kingsley

Showing of the Danish Carl Dreyer film, "Ordet," at the recent Stratford International Film Festival roused a great deal of interest in the picture within Canada and got the picture an extended local booking, Edward L. Kingsley of Kingsley International reported this week.

Kingsley, who has taken "Ordet" for distribution in the U. S., also entered his Greek "Girl in Black" at Stratford. He said the fest had been very well received and that the organizers of the event are hoping for sanction of their fest by the International Federation of Film Producer Assns.

"The only people who virtually come running every time they hear of a festival are the Soviets and their satellites," said Kingsley. At Stratford, Russia, Czechoslovakia, Poland and Yugoslavia repped the Communist countries. There was no Italian entry. The Swedes refused to participate officially pending authorization from the Federation. The U. S. had "The Naked Eye" and "On the Bowery" at the fest. Canada entered "Oedipus Rex" among others.

"Ordet" has a strange history. It won the 1955 top prize at Venice, and with it much critical acclaim. However, none of the U. S. distributors wanted to touch it and it's only now—two years later—that Kingsley will intro it here. Last important Dreyer pic to be seen in the States was "Day of Wrath."

Kingsley reported that, next year, the Stratford organizers would set up discussion groups following the screenings.

Rank-Yank Tastes 'Balanced' Weeks

Rank Film Distributors of America, though in business only since mid-May, already had several weeks in which cash income balanced cash outlay, Kenneth Hargreaves, RFDA prexy, disclosed in Manhattan yesterday (Tues.) Hargreaves estimated that his company —a wholly-owned subsid of Britain's Rank Organization—needs to gross $5,000,000 a year before breaking even. Included in that figure would be a $2,000,000 slice for the producers, i.e. Rank.

Hargreaves and sales chief Irving Sochin, citing the success of the Rank exploitation releases to date, made it plain that the Rank outfit was now firmly established and a going concern, due to stay in the market. Hargreaves said he hoped the $5,000,000 billings mark might be established by the end of the fiscal year, which is next June.

Rank company will reissue "Henry V" in widescreen version before Christmas, Hargreaves disclosed. Sochin held that British films were accepted in the U.S market by exhibitors "no matter who is in them." They just had to be sold, he added.

Hargreaves said RFDA had no intention of joining the Motion Picture Assn. of America, and it didn't apply for Code seals on its pictures. Reason for not joining the Assn., he explained, was that MPAA dues mostly went to help its members' films in the foreign market "where MPAA can't do us any good."

COUNTY WILL DO IT: SET UP FILM MUSEUM

Los Angeles, July 30.

County Board of Supervisors has approved formation of a committee to launch plans for a film industry museum to be located in Exposition Park. It would be a storehouse for cinema memorabilia and be built as a tourist attraction.

Present plans call for an admission price of 50 cents per person with half the proceeds going to defray costs and the remainder to the Motion Picture Relief Fund. Harry Maizlish has been proposed as chairman of the committee and Joseph Schenck has been named as a committe member.

Film industry itself has never been able to get plans for a museum off the ground.

Picture Pioneers' Charity Plea

The officers of the Foundation of Motion Picture Pioneers have broadcast this communique to its membership, which warrants fullest circulation, and reads in part:

"A man's success is said to be measured by his ability and/or luck. Ofttimes it is a combination of both. Will it surprise you to learn that important motion picture personalities, whose talents apparently remained unchanged but to whom lady-luck turned her back, found the need of something more substantial than a word of sympathy? Ultimately their circumstances required financial support—but from where was it to come?

"The reason for the existence of the Foundation of Motion Picture Pioneers is to help in such emergencies. The recipients retain their self-respect because their cases are kept secret.

"It should shock you to learn that a man who at one time was head of the advertising department of an important motion picture company is now dependent upon the foundation for his very existence. Then there is the case of an individual who at one time owned an important circuit of theatres in the Midwest. Next is a well-known Hollywood producer who had always been successful . . . an important short subjects sales manager . . . a salesman . . . a statesrighter . . . a theatre manager, etc.

"This is only part of the story. The other part is that we, who have been more fortunate, have the privilege if not in fact the responsibilty to be silent benefactors to those pioneers who, through no fault of their own, need an assist from us.

"The Foundation needs your contribution, and we are sure you want to participate to whatever extent your circumstances and judgment allow."

Checks made payable to the "Foundation of Motion Picture Pioneers, Inc." are tax deductable.

Van Heflin Just Can't See Toll-TV

There Aren't That Many Sock Attractions To Invite 'Free' Tuneouts, Sez Actor

Hollywood, July 30.

Those large segments in Hollywood favoring pay-as-you-see tv are blinding themselves to the facts of their life in their desire for hypoed production and employment, asserts Van Heflin. The star said here that he feels from a purely realistic viewpoint the chances of toll-tv coming into actuality are dim.

"Psychologically, those millions of people who see television free today are going to resist having to pay to see something on tv. They bandy fantastic figures around about how many millions of people will pay to see a picture, but there is no proof to back up such statistics.

"Also, they talk about these millions wanting to pay to see good motion pictures on tv. But what assurance is there that these pictures will be good? The finest creative talent in all Hollywood turned out no more than ten—at the most—quality pictures which were really tops last year. So where do they think the talent will come from to turn out quality pictures for tv on a regular basis?

"They talk about having sports events on toll-tv, but how many sports fans are there in the entire population? And how many world's series or world's heavyweight boxing fights are there a year? I really can't see where or how they expect to provide enough fine entertainment on toll-tv to make the viewer pass up his free-tv and pay.

"I do know the tests attempted thus far haven't been too successful. That was true of Telemeter's Palm Springs test which was a bomb, and I don't know of any such test which was a real success.

"Hollywood would be better off concentrating on turning out fine quality motion pictures for the theatres instead of making pictures for toll-tv. If the latter does come about, all it will help do is to close the theatres," commented Heflin.

'Peyton Place' Libel Cases

Laconia, N. H., July 30.

Belknap County Superior Court here has held a preliminary hearing on libel suits totalling $250,000 which have been brought by a Laconia couple against Grace Metalious of nearby Gilmanton, author of the spicy novel, "Peyton Place," now being made into a 20th Century-Fox feature with production in progress in Camden, Me.

In separate actions, Thomas Makris, former principal of the Gilmanton Corner school, seeks $100,000, while his wife, Geraldine Gale Makris, is suing for $150,000. Both charge defamation of character in the book, published by Julian Messner Inc. of New York City, a codefendant with Mrs. Metalious in the libel actions here.

Dividend Pulse Holding Strong

Washington, July 30.

Motion Picture dividends are the best in the past half dozen years. They top recent years' figures both for the month of June and for the first half of 1957.

Dept. of Commerce figures last week disclosed that film industry dividends January through June this year hit $14,529,000. This was a little above the $14,318,000 for the first half of 1956 and the best since the $15,065,000 figures for the first half of 1951.

June's dividend total of $4,193,000 bettered the $3,842,000 of June 1956. It was highest since the $4,671,000 stockholder melon of June 1951.

Dividends by companies this June and last:

Allied Artists, $21,000 for both years.

Consolidated Amusements, $55,000 for each year.

Loew's Inc., $1,286,000 each time.

Paramount Pix, $1,094,000 each June.

20th-Fox, $1,058,000 each year.

United Artists Theatres, $8,000 each time.

United Artists Pictures, $350,000 this June; none last year.

Universal, paid $59,000 this June against $314,000 last year but did pay dividends on a certain group of its securities in July.

Roxy Theatres, nothing this time; $6,000 last year.

Walt Disney Productions $131,000 this year; none June 1956.

Official Films $131,000 this year. None last year.

Antonio Grande Productions Inc. authorized to conduct a motion picture business in New York, with capital stock of 200 shares, no par value. Herbert R. Burris was filing attorney.

More Coin Remittances From Egypt Loom for U.S. Cos.; 'Release Tax' Pends

Rome, July 30.

All U. S. companies operating in Egypt have received their picture licenses for the coming year, Charles Baldwin, MPEA Mediterranean Area topper revealed here following his recent trip to Cairo. In addition, it appears "reasonably certain," according to Baldwin, that some additional dollar earnings will become remittable from that country in the near future. Question of the newly-instituted "release tax" is still under discussion.

In addition to granting new licenses, Baldwin's trip was made for two principal purposes: (1) to discuss with the Egyptian authorities the possibility of obtaining additional dollar remittances of earnings accrued by MPEA companies prior to July 31 last year, when Egypt's dollar assets in the U. S. were blocked by the American Government action; and (2) to discuss the new "release tax" on imported motion picture films recently authorized by an Egyptian law to provide funds for the operations of the recently created "Institution for the Consolidation of the Cinema Industry," a new government agency which will operate within the Egyptian Ministry for National Guidance.

"It seems reasonably certain," Baldwin said, "that following conversations with the appropriate officials of the Egyptian government, some additional dollar remittances of earnings (before July 31, 1956) will be permitted, although a definite decision will have to come from the Foreign Exchange Commission." Regarding the second point, he said: "The tax matter was also discussed in official circles and an arrangement was made whereby the MPEA will be afforded an opportunity to submit further views concerning this matter, which will be considered by the authorities who will determine the exact nature of the new tax." The confab on the tax matter, the MPEA official added, resulted in a frank and constructive exchange of views.

Use of Tax Stamps Simple

With regard to another detail of the tax legislation affecting Yank interests in Egypt, involving new fiscal stamps, Baldwin was given an official interpretation stating that the new stamp setup, authorized together with the "release tax" to get additional funds for the Egyptian picture business, will be applied in the same manner as the general fiscal stamp in past was used and not in the potentially more burdensome manner which Yanks had feared at first.

Some 300 Yank pix were thought imported into Egypt during the past year, but Baldwin points out a curious facet of the import agreement with Egypt: it is issued in tonnage and not by number of pix. Last year, for example, the permit is said to have called for some "five tons" of pictures. New figure is not revealed yet, but is felt to be higher. Baldwin pointed out that despite the still-tense situation in Egypt, he was personally received with the utmost cordiality during the full course of his negotiations and talks in that country.

WOULD PICTURE STRIKE SOLVE MEXICAN JAM?

Mexico City, July 30.

Picture laborites are trying to beat the producers to a strike. The producers threatened to "strike" Aug. 1 unless the workers, members of the technical-manual help locals of the Picture Production Workers Union (STPC) don't back down on their stand for a 50% wage tilt and other economic concessions. In response, the unionists announced that they will strike July 24, unless the producers yield to their demands.

Talks to find a compromise start tomorrow (Wed.) and producers are believed set to decline any pay hike, but to consider granting other "reasonable" economic benefits, as they reason these.

Some Mexican producers profess to regard a strike as a blessing in disguise as it should break the bottleneck of too many Mexican pix awaiting release.

Attendance at British Cinemas Still Slides But Gross Takes Climbs

London, July 30.

Picture theatre attendance is still on the decline in Britain. For the first quarter this year, attendance was 264,000,000, which was 7% down over the comparable period in 1956. Despite this admissions were 9% above those in the final quarter last year.

Gross takings during this period, at over $72,800,000, were 1% more than in the corresponding quarter of 1956, and 9% above the final quarter last year. These figures, issued by the Board of Trade, are based on statistics compiled from 4,243 theatres with a seating capacity of 3,945,000. About 80 theatres with a seating capacity of 3,945,000. About 80 theatres shuttered during the first three months of this year.

The effect of commercial tv on admissions is still strong. In the three cities housing the outlets, there are marked drops in grosses compared with last year. In London, attendance dropped 7.2%; Birmingham is down by 9.3%; while in Manchester the biggest downtrend of all is registered at 12.3%.

Although a paid attendance was down on the corresponding quarter last year, the increase in total gross is due to higher admission prices.

NEW UFA'S KICKOFF IS PLAY, NOT PICTURE

Berlin, July 30.

The new UFA made its first public appearance here recently—with a theatrical performance rather than a film.

Occasion was the presentation of Carlo Goldoni's "Servant of Two Masters" at the Hebbel Theatre. Cast consisted in the main of young players from the new UFA talent school, headed by Volker von Collande.

Both the piece and the players disappointed. There were several whistles when the curtain fell. Press came up with unusually bad writeups. Several scribes said it was a loss of prestige for the UFA and advised it to come along with something more constructive. UFA plan to make vidpix also is drawing unfavorable comment. Noone is quite sure just to whom UFA will sell these films since the state-owned German tele is anything but well off in a financial sense.

Southern Int'l Into Film Prod. in Aussie

One version will be in French. Ralph Habib and Paul Decharme will be associated with Robinson and Rafferty in the project.

S. I. also has a deal on with the Columbia Broadcasting Corp., to film the first part of a seven-part series titled "High Adventure" for Lowell Thomas. Rafferty will handle this chore in New Guinea.

KIDS WILL LOVE WOLFIT

Actor Argues Shakespeare Prematurely Imposed By Schools

London, July 30.

To be or not to be? That is the question which was discussed by Sir Donald Wolfit and Donald Lindsay, headmaster of a famous English school on Granada TV's "Youth Wants To Know." Sir Donald insisted that Shakespeare should not be taught in schools, while Lindsay maintained that the actor was "talking nonsense."

Sir Donald, who's appeared in Shakespeare's plays throughout the world says the study of the author should be completely banned in all schools. Children were forced to study the works when they were incapable of understanding them.

David Eady's Film

London, July 30.

David Eady, son of the man responsible for the Eady Report (which led to the levy) and Jon Penington have just completed "The Heart Within," the first picture to be made under the banner of Penington-Eady Productions. It will be distributed by J. Arthur Rank Film Distributors, and is scheduled for general release on Sept. 16.

The picture, which was made at Twickenham under the direction of Eady, and produced by Penington, stars James Hayter, Clifford Evans and Earl Cameron. The Penington Eady team have another two productions lined up.

Five Yank Films At Messina Fest.

Messina, July 23.

Five Yank productions will have their Italian premieres at the week-long non-competitive Messina Film Festival, which opens in this Sicilian city July 27. Film get-together, third of a series, will unspool at the Messina Fairground Theatre, with Raffaele Resta, Italo Undersecretary for Entertainment, presiding.

American pix selected for screening alongside the only Italo entry, Titanus' "Nonna Sabella," are "Love in Afternoon (AA), "Omar Khayam" (Par), "Full of Life" (Col), "Wayward Bus" (20th), and "Tammy" (U).

Fete, which is expected to draw a number of stars, winds up with a prize ceremony in Taormina, where the "Donatello David" statuettes, yearly Italo exhib awards will be handed out to last year's winners. Among these are "Giant" (WB), as best foreign film of the year, Ingrid Bergman (who will attend the ceremonies in person) best actress for "Anastasia" (20th), and Sir Laurence Olivier, best actor for "Richard III." Latter's prize will be accepted by British Ambassador Sir Ashley Clarke, because of the star's enforced absence.

Arg. Producers Start Bitter Fight Vs. Exhibs; Native Pix Bop B.O. 43%

Buenos Aires, July 23.

Left to Itself, the Argentine Public Said, No!

The Argentine Screen doesn't Defend Itself, it ACCUSES!

Under these opposing headlines, the major warfare between Argentine exhibitors and producers went beyond the skirmish stage this week. The exhibs took the offensive with another open letter in the press, under the first banner headline, and quoting attendance figures at the 18 theatres affected by the previous week's Screen Institute order to exhibit four native pictures. Attendance in those theatres dropped 43% in the week ended July 17 (with the native product), compared with attendance in the previous week, July 4 to 10, when foreign (mostly U. S.) product was screened.

In retort to the exhibs claim, production interests staged a meeting at the Presidente Alvear Theatre Monday (22). About 75% of the audience probably comprised opportunists anxious to see a galaxy of stars, without paying for it. Many crix were also in the theatre, but the Critics Assn. is not among the industry groups allegedly supporting the meeting. These made common cause against the "wicked and mercenary" exhibitors, whom they accused of wanting to stamp out the native screen industry. Some speeches even referred to a "handful of foreigners" (unspecified) trying to down the industry.

It seems a pity to some that industry thinks it worthwhile to resort to mob psychology of this kind, instead of setting about making good pictures, as they are quite capable of doing once left to themselves to compete without State interference.

Some Speeches Inflamatory

Some speeches were quite inflamatory. Blurbs were repeated on the two radio channels, reminding the public that foreign films are costing the country $10,000 daily in precious foreign devisen.

One director derided the exhib's attendance figures, claiming that they deliberately picked the week of July 4 to 10 as a sample because it is a notoriously good box-office week due to Independence Day (July 9) holiday. The fact remains that even with the singularly low holdover terms imposed on exhibs by the Screen Institute for native product, the first two releases were unable to hold on for more than two weeks. Most violent speaker was Union leader Ramon Martinez, who complained that film workers have been unemployed for one and a half years, but did not explain how exhibitors are responsible for this. Martinez wants all studios reopened as Cooperatives.

Emilio Villalba Welsh, representing Argentores, accused exhibitors of slandering the industry and the press of mercenary servility. He praised the Aramburu Government for a Film Law which granted the industry unlimited freedom of expression without censorship of any kind.

Exhibs are determined to resist the Film Law, as at present enacted and predict there must be a joint meeting of Producers, Exhibitors and Screen Institute officials with the highest government echelons before July 31 or they will have to shutter their theatres. Film workers have continued policing the lobbies of Buenos Aires film theatres to make certain that where native material is being exhibited, every facility is given in the matter of displays and encouraging the public into the theatre.

Exhibitors in Rosario, Province of Santa Fe, refuse to accept the Screen Institute's authority, from which they claim Federal immunity, and reject his order to exhibit the native films passed as "compulsory" by his Qualifying Board.

On Friday (26) Loew's Metro Theatre is obliged to preem "Las Campanas de Teresa," under order from the Screen Institute, and the Assn. of Film Directors is taking over the theatre the previous night for a benefit (beneficiary not specified). Metro will play the picture under protest as the holdover terms imposed by the Screen Institute are a violation of Article 10 of the new Film Law. The Institute apparently is unaware of the Metro Theatre capacity of 2,455 salable seats, and set the holdover at 2,000 seats under this.

Europe Likes U.S. Music More, Post-Date Gershwin, Reports Tom Scherman

Thomas Scherman, conductor of N.Y.'s Little Orchestra, is back from his European guesting tour. His 16 dates with symphonies in halls and radio systems embracing Britain, Germany, Holland, Switzerland and Belgium is believed the most intensive of any Yank leader this summer. William L. Weissel went along to handle the business details of the zig-zag tour "like a Columbia Concerts route in the States."

Scherman comments that Europeans are now accepting more American composers and know names other than Gershwin.

Program in Berlin presented harmonica player John Sebastian and Morton Gould's "Tap Dance Concerto" with U.S. hoofer Danny Daniels. The staid Berliners were wowed by the novelty.

Following concerts at Lewisohn Stadium, N.Y., Scherman is readying a three-week fall U.S. tour of his Little Orchestra with duo-pianists Vronksy & Babin and Ogden Nash's "Carnival of Animals" with Faye Emerson as narrator.

Re-Staging Mozart

Vienna, July 30.

State Opera has finished plans for a Mozart Festival Week Jan. 24-30, 1958. This involves presentation of Mozart operas, staged as new productions, under the direction of Josef Krips, Rudolf Kempe and Herbert von Karajan. Prominent international singers are being contracted.

Paul Hindemith's opera "Mathis, the Painter" will have its Austrian premiere in April next year.

'Global Quota,' Urged by French, Brit. Pix Biz, Nixed by British Govt.

London, July 30.

A plan to introduce a "global quota" among countries within the projected free trade area in Europe, advocated by prominent sections of the British and French film industries, has been firmly turned down by the British government. It has given an uncompromising brief in this direction to the British delegate from the Board of Trade, who is representing it in the negotiations. Under the proposal, it was suggested that the present British film quota should be raised from 30% to a minimum of 40%. Also, that exhibitors would not be restricted to showing British films only, but would be permitted also to exhibit films from France, Germany, Italy and all other countries joining the free trade project.

Some of the participants apparently have gone so far as to suggest that under a "global quota," qualifying European pix should also be permitted to grab their appropriate share of the Eady levy, which assumes statutory form in October. Even British producers, who seem to favor the "global quota" principle, will be out of sympathy with the further suggestion of Eady participation.

The two British producing organizations, both of whom are actively concerned in the Free Trade and Common Market discussions, have maintained a hush-hush attitude and have declined to express their views publicly until they have made their own policy decisions. There is little doubt, even at this stage, however, that there will eventually be a clash of opinion between the British Film Producers Assn., on the one hand, and the Federation of British Film Makers on the other.

British Exhibs Vs. Global Quota

Introduction of a global quota would be violently resented by British exhibs, who have always adopted a cautious policy towards the screening of Continental product. Outside a few key situations, very few foreign language pix succeed at the boxoffice here. And if the quota were inflated in a way that made their presentation essential, there doubtless would be an immediate storm of protest.

This global quota idea would seriously cut into the American share of the British market. If the pattern of the quota were repeated throughout out other free trade countries, the Hollywood film industry would be affected on a major scale. Yet, probably because films are the only commodity likely to be hit by the proposal, the U. S. State Department and the White House have been adopting a benevolent outlook towards both the Free Trade and Common Market proposals.

Britain, of course, is outside the Common Market area, which is restricted to the six European powers who were signatory to the Messina agreement. While the European Common Market aims at settings up a free trade area among the six countries concerned, they will all certainly participate in the European Free Trade area, if such a project materializes. The French Government has already approved the principle of ECM and Jacques Flaud, the French government expert on film affairs, has had a series of talks with the BOT on both the Common Market and free trade area proposals.

It's generally accepted that the BOT has made it clear to Flaud and to others concerned, that it would not countenance a suggestion that a definition of a British film, for purposes of the free trade area, should be restricted to pix distributed only by British companies. The BOT of course has to stand by its own definition as given in the Films Act.

ACID PROSE OF SELZNICK & C. SKOURAS AIRED AS PART OF GOLDWYN CASE

San Francisco, July 30.

Just as last week's hearings in Samuel Goldwyn's antitrust action were ending in Federal Court here an exchange of letters between David O. Selznick and (the late) Charles Skouras were introduced into evidence. Dated in February and March of 1949 the missives sum up in dramatic, often sarcastic, language on both sides the perennial conflict in the motion picture industry between the manufacturer (producer) and the retailer (exhibitor).

Excerpts follow.

Selznick to Skouras, Feb. 22, 1949:

"In later years, if anyone is interested in finding the reasons for the decline and fall of the motion picture business... it may be that the clue will be revealed by this letter.

"'Portrait of Jennie' is one of the most costly pictures of recent years. It has been widely hailed by critics; the people and the press of Boston, the only other city where it has opened, have gone overboard...

"As of Sunday, we have just finished an eight-week engagement ...at the Carthay Circle Theatre (Los Angeles)...

"The Carthay, last year, had a total gross business of $383,000. During each of 12 weeks of that year it played to less than $4,000...

"During the first seven weeks of the 'Portrait of Jennie' engagement, the picture took in approximately $73,000; and you can't say it was the theatre, because the theatre, even in its top years, has had at best a very spotty record.

"Our weekly average for the engagement was in the neighborhood of $10,000 a week... an extremely creditable (record).

"During the engagement we spent approximately $25,000 advertising...

Our film rental, for what would appear to be a considerably better than average engagement for this theatre — in fact, the most successful engagement of any film to play the theatre in approximately a year — gave us, before advertising, $37,500. However, the advertising expenses were completely ours; and after deducting the advertising we have the dubious satisfaction of having a net rental of approximately $12,500. The theatre, on the other hand, had a much more respectable return on the engagement — it received approximately $35,000, or close to three times as much as we received.

'Lopsided'

"I cannot believe that such a lopsided arrangement can be justified by anything but the most myopic approach to your problems and to our problems — assuming, which perhaps I should not do, that you recognize that product has something to do with theatre business. I make this statement regardless of your investment in the theatres, and of whatever basis you may be using to write off this investment; and regardless of what profits you may be making by intercompany rentals, or by profits as between individual's and your parent company. Whatever general overhead charge you make against the theatre cannot justify it. Nor can it be justified either by bookkeeping which gives the profits on popcorn and candy to management, while charging overhead for this management in excessive amounts to the individual theatres.

"You and your company are entitled to a profit; but so long as you persist in your attitude that when a picture fails, the loss should be borne entirely by the producer, and when a picture succeeds, the lion's (or perhaps I should say the hog's) share of the profits should go to the exhibitor, the producer faces doom...

"Bit by bit the attitude is changing in other cities. We are finding exhibitors eager to recognize and encourage fine pictures that not alone do good business, but lure back to the theatres that tremendous portion of the attendance which has been alienated through the awful and incessant run of assembly line product... the Washington and Boston deals are merely typical of deals we are getting everywhere — everywhere, that is, except from those exhibitors who seem almost incredibly slow in recognizing that when producers stop making fine films, the exhibitors will be totally unable to cope with television and with all the other factors that are going to take business away...

"I have very few illusions as to what we will get out of you in connection with the Loew's State combination... I know from too long and too bitter experience of your conviction that someone came down from Mount Sinai with a tablet inscribed to the effect that your theatres must make a profit, regardless of what films you play—and that when you get an outstanding film, you must take a share disproportionate to your investment, or your risk, or your contribution. I am not yet prepared to do anything about it—other than to say to you that you should have no wonderment at the steps being forced on the independent producers... You have taken many, many steps to stifle this competition, resisting all the signs and portents of the new business morality; but you have failed to realize that through these tactics ... you have only expedited the day when you will have (competition). Believe me, Charlie, you are at the very forefront of the men who are destroying the American motion picture business... I suppose even when the business evaporates further, you will blame it on... everything from dog racing to television, and on everyone from the writers to the company heads, instead of realizing that it is the greed of such operations as your own... your theatres are worthless without important product, and you are making it utterly impossible for men like myself to give you important product.

"... You will give no different terms to a $4-million picture than you will to the shabbiest factory quickie. You will give no consideration whatsoever to the effect upon your over-all year's business, and upon the retention of your audiences... So be it. It will be your own head, Charlie—and in more ways than one...

"The eighth week (of 'Portrait of Jennie' at the Carthay) is even more absurd. The picture grosses $5,506. Our film rental was $1,306; our advertising was $1,700, so for the doubtful special privilege of paying you $4,200, which was more than the theatre grossed during each of a large number of weeks last year, we wound up losing $296.

System Wrong

"Something is terribly wrong with a system that allows the manufacturer of a product to come off with such a meagre return on his investment. In my opinion the solution is more your responsibility than it is mine. After all, you do control the outlet and the terms; and we, in reality, wind up at your mercy...

"I am sorry, Charlie; but I have stopped being a chump and a feeder for men like yourself. I shall find other ways of coping with this business, a portion of which is my birthright—as well as my right because of the contributions I have made to it... The final chapter isn't written yet, Charlie ... I would like to venture the prophecy that when the final chapter is written, you will be sorry that you did not change your approach and your methods while there was yet time. It is however, later—far, far later—than you know..."

Skouras to Selznick, March 7, 1949:

"I'm sorry that you cannot bring yourself to understand that our theatres do not operate themselves without expense any more than your pictures make themselves without cost.

"I'm sorry that our business cannot live on the once-a-year miracle picture you feel you furnish us and that you regard most pictures other that your own as 'assembly line product' and 'shabby factory quickies'...

"I'm sorry that your ambitions for 'Portrait of Jennie' led your organization to indluge in a lavish advertising campaign costing in excess of 40% of the theatre gross... I'm sorry that those expenses have not paid off in profit or Academy Award nominations and that virtually all the Award nominations have been won by such 'assembly line' producers as L. B. Mayer, Arthur Rank, Darryl Zanuck and Jack Warner.

"I'm sorry that you cannot remember that the Carthay Circle was a universally known and important theatre long before your name became publicly known...

Sneer At Quality

"I'm sorry that you have fallen into that way of thinking that stamps all expensive pictures as good and important just as I'm sorry that you have convinced yourself that all your pictures are $4-million efforts despite the remote relationship so much of your effort and expense bear to the finished picture.

"I'm sorry for your sake that some 80 million Americans like to see a motion picture every week and that they are tolerant enough to realize that all pictures cannot be uniformly perfect or, of course, Selznick 'epics.' I'm sorry that the 80 million Americans... find your pictures undesirable in about the same proportion as they find undesirable the product of other major producers...

"I'm sorry that you cannot remember that whether you wish it or not we are all members of one industry and that your vehement expression of your lack of regard for me, my past, present, and future does not endear you to me or add one cubit to the stature of David O. Selznick or the industry...

"I'm sorry that you cannot remember that my business and personal relationships with other producers remain, for the greater part on a friendly, mutually satisfactory plane...

"I'm sorry that your personal fealty to me has led you to license all your pictures to our company despite the availability of other theatres and your constant dissatisfaction. I'm sorry that you have not licensed your pictures to other theatres, as other producers have done, without rancor or bitterness...

Why Tell Public?

"I'm sorry that some uncontrollable impulse has led you to express to the world at large the conviction, welling out of your bitterness, that virtually everything is wrong with the motion picture industry ... that, whatever the effect may be on others, the exhibitors of America owe you the obligation of conducting each year a David O. Selznick week, when all of the receipts... are to be surrendered intact to you.

"I'm sorry that you cannot understand that I am charged by the directors... and by 33,000 shareholders with the obligation of operating the company's theatres at a reasonable profit.

"I'm sorry that a man of your ability has wasted his time writing at length to such an irresponsible and unsympathetic character as you have stamped me, evidently for the purpose of seeking additional income inspite of the fact that prior to the opening of the picture we accepted a license agreement, proposed in major part by your representatives.

"I'm sorry that each of your productions is followed, like some uncontrollable reflex, by a diatribe much like your recent letter. I'm sorry, indeed, that I have taken the trouble to acknowledge any such letters, and I hope... you will soon overcome this unbecoming habit...

"I'm sorry, above all, that you as the son of an illustrious gentleman have so completely cast aside the great qualities that were your real birthright.

"I'm sorry, David, in short, for you."

The following day, March 8, 1949, Charles Skouras sent copies of both letters to his brother Spyros, in New York, and his brother, George, in Durham, N. C., advising the correspondence was for their information, "of a personal and confidential nature, and I would appreciate your treating it as such."

Selznick answered Skouras March 18, 1949, in a nine-page, single-space, typed letter of which these are parts:

"I have run into all sorts of odd people to whom you have given copies of my previous letter to you, and of your reply...

"Whereas formerly I had sought to propitiate the victims of the inequities of the Skouras type of operation, and had urged that remedy be sought through amiable negotiation, I now see at long last the hopelessness of such a viewpoint. I owe, and I shall extend, my apologies to Sam Goldwyn, the Disney executives, and others who have long felt the need of drastic action...

"Your brother Spyros, and your farsighted associate Joe Schenck, have both repeatedly stated to me that the producer simply had to get a larger share of the boxoffice receipts...

"... I know of no custom or tenet of American business which dictates that when the product has extraordinary appeal, the retailer must get the lion's share of the profits. The 'heads we win, tails you lose' philosophy must go, Charlie, even in this business..."

Todd to Theatre Men: 'You're Interfering With Wheels of Progress'

Mike Todd would like to stop having to "sell" his latest, "Around the World in 80 Days," to devote himself to the upcoming "Don Quixote," but he can't. And the reason, explained Todd in Gotham yesterday (Tues.), is that exhibitors simply don't seem to be able to keep pace with showmanship concepts.

In fact, as Todd sees the state of the business now, the theatremen have forgotten that there's something else to showbiz other than maneuvering and negotiating deals. "A lot of those guys have to be 'unlearned,'" declared Todd. "Showbusiness used to be the strange and the unusual. It isn't that any more. Everything's canned; and the worst offenders are the exhibitors. They're just willing to sit back and leave well enough alone."

Producer made it plain that his "Don Quixote" would be cast without compromise as to story concepts. He also said the picture definitely wouldn't be shot in the Todd-AO process, but in a system which it took him about a half-hour not to describe. It's presumably a 65m negative, shot in standard 35m speed, which is squeezed slightly and from which regular printdown copies can be made. Todd made it clear that the "80 Days" (non-Todd-AO) engagements at this moment were not printdowns from the Todd-AO negative, but from a duplicate wideguage negative which he shot simultaneously.

If he finds a town where the exhibitors won't "cut loose," i.e. play the game according to his rules, Todd said he would be willing and anxious to play to film "in a tent." Sum and substance of Todd's argument: Exhibs have become flabby and disinterested. Unless they wake up to his vigorous brand of showmanship, they won't survive, i.e. they won't get to play his pictures.

"80 Days" is doing standout biz in most situations and particularly Asbury Park, where it's showing in the 35m version. Some special equipment is required in the booth.

LAND DISPOSAL PUTS GLOW IN TECHNICOLOR

Sale of land in Van Nuys, Cal., saved the half-year for Technicolor, which showed a net of $710,000—or 35c per share on 2,032,236 shares outstanding—for the first six months of 1957, according to prexy Herbert T. Kalmus.

Showing compares with $980,000 —49c per share—for the comparable period in 1956.

Kalmus explained that the first quarter of '57 showed earnings after income taxes of 9c per share. Second quarter ended with a 4c per share loss, leaving a 5c gain for the half-year. Situation was saved by the sale of the land, listed as non-recurring profit, which amounted to 30c per share.

Techni board, meeting last week (25), decided to skip paying out dividends at this time "in the best interest of the corporation." Kalmus said the second quarter operating loss included initial losses incurred in connection with Technil's diversification program. Lab has been suffering from competition from Eastman color, and from the swing away from tinting generally.

Warners' 9-Month Net, $3,174,000

Warner Bros. this week reported a $3,174,000 net—$1.76 per share —for the nine months ended June 1, 1957. Earnings were more than 46% over the same period in '56, when the net stood at $2,165,000, or 87c per share.

Balance sheet at the end of the third quarter continued to show "a strong financial position," per the company. Fiscal year ends Aug. 31, '57.

Nine months net in '57 applied to 1,793,996 shares of common outstanding, after deducting the 688,251 shares in the treasury on June 1. Period reflects the extraordinarily strong grosses rolled up by "Giant," a WB release.

Total film rentals and sales were put at $57,981,321, an increase of over $3,00,000 over the $54,225,898 in rentals for the same months in '56. Foreign earnings, according to the company, also are ahead of last year. They are highlighted by a 31% rise in profits of Associated British Picture Corp. in which WB has a 37½% interest.

"We are optimistic over our prospects for the future," commented prexy Jack L. Warner, noting upcoming major relases and continuing expansion of the Warner tv production program. Company also reported progress for its commercial and industrial film division and its music publishing division.

Profit and loss statement for the nine months showed a rise in amortization costs from $38,649,551 to $39,610,036. Operating and general expenses were held at the line, $14,706,887. Profit before taxes was $6,249,020 against $4,115,201 last year.

We're Just as Tough As 'D.I.'; Unless We Get Dates You Can Keep It—Exhibs

Minneapolis, July 30.

Twin Cities' group, Exhibitors Trade Association, independent theatreowners' organization, is squawking about distributors' alleged increased failure to adhere to the local clearance schedule which gives downtown first-run houses only a 28-day protection over the neighborhood theatres in the earliest availability slot.

Promising a battle to get "a square deal" for the subsequent-runs, the group is firing its first shot by notifying Warner Bros. here that unless "The D.I." is released to Twin Cities' 28-day neighborhood houses on Aug. 7, when "it's supposed to break for them," no member of the group, comprising practically all the Minneapolis and St. Paul uptown theatres, will play it at any time. This is an ultimatum, they say.

Martin Lebedoff, the group's chairman, charges that distributors have been creating an artificial shortage of prints as an excuse for not living up to the local clearance schedule.

'Intellectualized' Come-On For 'Children of Love'

St. Paul, July 30.

In a new approach to selling a sex film as far as this berg is concerned, the loop Tower Theatre's newspaper ad daringly and probably effectively for the boxoffice seeks to "justify" its current presentation of "Children of Love."

A headed "why adults only?", declares "when a man or woman attains majority he or she is entitled to know the facts of life—so why shouldn't this be true of a motion picture's audience?"

The ad, continuing in same vein, asserts: "'Children of Love' is a movie that has attained its majority ... a dramatic human document ... ripped from the pages of life ... Spectacularly filmed against backgrounds of stark reality!

"Because it so dramatically dares reveal a shocking subject that honestly and frankly challenges every woman ... because the nature of its story up to now has been so 'hush-hush' ... what should a movie do? Hide its head in the sand like an ostrich? ... or face the jolting truth as does 'Children of Love'."

Concluding verbiage is: "An unusual adult motion picture!"

HOT & COLD RUNNING DEALS IN CALIFORNIA

(GOLDWYN CASE PARADES INSIDE STUFF)

By WILLIAM STEIF

San Francisco, July 30.

Fox West Coast president John Bertero gave nearly as much as he got in third week's testimony of Sam Goldwyn's $1,755,000 antitrust suit against 20th-Fox, National Theatres, FWC and FWC Agency Corp.

Bertero took a terrific pounding from Goldwyn's lawyer, Joseph Alioto, before Federal Judge Edward P. Murphy, but managed to fend off most of the blows. At one point, indeed, Bertero mounted a counter-attack, asking the judge to make a special finding that Bertero had not violated any Federal court decree in updating controversial Bluebook of runs, clearances and availabilities in 1949.

Bertero said reason for sales was that the industry for implying that he'd violated the decrees.

Late in the week Michael Naify, chief of the United California circuit, was recalled for examination by Alioto, and Naify detailed four deals he almost completed for half his 100-theatre chain in 1947-48.

Bertero's testimony centered on FWC real estate deals, his relation to the buying department and his company's policy with regard to product flow and what Alioto insists upon calling "pools of monopoly."

Bertero said FWC bought about 25 theatre sites in "growing California communities" in late 1930's and early '40's which "we started selling off" in 1950-51.

"Only two or three were ever built," he testified.

Alioto tried to get Bertero to admit covenant restricting land sales to non-theatrical purposes was attached in contracts, but Bertero wouldn't bite, cited the fact that the Paramount case had made such covenants illegal.

Bertero said reason for sales was that the industry plunged from "real prosperity to depression" because of "onslaught of tv, difficulty in financing," and added most of the property was in Southern California.

"Many people in the lower echelons," said Bertero, "thought they were doing a good job" when they got real estate buyers to agree to non-theatrical use covenant, but he claimed the illegal clause was never included in final sales contracts.

Alioto jumped into the breach by citing a 1950 letter from FWC's W. H. Lawlear to Bertero and Charles Skouras in which Lawlear mentioned a buyer's agreement to non-theatrical use clause in purchase of a Richmond, Cal., house. But Bertero remarked, "I was supposed to watch Lawlear and didn't do a very good job." The FWC chief added:

"There are very few purchasers of closed theatres . . . in 1951 National Theatres had to divest 104 houses, we tried to sell to anyone in the world who'd make a reasonable offer . . . we paid money to many of our landlords to rid ourselves of leases."

He denied FWC ever erected signs on vacant land saying theatres would be built, thus scaring off potential competitors. He denied "personal knowledge" of Naify-Skouras negotiations to stifle competition in pooled areas by construction of new theatres, adding "our policy was to go into new areas, to improve our economic well-being."

An example of this policy, Bertero said, was the Westwood, in Los Angeles, on which he said FWC lost money in the first five years of operation, got it all back in the sixth.

Alioto claimed theatre deals in San Mateo, Richmond, Berkeley, Stockton and Inglewood—latter to squeeze out Marco Wolf—were made to close areas to competition, but Bertero stoutly denied the accusation.

Bertero appeared a little gunshy when Alioto brought up the subject of the Los Angeles Theatre in downtown L.A.

Alioto pointed out that Metropolitan Theatres, jointly owned by FWC, Sherrill Corwin and Mike Rosenberg, cut United Artists Theatre circuit in for 25% of profits of the Los Angeles when UA had no apparent interest in the operation. Bertero said he couldn't recall why that should be. Objection from defense lawyer Arthur B. Dunne elicited this comment from the judge: "I'm frank to say that 25% is a pretty big cut in any league and I'm surprised Mr. Bertero doesn't remember."

Memory Refreshed

Alioto's line of questioning was an effort to establish that UA's Joe Schenck got the quarter-split to influence Loew's Nick Schenck to assign Metro product to the theatre. But Bertero, his memory refreshed by the judge's prodding, testified UA had a profit-sharing deal with FWC in downtown L.A.'s Loew's State and UA Theatres. Bertero said UA objected to FWC, as its partner, "competing" with theatres in which they held joint interests, and so FWC gave UA the quarter-split to "equalize" UA's position.

Eventually, Alioto wrung from Bertero the admission that FWC got a 25% split on the profits from Harry Vinnicoff's Strand Theatre, in Long Beach, for no visible reason.

Into the record went testimony that FWC's George Bowser and Vinnicoff made an oral agreement on the split in 1942, but that Bertero never knew about it until five years later, when he ordered it discontinued.

Real reason for the arrangement, Alioto claimed, was that the Strand, as part of the United West Coast pool (FWC's 48 houses, UA's 11 and their spheres of influence), moved from fourth-run to third-run.

Alioto also introduced a series of interoffice memos from FWC files showing agreements by buyers of FWC property not to use land for theatres, though this did not necessarily contradict Bertreo's testimony.

Home-Building Rider

However, Alioto later drew testimony from Bertero that the deed of the Westchester Development Co. under which FWC got land to build the Fox Loyola in L.A., contained an agreement that Westchester Development wouldn't sell any other land in its tract for theatre purposes until at least 7,500 homes had been built and sold there.

Evidence of FWC San Diego pool with an exhibitor named Ulman went into the record, too. Exhibit contained a map showing designated areas around FWC-Ulman pool in which neither could acquire or build theatres without putting them into a pool.

When Alioto dug into the Bluebook situation he met plenty of resistance.

Bertero noted that he was well aware of the 1950 Federal consent decree which prohibited FWC (then Wesco) from communicating clearances to distributors which might hurt independent exhibitors. Bertero maintained that his 1936 printing of the Bluebook was made simply to memorialize NRA Code Authority's schedules.

So Alioto produced a Bertero letter written to 20th-Fox (as a distributor) in which Bertero pointed out "errors of printing" and advised that "clearances are as they were set out" in NRA. Bertero wouldn't admit "printing" referred to in letter applied to Bluebook, whereupon original NRA schedules and Bluebook were compared and Bluebook's errors were unveiled.

Alioto hammered on his point that FWC was, in fact, imposing fixed clearances on distributors which gave it an advantage over potential competitors, although practice violated consent decree.

Updated Bluebook

Under Dunne's direct examination, defense developed the point that Bertero in 1949 simply had had the Bluebook updated because, over the years, he'd grown unfamiliar with the clearance situation. Bertero testified this 1949 version—within the 1947-50 limits of the case—had never been sent to distributors.

Goldwyn claim, of course, is that 1949 Bluebook was imposed on distributors and so constricted competition.

Dunne also brought out that in the clearances battles of the early 1940's, 23 of 25 cases submitted to arbitration boards were decided in FWC's favor and it was about this time Bertero asked the judge for a special finding, asked Alioto for his apology. Judge reserved comment.

Bertero testified his view of product flow was that negotiation with distributors for pictures was always better than competitive bidding.

He said, because FWC was under wraps of court decrees, he got FWC buyer Bert Pirosch "well-inculcated" with his policy and Bertero "never knew an instance in which Pirosch initiated competitive bidding."

Bertero admitted there were times when distributors who "ordinarily" dealt with other circuits would come to Pirosch for a deal, and Pirosch would consult with Bertero.

In each case, testified the FWC president, he'd tell Pirosch to tell the distributor to give "first opportunity to our competitor . . . and come back in a couple of weeks if they can't make a deal."

He also instructed Pirosch "it was proper (under the court decrees) to discuss deals with exhibitors if we told the distributor . . . any agreement among exhibitors was only with consent of the distributor." The general policy was that FWC "should negotiate for the company's benefit with any distributor who had a worthwhile picture and could make reasonable terms for us."

Didn't 'Draw Lots'

Under Dunne's questioning, Bertero denied there was any agreement not to license certain films or that Pirosch drew lots with other exhibitors for product.

During his final session over the Bluebook hurdles, Bertero admitted he recommended the same L.A. clearances for everyone and advised his buyers not to ask any more than what was in the book.

Other points developed in Bertero's testimony included:

(2) Consolidated net profit of Golden State and T & D Jr. circuits for 1938-48 was $7,327,705, of which FWC's share was $2,179,463—dividends paid in the 10-year period were $3,795,338, of which FWC's share was $1,161,757;

(2) Golden State and T & D Jr. net profits jumped from $709,335 in 1945 to $1,557,251 in 1946, a fact Goldwyn side attributes to tightening monopoly situation;

(3) Bertero did not write DAILY VARIETY a letter signed by Michael Naify in mid-1948, in which Naify denied UA's Schenck had option of half the Naify circuit—letter's writer was Oscar Samuels, Naify's Frisco lawyer;

(4) 35 lawsuits were filed against FWC in 1947-51 period;

(5) Washington-Oregon pool of Fox's Evergreen circuit included John Hamrick, John Danz, Mrs. Hazel Parker, and Alioto tried to show that when Evergreen was forced to bail out in 1950-51, George Skouras' UA was set to step into vacated spots on same basis—evidence included contract between Evergreen and Danz covering downtown Seattle in which Evergreen got all the first-runs. Danz the second-runs;

(6) Bertero admitted he'd heard "rumor" that Pat de Cico, whom Alioto identified as "Joe Schenck's protege," was in candied ice-cream business with Charles Skouras and Schenck, with FWC theatres concession—this was during de Cico's time with UA circuit. Alioto failed to establish that de Cico had discussed booking with Pirosch after United West Coast dissolution was ordered, however.

Judge Bored?

By mid-session of Bertero's last day on stand the judge, apparently thoroughly bored, remarked "not too much is to be gained in ancient history" and curtly suggested Alioto start focusing on period of suit, 1947-50.

Naify's testimony, at week's end, was part of Alioto's continuing effort to prove that UA's Schenck had option to buy half of Naify's interest from time in mid-August, 1947, that Naify bought out partners R. A. McNeil and Eugene Emmick.

Goldwyn claim is that George Skouras, through Schenck, was in on deal from the start and that this was the backdoor through which Charles Skouras and FWC kept control of Naify circuit, and consequently most of the West's playing dates, when Justice Department turned down FWC's direct purchase of half the Naify chain.

Naify testified that after the Justice Department rejected FWC purchase, he turned to Schenck, in late September, 1947. But, he said, Justice Department also nixed UA entry and Oscar Samuels, his lawyer, advised Naify to make no Schenck commitment.

Nevertheless, Schenck told Naify not to worry, that he was sending his lawyer, Charles Carr of Los Angeles, to Washington, D.C., to see what could be done.

By December Naify was very nervous about how he was going to find $2,300,000 for his next installment to McNeil-Emmick, and he got Schenck to go on a Bank of America note for him in Los Angeles. But, testified Naify, he made it clear to Schenck that there was no commitment, that he was free to get someone else to buy half the circuit.

In the succeeding months Naify said he tried to sell to Louis Lurie, Frisco financier, who was eager for a sale-and-leaseback deal which involved selling commercial properties on a capital-gains basis—unfortunately, a provision of the option under which Naify bought the McNeil-Emmick shares gave all proceeds from sale of commercial propetties to McNeil and Emmick, so deal was scotched.

Jesuits Declined

He also overtured Father Malone of Loyola U, Los Angeles, on a leaseback arrangement, but the priest was scared off by then-current inquiries into tax-exempt organizations;

(To this Judge Murphy, educated at Santa Clara, remarked, "I thought Jesuits were in education instead of real estate.")

Col. Henry Crown, boss of Chicago's Materials Service Corp. was ready to make a deal but suffered a heart attack and lost interest.

Milton Reynolds, Chicago pen-manufacturer, whose son-in-law, Julian Levy, contacted Naify through 20th-Fox's Herman Wobber and discussed deal for several days in March, 1948. Reynolds-Levy deal flopped because Naify wouldn't give up more than 50% of circuit and Reynolds-Levy couldn't get financing without controlling interest.

Defense contends Carr didn't wangle Justice Department okay in Schenck-UA participation until December, 1948. Alioto claims deal was in the bag all along, that other dickering was window-dressing.

At the session's end Alioto introduced letters in which Schenck tried to "patch up" trouble between Naify and Metro's W. F. (Bill) Rodgers. Naify testified Schenck did this simply "out of friendship," not because he was Nick Schenck's brother.

When Dunne objected to letters' introduction, Judge Murphy overruled, saying "certain features of that correspondence confirm my thinking along that line, for the

And so. on a somewhat enigmatic note, week ended. time being at least."

No Forced Use Of Todd-AO Gear

Todd-AO Corp., which holds the rights for the Todd-AO widescreen process, cannot force an exhibitor to use Todd-AO equipment in the showing of a film originally made in that process.

This was the implication last week when Judge William J. Barker of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Florida denied a motion for a temporary injunction made by Todd-AO Corp., against S. E. Britton,

GEORGE STEVENS FRONTS

Will Head Directors Guild Dicker With Producers

Hollywood, July 30.

George Stevens has been appointed chairman of the negotiating committee of Screen Directors Guild, which has begun mapping its demands for new pacts with the major studios, indies and telepix producers, all current pacts expiring next year. A fact-finding committee of 40 was also named to survey the various fields on conditions and report back to Stevens' group.

Negotiations with the majors may begin in September or October, although the major contract won't expire until next March 13. Indie pacts fall up April 13.

Dem Bums Not Us

Portland, Ore., July 30.

A number of Portlanders of some current notoriety have been going through motions of consulting their attorneys respecting Allied Artists' feature, "Portland Expose." This is due to kick off new firstruns at Al Foremen's (United Circuit) hardtops and ozoners Aug. 14.

Just where ballyhoo begins and ends in the palaver is uncertain. Underworld of this burg has gotten much regional and national attention but the characters declare the film is "fantastic" and bears no resemblance to the vice conditions as aired here.

REDUCE REALTY VALUATIQN

Three Kansas City Film Houses Get Tax Break

Kansas City, July 30.

Relief in the form of reduced valuations has come to at least three firstrun theatres here. Reductions have been made on the Midland Theatre, Loew operated, and the Roxy Theatre, flagship of the Durwood circuit.

The Jackson County (Mo.) Board of Equalization sliced $135,100 off the assessed valuation of the Midland, reducing its total valuation to $800,000.

A few days later the board cut the valuation on the Roxy from $205,000 to $165,000. Both are main stem houses

National Screen Services Allied

National Screen Service will handle the manufacture and distribution of Allied Artists' posters and accessories for the next three years. Deal was wrapped up in New York this week by George Dembow, NSS president, and AA v.p. Edward Morey and eastern ad-pub director Martin S. Davis.

Heretofore AA's accessories were provided by various vendors. AA's trailers have been handled by NSS right along and there are no changes along this line.

Home-Toll Highlights Bell System

[2-3-4-PARTY LINES FIGURED IN]

By ABEL GREEN

Ever since Don Ameche "invented" the telephone in "Alexander Graham Bell"—the ting-a-ling instrument has played an important role in show business. First it started as the handy prop for the butler or the maid to set the "entrance" of the master or madame. It's been a radio and later a television adjunct to prizes, giveaways, guessing contests and what-not. All this becomes dwarfed in the prospective context of pay-see television.

In even sharper contrast, as the movies-mated-to-electronics visionaries prognosticate things, here are the official figures of the state of telephonitis in these United States as of Jan. 1, 1957:

The grand total of phones numbers over 60,000,000, of which 49,438,000 are Bell System-affiliated.

There are six times as many home phones, in total, as business phones—the figures are 29,165,282 residence phones against a total of 4,577,144 business phones.

However, the one-party phones drop to 11,909,774 because there are almost as many two-party line subscribers (just under 10,000,000) and there are half as many four-party lines (5,370,000).

The state-by-state, territory-by-territory, telephone picture is not available (although undoubtedly privy to the affiliated phone companies) but the pay-vision showmen can draw their own conclusions from following table.

'Stereophonic' Is Back—In News

Stereophonic sound gospel again is being spread by 20th-Fox.

Spyros P. Skouras, 20th prexy, disclosed last week that his company was making available combination MagOptical prints on all current and upcoming CinemaScope attractions.

At the same time, he said, 20th will feature stereo sound in all of its ad campaigns "to impress on the public the ability of their local exhibitor to provide them with the most modern form of motion picture entertainment."

Earl I. Sponable, 20th's chief engineer, is putting out a special brochure for exhibs to instruct them in the use and the advantages of MagOptical prints.

These prints carry an optical sound track in addition to four magnetic tracks. An exhibitor can have his choice of either sound reproduction, though he must install special sprockets to accommodate the prints.

It was 20th which pioneered stereo sound. However, apart from the firstruns, the system never caught on. Only about 3500 situations in the country are equipped for stereo. Skouras wants more theatres to make the installations.

Exhibs from time to time have complained that the studios aren't recording enough pictures stereophonically to make it worth their while to install the equipment.

Times Sq. Firstruns For Palace Sans Vaudeville; 'Faces' & 'Jet Pilot' Set

Palace Theatre on Broadway, which is dropping vaudeville to become a firstrun house for "top" pictures, is inaugurating its new policy with three entries from Universal. It will tee off with "Man of a Thousand Faces," the Lon Chaney biopic starring James Cagney, on Aug. 13. The theatre will close on Aug. 9 to prepare for the "Man" preem.

Following the first U picture, "Jet Pilot," the RKO picture which has been turned over to U for release, and "Interlude," June Allyson-Rossano Brazzi starrer, will play the Palace.

According to RKO Theatres, which operates the Palace, the new policy is aimed at making the theatre one of the top New York showcases of the same calibre as the Radio City Music Hall, Capitol, Astor and Roxy.

Imperial Film Service International Inc. has been authorized to conduct a motion picture business in New York, with capital stock of 200 shares, no par value. Burton R. Sax and Joseph Foster are directors and filing attorneys.

Actor Mel Welles Teamed With Millionaire Toolman For Non-Star Features

Hollywood, July 30.

Two further pix properties for slate of newly formed Ararat Productions were disclosed over weekend by producer-director Mel Welles. A former actor, Welles is teamed with Berj (cq) Hagopian, millionaire tool and die manufacturer, with Hagopian as exec producer and an active partner in Ararat.

Properties are "The Hostages," by Richard Miller, to roll late in September, and "The Black Pearl," by Huston Branch, to be lensed late in December. Underwater location photography gets underway on "Pearl" off Bahamas and Mexican Coast late in November, with budget of $600,000 tentatively earmarked for project. Hagopian-Welles team is looking into Panavision or Technirama process for latter offering.

Ararat will stick to established policy of using "complete unknowns" in casts of first three pix, according to Welles. "Unless you buy a big name, it's just as well to get a talented unknown," he opines.

Ararat is making initial schedule with no pre-set releases, a deliberate policy, Welles insists. Since firm has sufficient capital, it doesn't need financial help to make the picture. It increases the gamble, but we can make better pictures," he declares.

Welles, who left over weekend for Mexico City to prepare shooting on first Ararat pic, "Killer's Cage," to roll Aug. 5, will produce and direct the first two features on the schedule, "at least." Firm is still looking for "high adventure stories" for future production, with schedule of two or three pix annually sought as eventual goal. "Red McCaw," developed by Gil Frye from a Welles telepix project, also is in prepping stages, as well as another untitled property.

PUBLICISTS SEPT. 1 DATE: 'SIGN OR BE UNFAIR'

Hollywood, July 30.

Publicists Association, Local 818 IATSE, has set a Sept. 1 deadline for contracts with indie praiseries handling motion picture accounts. After that, firms which have not signed up will be listed with IATSE which will in turn notify all studios, producers and film firms not to make deals with non-union flackeries.

Negotiations with the indie praisers have been going on for several months. Publicists Association, which has contracts with all the majors, is seeking to plug up the loophole by which indie producers can hire non-union praisers to handle pix.

Warns Yanks Of Probably Fewer French Permits

Paris, July 30.

According to Guy Desson, head of the parliamentary film commission, France will definitely not press for individual treatment wth U.S. companies during the French-U.S. Film Accord talks now going on, both on an industry and governmental level. As per usual the Motion Picture Export Assn. will receive a block number of dubbing visas which will be distributed among the U.S. majors. However, Desson warned that Americans may be facing a drastic reduction in visas from its previous 110 per year.

Desson explained that France had over-produced somewhat last year, costs had skyrocketed, and too many expensive films had been made, making home amortization practically impossible. This had led to a need for foreign marts since the internal take, though growing, was simply not enough. This meant promising reciprocity to new film customers and, with growing Gallic production, this brought the amount of foreign films needed to about 250 from the over 300 previously used.

In plain fact, points out Desson, this means that the U. S. may have to accept a corresponding cut in films depending on how many foreign visas have been promised to other countries. These points are now being discussed in Paris and the old accord stays in operation until September.

Desson also maintained that the Ministry of Commerce and Industry, under Arthur Comte, will take a more direct hand in film matters in the hands of the Centre National de La Cinematographie.

Audience 40% Under-Age For 'Frankenstein'; Cops Blame Parents, Not Mgr.

Portland, Ore., July 30.

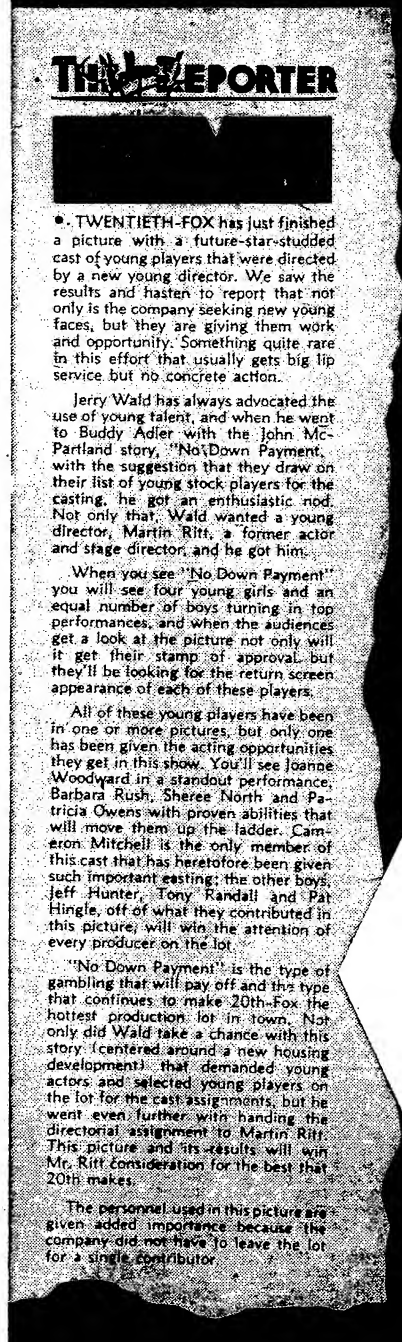
Picking up the "horrothon" all-night "screamiere" stunt as used by Warner Bros. in San Diego and elsewhere, Evergreen circuit showmandizer Oscar Nyberg at the Orpheum here ran into some unforeseen complications. The British import, "The Curse of Frankenstein" was coupled with "The Unknown" and the reels were to begin unspooling at 11:30 p.m.

Coppers "heard about it" just before the curtain went up and rushed to the scene. They found about 700 teenagers in line waiting to buy their tickets and over 1,200 already in the house. It was charged forthwith that a large group of the kids were violating the local curfew law.

Nyberg told police he was not familiar with the details of the law, but cooperated by instructing his cashier to check the ages of all ticket buyers. In the meantime, officers and policewomen started to weed violators out of the theatre and packed them off home. It was finally estimated that about 40% of audience were in violation and it would take all night to check. Cops gave up. They blamed the parents and turned in over two hours of police overtime for the detail.

Bill Thourlby Flys To Copenhagen for Short

George Coogan rolls a two-reeler in Copenhagen Aug. 1 titled "All About Love." This is for a U. S.-Danish firm, Cooper-Nielsen, which previously shot in Copenhagen a feature, "Escape From Terror," now slated for September release via Budd Rogers. It stars Jackie Coogan (nephew) and Mike Stokey.



For the "Love" short, Coogan is using Bill Thourlby, who played Jayne Mansfield's husband in the legit edition of "Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter?" He flew back to Denmark last Saturday (27). Local actress Jonna Jensen will be the girl. Will shoot in Copenhagen streets, museums and famed Tivoli Gardens.

"No Down Payment is the type of gambling that will pay off and the type that continues to make 20th-Fox the hottest production lot in town."

•. TWENTIETH-FOX has just finished a picture with a future-star-studded cast of young players that were directed by a new young director. We saw the results and hasten to report that not only is the company seeking new young faces, but they are giving them work and opportunity. Something quite rare in this effort that usually gets big lip service but no concrete action.

Jerry Wald has always advocated the use of young talent, and when he went to Buddy Adler with the John McPartland story, "No Down Payment," with the suggestion that they draw on their list of young stock players for the casting, he got an enthusiastic nod. Not only that, Wald wanted a young director, Martin Ritt, a former actor and stage director, and he got him.

When you see "No Down Payment" you will see four young girls and an equal number of boys turning in top performances, and when the audiences get a look at the picture not only will it get their stamp of approval, but they'll be looking for the return screen appearance of each of these players.

All of these young players have been in one or more pictures, but only one has been given the acting opportunities they get in this show. You'll see Joanne Woodward in a standout performance, Barbara Rush, Sheree North and Patricia Owens with proven abilities that will move them up the ladder. Cameron Mitchell is the only member of this cast that has heretofore been given such important casting; the other boys, Jeff Hunter, Tony Randall and Pat Hingle, off of what they contributed in this picture, will win the attention of every producer on the lot.

"No Down Payment" is the type of gambling that will pay off and the type that continues to make 20th-Fox the hottest production lot in town. Not only did Wald take a chance with this story (centered around a new housing development) that demanded young actors and selected young players on the lot for the cast assignments, but he went even further with handing the directorial assignment to Martin Ritt. This picture and its results will win Mr. Ritt consideration for the best that 20th makes.

The personnel used in this picture are given added importance because the company did not have to leave the lot for a single contributor.

Picture Grosses

'Affair' Mighty $27,000, D.C.; 'Loving' Lusty 17G, 'Tammy' Bright $18,000

Washington, July 30.

Four newcomers are combining to bring some life to the mainstem's sagging b.o. "An Affair to Remember" is smash at Loew's Capitol, while "Tammy and Bachelor," though not up to hopes for a truly sock entry, is rated bright at Loew's Palace. "Night Passage" is big in second week at Keith's. "Mademoiselle Striptease" is a sturdy entry at Plaza, tiny house of the Trans-Lux chain. "Loving You" looms lively in two houses.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (SW) (1,490; 80-$1.10)—"Loving You" (Par). Okay $5,000 or near. Last week, "Prince and Showgirl" (WB) (2d wk), $8,400.

Only new pic making dent this week is "Affair to Remember" at Harris and it looks big enough to stick around for awhile. "Silk Stockings" at Penn is runner-up, but only fair. Roadshow pix, "10 Commandments" at Warner and "Around World in 80 Days" at Nixon, are still holding up.

Penn (UA) (3,300; 80-$1.25)—"Silk Stockings" (M-G). Apparently the management figured correctly in earmarking this for only one week, with "Pride and Passion" (UA) on locked booking to open Friday. Fair $10,000. Last week, "Beau James" (Par), $11,000.

Stanley (SW) (3,800; 80-$1.25)—"Love in Afternoon" (AA). One of summer's top disappointments. Heavy advertising splurge is going for nothing; dismal $7,000 looms. Last week, "Prince and Showgirl" (WB), $8,500.

Warner (SW) (1,500; $1.25-$2.50)—"10 Commandments" (Par) (20th wk). Still sailing along. "Final six weeks" notice has been rescinded and DeMille epic will stick until next Cinerama subject comes in, probably around Oct. 1. Big $14,500. Last week, $15,000.

trib conflict. Calculated refusal to attend a film festival unrelated en total to the Span-MPEA film impasse will be seized upon by the Spanish film industry (which, in the main, is itself cold-shouldering San Sebastian) to further jeopardize MPEA vested interests in this country.

Overcoming Censorship

Full impact of MPEA brushoff was partially watered down by U.S. indie entry. Lamont greeted the gala opening in the name of pic's producer as well as the indie producers of America. He later told this reporter his mission in San Sebasian was limited to selling "A Kiss" in Spain for Crown Productions, that the fest tie-in helped him overcome a censor problem and sign a deal with Interpeninsular Film of Madrid.

Lamont and Interpeninsular are fighting festival decision to drop "Kiss" into the out-of-competition category. Lamont burned when he learned via press notices of committee switch attributed to prior release of pic in other European countries. Committee action cuts off "Kiss" from Golden Seashell prize and, more important, from possible tax-free release in Spain for winning selection which represents a cash saving of one million pesetas ($22,800).

Traditional Basque hospitality was underscored when Czech delegate Ladislao Kachtik onstaged Mon. (22) to present his country's "Model T" (or The Grandfather Automobile). A lone heckler of the Reds' delegate was quickly throttled by Spaniards in the audience and Czech salute received hefty applause.

France Tues. (23) established a new low for cooperation. Its entries included Henri Decoin's "Feu aux Poudres" (Match to the Powder Keg), a gendarme-arms smuggler meller only par for programmers, and at the gala night screening, "S.O.S. Norhona" uncomfortably below standard. Neither film was sub-titled as required by FIAP regulations. Gallic stars failed to show and French delegates by-passed customary greetings to Spain, San Sebastian and audience.

Festival came to life for Spain entry "Pasos" (Footsteps). Saying in the industry is that no festival gets off the ground until Madrid producer Cesareo Gonzalez arrives with his stable of stars and starlets. Cesareo brought Lola Flores and pied pipered an impressive contingent of Madrid film stars to San Sebastian. Official boxes at the Teatro Eugenia Victoria were dotted with government film brass from Spain, France, Italy and Germany. Excluding "Pasos," the soiree was brilliant.

With Mexico, Germany, Italy and England scheduled in the four remaining days, the first San Sebastian International Film Festival will wind Sun. (28), with the awarding of Golden Seashells to the best feature and documentary entered.

Catholics Aid DeMille Via Post Office

'Learn and Keep the 10 Commandments' Slogan On All Ottawa Letters

Ottawa, July 30.

At a total cost of $13 for a postage-meter slug, C. B. DeMille's "Ten Commandments" is garnering a hefty batch of national publicity with the help of Canada's post office and resultant coverage of the gimmick by The Canadian Press news service. With "The Ten Commandments" in its fourth week of a first local run, all letters passing through Ottawa post offices are carrying a postage-meter slug reading "Learn and Keep the "Ten Comandments." The $13 slug was paid for by Ray Tubman, manager of the Capitol theatre where the picture is running.

Arrangements with the post office were set up by the Roman Catholic Committee of Ottawa on Cinema, Radio and Television under a federal post office ruling that allows the use on cancellation machines of non-controversial, public service slugs for national organizations.

The committee's original copy read "See, Learn and Keep the Ten Commandments" but the "See" was dropped when the post office department balked at its commercial slant.

Canadian Press' 150-word story was carried by most daily newspapers coast to coast with full mention of the picture.

ABRAM MYERS CALLS RECENT B.O. WOBBLY

Spring and early summer business has been "extremely disappointing," according to reports from Allied States Assn. units. During the six months from November to April most territories, according to Allied general counsel Abram F. Myers, characterized business as "spotty." "Since then," Myers admits candidly, "the reports all seem to be bad."

Exhibitor leaders, Myers notes, are searching for causes as well as the cure for the bad business cycle. He urged "experienced and (under normal conditions) successful exhibitors" to air their views publicly if they believe they have spotted the reasons or possible remedies. "While their views may not be shared, or their suggestions adopted, by other industry branchers, such forthright expressions provoke thought in others and help to mold industry opinion," Myers maintains.

Le Bret Eyes Karlovy, Sees Cannes Lesson

Karlovy Vary, July 30.

Robert Favre Le Bret, president of the Cannes Film Festival, was in seeing how the East goes about its film fests here at the Karlovy Vary Festival in which Czechoslovakia wound up on Mon. (22). Le Bret noted that this fest, which welcomes only 300 visitors, has about the same number of personnel as Cannes which now has to traffic-manage about 900 people every year.

Le Bret was undoubtedly answering Jacques Flaud, head of the governmental Centre National De La Cinematographie, who criticized the last Cannes Fest in VARIETY a few issues ago.

Le Bret maintained that Cannes still had the same fiscal outlay, $140,000, it had at its conception in 1946. Since then costs had skyrocketed and the franc had dropped. The tremendous rise in attendance necessarily called for a hike in budget, opined Le Bret. He said that the governmental film body was now studying conditions at the last Cannes Fest and would soon recommend changes if necessary.

Heller Acrobatics

from the pair's connection with Paramount.

The Heller switch, believed unprecedented in annals of American business, was disclosed by reading letters from the firm to the Loew's board at a studio press conference held by Vogel Monday (29). Recommendations originally made orally July 12, repeated in a letter July 25, were withdrawn in a letter the next day. Latter letter said the original decision was based on the fact Vogel didn't have "sufficient constant support on the board to enable him to properly discharge his duties . . . thus many operating decisions normally left to judgment of president had to be submitted to the board with result his recommendations were frequently disregarded . . . the president and his subordinates were virtually powerless to take prompt, effective management action which they considered advisable."

However, the firm now feels stockholders should decide at the Sept. 12 meeting. In a separate letter to the board, the Heller firm emphasized that Vogel should remain and "be given full opportunity to carry out his program," if he receives effective working majority of directors at stockholder meeting, "Our view is that Vogel is a very competent executive. Were it not for the conflict within the board we would have recommended unqualifiedly his retention as president and chief executive officer."

'Noah's Ark'

television. In essence, it's aim was to eke out the last buck from theatres before the films were sent into the nation's living rooms for free.

Hefty Ad Budget

In its new version, "Noah's Ark," however, represented a new picture to Dominant and it decided to treat it as such. A hefty ad budget was allotted to the picture, the promotion and publicity gears were unloosened, and a distribution pattern was set. Latter consisted of saturation bookings in one area at a time.

The Philadelphia tri-state area, consisting of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, was selected for the first saturation bookings, with 100 dates being set from July 24 to Aug. 25 The picture was launched with full page ads in the Philly newspapers, listing all the theatres and dates. The ad did not refer to the picture's origin or that it was a new version of a 1929 silent film. The ad was headed "The most spectacular picture of all time!" Sub-heads read "so big . . . starts at 100 theatres. See this great attraction when it starts in your town. No advance in regular admission prices."

Reference to advance in admission price is apparently a subtle way of bringing attention to hiked prices on present day blockbusters. The body of the ad contains a panel of pictures with scenes from the film. Copy surrounding the photos read "Thrill to these electrifying scenes . . . the ritual of human sacrifice . . . the flight of the pagans . . . the stampede of animals . . . the worship of the golden calf . . . rise of the tower of Babel . . . the rescue of Miriam . . . and the flood that destroyed the world."

According to Arnold Jacobs, general sales manager of Dominant the picture, which opened in 30 theatres in the Philly zone on Wednesday (24), grossed $20,000 for the teeoff day. Film, booked in both hardtops and drive-ins, was set for three and four-day runs. Out of the 30 initial theatres showing the film, 10 are holding it over for seven-day engagements, according to Jacobs.

Following the Philly territory run, the picture will be similarly saturation-booked in the Washington, D.C. area, after which it will be shown throughout the country under a similar policy.

Jacobs revealed that similar plans are in the works to convert other silent films for modern-day use. However, he stressed that there was no intention of flooding the market with these films and that the company will be "picky and selective" in deciding what pictures are suitable for the reconversion treatment.

Other companies with accessible silent footage may follow the AAP example in an effort to come up example. The Hal Roach company is sifting through some of its old comedy footage in an effort to come up with material that will be suitable for assembling into a feature film that can be successfully released to theatres.

MPEA Gesture Brings Italo Pact

Motion Picture Export Assn. last week opened the way to an agreement re the film rental pact with Italian exhibitors. Move came in the wake of a modified proposal from AGIS, the Italo exhib organization. Agreement was promptly signed in Rome.

Conciliatory MPEA position, paving the way for a new understanding, was cabled to its Rome rep last week. It appears to eliminate any chance of interference on the part of the Italian Government, which has the right to issue a decree in the case of a continuing deadlock between distributors and exhibitors.

The Americans also made a concession, agreeing in effect to a formalization of the procedure under which a committee would choose the "exceptional" films which are entitled to free negotiability re terms.

Main concession on the part of AGIS involves the elimination of a proposed supervisory committee that would have lorded it over the entire AGIS-ANICA agreement. Under the AGIS proposal, the 1953 status quo—involving an arbitration body—would be reestablished.

The MPEA companies, with the exception of Metro, are all members of the distributors section of ANICA, in which the Italian distributors and producers are represented. Six of the U. S. companies definitely favored a concession to the Italians re the selection procedure for exceptional pictures. Metro was firmly opposed.

On the question of publicity expenditures, a revised proposal was submitted by AGIS. This is considered a fairly minor point in New York.

Generally speaking, MPEA members were loath to let things progress to a point where the Government would decree terms. It was felt that such a move would be detrimental to the American interests.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Chicago American devoted 21 column inches of recent Sunday feature section to present a case for the motion picture theatre in its current competition with old features on television. The principal points made by feature writer Ann Barzel are (1) "The full impact of some pictures is lost in solitary viewing," and (2) that "a fuzzy, drab, bedraggled copy that could not be compared with the original . . . is not really such a bargain."

Not to denounce the home screen, however, which says she must outgrow its imitation of Hollywood, Miss Barzell cited its merits of immediacy and, using comics as an example, of intimacy.

Advertising-publicity toppers in Gotham have lost some of their enthusiasm for industry sponsorship of Hollywood's Academy Awards in the future. Idea has been brought up several times in the past. Several of the ad-pub men now feel that the $400,000 plus that would be needed to sponsor the big show might be better spent elsewhere. Furthermore, they say they've had a change of heart about the question of Oldsmobile sponsorship of the show which, this year, finally was restrained and well-intgerated.

"It's all very well to talk about the industry bankrolling the Awards," said one, "but will it ever be really an industry show? After all, during the breaks, the individual stations probably would plug everything from beer to cigarets. So it wouldn't make much difference." He added that the show itself was a good enough plug for the film biz.

What was probably the most complicated and expensive setup ever arranged on a studio stage for stills was completed on Arthur Hornblow's "Witness for the Prosecution" with the entire cast and crew participating. Total cost for the setup, according to production manager Ben Hersh, will run to several thousand dollars—but it provided one key still which United Artists expects to use as the basis for the entire advertising campaign.

Producer Hornblow and director Billy Wilder shut down principal photography at 5 P.M. and held stars Tyrone Power, Marlene Dietrich, Charles Laughton along with featured players Elsa Lanchester, Una O'Connor, Ruth Lee and the remainder of the cast as well as more than 200 extras and bit players to give stillmen Madison Lacey and Phil Stern complete control of the set which was lighted by lenser Russell Harlan and his staff. Key shot was one taken by Stern with a newly-designed Japanese camera, the Panon, which shoots a negative image covering a 140 degree angle without distortion. Wilder recreated a scene in Old Bailey courtroom for the scene and the cost and crew remained until 6:30 P.M., going into overtime, in order to complete all necessary photography. Stern took three black and white and two color negatives, making the shot on orders from Life magazine. Lacey, shooting from the same angle, got four black-and-white negatives using a 3½ inch lens on a 4x5 speed graphic.

Conversation about possible economies in distribution circles almost invariably veers to the matter of cooperative advertising and it continues a sorepoint with the distribs. The beef is that exhibitors in first-run situations are not anteing up enough coin to launch a picture and as a result the distrib is required to shell out disproportionately high promotion coin.

Some theatremen take the position that showcase advertising in effect accrues to the benefit of a picture in the entire area. And, they reason, what should the first-run operator pay for such blanket coverage?

In any event some companies are beefing that they're forced to pay 80% of the ad costs whereas a 50-50 split would be in consonance with the rental terms.

That co-op ads represent a major item is for sure. They added up to a $6,000,000 budgetary entry for at least one of the top companies last year.

Jaime Arias, who handled Spanish publicity for "Pride and the Passion" and who was unit publicity director for "Thieves' Market" until producers Wyler and Peck decided to shelve the project, has moved into pharmacy ballyhoo. Arias is now head of public relations for INIBSA, a Barcelona distrib of U.S. pharmaceuticals also peddling Kleenex, Airwick, Lanolin Plus and Apiserum.

On his first mission, Arias turned Apiserum (a Gallic honey and vitamin compound) into an overnight national topic of conversation with controversy raging around rejuve merits of product. Keeping the flames hot, he imported Sorbonne savants to convince Spanish press and beehive the lecture circuit for Apiserum. Heavy press ads and radio spots accompanied to make the vitaminized vespa victual a hornet's sales nest.

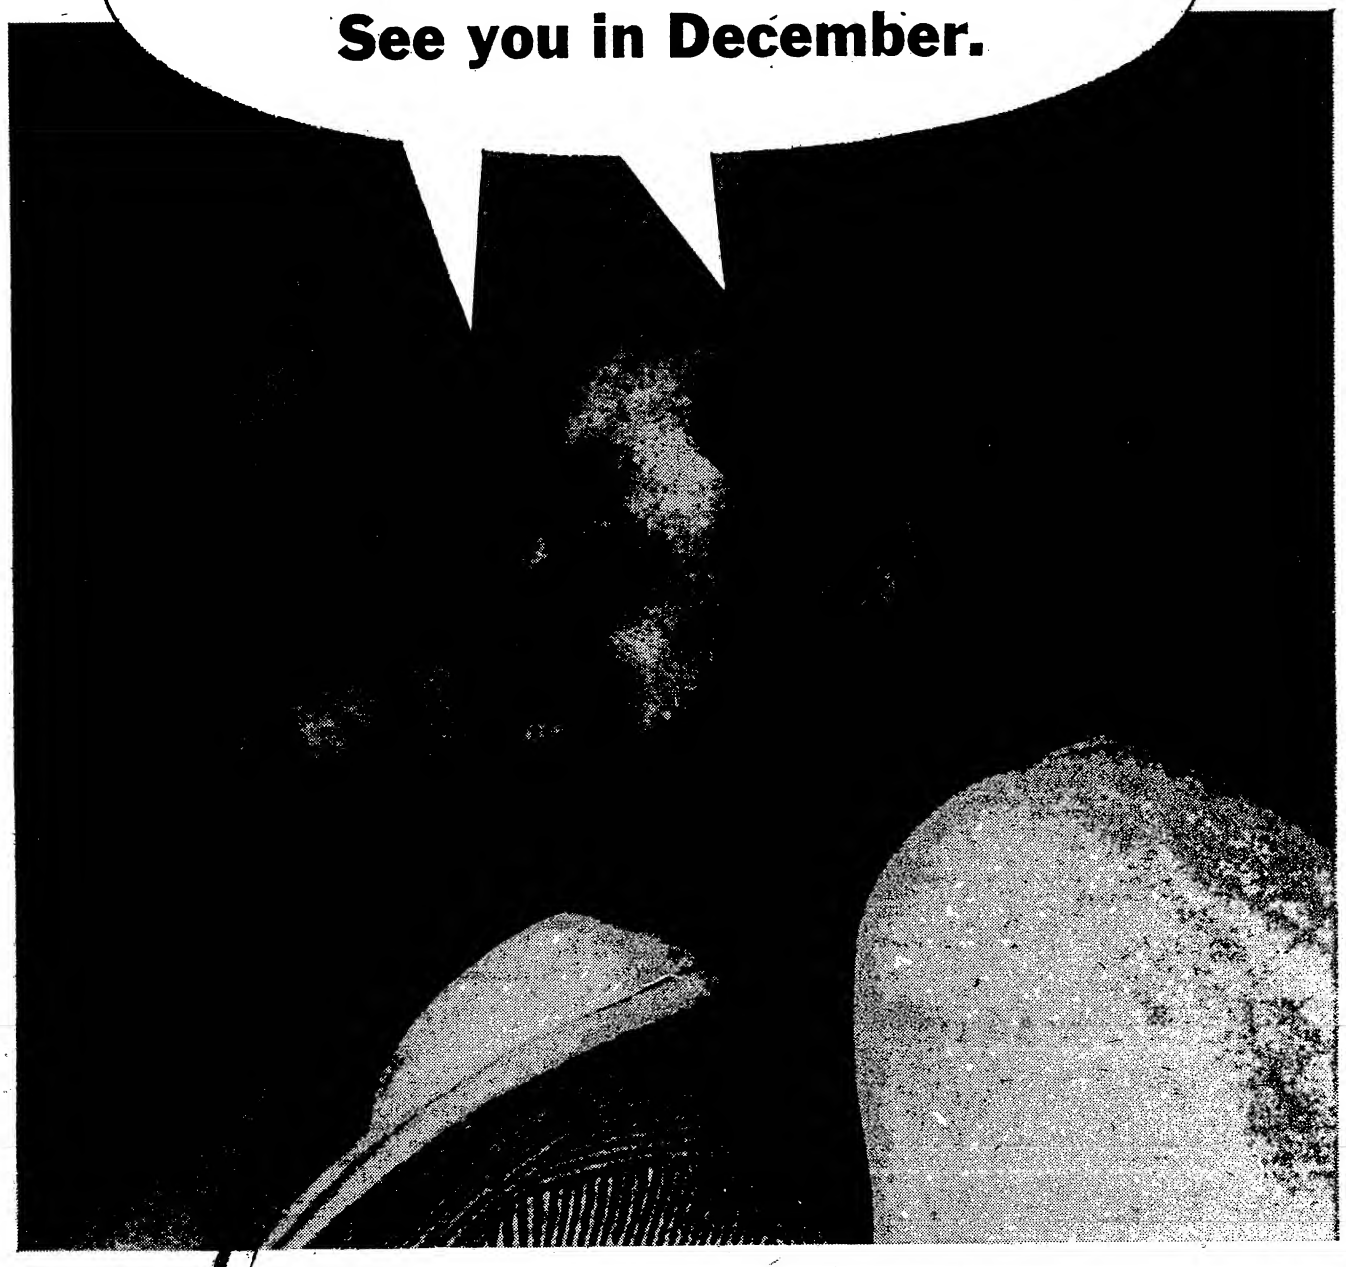
The ex-Max Youngstein protege is also handling public relations for the Costa Brava hotels at the seaside resort town of S'Agaro.

A new device known as a color film previewing timer, developed by the Hazeltine Research Corp., supplies directly and immediately the information required for the adjustment of film printers to produce high-quality positive prints from negative color film. It can be used with both 35m and 16m film and with both additive and subtractive printers.

The Hazeltine device displays instantaneously on a color television tube a positive reproduction of a color negative film inserted in the timer. Three knobs permit the adjustment of color balance and intensity. The apparatus, according to the research firm, is so calibrated that the positive scene on the color television tube appears substantialy as it will in a positive print using the printing information taken from the timer.

The Ottawa Citizen (17) carried a St. Lawrence Seaway feature by Fred Inglis on a family of five brothers named Clark, of Morrisburg, Ont., who are being moved, houses and families, from their familiar waterfront locations to inland sites to escape the seaway flooding.

What Inglis neglected to mention was that one of the Clark brothers, Henry, was a pioneer filmer operator in Morrisburg. Henry opened the old Star theatre in 1913, a 200-seater with a hand-operated Powers projector, which gave away to progress in the early '30s and became the Cameo, with sound. The Star played oldies including "If Winter Comes," "The Covered Wagon," others, using a foot-pumped player piano for pit music.



Spain's interest in "Pride and the Passion" is high following opening in New York and Chicago. San Sebastian Film Festival activity sought this release for special handling but United Artists toppers mentioned Stanley Kramer obligation to give first viewing to General Franco. Dubbed print will not be ready until late September or October.

Government here may set a precedent, if "Pride and the Passion" is everything Kramerites report it is, by rebating 300,000 pesetas ($7,000) in customs duties on temporarily imported explosives and plastics consumed during the course of filming.

Roy O. Disney, president of the amusement park, said Disneyland expects to show a profit of more than $1,000,000 for the fiscal year ending July 31 after depreciation of approximately $2,200,000. Disney Productions paid the option price of $528,810 for the shares—approximately $100,000 in cash and the balance in notes.

Passes Passing Reason—Distribs

Alarm in Texas As Grocery Store Tie-Ins for Family Patronage Become Competitive

Abilene, Tex., July 30.

What once was a courtesy admission to city leaders, a trading commodity for small favors, and a friendship maker for the theatre manager is now a brand on the fires of competition between theatremen. The "free pass" is rapidly heading for a battle at the various local theatre's boxoffices.

It all started shortly after the first of the year when the new Town and Country Drive-In tied with Thornton's Grocery Stores. Shoppers began receiving one free-carload pass with each $20 in food purchases. The pass was good for 60 days, and tickets could be accumulated until the $20 point. The ozoner has a 1,500 car capacity and is managed by Sherman Hart.

A month later the Tower Twin and the Crescent Drive In Theatres owned and operated by Rudy Erickson, closed a similar deal with the M-System chain of grocery outlets. In this tie-in, a pass was given to the grocery purchaser with every $5 worth of groceries but with one admission having to be paid at the boxoffice.

Hart early this month divided the Town and Country into two separate theatres, and showing double bills on each of the two screens for admission or pass or both.

Film distributors, becoming worried, slapped a limit on the number of passes which would be allowed each night. This limit was set at 10% of the theatres total capacity.

A final development came when E. L. Williamson, a partner on the Key City and Chief Drive-In Theatres, said his ozoners would begin honoring passes from any merchant for any theatre in the city.

STUDIO BACKLOTTERS' UNEMPLOYMENT DOWN

Hollywood, July 30.

Employment among film technicians and backlot workers is up, IATSE officials noted last week. Observed Herb Aller, head of Cameramen's Local, "Unemployment (among his craft) is down to 10%; it's been as high as 30% in the past." Same applies to sound and film editors, he notes, and attributes the upswing to accelerated telefilming now getting underway.

George Flaherty, IA international rep here, agrees and added that shortages are developing among certain top technicians, with grips, carpenters, laborers and painters enjoying prosperity. However, Flaherty was concerned with length of current upswing cycle, noting "soft spots" in employment picture, among projectionists, for instance.

Flaherty felt that if past patterns continue, film employment picture will be rosy for perhaps three months, "then we're in trouble again." However, commenting on VARIETY story of last week that tv production is shifting to Coast, he hoped for a longer filming cycle this year, "clean through to tax day."

Loew's New Auditors

Accounting firm of Arthur Anderson & Co. has been retained as the regular accounting firm of Loew's Inc., replacing Miller, Donaldson & Co. Loew's longtime accounting firm.

Anderson outfit had been previously brought in on a short-term assignment to review accounting policies and procedures. It will begin its duties immediately.

In an earlier move overhauling financial phase of Loew's operation, Robert H. O'Brien, who had been a director and financial v.p. of American Broadcasting Paramount Theatres, was signed as v.p. and treasurer of Loew's to succeed Charles C. Moskowitz, who announced his retirement last March. O'Brien joins Loew's on Aug. 5.

New Star Exhibitors Inc. has been authorized to carry on a motion pictures and amusements business in the Bronx. Capital stock is 100 shares, no par value. Jacob Leff is a director and filing attorney.

Loew's Limelight

detailed account of the feuding as printed here in the issue of April 10.

Fortune describes the Loew fight vividly as "for the possession of this somewhat flabby but immensely famed hulk." The struggle is "as intricate as it is frenzied, now in its second year and nearing a climax."

Who Can Swing It,

All eyes will be upon the warriors from here on in. It is doubtful now that any compromise is possible. One side wins and the other loses. But which side is the winner will undoubtedly be determined in considerable measure by the footwork and skull practice which is the essence of modern public relations for the corporation with a big headache. Nobody (not yet) has enough stock to be able to command the final decision.

The public fight is likely to be very "personal." Already the typecasting is apparent. Joe Vogel is the hard-working soft-spoken business man who kept aloof from the old struggles within Loew's itself and was, if anything, slightly naive in thinking that his "good will" would gratify either the hurt pride of Louis B. Mayer or the job-hunting of Stanley Meyer.

Will Nick Schenck speak up for himself? Traditionally he has been tight-mouthed. His emotions in retirement may readily be imagined and he may find himself returning to the plot through repeated use of "flashback." In any event, both Schenck and Mayer are fully type-cast as liontamers emeritus with one trait in common: reluctant retirement.

Autocrats and Loew's went together in former times. The net bill of particulars against Louis B. Mayer was just that. He fought with, and ultimately lost to, another autocrat in the east, Nick Schenck. The studio battle came to a head via a Mayer appointee, Dore Schary, who turned out to be an autocrat in his own way, imposing his own choice of offbeat scripts and liberal themes and bothering little with his production echelon's opinions.

Forcing Out Secrets

In the last two years, (a) the quarrelling Loew board, (b) the threats of proxy fights, (c) the embarrassment of refusal-after-refusal of the presidency when it became vacant after Arthur Loew advertised what a back-braker it was: all these things gradually forced Loew's to fall away from the old secrecy policy. It was the studied purpose of a galaxy of lawyers, bankers, brokers to pry those secrets open to start with; and in fact it is distinctly unrealistic not to recognize the historic significance of the pre-Tomlinson and pre-Stanley Meyer period.

Great curiosity has been aroused in the film industry, and now in Wall Street, respecting the antecedents of Tomlinson and Meyer. Fortune speaks of Meyer as "a bold and voluble 44-year-old citizen of Hollywood. His title to film renown derives from once having been co-producer (with Jack Webb) of the television series 'Dragnet.' In 1955, following the sale of his 25% interest in 'Dragnet,' Meyer found himself with a million dollars and nothing grand to do."

Fortune spells out one recently whispered story about Tomlinson in Canada. "Some irony attaches to his indignation over various policies and events at MGM . . . for . . . in October, 1954, just as he was beginning his venture into Loew's Inc., his firm pleaded guilty to defrauding the Ontario government of $360,000 in connection with highway contracts. The firm was slapped with a fine of $100,000 — one of the toughest penalties of its kind in Ontario legal records."

And speaking of public relations, a sage might remark another recently published story — the threatened extinction of real lions in Africa, under the impact of white hunters on safari for wild game.

ALLIED TO PITTSBURGH

Board Meeting Aug. 14-15 in Shift From N. Y.

Allied States Assn.'s regular summer board meeting, originally scheduled for New York, has been shifted to Pittsburgh. It will be held at the Penn Sheraton Hotel on Aug. 14 and 15. Session will be preceded by a conclave of Allied's Emergency Defense Committee on Aug. 13.

New York was abandoned when it was learned that there would be no session of the Joint Committee on Arbitration in August.

Among topics scheduled for discussion by the board is the question of arbitration. Allied representatives who have attended the arbitration negotiations will report to the board and receive further instructions. Allied's committee negotiating with the Council of Motion Picture Organizations relating to the terms and conditions under which Allied will return to COMPO will also report to the board.

Meanwhile, Allied appears to be changing its tone relating to the joint COMPO-Motion Picture Assn. of America business building campaign. Interest in the project, according to Allied general counsel Abram F. Myers, is being revived by reports "that some of the moth-eaten devices of the past were subordinated to a new program which will include a much-needed institutional advertising." Allied is also pleased with the appointment of Oscar Dooh as coordinator of the promotional campaign.

have an impact on the stockholders. Apparently says the writer, he was unaware of the Wall Street criticism of Mayer because of the huge settlement of $2,750,000 he was given and Metro's pensionitis generally.

L. B. Mayer a 'Blunder'?

The putting forth of Louis B. Mayer, Fortune argues, was Tomlinson's first blunder. Vogel, on the other hand, also blundered when he accepted Tomlinson's formula for the new board—six seats for the Tomlinson-Meyer group, six for Vogel, and an "independent" 13th man for final seat.

Hughes credits Ben Javits, then Tomlinson's attorney, with pulling off a great bluff in getting Vogel to accede to the proposal. At a meeting at the Hotel Drake, Hughes gives the following account of what happened:

"In a truly remarkable scene, Javits stated his proposition as an ultimatum—asserting that he would shortly receive a phone call from Andre Meyer (of Lehman Bros.), who would (Javits warned) throw his support to the Tomlinson group if Vogel did not accede. (Lending creditibility to this show of strength, Andre Meyer did indeed phone Javits while the group was assembled—but with no such message as Javits had alleged: he was merely returning an earlier Javits call.) Vogel was stunned by the ultimatum. He and his group retired to a separate room to take counsel. The consensus was for acceptance rather than a proxy fight. Vogel gave in. The bold—and empty—bluff of Tomlinson-Javits-Stanley Meyer had worked with unbelievable ease.

"Some of Vogel's advisers thought that this blunder might well turn out to be a fatal one. The challenge of a proxy fight (they held) should have been accepted, since (1) the bankers would never have supported the ambitions of Stanley Meyer, (2) the cost of a proxy fight—hundreds of thousands of dollars—would have discouraged Tomlinson, while (3) the company treasury would have been available to Vogel. At the time, however, Vogel preferred to believe that the Tomlinson-Meyer group on the board would be no more troublesome than a kind of 'loyal opposition'."

Clear-sighted L. B.

L. B. Mayer, now 72, refused to consider returning fulltime to Metro even if invited — according to Fortune Mag. Mayer's quoted as saying:

"No one can help the studio until that damn board pulls itself together." He was evidently not confused by the fact that it was his friends Meyer and Tomlinson who were doing most to pull the board apart.

when dealing with the oldest profession in the world next to writing—both, in Frank Harris's phrase, being ruined by amateurs.

Gate-Crashing The Vatican Library

Peter Andreas Munch was a writer, however, who has grown in stature with the years. I recently learned how this Viking, a black Protestant, gained access to the back files of the Vatican library. He wanted a certain book which his researches told him not only was there but where it could be found in the ancient archives. The priest-librarian couldn't find it. Peter Andreas Munch insisted it was in a certain place and leaped over the guard rail and ran to where it ought to have been. He found it. All were delighted at his research skill, and that's how a Lutheran got back into a position of trust in Rome.

He is buried there. An imposing monument in Rome honors his memory as it does in Oslo. What killed him was a trick our Skip tried seven years ago when in Rome. Peter Andreas came out of St. Peter's on a swelteringly hot day and ducked his head in a fountain of icy cold water. The shock felled him and he died three days later at the age of 52—a mere boy by European standards. Eight volumes of unsurpassed Norse history thus came to an end.

So far I have not seen any statues to Knut Hamsun or Sigrid Undset around Oslo. Fru Undset might pass without much debate, except that women do not seem to have quite the influence among statue-building fund-raisers. Or perhaps it is felt that their styles would look a little ridiculous in bronze after their generation had passed.

Hamsun, though, would cause quite a war. An old man when the Nazis poured in, the ex-Chicago streetcar conductor and Nobel prize-winner said a good word for the invading krauts. Even at this late date that's as hard to forgive as if he had murdered the one and only king modern Norway has had.

In Frogner Park there are about 50 statues designed, cast and erected by Gustav Vigeland. He made quite sure he would be remembered for he used himself as a model for much of the male statuary.

This park is about as expansive and as beautiful as you will ever see. At the entrance to the right is a hugh swimming pool and one side has a grass slope leading to a small lake reserved for swans and mud hens. The pool and slope were teeming with bathers, though it seemed cold enough to us for seals.

Vigeland Strips 'Em All

There is a broad tree-lined mall from the main gate for a half mile and leading to a huge fountain and beyond that up three flights of stairs to an obelisk decorated by human figures wound around each other like bewildered serpents. People argue whether this is talent or madness.

Along both sides of the mall across a bridge are bronze statues, all nudes. They are huge, bulky Germanic models of men, women and children, perhaps 50 in all. Vigeland obviously had heard of Rodin, but judging from his male models had never heard of bathing trunks. I suspect physiology classes must find the repetition dull if they do their field work along this mall.

Mixed Wrestling In Bronze

He has statues of what looks to me like mixed wrestling. Nude women are being thrown over nude men's heads and vice versa. Hardly 10% of the conceits seem to mean anything, and all of them, men and women alike, have the piano legs of old ballplayers. There is a statue to Lincoln in this park. He looks as lonely as a young man in formal dinner clothes at a nudist camp.

This guy Vigeland must have been not only a prodigious worker but a super-salesman. He not only sold the stuff but was deeded a large house by the state to use as a studio during his life. It now has become a museum of his works. Obviously he unloaded a lifetime of labor on a docile park commission and got paid for it before Hitler swooped in and stole the nation's assets. I am amazed the crazed kraut didn't melt the statues down for the bronze and if he had, many Norwegians would have forgiven the looting quicker than his taking their church-bells to turn into shells.

In the park, as everywhere else, this town seems to be chewing-gum, coke and ice-cream-cone crazy. We were asked if we had them in America. We didn't dare tell we invented the damned things for fear of being suspected as Russians.

Dread Bankers at Loew's

emerging only indicates the enormity of the problem."

This banker is the one with a radical concept for new ownership-control-management of Loew's Inc. an action with which showmen differ and have expressed themselves hopeful will not be realized, even in the stress of trying to set the company on an even keel.

Meanwhile film men mostly side with their own—Vogel.

"We don't want another RKO to happen to Loew's", says Leonard H. Goldenson, president of American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres.

Simon H. Fabian, president of Stanley Warner Theatres, which like many another circuit depends on the major studios for the life-blood of its boxoffice appeal, is equally concerned and has expressed himself willing to take affirmative and aggressive steps to aid Joseph R. Vogel in getting Loew's Inc. on the beam.

From Chicago, Edwin Silverman, head of the important independent Essaness Circuit, wants "VARIETY to spread the word that he and a lot of theatreowners don't like the machinations within Loew's; hope Joe (Vogel) is given fullest opportunity to prove himself and we, who own plenty of amusement stocks, Loew's included, will not only vote for him but within our own national organizations we'll do a bangup job for him in case of any proxy fight."

This rallying around the Vogel (Loew's) flag is almost historic in its unusualness. Traditionally the industry has been highly competitive and perhaps the dearest penalty it has paid has been because of this sharp bidding among itself for personalties and properties. Only in time of emergency, such as war or national calamity, has the picture business been known to combine and solidify for a single cause, hence this solidarity of cheering section for the Vogel incumbency is an extraordinary manifestation of intra-trade loyalties.

Says another picture topper, and most of them prefer to remain anonymous, not out of fear but because they have expressed themselves that "we can do a better job that way." — "It was ridiculous to have set up that Loew board that way and give management such a millstone. What would I know about sitting on the board of a railroad company or a coal or steel company. I might make windowdressing but I'd still bow to the dictates of the management savvy which has run that railroad or coal or steel business. And I don't care what sort of a fancy degree somebody left the university, showmanship is still something just for showmen.

"Big business has recognized this, as witness the millions it poured into radio and now television. Ford wants to project a new model (Edsel) and looks to showmen and talent like Sinatra and Crosby to get the message across.

"It would be a calamity if the bankers took over Loew's. They're scavengers—they're not looking for forward-going production; they look upon any business for its liquidation worth. We don't want Loew's to be liquidated as RKO went out of business. The future welfare of Loew's effects the whole core of our business."

Samuel Goldwyn is reported to have rallied to the support of Loew's proxy Joseph R. Vogel and is putting in a good word with the Wall Street banking interests.

HERMAN BECKER, 50 YR. SHOWBIZ VET, SEES B.O. GOLD IN MODERN 'ARTIES'

It's now 50 years ago that Herman Becker first entered the entertainment field, starting in vaudeville and graduating into films. But Becker is still vigorously on the job, and in fact his Rugoff & Becker chain is about to add its 20th link, this one The Cinema, located on the Miracle Mile in Manhasset, Long Island.

House, a 450-seater, preems Aug. 6 with a gala preview as a benefit for the North Shore Hospital. It's the first in this area to be built into a shopping centre area, and it has a parking area capable of accommodating 1,600 cars.

"That's the theatre of the future, the modern suburban with an 'art' policy," Becker opined this week. "In the old days it didn't really matter too much what kind of theatre we had. Exhibitors couldn't help making money. Today, it's different. We've got to be up-to-date."

Becker, who in 1923 went into partnership with Edward Rugoff (today he operates the circuit with Donald Rugoff, son of his late partner), started the "art" policy at the 8th St. Theatre in Greenwich Village back in 1930. He's been making that pitch pay off ever since.

"I remember how we used to bring old pictures back," he recalled. "We used to play 'Henry VIII' over and over again, and it never failed to pack 'em in. It's no different today. People are in a mood for something different. They're ready for it." Becker feels that the so-called "carriage trade" audience sector is growing continually and can be served profitably, particularly of the theatre comes to where the people are.

Of R&B's current 19 operations, only one—the Sutton—is a first-run. It's had some extraordinarily long runs, although the distributors originally were hesitant to book their pictures in there. "They told me it was out-of-the-way," said Becker. "Now look at the record. We played 'Marty' for 40 weeks, 'Quartet' for 38, and 'Genevieve' for 22 weeks. They laughed at me when we put 'I Know Where I'm Going' in there. It stayed for 20 weeks. On 'Marty' alone we paid the distributor $225,000 in film rental on a $500,000 gross."

Another successful nearby R&B operation is the Beekman Theatre. Becker said they were "after him" to switch the Beekman to a first-run policy. "We may do it," he said. Circuit also may expand with the acquisition or construction of further houses.

Becker vigorously attacked the notion that exhibs today aren't selling the product as actively as in days past. "The theatres are as energetic today as ever," he held. "It's the distributors that are wrong. They can't give you bad movies and then expect you to go to work on them."

Are there too many theatres? "I'd say there are too many for the bad pictures they're making," replied Becker. Product generally is either worse on the average than it used to be, or a lot better, the vet exhib found. Actually, his concentration is on offbeat American of the typical British product. "We haven't done so well with the Italian and French films," he said.

Had he foreseen impact of tv? "No, I didn't," admitted Becker. "I never thought it'd get this big. But now I think it's on the way down. They don't have any stars any more. They just can't maintain that format week after week."

With Gus Edwards

Becker started as an office boy for the late Gus Edwards at the age of 16. Five years later he was Edwards' general manager, riding the crest of the vaudeville tide. Eventually he became a producer of vaude acts. To raise the necessary cash; he took a job with Lee Lash, selling ad space on theatre front curtains. With his earnings he started in as a vaude producer. Among others he had Bert Lahr and Jack Pearl working for him for $25 a week.

In 1953, when Lahr was starring in "Burlesque" at the Brighton Theatre, which Becker operated for 20 years, he was getting $1,500 plus a percentage. Becker also started his sister, Ruth Roy, in vaude and managed her career to the top, when she was one of the Palace headliners.

First theatre to be operated by Becker was the Parksville in Brooklyn back in 1918. It had a roof garden and, during the summer months, the top was opened and it became the first open air theatre. When he took over the Parksville, Becker had a losing proposition on his hands. A few years later he had it operating so successfully, he sold it and with the profit acquired other houses.

Though he's deep in the "art" field, Becker hasn't followed suit with other circuits that have gone into the distribution field. "We considered it, but it's too much work," he explained. Had it ever had an itch to go into film production? "Heavens no," he exclaimed. "I've got enough to do minding my own business."

Jabs & Jokes Re That 'Smell'

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

On the theory that nothing succeeds like excess, the Messrs. Burt Lancaster and Tony Curtis are putting the twists and turns worked up so artfully in "Trapeze" to good use in their dedicated and no doubt profitable distortion of the worlds of journalism and press-agentry in their current production—"Sweet Smell of Success." The various and articulate syndicated gentlemen to whom the caricature of a Broadway columnist may give offense don't need me to argue their case.

It might parenthetically be mentioned here that the movie's producers did manage to suggest that there do indeed exist Broadway byliners with a sense of integrity. (But even here the concession to fair play was watered down by mating the journalistic honor of a rival, fictional columnist with a marital infidelity on the part of the same columnist.)

It is my contention that this picture demeans a whole profession—publicity and public relations—without making the slightest attempt to suggest a basic fact: there exist hard-working and principled practitioners of publicity techniques in the same abundant ratio to less savory types as are to be found in any other profession. As contemptuously employed by the character portrayed by a bespectacled Burt Lancaster, the phrase—"press agent"—is used viciously to smear any man or woman honestly engaged in the hard art of advocating attitudes favorable to clients and, in this sense, legitimately seeking to influence mass opinion.

Lacing this harsh indictment with irony is the lamentable fact that—to many otherwise knowledgeable folk—the difference between a press agent and a public relations counsellor is a deep mystery. Add to this the various specialties in the public relations field (industrial, radio-tv, theatrical, etc.) and the enormity of the disservice rendered publicity people is all the more demonstrable.

Although it has been said that the difference between a press agent and a public relations counsellor is purely financial and even though it has been whispered in some cynical quarters that a public relations counsellor uses big words to explain to irate clients why he can't manage to get those pesky small words into the paper, neither does justice to the actual distinction. It is the function of the public relations counsel to formulate the policy best calculated to do the client the most good in the opinion areas of concern to him.

The press agent is charged with the technical job of "getting it into print." In come cases, deponent's for example, both functions—policy formulation and "planting"—are combined within the same person. The difference between public relations and publicity is nicely demonstrated in the case of a major television personality who elected to adjust the working (or is it non-working relationship) between himself and a promising young singer right on the air. This somewhat precedental gesture earned the star reams of publicity but it would take a reckless gambler indeed to wager that the public relations yield was in the main beneficial.

Meanwhile On Broadway

Recent gag in Lindy's, when the pressagents are assembled in full force, or when one or two of the Broadway columnists are known to be present, is to page "Sidney Falco" and "J. J. Hunsecker," respectively the onerous p.a. and columnist characters in "Sweet Smell of Success" currently at Loew's State—and some wag says that half-dozen p.a.'s usually get up to answer to "Falco." Incidentally, the columnists have been singularly noncomittal on the picture and on the subject of the alleged sharp relations between them and p.a.'s. One noted exception has been Hy Gardner who coupled "Success" with "the smear cycle" of films about "The Great Man" and "Face On the Crowd" (tv stars). He had a more or less dispassionate few kind words for his columnar colleagues—not all of them, because he mentioned those he rooted for, and noticeably omitted certain ones with whom he has differed publicly in his own column in the past—and likewise had some posies for the hard-working, enterprising p.a.'s who are "forced to ride a tandem bike and service both their clients and the communications world . . . He can seldom if ever satisfy a client's ego or pacify a columnist if he mistakenly feeds him with a wrongo. He can't win. The best he can hope for is to break even. . . ."

ALLIED EXHIBS' COUNSEL RAPS CRITICS: 'GIVE PUBLIC SMARTALECRY, NOT INFO'

Allied States Assn. general counsel Abram F. Myers, momentarily taking time out from rapping the policies of the distribution companies, has unleashed a blistering attack on film critics. According to Myers, "the sneering and contemptuous attitude of some reviewers towards motion pictures is becoming irksome to exhibitors and, we hope, will to all lovers of fair play."

While not suggesting the invoking of libel laws against the critics especially at a time "when freedom of expression is exalted above all other freedoms," Myers nevertheless contends that one occasionally runs into a review of a picture "that seems so biased as to have been inspired by personal malice."

The Allied general counsel particularly singles out "the reviewer on a certain weekly periodical with a large circulation." He cites the reviewer, whom he does not name, as "a conspicuous example of the supercilious school of criticism."

"His reviews," according to Myers, "abound with wise cracks, doubtful puns and dirty digs and contain nothing to indicate whether the average American would enjoy the picture. He plainly writes for his own amusement and that of the readers who will accept neat phrases and a play on words as substitutes for information and constructive thought. Most assuredly he does not write for the information of potential movie-goers."

Myers, in his bulletin to Allied members, maintains that the "distainful attitude" is not confined to the writers for the slick magazines. He charges that it "seeps down" into the film appraisals in the daily newspapers. There are exceptions, Myers concedes, "but most reviewers nowadays seem to think they establish their own superiority by snooting movies."

The Allied leader further claims that the "supercilious and consciously high-brow reviewers" are writing only for a small percentage of the country's total population. He dismisses the argument that the reviewers are writing for "the best educated" group by noting that other features in the publications are not written in the "same top lofty style."

According to Myers, the "outraged protests" of authors, playwrights, producers and exhibitors will continue to be ignored by publishers. "Perhaps," says Myers, "the only way in which reform can come is for the readers to complain that they are being unfairly treated because the reviewers do not give them the facts concerning the movies. That is to say, that reviewers are misrepresenting the movies to their readers by commenting only on what they deem to be the bad features of a picture without mentioning other features which the reader might well enjoy."

Myers says that many times he has enjoyed a picture which has been rapped—and this in spite of the fact that he concedes that "the reviewer was probably right in saying that the plot was illogical, that the dialog in some respects was corny, or that the star did not make the most of his role." Myers argues that "the fact was that despite these imperfections the picture was highly entertaining—a fact the reviewer did not deem worth mentioning." Next time it happens, Myers says, he may write a letter of protest to the editor and, as a matter of fact, he'd like to initiate a fad of writing letters to the editor.

Up-Post Herb Lazarus

Herbert Lazarus, associated with American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres and its predecessor, Paramount Pictures, since 1933, has been named secretary of the corporation. He succeeds Robert H. O'Brien, who resigned last week to become treasurer of Loew's replacing Charles C. Moskowitz.

Lazarus also is v.p. and general counsel of AB-PT.

Mrs. Lois Briggs has been named manager of Floyd's Theatre, El Campo, Tex. She replaces John Reidt who has moved to Sacramento, Cal.

Hailing James Dean

Warner Bros.' "The James Dean Story" has been set for an Aug. 13 preem at the Paramount Theatre in Marion, Ind., near the late star's hometown of Fairmount. Preem will be followed by a 10-theatre saturation opening throughout Indiana and northern Kentucky.

Governor Harold Handley of Indiana will be among the state and government officials attending the opening which will benefit the James Dean Memorial Foundation for young actors. Handley also will unveil a monument to Dean in Fairmount.

DAVE LIPTON MUSES: FILM PR UNFOCUSSED?

Tokyo, July 23.

Motion picture publicity and advertising are geared to young women despite the fact that recent statistics have shown that men attend films oftener, according to David A. Lipton, Universal's pub-ad v.p.

Here to attend the company's Far Eastern sales conference, Lipton declared, however, that development in subject interest begins mainly with girls. Audiences from the ages of 14 to 24 are the most consistent film-goers, according to Lipton, but, he says, "here is a switch, more men than women are going to the movies."

The pitch, however, is made at the women, Lipton stresses. "It is the women who develop star quality," he points out. "New personalities are talked about by women much more than among men. I have found that the crowds at public appearances will be predominantly women. Therefore we encourage the fan magazine. They are read largely by young women in what is known as 'under the dryer' circulation."

Women, Lipton maintains, are the ones who make the choice in choosing what picture to see. "It's the tendancy of all men," the exec explained, "to ask the girl where she would like to go. And it's the women who selects the entertainment for the family. In these areas, the woman is the predominant influence in selecting movies."

Paddy Chayefsky Learns Appreciation of High Powered Promotion

Paddy Chayefsky, author of "The Goddess" and partner in the Carnegie Productions company which is filming the property for Columbia release, is plenty high on exploitation of a picture. Sitting around the Gold Medal Studio, Bronx, where "Goddess" was being shot last week, the writer said heavier "sell" caused "Bachelor Party" to be a greater success than "12 Angry Men" although he considered the latter a better picture. Latter was written by Reginald Rose. Both pictures were released by United Artists.

A picture, said Chayefsky, needs much more push than that which the distributor's staff can give it. He figures the independent producer should have his own publicity agents and cast members should have their own p.r. reps as well. Exploitation fills the gap between a good picture and good boxoffice, he believes.

Chayefsky also has some opinions anent picture-making economics. He said "Goddess" would cost $1,500,000 if it were to be made at a major Hollywood studio whereas lensing it in New York (plus five days of location in Maryland and another five on the Coast) is resulting in a budget, as per present plan, of $500,000.

In line with this, Martin Poll, Gold Medal owner, quoted director Elia Kazen as saying "Face in the Crowd" would have cost another 47% if it were made on a major lot.

Chayefsky and George E. Justin, associated producer of "Goddess," also stressed the value of rehearsals noting that one day of such preparation can mean a saving of two days of shooting. Kim Stanley went through her first two days of camera work in "Goddess" without the need for a single retake because of rehearsals, they stated.

Chaefsky disavowed any directorial aspirations, commenting he feels he would "only confuse" the performers.

N.Y. State Censor Further Crippled

'Garden of Eden' and 'Lady Chatterley's Lover' Rulings Will Be Appealed by the Regents

Albany, July 30.

Pre-release censorship in New York State, already severely restricted in legal scope, has received another setback with the two court decisions ordering the restitution of licenses for "Garden of Eden" and "Lady Chatterley's Lover."

Board of Regents, which controls the N. Y. censor, is expected to appeal both decisions. The "Lady Chatterley" ruling is the more significant of the two since it was unanimous on the part of the Appellate Division of the State Supreme Court.

Judge William H. Coon, in writing the decision in the "Lady Chatterley" case, made it plaint that, under the rulings of the U. S. Supreme Court, the only grounds for pre release censorship can be "obscenity."

"Chatterley" originally was banned when the distributor, Kingsley International, refused to eliminate three sequences which the state censor found "immoral." Board of Regents, on appeal, went whole hog and called the entire film immoral under section 122 of the Education Law.

Wrote Judge Coon: "Ordinarily such a word as 'immoral,' which might have one meaning to one person . . . and another meaning to another person . . . cannot be defined with such exactness or precision as would leave no field of individual opinion and discretion open to the viewer."

Further quote: "As we interpret the decisions of the Supreme Court . . . a statute which leaves any field open to the opinion, discretion or individual point of view of a censor in banning a moving picture violates the Fourteenth Amendment. If any field of prior restraint is left open it would seem clear that the Supreme Court decisions forbid a statute as broad as the one under consideration."

Partial Satisfaction

The judge added that he had seen "Lady Chatterley" and that he didn't think it could be considered obscene "as that term is now judicially defined. Hence, the license denial was unconstitutional."

Case was argued for Kingsley International by attorney Ephraim London of London, Simpson & London, who's been a leading legal light in the anti-censorship fight of recent years.

While such court decisions, inspired by the Supreme Court rulings, have tended to greatly narrow and restrict the censors at the state level, the significance of recent Supreme Court decisions in the book field has not been lost on the film people. Court held that there was justification in the application of injunctive powers prior to the sale of a book. It's feared that it won't be long before an attempt will be made to equate books and films, and to apply the same reasoning to the field of motion pictures. This would, of course, throw the issue to the Court, but would create a very difficult situation for the distributors.

Deny Garden Grove (Cal.) Hardtopper To National; Vinicof Opposed

Petition of National Theatres to construct a new hardtop theatre in Garden Grove, Calif., was denied in New York Federal Court on Friday (26). Decision, handed down by Judge Edmund L. Palmieri, is believed to be the first one nixing a request for additional theatre acquisitions by a formerly-affiliated theatre.

The NT petition was opposed by the Vinicof Theatre Circuit, operator of the Grove Theatre in Garden Grove, and the Broadway Theatre Corp., operator of the Broadway Theatre in Santa Ana, Calif. The Dept. of Justice, which acts in all cases involving antitrust suits, did not take a postion on National's petition. However, at the request of Judge Palmieri, it later submitted an 11-page statement, after which the court acted.

Judge Palmieri, who has been assigned to hear all cases in N. Y. Federal Court relating to the Government's consent decrees against the motion picture companies, ruled that NT "has not sustained its burden of proving that the proposed theatre would not unduly restrict competition."

The court noted that it recognizes that as a result of "express provisions of the consent judgment, the petitioner may, with court approval, acquire theatres, there is nevertheless incumbent upon it a duty to demonstrate that any such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition."

Previous petitions made by NT and Loew's Theatres for additional theatre acquisitions have been approved by the court. Only last week, Loew's Theatres, despite opposition from the Wometco Circuit, was given permission to acquire a new indoor theatre in the Miami Beach area of Florida.

He's the U. S. Type

Vienna, July 30.

The owner of a small film house in Hietzing, suburb of Vienna, must be an expert mathematician. When asked by VARIETY how business was, he answered:

"Business is 50% less than in the main season, when it was only one-fourth of the year preceding and when my house was about half full."

21 Off Canada's Newsreel Staff

Toronto, July 30.

Week-end shakeup saw the mass resignation of 21 members of Associated Screen News, this headed by Gordon Sparling, production executive since the '30's, who left Paramount Pictures in Hollywood as director of shorts to join ASN in a similar capacity. Walkout now sees Roy Tashe, top cameraman, as general manager to Murray Briskin, president of ASN. (Latter gained the post when, as executive assistant to Ben Norrish, he stepped into the presidential position when Norrish resigned). This was followed by resignation of William B. Singleton, who had been g.m. of ASN for some 30 years and has now formed his own film company in Montreal.

Briskin's new policy is to use only freelance writers and film directors in a reorganization that will have John Hynes as studio manager and Ross Pitts-Taylor as chief editor. Among the departees are Sparling; Jack Dunham, art director and his entire staff; James McCormick, director; Ray Cunnington, head of the writers' staff; and David Greene, chief cutter.

Briskin's claim is that ASN, founded here in 1920 and Canada's oldest studio in the supplying of shorts and one-time newsreels—for all American distributors—dealing with Canadian events, has "eliminated" the various departments and, henceforth, will hire freelance writers, directors and camera crews, with Briskin no longer retaining a salaried staff but engaging the afore-mentioned on a freelance basis as production commitments warrant.

WHY SPECS ARE HERE TO STAY

General Tire Vs. Show Biz

The entertainment facets of the General Tire and Rubber Co. dynasty continue to diminish.

First, earlier this year, the RKO Teleradio Pictures division pulled in its horns and shuttered its picture distribution outlets in the U.S. Company's future picture plans are clouded.

Then, last week RKO Teleradio Pictures sold out its interest in the Mutual Broadcasting System. Both the Mutual and RKO Radio Pictures operations were losing money and the Thomas F. O'Neil management teams failed in the last analysis, to turn the tide.

RKO Television, a subdivision of RKO Teleradio Pictures, the overall entertainment combine, recently deemphasized its syndication arm. Subsid now is trying hard for national network sales.

Continuing strong, though, is the o&o operation and the regional Yankee and Don Lee networks.

Here Comes the Showman

Bill Berns Parlays Jones Beach Venture Into Big Promotional Payoff

When it comes to loyalty, Bill Berns, managing director of the Jones Beach Marine Amphitheatre, is true blue to his alma mater, WRCA-TV. Berns, on leave as director of news and special events of the NBC New York flagship to work as New York State's chief exec in the Jones Beach setup, proved it last week when he set a two-week tv spot saturation campaign on the station to plug the Guy Lombardo production of "Show Boat" at the outdoor theatre.

However, Berns wasn't entirely concerned with sentiment in placing the business on WRCA-TV. Highly knowledgeable as to "editorial support" for a commercial campaign, he also worked out a deal for free plugs for the amphitheatre's sea breezes on the WRCA-TV weather shows whenever the temperature tops 85°. Additionally, Berns has gotten other sponsors, like Rheingold Beer (which bankrolls Lombardo's radio entry), Meadowbrook Bank and Security National Bank and Brass Rail Restaurants to plug "Show Boat."

Berns, in his first year in the job, prides himself on having turned in no little bit of showmanship on his strictly non-producing chores at the theatre (his position is akin to a house manager). He arranged the origination of the Ed Sullivan tv'er from the amphitheatre to kick off the season, and just over this week-end ran a special test for state officials of a film installation at the amphitheatre. 20th-Fox lent CinemaScope equipment and footage, with the picture projected onto a screen on the reverse side of the show boat. Berns believes it may be practicable to extend the operation's season with films after the live musicals have finished, and moreover, if legit production costs ever get out of hand, a film policy might serve to keep the operation in business.

Family-Type Show

Starring in CBS-TV's "Lamp Unto My Feet" Sunday (4) will be James Kirkwood Sr., Lila Lee and James Kirkwood Jr. Kirkwood Sr. and Miss Lee, former silent film stars, were married and subsequently divorced, and are Kirkwood Jr.'s parents.

CBS did a neat bit of casting on the show — but slightly imperfect — with Miss Lee and James Jr. to play brother and sister and James Sr. cast as their father.

Texaco Spec To Salute Ed Wynn

Ed Wynn has been tapped as the central figure of "Texaco Command Appearance," the Sept. 19 Texaco-sponsored spec on NBC-TV. At the same time, Texaco and packager Henry Jaffe signed Ezra Stone, the legit producer and former actor, who's done some tv work, to produce the spec.

Format for "Command Appearance," of which Texaco will sponsor three or four, calls for a "salute" to a top performer, with the cast kudosing him via recreation of highlights of his career. Show, produced in association with the American Theatre Wing, follows the format of the Wing's salutes to vet legit performers. Keenan Wynn, Ed's son, is set for the cast, while on the production end, Robert Downing is set as writer-researcher. Downing scripted the Wing's 1955 show at the Waldorf, N. Y., saluting Helen Hayes and her 50 years in show biz.

NBC-TV Daytime Goes Into '57-'58 With 80% Sellout

Indicative of the general upbeat in daytime television is the fact that come the fall, NBC-TV expects to be 80% sold out during the daytime hours. That compares with 40% of capacity last fall, and reflects a 100% increase in daytime business over the past year.

Web this week pulled in another $2,600,000 gross in daytime business to hustle the upbeat along, via orders for four alternate-week quarter-hours each from Chesebrough-Pond's and Sterling Drug. Chesebrough, via J. Walter Thompson, doubled up its its previous four alternate-week segments in "Price Is Right," "It Could Be You," "Matinee Theatre" and "Comedy Time" to give it weekly segments on each show. It's a 26-weeker starting Oct. 29. Sterling, via Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample, bought two alternate-week segments in "Price," one in "Treasure Hunt" (its first sale) and one in "Truth or Consequences," plus renewing one in "Modern Romances," all starting Oct. 1.

That the NBC estimate isn't bluesky is demonstrated by the fact that the web is already 75% sold out in daytime, with the additional 5% business anticipated for September a conservative guess. Web's strongest daytime entries in terms of sponsor lineups are "Queen for a Day," "Matinee Theatre" and "Tic Tac Dough," these representing SRO or near-SRO situations.

Web's sales upbeat accompanies a dramatic rise in daytime ratings that has brought it from an also-ran position to a strong contender for top rating honors with CBS-TV. At the same time, Columbia hasn't suffered in terms of sponsorship, pointing up tv's expanding prosperity.

Dicker Kit Cornell To Open 'Playhouse 90'

BREAKDOWN ON 3-YEAR NIELSENS

By GEORGE ROSEN

A rundown of television's so-called "special" or spectacular programs over the past three years, with particular emphasis on what happened during the past ('56-'57) season spanning Sept. through June, offers conclusive evidence of why the 60-minute and 90-minute show will continue to occupy a permanent and prominent niche on the tv rosters.

McCann-Erickson agency, which had a 25% sponsorship stake in the '57 full hour or 90-minute "specials" on the tv webs last season on behalf of such major McC-E clients as Chrysler, Swift, John Hancock Insurance and Bulova, has just completed its own survey on the history of the "specials" vs. regular half-hour programming fare. These are some of the highlights:

The 57 special telecasts last season achieved an average Nielsen rating of 34.9, as against an average Nielsen of 23.1 for the 30-minute show. Of the 57, a total of 29 were in the hour category; 28 were in 90-minute shows. (Average Nielsen on the 90-minute specs was 34.0; on the full hour shows it was 35.6). The 34.9 Nielsen for the 57 specials averaged out to 13,000,000 homes per program.

The survey points up the commercial impact of the so-called kid classics and fairy tales (which will play an important role in television programming next season). Of the Nielsen list of Top 20 specs over the past three-year span ('54-'57), six fall within that category, sharing equal top 20 honors with six Oscar-Emmy Awards Shows. (Four others were variety specials and the remaining four in other areas of programming).

In the three-year span, during which a total of 200 hour and 90-minute specials were presented, six achieved a rating of 50 or better, representing the "cream of the Nielsen crop." These break down as follows:

Peter Pan (NBC-'54)	66
Cinderella (CBS-'56)	60
Oscar Awards (NBC-'55)	57
Ringling Bros. Circus (NBC-'54)	57
Peter Pan Repeat (NBC-'55)	54
Babes In Toyland (NBC-'55)	50

Way out in front on the Nielsen's on 90-minute shows last season was CBS-TV's "Cinderella" with its 60 rating. In the No. 2 spot was Metro's "Wizard of Oz" (also on CBS-TV) with a 49, followed by the Oscar Awards with a 48; Sonja Henie with a 46; "Jack and the Beanstalk" with a 46; Ford Star Jubilee, Cole Porter musical with a 39; "High Button Shoes" with a 38; "Mr. Broadway" (George M. Cohan spec with Mickey Rooney), 37; Emmy Awards with a 36 and "Lord Don't Play Favorites," 35.

CBS-TV's "Shower of Stars" and Bob Hope on NBC virtually monopolized Top 10 Nielsen honors on the hour shows last season.

Here's the Top 10 among the 60-minute entries for '56-'57:

Jerry Lewis (NBC)	46
Shower of Stars (CBS)	43
Shower of Stars (CBS)	42
Bob Hope (NBC)	42
Bob Hope (NBC)	41
Bob Hope (NBC)	39
Shower of Stars (CBS)	38
Shower of Stars (CBS)	38
Dinah Shore (NBC)	38
Bob Hope (NBC)	37

McCann-Erickson, incidentally, will have close to a $2,000,000 (time and program) stake in two of the "big ones" during the upcoming season. These are the Standard Oil of New Jersey 75th anni spec, scheduled for Oct. 13 on NBC-TV and the "Pied Piper of Hamelin" 90-minute tinter on behalf of Liggett & Myers, starring Van Johnson, which gets a Nov. 26 showcasing, also on NBC.

CBS Won't Free Polly Until Dec.; Snafu NBC's Sat.

No sooner did NBC-TV think its Saturday night troubles were over, via the projected pacting of Polly Bergen to alternate with Dean Martin in the 9 to 9:30 spot, than they began all over again. Miss Bergen, it develops, is under exclusive contract to CBS-TV, not till September but until Dec. 31 of this year, and Columbia won't let her go any sooner.

If CBS insists that the terms of the contract be fulfilled—and as of this week it was adamant on that point, despite repeated pleas by MCA—then NBC, Liggett & Myers and Max Factor will have to start all over again in their search for a new femme vocalist to alternate with Martin. And Liggett & Myers (via McCann-Erickson) has been threatening to pull out of the deal altogether unless Factor comes up with a firm choice soon.

According to reliable sources, the mixup came about this way: NBC, L&M and Factor, first approached MCA about the availability of Miss Bergen, who's been one of the hot tv talents since her starring role in "The Helen Morgan Story" a couple of months ago. The talent agency advised them at the time that she wasn't

Sheriff Lohman Just About the Hotest TV Personality Around Chi

Chicago, July 30.

Cook County Sheriff Joseph Lohman, a former college instructor, has become a hot television personality locally in the realm of public affairs. Lohman concurrently is doing a p.a. series at WNBQ, "Shadows of the City," and a doeumentary on the local educational channel, WTTW, "Community of the Condemned." Latter is being kinnied for the national educational hookup this fall.

The WNBQ series, on alcoholism and barbiturates, is a 13-week renewal of his previous show on the station, which dealt with narcotics. Likewise, the WTTW show is a continuation of his earlier "Searchlight on Delinquency."

Last year Sheriff Lohman did a pair of shows on WBKB, one of them, "Crime and Community," a College credit course for the Roosevelt U. sociology department. The other series depicted the workings of the Sheriff's office. For several years before he was voted into public office, he had been an associate professor of Sociology at the U. of Chicago and the U. of Wisconsin.

Lohman donates whatever tv money he earns.

The initial big push of the new Paul Roberts-Bert J. Hauser management group taking over the Mutual Broadcasting System will be to sell the five-minute newscasts and the spots surrounding them, 50% of which are unsold at this date.

Roberts, soon after the consummation of the $500,00 deal for the buyout of RKO Teleradio Pictures' stock in the network, laid plans for the big sales push. He said some top news personalities would be added to the roster. Additionally, the net's sales department would be built up. Following that, Roberts, slated to take over the presidency of the net next Wednesday (7), said that other areas of programming would be examined, with a view to broaden the net's special events structure initially.

With the net now solely dependent on its affiliates, the management group not owning any o&o's, the station relations department also is due for a buildup.

The deal, in the works for weeks, was consummated Thursday (24), with the Roberts group assuming the name, good will, assets, station sponsor and program contracts of the 23-year-old radio network. The anounced station complement of the current net runs to over 400 affiliates. Billings for last year ran to over $5,000,000. This year, on the basis of biz, already in the house, billings are somewhat less.

Despite less biz this year, projected estimates varying from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000, dependent on what is included, Mutual, which ran red ink last year to the tune of $400,000, is in a better position, with its news and music format. Under the new plan, which went into effect June 2, net supplies stations with five-minute news on the hour and half-hour taking the half-hour newscasts for national sale, as well as the 20 second and eight second surrounding spots. In return affiliates on a swap basis are given the five-minute newscasts on the hour for local sales. With the exception of special events, the adventure-mystery block, the Sunday religious block and recorded music, the news shows are the backbone of the present setup.

Paring Process

Under the present format, net pared down on expenses, programming and personnel. New management appears intent on retaining present news accent and format, which insures pre-clearances, but will build from that in other areas.

Big net advertisers Miles Laboratories and Kraft Foods went along with the switch, while new advertisers were signed under the present format, including General Mo-

'Green Pastures' As Hallmark Spec

Marc Connelly's Pulitzer Prize-winning "Green Pastures" will be telecast for the first time this fall via "Hallmark Hall of Fame" on NBC-TV. Mildred Freed Alberg, exec producer of the spec series, signed rights to the play and also pacted Connelly to do the television adaptation. Folk drama is a possibility for the opening "Hallmark" on Oct. 17.

Mrs. Alberg also finalized a deal for Julie Harris to return to the series (she did "The Lark" last season) in Halmark's first original, an Easter drama by James Costigan, who adapted "Lark" and "Cradle Song" last season for Hallmark. Other Hallmark specs next season include Maurice Evans in "Dial 'M' for Murder" and a Shakespearean comedy, probably "Twelfth Night."

TV Networks Facing Tough Time? They Retort With Emphatic 'No'

The three television networks and the Television Bureau of Advertising were up in arms last week against New York Times teevee critic Jack Gould, who in a frontpaged byline story on Thursday (25) described the current selling season as "the toughest in 10 years" and insisted the networks were having their hardest time ever in selling nighttime availabilities.

Gould's story not only struck the networks' pride, but had an appreciable next-day effect on their standings in the stock market, with CBS A and B stock dipping 1⅜, RCA dropping ¼ and AB-PT common losing ⅜. All but RCA made strong recoveries next day. Curiously, in describing the stock dips, the Times business section attributed them blandly to "reports circulated that television networks were up against their hardest time-selling problem in a decade," but with no specific reference to the Gou d story.

The story, which cited a potential loss of $65,000,000 to $95,000,000 in unsold evening time via 19 half-hour periods still open, drew an immediate rebuttal from CBS v.p. in charge of sales administration, Bill Hylan, who countered with the statement that "CBS Television is in a more sold-out position than it was at this time last year" in fall availabilities in nighttime. Soon after the CBS statement was issued, TvB cited rising revenues and asked why the Times hasn't frontpaged stories on declining ad revenues and circulation in the newspaper field. Afterwards, ABC-TV veep Oliver Treyz issued a statement observing that with ABC's growth, Gould had been confusing a "competitive with a soft market."

Gould piece was in part based on last week's VARIETY wrapup on availabilities, with Gould quoting VARIETY on the fact that "the panic button is beginning to ring at the networks." The VARIETY piece, however, was a straight rundown on availabilities, with no comparisons to previous years and without reference to the overall impact on the availabilities on overall network revenues.

While the network and TvB statements attacked Gould's premise, the webs failed to challenge him on time costs, which he listed as $3,500,000 to $5,000,000 on the minimum number of required stations for a half-hour. Actually, the CBS minimum required "must buy" lineup is $48,000 per half-hour, or just short of $2,500,000 for 52 weeks prior to discounts. In projecting this to cover 19 half-hours available, correct total would have been $47,500,000, rather than the $65,000,000 to $95,000,000 figure.

But the networks were more interested in countering the gener-

NBC-TV Sez 'Price' Is Right for Mon.

"The Price Is Right" is now definitely set as NBC-TV's Monday at 7:30 entry for the fall, and "My Friend Flicka," which had loomed as the Monday night entry in "Price's" stead, is set to go on Sundays at 6:30 in September.

"Price" was firmed up last week when NBC okayed Speidel's order for alternate-week sponsorship in the Monday spot. Earlier, NBC and Speidel had been working out a deal under which the watchband outfit would have dropped "Price" and moved into the Saturday at 10 time as alternate-week sponsor with Pharmaceuticals Inc. on "What's It For?"

In the middle of the negotiations, Pharmaceuticals completed the purchase of the J. B. Williams Co., longtime manufacturer of men's toiletries and shave cream. Pharmaceuticals then ruled out any share-sponsorship arrangement, feeling it now needs the time to advertise the Williams line as well as its own products. On that basis, NBC okayed the Monday night deal for Speidel, with half of "Price" now remaining to be sold. As for "Flicka," there's no sponsorship in sight yet.

Philip Morris Extends Mike Wallace Option

Mike Wallace has been picked up for six weeks beyond the initial 20-week ABC-TV contract by Philip Morris. Show is good, under the option pickup, until the middle of October.

Cig bankroller, it is said, was moved to take the stanza in order to get the full benefit of a 26-discount plan from the network. Show, a half-hour interview session, is seen at 10 p.m. Sundays.

Producer Ted Yates is off to the Coast this week to line up more interviewees for Wallace.

'Beat the Clock' Stripped for Aft.; CBS Axes 'Brooks'

CBS-TV is taking a leaf from NBC's increasingly successful daytime book, and starting Sept. 16, is replacing "Our Miss Brooks" with a stripped version of "Beat the Clock" in the 2 to 2:30 p.m. weekday period. It's CBS' first application of the audience-participation format to its daytime schedule in some years, a format which NBC of late has been using with increasing success via "Price Is Right," "Tic Tac Dough," "It Could Be You," "Queen for a Day," "Bride & Groom," etc.

Reason for the cancellation of "Brooks" is not so much a matter of dissatisfaction with the film reruns (which looked to be half-sold for the fall, with sales accelerating of late) as unhappiness over the fact that the films will be somewhere around their fifth or sixth rerun by fall. CBS anticipates no trouble in switching the "Brooks" clients over to "Clock."

As for "Clock," the Goodson-Todman package seems to have nine lives. Cancelled at the end of last season by Sylvania, it got a 1956 summertime reprieve via Pharma-Craft. After it looked as if it would be off for the fall, Hazel Bishop came to the rescue. With Bishop cancelling it out now as a nighttime stanza, CBS picked it up for the daytime run. Bud Collyer continues as emcee.

Siegel's Manifold Status at ABC-TV

Simon B. Siegel, dually the treasurer of American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres Inc. and its division American Broadcasting Co., also adds to his duties those of coordinator between ABC's owned & operated tv stations and the network. Siegel, since he does not directly represent the activities of the tv network, is apparently considered by Leonard H. Goldenson, prexy of AB-PT and acting boss of ABC, to be in an objective position to handle any conflicts arising between ABC-TV and the o&o's.

The additional duties raise even further Siegel's importance in the company's tv operation. As ABC treasurer, he handles the financial policy matters for the network and the o&o's, with veeps Jason Rabinovitz of ABC-TV and Steve Riddleberger of ABC Radio Network reporting to him. As treasurer of AB-PT, he holds a similarly strong position in the theatrical operation.

In his new duties, it was explained, he will arbitrate "certain conflict of interests" that will "always" exist between the network and the o&o's. One problem, for example, is the release of time periods to the ABC stations that are not in network option time. Regulation non-owned affiliates do not have to clear, but the problem has never been fully clarified among o&o's.

Meantime, search continues for a salesman to coordinate activities for the owned-operated tv stations. This post is separate from the duties to be handled through Siegel.

Danger—'Ranger' at Work

Columbia, S.C., July 30.

The Lone Ranger, who has a clean record of vanquished Western foes, has run into more trouble down South than a missionary in darkest Africa.

The television hero fell off his horse, Silver, during a personal appearance in Winston-Salem, N.C. and broke his ankle.

The next couple of performances were staged from an iron steed, his trusty automobile.

Plagued throughout the Dixie jaunty with too few "faithful companions" at the boxoffice, he had two shows washed out completely by heavy rains here.

Later, he was arrested in a Wake County, N.C. speed trap doing 70 in a 55-mile-per-hour zone.

Highway patrolman said the tv cowboy, whose real name is Clayton Moore, was headed for the Raleigh, N.C. fair grounds and a show when they cut him off at the pass.

Cleveland Takes FM For a Ride

Transit System in Experimental Tieup With WERE For Info and Entertainment

Cleveland, July 30.

Modified transit radio broadcasting began here (25) with an experimental tieup between Cleveland Transit System and WERE-FM.

With loudspeakers installed at the waiting platforms for rapid transit trains at the Cleveland Union Terminal main stop, CTS said it is seeking to "provide to its patrons entertainment and information that automobile riders are now getting in their car radios. Weather, news and sports," said Ray Turk, CTS publicity director, "will be offered along with music on the FM outlets. Also, this will provide our dispatchers with loud speakers to notify car riders of breakdowns in service or delays."

CTS said it approached WERE since that indie had the "baseball games and we feel everyone is interested in the outcome of the Indians. If the baseball team were in a hot race, such information would be welcome."

Turk added that WERE put in the initial installation, and "if this is successful we will extend it to our other rapid stops along the system."

Turk debunked accusations that CTS will have a "captive audience" and pointed out that the line's dispatchers will have full control of "turning on and off the broadcasts at any time to provide waiting patrons with information about delays in service. Furthermore, since there is a maximum of only 10 minutes wait between trains,

Out-Foxing the Fox

Ottawa, July 30.

Farmer Harold Martyn of Sparta, a village in southwestern Ont., has 1,500 turkeys and spent most of his time trying to prevent foxes from killing his birds by the score. He heard foxes feared human sounds, installed three radios and five loudspeakers on the farm and now the birds, unmolested by the foxes, go to sleep each night to rock 'n' roll, commercials and the news via audio.

The foxes stay away, the turkeys don't seem to mind, farmer Martyn likes it and he has no neighbors close enough to listen.

'Maverick's' Gotta Make It by Jan. 1 Or Kaiser Vamps

Hollywood, July 30.

Kaiser bought the hour-long "Maverick" series produced by Warner Bros. tv and to be seen on ABC-TV next season with the strict proviso that if the show doesn't make the grade rating-wise, it can drop it around first of the year, it was learned.

Kaiser originally wanted a flock of "new" old feature films for the Sunday night slot, but when the web couldn't land them, it and WB began pushing "Maverick" for that slot. Kaiser was told it would get the same rating as a "prestige" show, and pointed to WB's "Cheyenne" which topped such stars as Milton Berle and Bob Hope. Kaiser was skeptical, but finally agreed to sign for the deal on the basis that it either picks up a good rating before the first of the year, or faces sudden death. Meanwhile Pat Weaver was pacted by Kaiser as tv consultant on the series.

WB, incidentally, is hunting for another lead to star with James Garner in the series.

'Wizard of Oz' In Xmas Repeat

"Wizard of Oz" will be repeated by CBS-TV around Christmas time as a one-shot spec. Web hasn't started peddling the Metro feature yet for sponsorship, but doesn't anticipate any selling problem in light of "Wizard's" 49 Nielsen rating the first time around last November as the "Ford Star Jubilee" spec entry.

CBS has the Judy Garland starrer under a two-year, two-run deal, the Ford showing having been the first run. Following the run this Christmas, pic reverts to Metro. It was the only Metro pre-'48 pic held back from syndicated sale through MGM-TV, except for those which the studio couldn't clear, and the only Metro pic shown on a network basis thus far.

MILES' $1,000,000 RADIO BUY ON CBS

Miles Laboratories is returning to CBS Radio in the fall after a three-year absence with a $1,000,000 gross chunk of business. Miles is buying two daytime five-minute news strips, at noon to 12:05 and 2 to 2:05 p.m. cross-the-board over a 52-week period starting Sept. 2.

Miles deal was the lion's share of $2,000,000 in new business and renewals signed by CBS last week. In other buys, Look mag bought two more "Impact Plan" segments, while Bristol-Myers renewed its 45 minutes weekly of "Arthur Godfrey Time" for 52 weeks.

Writers' Worst Enemy—Ennui

Hollywood, July 30.

Is ennui an occupational hazard in the typewriter trade?

The pattern is beginning to emerge. Time and time again, the boys who sit hunched over a typewriter regularly writing about the same tv characters eventually become fed up with their brain children. They're just plain tired—tired of the characters, of the actors who portray them, of the situations and perhaps even of the medium.

To cite a few instances of recent memory, called up in retrospect when Nat Hiken told Phil Silvers (Bilco), "I'm getting out. It doesn't come easy any more and the fun is gone." It was Hiken who created "Bilko" and his gold-bricking friends, then went on to write and produce it for two seasons and moved it high up the rating ladder. It is highly speculative that Silvers can keep on that high standard without the creative savvy of Hiken. Old timers in radio will recall that Hiken is a Coast product, having in the early days of KFWB written and produced "The Grouch Club" which starred Jack Lescoulie, now one of tv's top announcer-emcees.

Reaching back not quite that far were the fed-up cases of Don Quinn and Cy Howard. The latter got so down on "My Friend Irma" that he not only left the writing chore to others, but left the country to get as far away from Irma (Marie Wilson?) as he could. Either the show needed his comedy touch or else the home viewers got tired of it for it soon after went into eclipse.

Quinn, one of the brighter wits, toiled for years on "Fibber McGee & Molly" and even owned a piece of it with Jim and Marian Jordan. But it all palled on him after a dozen or more years and he withdrew gracefully and turned the assignment over to his writing partner, Phil Leslie. "The McGees" lasted longer in radio than any other family comedy and put the Jordans on easy street. Quinn, more intellectual than most joke or story line writers, raised his literary sights and created "The Halls of Ivy," which had Ronald Colman cast as a college prof. It did well for a while and then passed on but Quinn never went back to "The McGee's."

Of more recent vintage is Irv Brecher's retreat from "The People's Choice." He created it for Jackie Cooper, got it off the ground and is safe for next season but Brecher had it and will retain only a proprietary interest and go on to develop some new and fresh to intrigue his continuing interest. It happened before to Brecher when he walked away from another creation of his, "The Life of Riley." It put Willian Bendix on high ground and dropped Jackie Gleason with a thud.

Writers who move around like a Bekins van more often than not tire of their chores to search for something more challenging and fresh. Going to the same well year in and out dries out the writer more so than the bucket on the long rope. It's just as easy to get fed up on an unchanging diet of quail under glass.

AFTRA'S GANGUP ON PAY-TV

Is Radio 'Dull & Dreary'?

San Francisco, July 30.

National convention of American Federation of Television-Radio Artists erupted in angry dispute here before first gavel was banged when president Frank Nelson and exec secretary Donald Conaway seemingly blasted "the dull and dreary state" of radio and blasted away at pay-tv.

Statements were made at a long press conference held before convention's opening day—press conference was considered necessary, apparently, because all convention sessions were closed.

Conaway blasted at "vested movie interests" for pushing pay-tv and said "once they get control they'll broadcast just what they please—and they've already indicated it will be old movies."

When Nelson was asked if the possibility that AFTRA might lose jurisdiction over pay-tv workers wasn't a prime influence in his thinking, he insisted "that never crossed our minds—no, never."

Conaway hinted the convention might create a fund "to carry our message to the American people and have Congress put a stop to this nonsense."

He said the FCC had "heretobefore acted with the guts of a rabbit" on pay-tv and advocated a "national referendum" on the issue because "the air belongs to all the people. . . ."

"If they can do it in tv, they can do it in other things," said Conaway, and darkly brought up the seemingly remote possibility of Communist domination via pay-tv.

Reaction on Conaway's remarks came from two separate groups within the union. Factions of the Los Angeles, Chicago and Frisco locals were not—and are not—so bitterly opposed to pay-tv as Conaway seemed to indicate and some delegates actually favor it. This group considered Conaway offbase.

Radio performers took issue with Conaway on the basis of his "dull and dreary" remark. Frisco members, especially, asked, in effect, "how can we go to the radio nets and stations and demand pay raises if radio is as bad as he paints it?"

Following day Irv Philips, general manager of KYA, Frisco, and an exec of the Bay Area Independent Broadcasters Association, attacked Conaway's statement publicly. Said Phillips:

"On behalf of the thousands of talented radio artists who are members of his union, Mr. Conaway's denouncement of radio as 'degenerated' is a direct reflection on the persons he represents . . . if his unfortunate usage of the word expresses his opinion of radio as a medium in which so many of his members earn a livelihood, then some form of apology is certainly in order."

At week's end, Conaway insisted he was "misunderstood," explained he simply was referring to "our members' employment opportunities in radio—and from that standpoint, radio is dull and uninteresting."

URGES CONGRESS TO TAKE OVER

By BILL STEIF

San Francisco, July 30.

The American Federation of Television-Radio Artists went on record at its convention here last weekend against pay-tv-again. Only this time it urged Congress, according to national exec secretary Donold Conaway, "immediately to take over pay-tv, whether the Zenith form of subscription tv or the Skiatron form of closed-circuit."

Intent of the resolution, said Conaway, is that Congress should "formulate legislation with a view to regulation."

This was a reaffirmation of the stand AFTRA took at its Seattle convention two years ago, except the current resolution carries a greater note of urgency.

Conaway said the resolution was also directed at "taking away from any one agency" (obviously, the Federal Communications Commission) the power to direct pay-tv, and he said copies of the resolution would be sent to all interested congressmen.

He added the subject undoubtedly would come up at the forthcoming AFL-CIO convention.

The resolution, said Conaway, was voted unanimously—usual procedure at a union convention with closed sessions as this was. But he said "a full, complete discussion from both sides" was had before the vote, and president Frank Nelson added that "many people who might have been for or against pay-tv decided this (resolution) was the answer."

Anti-pay-tv resolution reads:

"Be it resolved that the convention strongly recommends to labor, industry and the U. S. Congress that immediate and thorough investigation of all proposed systems of pay-tv and their present and future impacts on the people of the U.S. be instigated by proper govern-

NBC's Got a Real Estate Problem; 'Home' Studio, Colonial Theatre Idle

The block-long NBC-TV studios on Columbus Ave. and W. 67th St. in New York will be empty for the first time in years starting Aug. 12 when "Home" goes off the air and the facilities of WRCA-TV, the NBC flagship, are moved back into the RCA Bldg.'s third floor. Studio, owned by RKO Teleradio and on lease to NBC, will remain idle for a while, with the alternate possibilities that NBC will take over the building for network shows or will make it its central origination point for live commercials.

There's also a slight possibility of a sublease deal, but no definite prospects yet. NBC leased the building, which houses three large studios and a couple of small ones plus extensive office space, in January of 1953 from WOR-TV, which had built it on property owned by the Macy's Pension Fund. NBC picked up a two-year option on the lease last November, leaving a year and a half to go on the leasehold.

In a complicated bookkeeping transaction, the network turned the studios over to WRCA-TV, which then rented one of the studios back to the web for the "Home" show. When "Home" was cancelled, the load became too heavy for the station to carry on its books and the studio was turned back to the network. Web doesn't have any shows to put in the studio—in fact is closing down the Colonial Theatre color studios as well—but may find a use for them later. Meanwhile, under consideration is conversion of the building to a commercials studio to ease the strain on NBC's Brooklyn color studios and other origination points.

As for WRCA-TV, the move back to the RCA Bldg.'s third floor comes as something of a relief, since station execs were on a constant taxicab shuttle back and forth between the offices and the 67th St. studio.

Meanwhile, the web is planning to reopen its Century Theatre in N. Y. for black-and-white shows only. No opening date set yet, and no program assignment made for the theatre.

'No Parking'—Mayer

San Francisco, July 30.

Louis B. Mayer breezed into Frisco just about time AFTRA convention, which went on record against pay-tv, got under way. Mayer praised pay-tv, said it would give film industry new life and added:

"There will be no parking or traffic problems. Just put your money in the slot at home and sit back and enjoy good pictures."

100, Count 'Em, 100 'Specials' on NBC Roster for '57-'58

A minimum of 100 "specials," ranging from half-hour to two-hour presentations, will be telecast by NBC-TV in the coming year. The total includes "Wide Wide World" and "Omnibus," which together account for 38 shows, but even excluding these and other possible additional entries, the NBC total comes to an alltime high.

Spec lineup, most of which has been known to the trade, was laid out in detail at a press conference Monday (29) at which NBC prez Bob Sarnoff, exec v.p. Bob Kintner and the various producers involved. Network turned out an actual schedule for the 100 specs (though some properties for the schedule weren't completely set) and additionally listed other definite entries

Chi's TV Strategy on 10 to 11 P.M.: It Fetches WBBM $2,000,000 a Year

Chicago, July 30.

Rating changes over the past four years in one of the prime local periods gives no comfort to the school of thought which holds that any program will build an audience if it's kept on long enough. The situation with the 10-11 weeknight hour here gives credence to the argument on the one hand and defies it on the other.

In that highly saleable post-network-time period, at least two of the Chicago stations have virtually stayed pat with their programming since 1953. A check of the ARB averages over the course reveals that one of the stations has climbed markedly while the other has tailspinned. To the gainer, CBS' WBBM-TV, the hour is now worth some $2,000,000 per year in gross billings.

Both WBBM-TV and the NBC station, WNBQ, are vying for ratings in the hour with the something-for-everyone plan. The CBS station mounted its quartet of 15-minute strips in May of 1953 to compete with WNBQ, the NBC o&o, whose lineup then dominated the ratings. WNBQ was then purveying short segs of weather, household hints, news, sports, va-

Ecko Shifts Billings To 'Breakfast Club'

Chicago, July 30.

With ABC's morning soaper block going off the air this fall, Ecko Products Co. is shifting all its network radio money to "Breakfast Club." New contract, which runs from Sept. 30 to Dec. 20, involves a purchase of four five-minute segments per week for the first three weeks and on a day for the following nine weeks.

"Breakfast Club" also got a four-week renewal from Accent for one five-minute seg per week.

Cates Preps TV Spec on Satchmo; Concert Format

An hourlong spectacular starring Louis Armstrong and woven about his career is in the works. Major portion of the show, which is being prepped by NBC producer Joe Cates and Associated Booking Corp. exec Ernie Anderson, would front Satchmo with a large symphony orch a la his Lewisohn Stadium concert of a couple of years ago and a subsequent longhair engagement in London.

Project is still in the formative stage, but Cates envisions the symphony group comprising members of the Symphony of the Air, with Leonard Bernstein conducting. A second portion would be a "jazz profile" of Satchmo, tracing his life from his Storyville beginnings to his longtime preeminence as a jazz great. Johnny Mercer has been approached by Anderson to write the profile and has expressed interest in doing it.

Third portion would involve top jazz guests, including Ella Fitzgerald, working with Armstrong. His All-Stars, with whom he tours,

AFTRA Convention Notes

San Francisco, July 30.

Claude McCue, AFTRA's western rep, was delayed in getting to Frisco convention because of his wife's illness.

The Boston local's report was delivered by tape recorder. Boston's exec secretary, Bob Segal, who's also a lawyer, taped the report in London, where he's attending the American Bar Association convention.

Ted De Corsia, Hollywood delegate was registering Hollywood delegates in a room at the Sheraton-Palace and looked up to see a live tv set featuring a film he'd made 18 years ago.

Ethel Barrymore Colt greeted New York delegates.

Bill Gaxton, a Frisco native, got great play in the local press—and was asked to autograph a scrapbook about himself which started with a picture showing him at the age of four.

Evelyn Eisenstadt was a non-delegate guest out of Washington, D.C., representing the Voice of America.

Champion convention-goer was Nellie Booth, St. Louis exec secretary and grandniece of Edwin Booth. It was her 20th out of 20 conventions. She got an extra kick when she wandered into the Sheraton-Palace's Happy Valley bar and discovered framed pictures of both herself and her grand-uncle on the walls.

* * *

Frisco AFTRA members delivered hospitality baskets to the delegates' rooms. When Barbara Franklin delivered her basket to one room, the delegate, his back to the door, shouted, "Come on in." She did—and discovered the delegate naked as a jaybird.

Marni Nixon, Los Angeles delegate, had an emergency appendectomy the night before the convention was to open and couldn't make it.

* * *

One radio-TV fan showed up with a new gimmick. Instead of an autograph book, she brought along a motion picture camera, had a field day with the likes of Conrad Nagel, Elizabeth Morgan, Will Wright, Vicki Vola, Bud Collyer, Alan Bunce, Virginia Payne, Sidney Blackmer, Peggy Wood, Alice Frost, Ken Carpenter and Del Sharbutt.

Convention, as has been conventional, ran behind schedule almost from the first minute, necessitating cancellation of a boat-ride on Frisco Bay and a long final session lasting well into Sunday (28).

Impromptu entertainment at convention ball in Sheraton-Palace's Gold Ballroom (250 attending) included songs, dances and comedy routines by Ethel Barrymore Colt (New York), Dave Baxter (Frisco), Fred Hanson (Los Angeles), Sid Marion (Hollywood) and Gil Shown (Hollywood). Marion induced Frisco local's prexy, Wanda Ramey, to join him for cutups.

Assignment of Dottie Davis, secretary in Frisco local, was to take national counsel Mort Becker's son to zoo.

Boston delegate Jack Chase got a warm welcome—Boston fire chief had wired Frisco fire chief of Chase's imminent arrival, so Chase was met by fire car, shown around Frisco.

Bullfights Now Intrigue TV, Too

Hollywood, July 30.

Touchy subject of bullfighting, acceptable as feature film fare only in recent years, may form the basis of a network tv show next season.

CBS "Playhouse 90" reportedly is interested in the property "The Day Manolete Was Killed," which originated as a special disk album written and narrated by bullfight expert Barnaby Conrad. It was produced by Josh Moss for Audio-Fidelity Records, but neither would figure in a tv adaptation.

Project, it's understood, has been submitted to "90" and has been earmarked for consideration by producer Martin Manulis on his return from vacation early in August. This, of course, does not mean that a deal is in the works, but the project has overcome the first hurdles by being passed on to Manulis for study.

Understood that "Manolete" would be considerably built up for its projected television showcasing.

Stag Beer to Weiss

Chicago, July 30.

VARIETY - ARB City-By-City Syndicated Film Chart

VARIETY'S weekly chart of city-by-city ratings of syndicated and national spot film covers 40 to 60 cities reported by American Research Bureau on a monthly basis. Cities will be rotated each week, with the 10 top-rated film shows listed in each case, and their competition shown opposite. All ratings are furnished by ARB, based on the latest reports.

This VARIETY chart represents a gathering of all pertinent information about film in each market, which can be used by distributors, agencies, stations and clients as an aid in determining the effectiveness of a filmed show in the specific market. Attention should be paid to time—day and time factors, since sets-in-use and audience composition vary according to time slot, i.e., a Saturday afternoon children's show, with a low rating, may have a large share and an audience composed largely of children, with corresponding results for the sponsor aiming at the children's market. Abbreviations and symbols are as follows: (Adv), adventure; (Ch), children's; (Co), comedy; (Dr), drama; (Doc), documentary; (Mus), musical; (Myst), mystery; (Q), quiz; (Sp), sports; (W), western; (Wom), women's. Numbered symbols next to station call letters represent the station's channel; all channels above 13 are UHF. Those ad agencies listed as distributors rep the national sponsor from whom the film is aired.

Metro TV: 'Gotta See Joe Vogel'

Metro-Tv, usually a free-wheeling, articulate division of Loew's, now has the wraps on, keeping quiet on sales, projects and plans. All info is being funnelled to the embattled prez Joseph R. Vogel for ammunition against the dissident group, in preparation for the special stockholders meeting on Sept. 12.

Library sales are being ticked off week by week, it's known, but the grand gross totals neighboring over $45,000,000 and with what stations the deals were made are being saved for an impressive rundown to stockholders.

Ted Bates Wants Creative Finger In Telepix Pie, Hires Bob Welch

Ted Bates, in a move designed to bring a closer liaison between agency, sponsor and telefilm producer, and to lend a creative hand in telefilm production, is engaged in a pilot project of its own.

Agency has hired Robert L. Welch, former producer-writer at Paramount Pictures with a long list of motion picture credits, to work in conjunction with Metro TV on the production of "The Thin Man" series, slated for a fall start on NBC-TV Friday nights at 9:30 p.m., with client Colgate-Palmolive picking up the tab.

Unusual move by agency, which may set the pattern for other clients in the future, stems from feeling that something new should be tried to insure that a top show is brought in by an outside packager, in this case Metro TV. In most cases, the current practice is to assign a so-called agency supervisor to a show, a man with little creative background, who may pinpoint some faults, act as a liaison in many respect, but whose creative contribution virtually is nil.

Instead of following the routine route, Bates hired Welch, who at Paramount Pictures produced the Bob Hope "Paleface," "Son of Paleface," and "Sorrowful Jones." Welch, whose background also includes an association with NBC and Young & Rubicam," also produced the Bing Crosby pictures "Mr. Music" and "Top of the Morning."

Agency denied making the move because Colgate-Palmolive has a residual interest of up to $10,000 per episode in the series. Telefilm buy from agency's viewpoint represents an important investment in program and time, as well as an important client, and the residual interests are unimportant as compared to bringing in a top 10 network entry.

WCBS-TV Buys 40 Post-'48 Pix

WCBS-TV, the CBS flagship in New York and one of the most heavily-stocked stations in the country with feature films, this week aded another 100 pictures to its backlog, with 40 of the new entries in the post-'48 category. Feature purchases, made from Associated Artists Productions, United Artists and a new firm called National TV Station Representatives Inc., bring the station's total backlog to over 1,300 features.

The 28 UA films, out of the new UA package including "Moulin Rouge" and "African Queen," and 12 National TV Station Rep entries, are all post-'48 films. Latter group includes some British-made entries and the rest independent productions, with release dates from 1954 up to the present. The remaining 60 films are Warner Bros. pre-'48 pix which hadn't previously been sold in the N.Y. market.

Guild's 'Sea' Sales

Guild Films sold nine more cities on "Kingdom of the Sea" in the first two weeks of July.

Sales were made to WRC-TV, Washington; WWJ-TV, Cleveland; WGR-TV, Buffalo and WLW-A, Atlanta. Other pacts were firmed in San Antonio, Toledo, Indianapolis, Champaign, Ill., Shreveport, La.

MCA TV Goes Espanol

MCA TV, which to this date has shied away from other than the English-speaking foreign market, is prepping to make the plunge into Spanish-speaking market. It is dubbing "Dragnet" in Spanish and is mulling whether to do "Alfred Hitchcock Presents" next.

Reportedly, MCA TV also is eyeing Italian market closely, considered one of the big growth areas on the Continent, for possible telefilm sales.

'Annie Oakley's' Bosco Spread At $2,340,000 Cost

"Annie Oakley" maintained its reputation as the top national spot moneymaker in the vidfilm field last week by landing Bosco (Corn Products Refining Co.) as an alternate-week bankroller in a 62-market, $2,340,000 time & talent deal. Bosco, which has been spotting its coin mainly in local kiddie and cartoon shows, is in for a 52-week ride on the CBS Television Film Sales series.

Under the deal, Bosco buys the show as a package—including the program, six one-minute commercials by star Gail Davis, endorsements and merchandising campaigns, prints at no extra cost and free shipping charges. Deal was set through Donahue & Coe agency, with Bosco's alternate-week sponsorship to start in fall.

Bosco will alternate with Continental Baking Co., which has had the show on a skip-week basis since January of 1956. Bosco is replacing General Foods, which took the series on a summer-only deal. GF in turn had replaced Carnation Milk, which had alternated with Continental and earlier with Canada Dry, which preceded Continental as a sponsor. Most of the sponsorship during the past year has been of reruns of the original 52 episodes filmed by Flying A Productions.

ARB K.C. STUDY TIPS PRACTICES

The inflated character of feature film ratings, with the audience measured during the regular rating week when the top pix are scheduled, usually coupled with ad-promotion support, is evident in one of the initial American Research Bureau's "One Week-Four Week" reports, done in Kansas City.

The report, which shows a viewer dip ranging up to 70% in non-rating weeks for feature films, compared to rating week viewing, has a significance that stretches across the country. For in market after market, the big ones from the Metro, Warners, 20th-Fox and Columbia libraries, to mention the major packages, usually are shown during the ARB rating week. It's long been asked what happens to the audiences when the "B," non-star value pix hit the screen, the bottom of the barrel stuff, or the just so-so pix.

While what happened in Kansas City during June, the month when the ARB "One Week-Four Week" report was taken may not be duplicated as dramatically in other markets, where competitive factors and pix product may be different, it surely serves as an indice.

In Kansas City, ARB under its new requested service plan placed diaries in homes to cover a four week span, rather than the regular one-week. Here's what happened over the four week span Sunday nights, from 10 to 10:30 p.m. During rating week, WDAF with its 9:30 Theatre telecasting "Dodge City," starring Errol Flynn and Olivia DeHaviland, drew a neat 12.6 for the time slot. "Whirlybirds" topped it with 14.5 over KCMO and Mike Wallace over WMBC ran third with 10.4.

With lesser movies slotted the remainder of the three weeks, the rating picture for the market during that time slot changed considerably. Over the course of four weeks, WDAF's feature show 9:30 Theatre averaged only a 6.0 in the 10 to 10:30 p.m. Sunday time slot, while "Whirlybirds" hit a 17.6 and Mike Wallace a 9.9, putting theatricals third rather than a close second in the market.

But the drop is even more dramatic when the big 12.6 for "Dodge City" is not averaged in over the four week period. Without the Errol Flynn-Olivia DeHaviland starrer, WDAF's three week average slumps to a 3.9 ARB average, a weak third in the field, with "Whirlybirds" in the three week span hitting 18.6 on KCMO and Mike Wallace on KMBC registering 9.7.

In the never ending rating competition between syndicated half-hours and theatricals, the Kansas City report shows that "Whirlybirds" delivered a 21% higher ratings in non-rating weeks, while movies delivered 70% lower ratings.

The titles of the three features for the regular non-rating weeks were as follows: "Broadway Hostess," starring Winnie Shaw and Genevive Tobin, June 9; "Stingaree," Richard Dix, Irene Dunn, June 16; and "Heart of the North," Dick Foran, June 23.

WRGB-TV Plans Using Features Vice 'Tonight'

WRGB-TV, Schenectady, one of NBC-TV's oldest and steadfast affiliates, may drop "Tonight" in the fall in favor of feature films. Station just bought 185 features from Screen Gems and plans to use them for late-night showing.

The 185 films comprise the three Screen Gems packages, "Hollywood Premiere Parade," "Hollywood Mystery Parade" and "Hollywood Value Parade."

Teleblurb Industry Decries Payola, Vegas Cuffoed (Including Losses)

Hollywood, July 30.

Tailor-Made Laughs

"Phil Silvers Show" producer Ed Montague has decided to get his laughtrack from the ranks of the professionals. Until last year, the Silvers show had been shot before a studio audience, obviating the need for a special laughtrack. However, last year, production technique changed from a multi-camera setup to a motion picture technique, and the studio audience was eliminated. Laughtrack was subsequently dubbed in at a weekly screening at the International Theatre.

Starting this week, however, the site of the laughtrack screenings will be changed. CBS has moved $8,000 worth of equipment into the post theatre at Fort Jay on Governor's Island in N.Y. and will dub laughtracks from an all-soldier audience. Montague weels that the GIs are quicker on the uptake on the Silvers segment, and besides, it's a public service in the form of entertainment for the troops.

The old payola has reared its head in the teleblurb industry.

Thus far, complaints about the practice have been largely sotto voce, but there's no doubt that local firms are feeling the pressure of admen for "favors" in channeling business their way. Most of the commercial producers in Hollywood are critical of the practice, which they claim originated in New York and is spreading with every order placed.

There's been no indication of cash changing hands, but cars have been bought, hotel bills (and attendant pleasures) "comped," and trips to Las Vegas and other funspots, as well as yachting parties, bankrolled by the commercial producer.

The complainers, and there are many, must obviously remain nameless, but few will deny that an order for a one-minute filmed commercial can be contracted for a price without the added expense in landing the business. One producer of commercials admitted it cost his company $2,500 in "favors" to land a contract for $15,000. One case was reported of a Jaguar being parked in front of an adman's home after a large order was placed but the deal fell through and the car was repossessed. Most of the commercials handled by agency men for their clients are put out for bids and not necessarily is the low bid accepted if the largesse is inviting enough.

One producer recounts a negotiation with a 15-percenter that involved a cash kick-back. When the price was quoted to the adman, he replied with a sly wink, "couldn't we raise that $2,000?" But, claim old timers in the business of making those interrupting messages of the sponsor, that while the practice still persists, it's not like it was in the early days of tv when the sponsor didn't know a spool of film from a frat pin. "But he's wising up," said one, "and they've got to be careful about tagging on those extra costs."

One producer was quick to remark, "of course there are honest deals in which a dinner tab may be the only outlay but on the bigger transactions involving a series of commercials running to better than $25,000 the producer takes it upon himself to reward the agency man who puts through the order. He might want a repeat order and a competitor more generous with the company's funds could cut in."

To the commercial producer it is a necessary evil but many of them decry the easy proximity of Las Vegas, which seems to carry more lure than a refrigerator, washing machine, color tv set or other merchandise in lieu of cash. The hotel tag they gladly receipt but those extras ("never let your client lose at the tables; your 'winnings' cover his losses").

Official's 30-Day Sale Sprint Brings $1,350,000 Sales

Official Films, which reentered the first-run syndication market recently, has ticked off $1,350,000 in advance sales on three properties in the past 30 days.

The three skeins involved are "Decoy," being lensed in New York by Pyramid Productions, "Sword of Freedom," out of the Hanna Weinstein Sapphire, Ltd., telefilmery, and "The Big Story," another Pyramid production.

Significant factor in the Official 30-day sales sprint is that the $1,350,000 inked comes solely from stations, rather than regional or local advertisers, indicative of the station buying strength in the current first-run syndication market.

Apparently, station buying power is running parallel with the regional and local advertising buying upswing of many first-run properties. ABC Film Syndication, to cite one example, has rung up sizable sales on "26 Men" in a short period, selling virtually solely to advertisers.

The pre-production sales on "Decoy" in 10 key cities racked up about $600,000. DuMont's purchase in New York and Washington of "Sword of Freedom" and "Big Story," coupled with the purchase of the two skeins by Paramount's KTLA, in Los Angeles, as well as the sale of the Edmund Purdom "Sword" starrer in England, accounts for another $750,000.

Ten markets buying "Decoy" include WPIX, New York; WGN, Chicago; KTTV, Los Angeles; WBZ, Boston; KDKA, Pittsburgh, WPFH, Philadelphia; KPIX, San Francisco; KYW, Cleveland; KING, Seattle; and WTIC, Hartford.

Brewers Fall in Love With 'State Trooper'

The brewers, heavy syndication spenders, appear to be going strong for MCA TV's "State Trooper," now going into second year production.

C. Schmidt & Sons renewed in six Eastern markets for another 52 weeks, beginning January, 1958. Recently, Falstaff Brewing renewed in upward of 70 markets, representing one of the largest regional deals, if not the largest, in the field. Six Schmidt markets take in Pennsylvania, Connecticut and Maine. Al Paul, Lefton Co., of Philadelphia, was the agency.

U.S. Telepix Big In Canadian Markets

A hefty rise in the sale of American telefilms in Canada over the past three or four years is reported by Nat V. Donato, ABC Film Syndication Canadian representative upon his return following a two week sales trip covering six markets from Vancouver to Toronto.

Donato estimates that sales in 1956 and 1957 are about 60 to 70% greater than those in 1954. While on the trip, Donato sold 11 markets: "The Three Musketeers," CBUT, Vancouver, and CBWT, Winnipeg; "The Playhouse," CGQC, Saskatoon, and CKCK-TV, Regina; and "Douglas Fairbanks, Jr. Presents", to Delnor Frozen Foods for seven markets.

TONIGHT
With Jack Paar, Jose Melis orch, Hugh Downs; Stanley Holloway, Franklin Pangborn, Helen O'Connell, Johnny Johnston, Tedi Thurman, guests
Exec Producer: Dick Linkroum
Producer: Perry Cross
Director: Garth Dietrick
Writer: Jack Douglas
105 Mins., Mon. - thru - Fri., 11:15 p.m.
Participating
NBC-TV, from New York

This looks like the last stand, the make-or-break outing for "Tonight." Show has been floundering ever since Steve Allen switched over to Sundays, with the new format the fifth the show has had since that time. After the "America After Dark" fiasco, the NBC brass decided to swing back to the variety format and chose Jack Paar for the near-Herculean task of restoring it to its former prestige. Paar has the chips stacked against him — advertiser indifference, mounting station clearance difficulties, better feature films than ever in competition with him, and, of course, the inherent difficulty of doing a good job on a nine-hours-a-week stint.

Paar's got a chance to make it—a slim one but a chance—but only if he institutes some immediate changes. Nine hours a week—or an hour and 45 minutes a night—is a long, long time to fill, and Paar can't do it by himself. Yet this seemingly is the premise on which the show is based, since apart from pianist-conductor Jose Melis and announcer-aide Hugh Downs, there's no permanent cast, only daily and weekly guest stars. The guests, at least as demonstrated on the preem show, can only do their own specialties or help in bits of business. Otherwise, apart from polite conversation, they're strangers. And Paar needs to have some warm and familiar faces around him—at the risk of being corny, to establish his own tv "family."

Part of the need for this stems from the exhausting requirements of the show itself—Paar can't be on-camera for all of the 105 minutes.. Part stems from Paar's own style as a performer and his own personality. He's had a long and varied career as a radio and television personality, always with a maximum of promise and potential and yet never quite delivering the goods. He's an original and sometimes brilliant wit, usually armed with good offbeat material and also an easy hand with the quick ad lib. But while pleasant, Paar seems to lack a certain warmth. He's got a sort of hard brilliance that's tough to take in long doses, for one thing. For another, his material is the type that has to be tight—it dissipates over the long pull.

Consequently, it's wrong for Paar to be "working" on-camera for the entire show. Yet seemingly at this point, he doesn't have a choice. His guest stars helped in a couple of sketches and made with the conversation, but it was neither a relaxed nor easy conversation, with Paar working on being funny all the while. Apart from the obvious advantages in terms of format of having permanent singers, etc., on the show, it would also create a more relaxed atmosphere that was lacking on the first show.

That Paar would overstrain on the first show is only natural, since it's a big opportunity and he naturally wants to make good. But his very eagerness to please made the viewer uncomfortable, since Paar was trying hard throughout. No doubt he'll get the knack of relaxing after a few shows, but it's going to be much more difficult for him to do so under the present setup. It's a strange idiosyncracy of television, but when a comedian emceeing a variety show works too hard at being funny, it discomforts the viewer.

Not that Paar wasn't funny much of the time. But in dealing with 105 minutes, even a .500 batting average in the laugh dept. (which is about what Paar achieved) creates long laughs. And unfortunately, the opening show tended to drag and drag and drag, partially because of Paar's virtual single, and partially because the guests didn't have much to contribute.

Franklin Pangborn, he of the double-double take, was of course topnotch in his bits, but they were few and for the most part he sat on the sidelines quietly. Helen O'Connell sang a couple of times, as did Johnny Johnston, but otherwise they contributed little. Stanley Holloway, who could have made the place come allve, didn't work, just talked. Latter booking was a disappointment, since Holloway is a performer par excellence, and it seemed just a waste to have him sitting there doing nothing. Tedi Thurman, "Miss Monitor," did a very good takeoff on her own radio weather reports.

Beyond the fundamentals, NBC hasn't done right by Paar in production terms. The sets were skimpy-looking and unpleasant; the lighting gloomy; the direction and camerawork erratic. Lastnamed will probably shake down in time, but exec producer Dick Linkroum ought to do something about the sets and lighting. After all, it's supposed to be a cheerful show. Another hindrance is the two-and-a-half-minute station breaks every quarter-hour, far too long for viewer comfort and virtually a tuneout invitation to the viewer. Especially opening night on the N. Y. end, where WRCA-TV, the flagship, apparently didn't know what to do with so much time and on a couple of occasions left a "Tonight" slide on screen sans audio for as long as 20 seconds to fill in the break.

As noted, the odds are against "Tonight's" survival, but in Paar NBC has the potential of making the show come alive again. But the network's going to have to work at it. Chan.

THE NEW U.S.S.R.
With guest experts from George Washington U and other colleges
Producer, narrator: Stuart Finley
60 Mins., Sun., 12 (Noon)
WRC-TV, Washington

This ambitious series, produced jointly by WRC, NBC owned and operated station, and George Washington U, has just been extended from its original 10 weeks because of favorable reaction from listeners. Series, consisting of background film and live discussions and commentary, has been translated into laymen's language without losing the authority which gives it credibility and interest. Part of station's "Other Two Billion" foreign affairs program, show combines fine tv technique with the extensive research and prestige of George Washington's highly regarded foreign service courses.

Current segments of series is devoted to Julien Bryan's film, shot during nine visits to the Soviet over a period of 17 years. Bryan, head of the International Film Foundation, and a pioneer in field of documentary pix, appears on show to narrate and expand on his footage, which is further clarified by charts and posters he has collected. Format consists of a three-way discussion among Bryan, a GW professor, and a visiting Russian expert. Finley, an old hand at this type of show, deftly steers discussion, explaining when necessary, but backgrounding himself to general theme.

Show caught, on religion in the Soviet, was poignantly effective in its presentation of the suppression of organized religion behind the Iron Curtain. Bryan's films show the various phases of the attempted suppression of the church, including some moving footage on an eye-witness account of the Nazi slaughter of the Jews of Minsk, and the efforts of simple people to keep their religion alive. He points out, and proves by actual film, that "the people are still devoutly earnest about religion despite the Soviet anti-religious policy for 30 years." Most of the footage was shot for United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration in '46 and '47.

The decision is woven into the film to good effect, though, at times, it tends to get out of hand. On the whole, however, continuity is retained, and the drama of film on an essentially emotional subject is well tempered by objective discussion and analysis. Best part of show is that it keeps its promise to remain non-technical.

Show could be kined for future use in schools and public discussion forums. It is an effort well designed to bring prestige and good-will to the station. Flor.

TV 'POLKA TIME' AS ROADSHOW PACKAGE

Chicago, July 30.

"It's Polka Time," year old Chicago origination on ABC-TV, will double as a roadshow package this fall in nearby midwestern cities.

A pair of Windy City booking agents, Joe Kayser and Al Borde, are setting up a skein of auditorium dates for the troupe on days that will not conflict with the Tuesday night telecast. Regulars of the show are at present under contract to the ABC outlet here, WBKB, as staff performers. They'll be available for personal appearances in September when they enter into new contracts with the net.

Touring package will include Bruno Zielinski, show's host, Stan Walowic, the Polka Chips, Carolyn de Zurik and local folk dancers from the various towns. Dates set so far are the Auditorium in Milwaukee, Sept. 20, and the Amphitheatre in Chicago, Sept. 28.

Carl Sandburg Deplores The Big TV 'Blab-Off,' Educ'l 'Gobbledygook'

Poet Carl Sandburg amplified his criticism of present-day television, pondered what can be done about it, hit at "blab-off" commercials and their effect on the young, in an absorbing filmed interview with Arlene Francis on the "Home" show, NBC-TV, Friday (25). He did not come with any definitive answers—other than perhaps the problems will be worked out in the framework of the free enterprise system—but posed the questions troubling him and what he termed an "increasing minority" of "desperate" television viewers.

Sandburg initially publicly sounded off on tv fare at a recent women's group convention in North Carolina, a session also addressed by Miss Francis. The filmed interview apparently stemmed from that to-do.

Musing on the future, Sanburg asked "what is to happen between pay television and what is mistakenly called "free television?" In so-called free television, "you waste your time, you sell your time," he declared.

Miss Francis brought forth from the poet that government-control is not the answer. She countered the poet's criticism of the "blab-off" commercials, with the necessity of tv advertising.

But Sandburg hit hard against what commercials are doing to the health and morals of the country's youth, questioning the effect on youth of commercials showing "handsome, personable young people smoking cigarets."

He acknowledged the individual effort on the part of the big networks to correct or modify the situation. Education were not seen as any help in this area by the writer, who said they were lost themselves, being too involved with their own "gobbledygook." He acknowledged that if he were running a station, he, too would have a tough programming problem, and that there is "wholesome stuff that comes over in television that is priceless."

Digging into his own past, when he was film editor of the Chicago News, Sandburg said he recognized that a "certain order of humanity" likes the "trivial," the "hokum," but indicated that tv, unlike the stage or screen, has an exposure unequalled by the other media, a situation which gives him concern.

Sandburg also sang movingly and wound up with a filmed prayer from "Rock of Remembrance." Before signoff, Sandburg told Miss Francis that "you are an intelligent woman. You are not what is wrong with television." To which she responded, "I have had praise from Caesar." Jaco.

TV SHOWCASE
With Garry Stevens, Earle Jerris Orchestra, others
45 Mins.; Mon-thru-Fri., 6 p.m.
PARTICIPATING
WRGB-TV, Schenectady

WRGB rates a bow for presenting the largest and costliest live area television show, in competition with film fare on the rival UHF stations. Believed to be the biggest studio origination yet attempted hereabouts on a cross-the-board schedule (33 are regularly involved), program features Garry Stevens as singer-emcee-interviewer and the Earle Jerris seven-piece orchestra. Local singers, of both sexes, are added starters, along with other guests.

Arrival of the strawhat season has given "TV Showcase" a lift, with Tuesday dates for stars of current productions at Spa Summer Theatre in Saratoga and Sacandaga Summer Theatre in Sacandaga Park. On July 2 origination, members of a third warm-weather operation, the Williamstown, Mass., Theatre group, appeared. Capping this enjoyable stanza was the appearance of Edward Everett Horton, who registered as a sheer, unadulterated delight. Comedian's interview and "performance" brought the program up to network level. The response of the studio audience—actors and actresses—contributed to the gay, electric atmosphere which comes only from live performances. Usually, the audience, in a night club set, consists of area groups, with the younger folks dancing to Jerris' band. Imogene Coca and Jules Munshin "showed" the previous Tuesday. The interview with Miss Coca proved disappointing. She seemed over-cautious in her responses and Stevens never pressed. Jaco.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Youth Wants to Know

"Youth Wants to Know" has been making forays into show biz personalities in an effort to vary the deluge of political discussion shows emanating from the capital Recently, Burt Lancaster faced the panel of teenagers. Past Sunday (28), Jerry Lewis traded q's and a's with Ted Granick's lineup of hep juves.

Clown Lewis surprised by showing the good judgment to take his young interrogators seriously. Obviously nervous at beginning of show, Lewis warmed up mid-way, and soon relaxed enough to toss in a few typical gags, albeit retaining good taste throughout and giving thoughtful, serious answers to a barrage of canny questions. Lewis did himself a great deal of good by displaying the gentle side of his frequently frenetic personality. Best of all, his respect for the youngsters was apparent and lent a great deal of charm to show.

The panelists, on the other hand, asked sharp and penetrating questions, showing neither awe nor hero worship for one of their favorite comics, but returning courtesy for courtesy. They asked such hep questions as "Do you use your own funny bone as an indicator or do you try to find out what people like?" (Answer:—"The audience knows when an entertainer is working and when he, too, is having fun.") "Do you find people resent being ridiculed?" (Answer:—"I never ridicule people. I like people.")

A side remark by a panelist on the great influence of critics brought the only touch of bitterness from Lewis. Admitting that he was "hurt" by the belting his latest pic, "Delicate Delinquent," has taken from crix, comic added, however, that film would far exceed original hopes for a $2,500,000 gross, and that the public follows its own instincts.

Lewis must have won over many of his severest critics by his straight, sincere approach on show, particularly in answer to questions on his home life. And the "Youth" panel proved once again that teenagers will go where their elders fear to tread. Flor.

Matinee Theatre

Wendy Hiller, atmosphierically, must have been at home in her American television debut Monday (29) with the presentation of "Ann Veronica" on NBC "Matinee." The opus was based on an H. G. Wells novel, originally written as a play by Miss Hiller's husband, Ronald Gow, and adapted for video by Greer Johnson.

The play was very British and practically wrote itself, having the kind of situations that have been hackneyed through long usages in virtually every entertainment media. Miss Hiller is a suffragette seeking votes for women in the London of 1909 and ultimately gives up her militant ideas on the subject for the usual reasons. Whatever Wells' philosophies on the subject they weren't made too clear. The way the whole thing came off was on a little better than a soap-opera level. The performances were good, and the tele adaptation was competent, but in the triple pass from Wells to Gow to Johnson, some ideas seemed to be lost for the sake of expediency and daytime audiences.

Miss Hiller did well as did Patric Knowles, as the professor who gets in on the final clinch. Other performances passed muster.

Steve Allen Show

Steve Allen continues to achieve only moderately amusing results with his "mixed doubles" sketches —that is, Allen making with the comedy vis a vis a guest star usually not identified with the comedy field. Sunday night (28), it was with Anthony Franciosa in a well-premised but overlong skit about a pair of skyscraper workers, and with Shelley Winters (Mrs. Franciosa) in an okay driving-lesson sketch. In an opening pairing of Franciosa and frau, the writers didn't do so well by them.

Apart from the sketches and man-in-the-street segment (better than usual on this outing), the Allen layout is pretty much straight variety, and Allen came up with a topnotch turn in pantomimist Shai K. Ophir, whose straight panto was excellent but whose talking comedy impressions were even better. If a talking pantomimist is somewhat unorthodox, that doesn't mean he can't be good, and Ophir was fine.

Other variety turns were par for the course. Jodie Sands mouthed her "With All My Heart" disclick in okay fashion, while the Four Coins sang their "Shangri-la" in perfunctory style. Jerry Lee Lewis combo, as the closing turn turned in a wild rock 'n' roll version of their "Whole Lotta Shaking' Goin' On," but Lewis' antics seemed forced though his singing registered as a genuine folk-blues variety. Allen also had the near-Miss Universe, Leona Gage as a guester (surprisingly, since Ed Sullivan had her on his show the week before), but the application of his rule that all guests must work was somewhat cruel in her case—she sang in a pleasant enough but thoroughly untrained voice, and it's a moot point whether she or the audience was more embarrassed.

Ed Sullivan Show

A midsummer circus, with many derring-do acts, a few coming off with supercharged excitement, was offered last Sunday (28) night on the Ed Sullivan show. Subbing for vacationing Sullivan as emcee (and performer) was song and dance man Dan Dailey.

Because of the space needed for the high wire performance, the swaying pole bit, the human cannon ball stanza, and others, the ring was shifted to the outdoors, an open parking lot near the midtown theatre studio from which the regular Sunday night show usually emanates. The location shooting with New York at sundown serving as a backdrop added an immediacy and a three-dimensional reality. When the cameras shifted time and again to the studios for the vocalists, other musical stints and the comedics, the show became routinely tame in comparison and detracted from the circus motif. It may be a good idea, if technically feasible, for the Sullivan circus show next year to get out of doors and remain there for the entire show. Effective spotlights on performers as nighttime closes in could be quite dramatic.

Some members of the open air crowd screamed at the finale of the initial breakway sway pole performance of The Brunos twosome. In a neat climax, it looked like one of the Brunos had a mishap. The Wallendas family of nine was on hand for some highwire wizardry. The Flying Zacchinis did a double cannon and flying trapeze act. The human cannon ball stint built suspense well, and the trapeze act, aided by some low comedy up high, came off okay, too. Lola Dobritch at her unicycle, because of poor timing of the show, only had a bare few moments. With cameras shifting in and out of doors, other acts also were given somewhat of a quick brush. It should be added, before leaving the circus phase of the show, that tv cameras with their unfailing eye for detail, can do a better job than was evidenced last Sunday. More pre-planning and a different camera approach might bring much more arresting results.

Turning to the regular acts, Dan Dailey did a fine soft shoe number with the aid of a few saucy chorines built around "I Still Get Jealous." Pianist Roger Williams and the Crew Cuts in separate numbers did not register too good. Vocalist Toni Arden overdramatized "You Stepped Out of A Dream," but came back nicely with "It Takes One." Jimmy Edmondson (Professor Backwards) was okay with what seemed a dated routine about a moviegoer. Ventriloquist Don Tannen got some yocks in his patter.

Miss Universe of 1957 came on stage for some patter (in Spanish) with Dailey. For those who did not understand Spanish, she offered other things. Jack Dempsey also came on stage for some chatter. Horo.

Val Parnell's Star Time

By the sound of the shrieks, squeals and ecstatic sighs during this show, all studio seats had obviously been allocated to members of the Johnnie Ray Fan Club. It had been a quiet couple of months for the uninhibited cult of teenagers, but the rest seemed to put them in good form for 45-minutes of Ray time on Associated Television (25). Apart from two other acts and some dancing by the George Carden girls, Ray dominated the screen throughout the program.

His songalog was based on disklicks established here, but apart from that his performance was somewhat stock. His appearance was greeted with the usual riot, which persisted throughout all his numbers. His best offerings were "Glad Rag Doll," and "Yes, To-

Vidpix Future: It's '62 That Counts

Key Figures Look Five Years Hence in Quest of Definitive Patterns to Give Telefilm Industry Greater Solidity; Networks Envision One-Third of Total Program Output On Film as Ultimate Goal; What of Manipulators, Bartering?

By GEORGE ROSEN

Perhaps no era or facet in show business has witnessed such a meteoric story-book rise as the emergence of tv-films. It took a giant step in the right direction and the peak of its celluloid glory is nowhere in sight. For better or for worse it climbed aboard the fascinating, dazzling wagon of television at a time when the industry itself was struggling for definitive patterns—and stole the show away from everybody. A lot of people are richer today, some wiser but few poorer, in embracing the "new upstart." From upstart to status of Goliath was as swift as it was rewarding.

But what about tomorrow? Not, perhaps, the tomorrow of '58 or '59 (under existing conditions and presently-geared economics everybody's work is cut out for the next two-year span with a still considerable harvest to be reaped), but more tellingly the tomorrow of five years hence. For it's in the tv-film structure of '62 in its relation to the overall television picture that the ultimate destiny and formula-for-the-future will be carved.

With an awareness of existing hazards and those that lie ahead, the tv-film industry's leaders are already projecting five and even 10 years hence (though they regard the longer range as too ephemeral and are more prone to settle for "Operation '62"). What, they are already asking and reducing to systematic probings, will the syndication picture look like in '62? As tv-films becomes more and more international, will there—and should there—be room for more than a handful of "big ones" such as Ziv, TPA, NTA, MCA, Official, Screen Gems, etc.?

By the same token, what percentage of network & station programming will be film as opposed to live? What will be the five-years-hence fate of features-into-tv, since it's readily apparent that existing backlogs will be exhausted three-four years hence with everybody scraping the bottom of the barrel by '62.

Projecting the picture even further, there's hardly more than another six-year ride for even all the post-'48 cinematics at the present low studio output of 200 features a year. Certainly something to start thinking about even now, since so much of an industry's economy and entertainment pattern revolves around the feature libraries.

One-Third of a Network

What will be the fate of the independent producer as money grows tighter and tighter. Bankers are growing wary. As a financial investment, the honeymoon is over. Even granted they've skirted risks and have got themselves a good package, what's the wisdom, say of banks, of courting favor with a 10% return—and that appears to be the end result of their economic flirting with vidpix—when so much more can be gained from investment elsewhere?

Thus the question is posed: Will the ultimate burden of production rest with the networks themselves rather than with the independent packager? This, too, raises an interesting point in determining the whole future course of film on television. For the networks, also crystal-balling into '62 horizons, have resolved that no more than 33% of their total programming output shall be converted to celluloid. That's precisely what they envision for 1962. They, too, have much at stake, up to and including the very foundations of a network structure—which means perpetuating the coaxial link through live shows. Otherwise, why networks? Come hell or high water, they'll do nothing to jeopardize their position.

But even a one-third-of-a-network-on-film stake is a venture embracing untold millions—that's why CBS is currently wrestling with the problem of whether it wouldn't be more realistic economically to film its own programs rather than farm out network-owned properties to outside filmmakers. It's one of the reasons why CBS has held up construction on its $7,000,000 Annex to Television City in L.A.

Elsewhere there are multiple thorny problems still to be resolved. As, for example, the conditions set forth by some national clients whereby, in return for a sponsorship deal, they be given a 25% or better ownership share in the show. It's a precedent that frightens many. Or the whole present sales pattern of 39-plus-13 which, comes summer rerun time, reduces network programming to a shambles, as witness the unprecedented tuneouts this very hot spell.

Or, yet again, the so-called vidpix entrepeneurs who are just in the business for the stock market ride and can see no further than their latest manipulation. Certainly this is an aspect of the tv-film business that bodes ill for its future as an integral part of show business. And the whole question of barter deals, some say, must inevitably come up for reexamination, for station operators in particular are concerned over preservation of rate structures within the framework of such trading.

With Hollywood assuming greater and greater importance as the world's key vidpix production center (and with London easily claiming the No. 2 position), New York apparently has no intention of taking its defeat lying down. More and more pressures are being exerted on the city administration to revamp the entire regulatory code (including the major fire regulation stymie) to activate film production in the east. They're even prevailing on the Police Dept. to "open up" in Central Park. It may take a few years—but the Gotham telefilm champions are determined on a fight to the finish.

And finally, what are the global horizons and how much revenue, even under best conditions, can be extracted from the foreign tv marts? Some venture as high as a 50%-of-the-total-gross figure five years hence, as more and more countries embrace the medium. Others maintain that's wishful thinking. But nobody's ignoring its potential, whatever it is.

Criteria For Film Buying

[A SYMPOSIUM]

By J. E. FARAGHAN

(Program Manager, WGN-TV, Chicago)

We buy film on the basis of our estimate of its rating power, its price tag as it relates to our market and selling problems, and its success (in those cases which have crack records) in other markets. Also working in any purchase of film is an understanding of our present and projected film inventory. There is no hard and fast rule relating to particular production companies, stars alone, or program type. Action adventure is always a good buy all other things being equal. Good comedies are rare and in the case of mysteries it is a matter of culling the best from many available.

The status of film has grown to warranting top-level interest and our own operation has grown beyond the film buyer as he was known some years ago. Today programming and sales working in close association with the General Manager and Vice President approach all purchases of films after sensitive analysis of product in relation to our needs. We look for newness and unknownness ("Whirlybirds" is a good example), quality production in a sound series concept, and a price which is realistic.

In library purchases if there is any bourbon at all you are generally buying too much wine. This in the case of half-hour product. It is possible to guarantee your operation creditable programming, programming you do not have to be ashamed of but again programming that does not draw the public in droves, otherwise it would not be offered in a library deal.

In the area of drama (mystery, comedy, adventure) they are doing a job in satisfying the needs of the station and audiences. However, as syndicators they obviously are filling a "need" as this term has been developed through experience. It is too costly naturally for them to experiment with new concepts too far off the beaten track in the interest of developing a new audience with product which in turn would fill what would amount to a new need. Stations on the other hand are also bound by increasingly rigid economics and are delimited in this area also. When you say "satisfy the needs of the station and audience"—yes, they are doing the job but the job of the station is also to create new product and the danger in this present situation is the old danger of imitation.

By JEROME (TAD) REEVES

(Program, Mgr., KDKA-TV, Pittsburgh)

The important criteria for station management to consider in film purchasing are relatively simple—so simple, in fact, that they are often overlooked in the never ending search for some magic formula.

While no established pattern is infallible, experience tends to point up a basic set of rules by which we generally abide. Assuming quality of the product is up to par and is selling at a fair market price, one should then analyze it from the standpoints of entertainment value, saleability to the advertiser —projected to his overall needs—and availability of suitable time on the station.

Important issues are the type of viewer the series will attract, the type of sponsor you can expect to sell the product to, rerun rights—and value of same to station—and as basic idea of just how well the cast will bear up over the long haul. While name value is most certainly an asset in dealing with both viewers and advertisers, it has long since been established that television can create its own stars if the vehicle is strong enough to command attention.

The astute buying of film today is of the utmost importance to a station and can no longer be regarded as an individual effort. The necessity of high quality canned goods becomes more and more significant to the station operator each time a study of the rating charts and sales figures is made.

In this respect, I for one would uphold the need of a film buyer without reservation. It is essential to work with a qualified aide who not only has his fingers on the pulse of this intricate business and its many complexities, but who also establishes and retains the many important contacts and relationships with the gentlemen in the industry.

A qualified film buyer can accomplish a thousand and one detailed chores a station manager rarely has time for. He is in a sense the advance scout, the statistician and the guide and can certainly play a major role in the success of an operation. In answer to the query, "What do you look for in films?," I will reflect on the aforementioned quality, entertainment value, price structure and time availability, wherein the property must be strong enough to hold its own against competitive programming.

Naturally, with so many filmed shows bordering on sameness, the buyer is forever looking for those showing imagination and progression, the type of programming we feel offers a bonus to both advertiser and viewer.

Except for a few rare instances, few syndicated packages have managed to capture the Hollywood flair for excitement and high adventure, the type of programming that is today saleable to the entire family and projects its worth to the sponsor accordingly. Admittedly, though, this current season has introduced a new and more vibrant quality in syndicated films that has given stations far

It's Time To Revamp Television's Timetable

By LESLIE HARRIS

(V.P., Gen. Mgr., CBS TV Film Sales)

Of all the attitudes which have been carried over to television from those halycon days of radio, the most troublesome is the concept of the "time factor." In radio we could follow pretty well on schedule the old doggerel: One for the "money," Two for the "show," Three to "get ready," and Four to "go." In television, however, it is necessary to revamp that timetable to read: Three, Four, Five Six, and perhaps even Seven, to "get ready." And then we can "go."

Clients, agencies, and even producers are still prone to disregard the fact that the time interval between the conception and the execution of a television program is vastly different from the lag imposed in getting a radio program established.

In fact, much of the criticism directed at poor television quality can be traced to failure to recognize one basic fact—insufficient time to properly prepare.

Radio—let's face it—was a producer's dream. A lot of us gave it the scope of a De Mille production, but, to be realistic, we know that getting a radio program on the air wasn't something that called for Milltown. Once the idea was accepted, it was a relatively simple matter to coordinate all the elements. Of course, there were problems. You couldn't always get a curtain star you wanted, or maybe the writer got smacked and had to be combed out of the Fire Island seaweed. But usually a show could be pulled together in a couple of weeks. Given a month, any producer worthy of the credit could usually manage to schedule a couple of conferences at Kennecubunk, or if the weather was raw, Nassau was fine. Come to think of it, nearly all producers had a much heavier coat of tan in those days—probably from so many conferences around the Beverly Hills pool.

Lifting a horn was also much more popular—nothing like a serious discussion of script motivation over a couple of very dry Gibsons.

But, alas, times have changed. The only problem is that so few outside of the production side of the business seem to accept the transition.

Muskrat Ramble vs. Beethoven 5th

Let me say at this point that I don't intend to demean the importance, artistic quality, or level of creative effort in radio today or yesterday. It is simply a matter of comparing strawberries and cream to Baked Alaska, or "The Muskrat Ramble" to "Beethoven's Fifth Symphony." There is no good way to judge the excellence of one as opposed to the other and each has its adherents, but there can be no argument as to the tremendous difference involved in the preparation of the two.

The depressing fact is: You can't put a television show together by the Beverly Hills pool. It's a constant segue from a cutting room at General Service to a script meeting at Television City, then back to Glen Glen for a mix. In between, the average producer has a frustrating session with the star's business manager, trying to figure out how his appearance is going to affect his tax structure in 1960, and how the shooting schedule in February can be worked around a personal appearance the second lead is making in Dallas on the tenth.

Between times there's a little matter of interim financing, which has to be arranged with the bank, and in the background is the inescapable fact that it takes five weeks between the time the cameras roll, until the print is delivered from the labs.

All these factors add up to one thing, "time."

Perhaps the place to begin is by making a complete break with the past and suggesting that consideration be given to abandoning the time honored tradition of the spring and summer sales season.

This, of course, imposes on the client and agency the difficult task of having to formulate plans for their fall campaigns, at a period when they may not have had an opportunity to fully appraise the success of their current television commitments.

Last Ones Up in Trouble

The fact remains, however, that no less than 55 programs were either cancelled or replaced during the past season. What this cost in lost viewers, or, more importantly, the negative public relations effect brought about by mid-season program shifts (and these certainly included favorite programs in millions of homes), should be of serious concern to advertisers.

It is no coincidence that many of these programs were late starters. Last season, if you will recall, was widely publicized as the slowest summer in the history of the business.

Compared to this year, however, it was jet propelled. These last few months have offered more than a fair share of delays, lack of decisions, and inability to finalize plans.

With this in mind, even the most optimistic is likely to view the coming season with some misgivings. And the chances are that the first shows to falter will be those that were last to go into production.

The plain fact of the matter is that many of these midseason disasters could be avoided by having that extra month or two for getting rid of the bugs. As we have pointed out in other discussions, a pilot film means

'I Married A Bear For The FBI'

By ROBERT D. LEVITT

(Pres., California National Productions)

Although it is the junior industry in the communications field, television film production and distribution has somehow acquired an astonishing number of restrictive traditions, inviolate principles, and invariable formulae. When one inquires into the reasons for certain practices, a too frequent answer is, "Because it's always been done that way"—"always" meaning something like five years.

It is interesting to observe how the rigid hand of its own brief history influences a theoretically volatile, dynamic industry in which the only consistently reliable rule-of-thumb is that it's the wrong finger for getting olives out of martinis.

Formula thinking peeks roguishly out of nearly every cranny of the business: program creation, sales, even the topmost double-dome levels of planning and policy-making.

In the allegedly creative area, for example, one finds what might be called the rule of "property."

The word "property" might evoke an image of a few yards of sand at Rockaway Beach, but it is something quite different in the tv film business. It is a title, a name, a personality, a phenomenon which, because it is known to a few hundred thousand people in its former incarnation, is presumed to be a sure success in its television reincarnation. Hardly a day passes that some panting packager does not announce his "exclusive arrangement for access to all the files of the Department of Satination of Chillicothe, O., the right to use the official seal of the Department, and a commitment for full cooperation of the Commissioner."

And hardly a day passes that some such "property" isn't put into production by a hopeful producer using someone else's money. "Titles," "presold names." "files," "seals," and "cooperation" continue to dissipate more television time, energy, and money than congressional investigations.

At the other extreme in program creation lurks the formula without a formula, or the "to-hell-with-entertainment" technique. This is employed by the soothsayers who assert that they can "tailor make" a show to the needs of a specific advertiser. It is their endeavor to find a formula for turning a fast tv buck by mumbo-jumbo and the laying on of hands—without money, without film, and without even an idea.

It is said that an advertiser recently called in one such practitioner

Max Bygraves Tops TV Poll

London, July 30.

Max Bygraves, currently starring in the Palladium's summer revue, has collared top honors in a popularity poll of tv entertainers, undertaken by the Schwerin TV Research Notebook. He was voted into first position in each of four categories.

The poll was restricted to 35 performers selected by the Schwerin organization, and their list only included two U.S. artists, Lucille Ball, who was placed 14th, and Liberace, who was down in 34th position.

Among the wide selection of British musical personalities in the list, Mantovani was the top in seventh place, with Vera Lynn following on in 12th position. Jack Payne and Jack Jackson were voted 23d and 24th, respectively.

Tea, Anyone?

By SHELDON REYNOLDS

London.

Wouldn't you think that by the time a guy rose to the exalted status of producer in the glamorous TV-Film Industry he could stop working in shifts like a factory hand? Not, as we say in films, by a long shot.

Once upon a time (1950), I thought that if I only could make tv films in Paris, I would realize my life ambition: to sleep till noon. So I packed my shoestring (every producer of tv films starts on a shoestring) and headed for Paris.

And my dream came true. I was on the set the very first day at five minutes of 12. At noon, the French film workers started to arrive, supposedly after a hearty lunch, ready for a seven-hour stint. Now, I'm the last guy in the world to knock the working man. Far be it from me to take the bread out of his mouth—although at times I've practically had to in order to finish a scene. Every Parisian, it seems, is his own portable lunchwagon. He comes to work with two sets of tools: sausage and bread, and those of his trade. Believe me, the French crewman is equally adept with either.

Now we fade in on the present, hundreds of "Foreign Intrigues," "Sherlock Holmes," and sausages-and-breads later. The scene: London's MGM Studios, where English glamorpuss Hazel Court and American actor Patrick O'Neal of the tv playhouse dramas prepare for a sequence in "Dick and the Duchess," due on CBS-TV this fall (plug). I'm a successful tv producer now, see? And what time do I show up for work? 8 a.m.!!!

But the years have mellowed me. No longer do I allow myself to rise to a peak of efficiency at the top of the afternoon. I don't have to fight off sleep induced by a full stomach and an empty mind. At the stroke of 8 a.m. shooting begins on "Dick and the Duchess" (did I mention that the title roles are played by handsome Patrick O'Neal and sexy Hazel Court, on CBS-TV this fall?). Promptly at 6 p.m. they kill the lights; cut.

The day's work is finished, I'm free to devote my leisure time to hobbies. For instance, I enjoy sitting in a cutting room squinting at rushes far into the night. I get a charge out of running myself ragged scouting locations, looking for talent, and writing next week's script. I even enjoy viewing the sights of London from one of those quaint cabs—on my way to the bank. (But don't get me wrong. I love money.)

And you know what? I've grown accustomed to my face, before a shaving mirror at 6.30 a.m. I dig the routine. The whole thing fits me like an integrated commercial. And I even find British customs refreshing and stimulating. Tea, anyone?

Criteria For Film Buying

more flexibility in programming than ever before, which augers well for the future.

In the evaluation of library purchases against those available via the package format, one can look to the many phases of the former with its tremendous flexibility in programming to the advantage of both advertiser and viewer.

While a package formula usually attracts a set audience, film libraries offer a number of facets that more often than not extend a broader appeal to a far greater audience, thereby giving your advertiser greater selling potenital.

In reasoning whether or not film syndicators are doing the job necessary to answer the needs of the station, I can only answer to the affirmative. While we realize the stations could reap a richer harvest audiencewise if the boys on the selling end were able to meet their full potential, we must realize, also, their many problems, not the least of which is usually the film buyer himself.

I feel the average syndicator has achieved a healthy respect in the industry in a relatively short space of time and while they have ofttimes been accused of "failing to follow through once the product is sold," I have found it extremely advantageous to conduct my own follow through, and by so doing have always received maximum attention and cooperation from these gentlemen.

By EDWARD L. HERP

(Program Director, WJW-TV, Detroit)

It is difficult to sum up ideas on film buying in a few words. There are always two prime factors to be taken into account: quality and cost. In fact, these two elements could be made into an equation: quality = cost. It is an unusual film buy or a bad film investment whenever this simple equation does not balance.

The first decision for film buying should be based on just what level or standard the station wishes to maintain in its film programming. Film buying that has a plan for the future allows for a gradual raising of this standard, thereby increasing the saleability and enhancing the program content of film shows.

It is our feeling that any film buying for a station should be considered by a committee of three: General Manager, Sales Manager, and Program Manager. By forming this trio, the many aspects of a film purchase can be discussed; such as, estimated financial return, client potential, schedule availability, etc.

In buying features our prime requisite is a well-balanced film package. A package which has a relatively small number of outstanding Grade "A" pictures looks attractive and allows for an initial promotional splurge, yet this glory is short lived and then the station is burdened with scheduling many inferior films. We feel it is better to have a larger number of good quality films, rather than a few outstanding ones surrounded by many "duds."

Film syndicates for the most part have done a good job, however, at present, the film market is overflowing with many old series which are available for rerun. Very few new and attractive properties are being offered. There is no doubt many of the film series that are being offered on a rerun basis will be sold, but from all indications, there is a negative trend toward audience approval of this type film programming.

(Program Mgr., WBZ-TV, Boston)

Certainly the most important criteria in buying film is quality of production . . . The story and star value, no matter what the vintage. It has been our experience that really topflight features were made prior to 1948 are of as good program value as post-1948 features.

Of course, an obviously dated early sound movie lends itself to only very specialized use. Features of the greatest popular appeal generally fall into the action-adventure category, and when this can be bolstered by topflight production and big name stars, we are sure to have a winner.

Because of the great importance placed on film programming, and its emergence as the foundation upon which local schedules are built, it is my belief that the film buyer, as a separate entity, is no longer a practical type of operation. With the importance of film, it is certainly the primary responsibility of the program manager to have a thorough understanding and knowledge of film buying and programming. And, as in all important station ventures, the general philosophy of film programming and buying policies become a committee-type operation, spearheaded by the program manager.

As to what we look for in films, I would say that we are getting what we seek. In crystal-balling the future, it is difficult to envision a continuation of this situation. Statistically, it is indicated to us that the availability of feature films will diminish in the not too distance future . . . and then what?

There are merits on both sides of the methods of buying film, library deals vs. packages. In the library deal, quite obviously you obtain quantity with a good percentage of quality at a reasonably low pro-rated cost. Naturally, in buying on a selective basis in small packages, it is very likely that the pro-rated cost per feature will be higher as the quality of the package is better.

I think the syndicators are doing as good a job as possible within the economic limitations that exist in film production to satisfy station and audience needs. Certainly the great influx of feature films and their wide spread use on stations all over the country has effected the saleability of syndicated half hours. The recent participation of companies like WBC and other independent stations and station groups in co-operating film production or distribution is certainly an indication of the interest and faith stations have is good, well-produced syndicated properties. I believe here again that quality is the all important factor and this is even more important as our audiences continue to become more discriminating and have the opportunity of a wide choice of programs.

By BILL DEMPSEY

(Program Mgr., KPIX, San Francisco)

Pictures must be acceptable for viewing by any member of the family, at any hour. It is foolish to think that certain film stories are basically good for late night showing, but not for earlier hours. A tv station must be ready to stand inspection as a home medium at any time under any circumstance. Further, to get their investment out of film, a station must be able to re-schedule at any operating hour. Quality of film, story, star, etc. must be the best available. In assessing films, a buyer of feature film has the advantage of: 1. Star names and reputations, 2. Original box office gross records, 3. Quality as reflected by original production budget number of days in production, length of film, reputation and record of producing studio, original theatrical releasing organization, director, producer and other technical experts, and 4. Age.

All of these are significant.

It is important that station buyer use these as guides, not as positive gauges. He must consider basic differences between collective movie audiences and individualized tv audiences, as well as the times, styles, morals and ways of life of the generations past compared with today. A picture that thrilled millions 20 years ago may be flat now, the grand scale musical-dance-variety numbers are pretty much lost on a 21-inch screen. Techniques change. The "silent screen" gestures and grimaces of early talking picture actors are ludicrous when seen today, despite star name value. Interests change. Problems of freudian twenties with "common law" and "love marriage" themes, the depression thirties with the themes of "dole" and social problems, the war torn forties with "flag waving" these all create programming problems, and must be carefully considered by the program manager and the film buyer. Attention must be given to the original press reviews as these gold mines of information will help reveal dated themes as well as strong or weak production values.

Vintage, like with wine, must be considered carefully. A post war "quickie" may have little value when considered against a pre-war "colossal."

Syndicated film poses a specialized approach. The available information is quite different. Usually only a pilot is available for screening, which means 38 more must be bought on the basis of the sample. Consequently, great attention must be paid to the reputation of the producer, his record of success and his record for living up to quality of his pilots. The production must be scrutinized down to the most minute details. How well is it cast. Is the star appeal strong? Do the supporting players add to the production or undermine the overall quality? Is the format versatile? Has the producer thrown all possible situations into the pilot with the expectant possibility that the remaining 38 will be watered down versions of the first? Is the proffered series a fresh approach, a "new" angle, or merely an "also ran" version of an already successful series?

Time to Revamp

very little. A bad pilot does not necessarily mean the premise of the program is wrong. The idea may be great but the initial execution can be wrong. On the other hand, a good pilot can be made from a premise that is unworkable over a season's haul. If a pilot has any value, it is for the producer—but only to show him his mistakes. That is why he needs those extra two months. Chances are the average producer may have a couple of followup scripts, but it is unusual to have any more. The reason is simple—it's too much added cost, and he doesn't want to commit for others until he gets the show sold.

But as so often is the case, the order is delayed until the last possible moment. Then the scramble begins. And if there is any truly immovable object in the universe, it is a top name writer when told to "hurry up."

June Start for September Bow

There is no happy medium. To properly prepare a television show for a September start, pre-production should begin, at the latest, in June. Even three months is tight for all the elements to be properly coordinated.

The script problem, which is usually the key to a successful series, cannot be resolved in a matter of a couple of weeks as it was in radio. Not only is the television technique more demanding, but the necessity of getting well ahead of production, in order that provision can be made for shooting in sequence is tremendously important. Nor is this purely a matter of economics. Being able to have some flexibility in scheduling a cast or providing extra incentive may mean the difference in getting the artist you want.

Assembling a top flight crew is another consideration. Although Holywood would seem plentifully supplied with film technicians, choosing a really competent crew that works well together, requires considerable advance notice, and keeping them entails no layover weeks.

Unless the script situation is well under control, a layoff is inevitable. This means the loss of key crew members, not to mention the additional cost that a halt in production entails.

A tight delivery schedule also precludes the possibility of any changes or corrections being made. Quite often, even minor revisions in cutting, which often mean the difference between a good show and a bad one, cannot be made because of the necessity of making a play date.

This situation is not alone confined to film but to all phases of live production, where again the "time factor" is all too often the "deciding factor."

Whether or not most clients would favorably consider making a commitment this far in advance, is questionable, but the fact remains that in order for a program to justify the sizable amount which it costs, it must meet increasing quality standards. To provide the "time factor" is an important consideration.

A Lion's Share For Britain

Status as No. 2 Production Center In World
Telepix Market Dictated By Economics

By HAROLD MYERS

London.

Harsh economic necessity has made Britain into a major centre for the production of tv film series for the world markets. The elementary laws of protection, applied vigorously on the commercial webs, have made Britain second only to the United States in importance as a television producing centre.

Co-production, which, in post-war years, became a vital factor in the feature film market, has now embraced the telepix industry. The partnership between U.S. and British producers has reached major proportions and has become the guiding element in the launching of new enterprises. There are sound and obvious economic reasons which have led to this development.

Not the least of these elements is the British quota applied to the commercial networks. Under a gentleman's agreement, negotiated between the Independent Television Authority (the Government Agency which administers the Television Act) on the one hand, and the 14 interested Unions on the other, imported film programs are restricted to an average of seven hours screen time per week, or, in terms of percentages, around 15% of the actual air time. The remainder has to be filled either with live programs or with filmed British material.

Ironically, BBC-TV, which is a publically owned state corporation, with a responsible Minister in Parliament, is not subjected to the same quota restrictions. The view is apparently taken that the state web, with its natural sense of responsibility, will exercise its own restraint on imported product and insure a proper proportion of British-foreign program material. The driving force which compels commercial programmers to safeguard their quota requirements is absent from BBC program planning, but always in the background as a desired goal.

For the next few years, at any rate, there'll be few, if any, operative changes in either the BBC or commercial television. The Charter of the state web expires in July 1962 and that of the Independent Television Authority in 1964-5. In the interim, the Government has suggested that there should be a general study of the whole UK communications setup during the coming years, so that an overall pattern can be recommended. The nature of that inquiry, however, depends on one uncertain question. Which political party will be in power at the time of decision?

Commercial television was introduced by a Conservative Government, despite a considerable volume of Labor opposition. It's now conceded that, by the time of the next General Election, the Labor Party has more than an even chance of occupying the driver's seat. That poses the inevitable $64 question. How will the Labor movement react to the continuance of a commercial web sustained only by advertising revenue, which they opposed bitterly only a few years back? There's little doubt that they'll favor its continuance, but may seek to introduce some important modifications. Although there is overwhelming opinion to suggest that most staunch Laborites would regard it as political idiocy to remove from the people completely a medium that has proved so universally popular, there is also a hard core of opinion which is seriously concerned at a possible corruption of public taste, excessive commercialism and an absence of competition between the ITA program contracting companies. In some Labor circles there is already agitation in favor of establishing a second Authority, comparable to the BBC, which would take over the operation of the commercial web and eliminate some of the faults of the present operation.

Atmosphere Politically Safe

For the time being, however, there is no immediate concern about future political intentions. The commercial operators are gratified at the fact that, within two years, they've become soundly and economically established, already showing substantial weekly trading profits and well ahead of their old established rival in the weekly ratings, with regular consistency, capture the 10 top placings in the weekly Nielsen ratings.

Because of the voluntarily accepted quota restrictions, all the four commercial program companies are obliged to take the initiative in telefilm production to insure that they have an adequate supply of British program material. There are, of course, other advantages in producing in Britain, principally the simple one of dollars and cents. Although it is difficult to make a firm comparison between production costs in Britain and the United States, there is little doubt that a carefully organized series, adequately prepared, should come out at 20% below the cost of filming in Hollywood. Admittedly, production charges continue to rise here, but that's an inflationary disease, common to all the free world countries. Nevertheless, the advantage currently in favor of Britain will probably remain.

Because of the demands of quota and the advantages of production costs, co-production between America and the commercial tv webs has reached a state of boom. And there's no doubt the boom will grow, because conditions on both sides of the Atlantic make such deals highly desirable for both the British and American partners. The advantage is two-sided. The British partner in a co-production setup knows that, for a restricted and limited investment, he has an international type program, which (a) enables him to comply with his quota commitments, and (b) plays an important role in audience building. The American partner, on his side, knows that the quota ticket is virtually a guarantee of distribution in the United Kingdom, plus the knowledge that his British partner has made a substantial investment, usually in the region of $6,000 per film, which can be written off basic negative costs before US distribution begins. At least, that figure will be reached by the time the Scottish and Welsh commercial stations are on the air, by the end of the year.

The basic financial pattern of these co-production deals has been in a state of flux since the beginning of the ITA, some two years ago. The first important telepic deals began with the "Robin Hood" series and advanced with the "Sir Lancelot" and "Buccaneers" skeins, all three of which nabbed U.S. network sales and provided very healthy returns for all members of the co-production axis. On this side, it was a tieup between Mrs. Hannah Weinstein and the Incorporated Television Program Co.; across the Atlantic the interested parties were, of course, Hal Hackett and Official Films. With these series, the British company not only acquired desperately needed product for its own use, but also hit the jackpot with their quick U.S. return.

At present, however, the deals are not only based on an immediate U.S. network killing. They are moving over into patterns where American distribution involves first run syndication in which the British contractors still get their much needed British product, but have to wait much longer before they can share in the American gravy. The standard American 40% writeoff for distribution in syndication slows, and sometimes blocks, British recoupment.

Guaranteed Return

For the average investment of $6,000 per half-hour program, the British end, in a co-production deal, is practically guaranteed a return from the domestic market. In the early days of commercial tv, co-production deals were frequently based on the co-financing of a pilot by the British and American partners for fixed equities. Nowadays, there appears to be a tendency for both the British and the American investors to shy clear of these pilot deals because, if a network deal is concluded in the U.S., neither the British programmer, nor the American company, likes to part with its quick profit, frequently running into hundreds of thousands of dollars, because the other partner risked a modest investment on the pilot. There is, therefore, a greater tendency to "go it alone" as far as pilot productions are concerned. Therefore, the more recent co-production deals are usually firm commitments on an extended series. It's fine when a U.S. network deal materializes, but the production of a complete series does not have to depend on such a quick return. Syndication is still a profitable outlet.

On the British scene the most active, most successful and most adventurous outfit has undoubtedly been the Incorporated Television Program Co., the organization headed by Lew Grade, and closely linked with Associated TeleVision, the program contracting company which operates both in London (weekends) and the Midlands (weekdays). Apart from their direct links with the Hannah Weinstein-Official Films group, they have other major projects already in the works. On their own, without any attempt to co-produce with an American company, they have financed and completed the "William Tell" pilot, which is due to go into full production next month. No firm deal for the sale of this skein in the U.S. has yet been concluded, but negotiations are in an advanced stage and a sale will probably be effected very soon. Among their major activities currently in production are the "OSS" series, now bein made in association with Flamingo Films Co. and L. S. Q. Productions, which are being directed by Robert Siodmak, with Ron Randall playing the lead. These are based on stories taken from the files of the Office of Secret Service and will be shown on the ABC network in U.S. this Fall. In Britain, of course, they'll be networked by ATV. In association with Television Programs of America, ITP are also partnered in the "Charlie Chan" series, starring J. Carroll Naish and are linked with Bernard Schubert in "The White Hunter" skein, now filming in Africa. "Robin Hood" and "The Sword of Freedom" will also be released here by ITP on the ATV web.

ATV-ITP Offers Impetus

The active leadership of ATV-ITP in the telefilm market has provided the impetus for other commercial program contractors. ABC-TV (a wholly-owned subsidiary of Associated British Picture Corp.) which operates the Midlands and Northern stations at weekends, embarked on its first co-production venture with Bernard Luber's "Exclusive" series, 13 of which have already been completed and which are now airing regularly each weekend. Now they have negotiated a significant deal through the picture arm of their parent company, which has signed an agreement with California National Productions, an NBC offshoot, to co-produce a new costume series for U.S. syndication. The unique aspect of this deal is that ABC-TV invests far more than the British or Eastern Hemisphere rights now command. Their share will be around $12,500 per episode and they will command a second money position in the U.S., after California National has recouped on top of its 40% distribution costs. No other British contractor has seen fit to make a deal of this calibre, and their investments are usually limited to their potential total British income or else they recoup from the American syndicate from the first dollar pari passu.

Associated-Rediffusion, the London weekday commercial programmers, have been steering clear of telepic production until they were able to "lick" their station operation. They started off with substantial losses, but are now operating in the black and are in the mood to think in terms of co-production. They're linked with TPA in the production of "Tugboat Annie," now being filmed in Canada, and the same U.S. outfit is handling American release of the "Gay Cavalier," now on view in Britain, which was made by George King Productions. An earlier. Associated-Rediffusion-Metro co-production project for the joint filming of the "Mr. Chips" series in Britain has, apparently, gone cold, but they're in negotiation with other U.S. companies.

Another of the commercial programmers, Granada-TV, who operates the Northern outlets on weekdays, are also readying their plans for telefilm co-production. They'll be entering the field before the turn of the year in association with MCA, with whom they've been in active negotiation since their managing director, Cecil G. Bernstein, visited the U.S. last year. They're still discussing stories and properties, but aim to have their first pilot completed in good time to negotiate a sale for the new season. In addition to their MCA project, they're also talking co-production deals with two other U.S. companies.

Aside from the networks themselves, however, there is a growing volume of independent telefilm production in Britain. Harry Alan Towers, who is now completing the "Martin Kane" series in association with Ziv, (with William Gargan starred) has also lensed the pilot of a new skein. "Assignment Scotland Yard," which has been scripted by Ted Willis and directed by Alvin Rakoff. The series will star Robert Beatty and Duncan Lamont and featured roles in the pilot were filled by William Hartnell, Sydney Tafler, Peter Reynolds, Patricia Laffan, Vera Day and Peter Bull. The "Kane" series, which winds next month, has been filmed at the rate of two half-hour programs in a working week of five days by the device of employing two units, one working at the studio and the other taking care of locations, not only in Britain, but throughout the continent.

Gross-Krasne Inc., who, within the last few weeks, have set up their own British organization, are also branching out into local production. They have two series currently rolling in Africa, which will qualify for British quota and a comedy skein in preparation. The two African series, "African Patrol," starring John Bentley, and "The Adventures of a Jungle Boy," with Michael Hartley, will be offered to the British webs within the next few weeks. BBC-TV, which is already showing the G-K "O'Henry" series, will probably be given first refusal on these programs. Their new comedy series, "Leave It To Eve," is being written by Sigmund Herzig and Frederick Stephani and will feature British and American personalities. The pilot will be finished by the end of the year in good time for the selling season.

Sheldon Reynolds has also moved into the Anglo-U.S. telefilm market, with his production of the "Dick and the Duchess" series, starring Patrick O'Neil and Hazel Court. Reynolds financed his own pilot, which has been sold to CBS, but so far he's not been concerned about making an immediate British deal. The program, now in production at the Metro studios, features Beatrice Varley, Michael Shepley, Peter Bull, Michael Medwin, Sydney Tafler, etc. The series is set for a Saturday night—8:30-9 viewing slot on CBS.

Bernard Luber, who entered the British production scene with the "Exclusive" series, which is confusingly an ABC-ABC deal on either side of the Atlantic, has other projects in preparation. The "Exclusive" group, based on the original stories of members of the Overseas Press Club, is being aired on the ABC-TV network in Britain and ABC Film Syndication handling it in the U.S. Luber is now prepping a new series, "The Man from Monte Carlo," which is being scripted by Donald Bull and Guy Morgan, which will have an American male lead and English and French supporting artists. The project has the full support and approval of the Principality of Monaco. Also on the Bernard Luber drawing board are two other series, one based on the "Raffles" character and the other "The Ace of Diamonds."

The Danziger Bros. (Edward J. and Harry Lee), who have been busy on the British scene filming "The Vise" series over the past years, are now making "Mark Saber in London" for NBC. Donald Gray, who played the role of Saber in the "Vise" series, is continuing that part in the new group. The Danziger freres have built their own studios in Elstree, from which they concentrate their production activities.

The Hannah Weinstein-Official Films group, which is in production with the "Robin Hood" series for the third consecutive year, is now launching a new skein of 39, "The Sword of Freedom," which is now rolling at Twickenham studios. Edmund Purdom is playing the lead with Martin Benson, Adrienne Corri and Kenneth Hyde in featured roles.

Another U.S. distrib about to break into the British market is Guild Films, who are closing a deal with a British producing company for the filming of the "Sabotage" series, based on the Leslie Bell book now being serialized by a London Sunday newspaper. Reub Kaufman closed the deal during a recent visit to Britain.

Another U.S. company, Screen Gems, who have had their own office in London for some time, are also embarking on British telefilm production, with the "Ivanhoe" series. Although the pilot was filmed in color, the remainder of the skein is being lensed in black and white. There will be at least 26 in the series and possibly 39. The title role is being filled by Roger Moore and the juvenile lead by John Pike, with a feature part throughout the series by Robert Brown. A network deal has already been concluded in Britain.

Aside from the intense telefilm activity in Britain, there's a growing tendency to produce in the Commonwealth, particularly where the subject calls for such locations. A particular project in this connection was "The Last of the Mohicans," another ITP series, now being screened on the British commercial network. Such series, however, have experienced quota complications and the Independent Television Authority have been reluctant to accord a full quota ticket to such programs, particularly in cases where the cast and crew have included a substantial number of foreign personnel. As an example, "Mohicans" was given a partial quota ticket, reliably stated to be in the region of 75%. In other words, four half-hour programs in the series would count as quota for 90 minutes screen time and not the full two hours they were on the air.

Under a similar ruling, the Associated-Rediffusion-TPA-Lever Bros. series of "Tugboat Annie" has been allocated a 66⅔% quota certificate. In that case, every three half-hour programs aired will get quota for one hour only.

The ABC's of Pilot-Making: Aspirin, Benzedrine, Coffee

By CHARLES C. (BUD) BARRY
(V. P., MGM-TV)

Each year, Hollywood and the United States Air Force expend time, care, energy and countless dollars developing pilots for their respective needs. At this point, all resemblance ends. There are no scientific safety factors to protect the tv film pilot, once it takes wings and flies to Madison Avenue. The Air Force Pilot is much less likely to end up on a casualty list.

The Advertising Agency, rightly safeguarding its client (and its own position) subjects the pilot to a hurricane of questions that makes the most severe wind-tunnel seem like a Spring zephyr. And should the pilot pass this examination, the network rises in stratospheric majesty to scan the brash newcomer's merits before permitting it to take to its sacred air.

But these, the known dangers of film pilot-making, are the everyday risks . . . the occupational hazards. The program board of MGM-TV, of which I am head, knew these terrors lay ahead when we first convened last January. We were not frightened by them.

Our real danger was a mysterious section of the calendar which hangs suspended in time . . . The Pilot Season. This macabre and frantic period arrives annually on some obscure date of winter and drifts to an uncertain Spring ending.

Typical of Pilot Season hysteria is an incident that occurred last November. A tv executive summoned his producers, announced they would immediately embark on a crash program of pilot-making for the coming season. Five to eight such sample films would have to be completed within 60 days. The company gave it the real college try. They assembled the best stories, creative talent and actors that were available to them in the limited time allowed. They produced four pilots and they weren't bad . . . but they weren't good enough. They have not been sold. They were victims of the Pilot Season.

It is time for producers of film tv to ignore the Pilot Season. I think everyone—including agencies, sponsors and networks—will benefit.

I cannot deny MGM-TV was forced into this viewpoint by the accident of birth. When Adrian Samish and Samuel Marx joined me, as Director of Programs and Executive Producer, respectively, it was early 1957. We had 1,500 MGM story properties to sift through, to determine television values. Then, selections made, we had to pore over the legal aspects and determine our rights. The Pilot Season was on us before certain titles began rising to the top of our list . . . "The Thin Man," "Min and Bill," "Mystery Street," "Northwest Passage" and a few others. These would be our shows . . . our candidates for pilotdom.

To produce for the Pilot Season meant that we would have to accept the best actors available but not the best actors. We would have to lower our sights, compromise our values. We would have to discard our standards of quality and forget that we wanted pilot films that agencies would fight to buy.

We believe our decision to postpone our pilots, in which we were backed up by Joseph Vogel, President of Loew's Inc., was the right one. "The Thin Man" pilot was produced by us because Peter Lawford and Phyllis Kirk seemed ideal casting as Nick and Nora Charles. Ben Starr fitted the combined task of associate producer and head-writer. Don Weis was our first choice as director.

We will make our other pilots only when equally right personnel and the finest talent can be hired. They will be available to agencies and sponsors who have need for new shows. Perhaps, then, the honor of possessing the higher casualty list will transfer to the Air Force . . . the Russian Air Force, that is.

Show Biz's Fabulous Upstart

peared on either NBC, CBS or ABC, or the now defunct DuMont network. Second time around, in order to give the productions residual value, they were turned over to one or another of the 16 companies which mix former network material with primary goods for the syndication market.

The Fat Years—'49 to '55

In the years between 1949 and 1955 the majority of the programs still in syndication reached television. Those were the especially fat years for syndication. But then the sales returns from syndication fell off and so did the amount of product; the majority of it came before the business decline.

However, the field of syndicated selling according to most trade observers, seems to have found a new niche for itself. Not only is new production continuing, though on a limited scale, but syndicators are finding new ways to interest stations and sponsors in their product and to make use of the older telefilms, many of which have seen the light of living room video as many as 20 and 30 times. New packages are being organized comprised of middlin' old to old telefilm and is being turned over to sponsors through barter arrangements of one kind or another. And while barter doesn't mean a straight cash and carry transaction as in the old days, the vigor and skill brought into developing and consummating such "library sales" eventually means a further return on syndicated product, according to the deal that is transacted.

Slowly, over the years, the cost of producing half-hour television film programs increased—as union costs rose and as the competition with the networks for the advertising dollar grew keener and thereby demanded better quality from the syndicators.

There are nine series of 39 telefilms each in production and already being sold for next fall via the syndicated route. Because they have to spend so much, in and around the vicinity of $30,000 per half-hour, there are relatively few new shows being risked. But, the consensus is, the very fact there are so few new shows assures them a fair sales return through syndication.

The largest controller of product for syndication, according to the best authorities, is MCA-TV Ltd., the syndication arm of Music Corp. of America, largest packaging-agenting company in show biz. MCA, not counting a handful of series retired from the active lists a few years ago, had 23 series representing a $33.272,600 production nut. Part of that total is the $11,-825,500 that went into the making of nine former network telepix skeins.

Ziv Television programs, deemed generally as one of the most successful units in syndication, owns the second most expensive catlog. Including the series controlled by Ziv's "library sales" subsidiary, Economee TV, there is $25,806,500 invested in the production of 20 Ziv series.

CBS Television Film Sales, with 22 program series in its catalog, is responsible for the sale of $20,563,-500 worth of vidpic product.

There are some syndication companies with catalogs that are almost minute by comparison. Award Television Corp. has "The Jimmy Demaret Show," a series of 13 15-minute sports shows, which cost all of $58,500 to produce.

ATV's $1,225,560 Profit in Britain

London, July 30.

An operating profit of $1,225,560 is announced by Associated Tele-Vision, the commercial tv programming outfit operating the London station (weekends) and the Midlands transmitter (weekdays). The result compares with a loss of $1,015,476 for the previous 15 months.

In his report to stockholders, ATV chairman Prince Littler, states that heavy losses were incurred last summer and the break-even figure was not reached until last October. With the growth in coverage and increasing advertising revenue, he felt the company should come through this summer without incurring losses similar to last year's.

In the period covered by the financial statement, Prince Littler reports an 83% increase in London homes receiving commercial tv, while in the Midlands the increase was 102%. Forward bookings by advertisers were higher than a year ago and he believed they would continue to build up to an even more satisfactory level.

Everybody Loves Us Now

By RALPH COHN
(V.P., Gen. Mgr., Screen Gems)

It took a long time but it's finally happened. The erstwhile black sheep are sporting white ties these days. Yes, television films have finally arrived socially. Even VARIETY says so, and that's no small accomplishment. We at Screen Gems and all the other film producers are not only getting equal space in these sacrosanct pages, we're even getting that space integrated with other tv industry news. Denuded of 5 o'clock shadow and dishpan hands, films now have tails and are traveling.

The problems have been numerous; at times, overwhelming. Now, we may recall a decade of struggling for recognition, heave a sigh of relief, and go on to the most important job confronting us—the improvement of tv film programming.

However, we can't help feeling great about the current picture. More than 50% of nighttime network programs will be on film during the coming season. Financially, the film producers' gross is approaching two hundred million for '57-'58. This should be film's biggest grossing year to date.

Even the movie stars love us. Soon we'll see the television debut of Shirley Temple and Gary Cooper, and they'd hardly talk to us a few years ago. Only last year, a 90-minute film made expressly for television was a daring experiment. The money involved raised eyebrows sky-high. This too, proved a solid investment for advertisers. The programs were not only filmed, but they featured many of Hollywood and Broadway's topflight stars in outstanding scripts which permitted more complete characterization than those obtained in half-hour or hour programs.

So one by one, the barriers are being surmounted. Network and station acceptance. Critic approval. Star participation. Producer, director, and writer enthusiasm. And now, outstanding showmen like Bill Goetz, John Ford, and Leland Hayward are at work. Rogers and Hammerstein have successfully entered television, and they too may be expected to call upon the enormous potential of film.

Future Gets Rosier

Some time ago, our parent company, Columbia Pictures, made all of its facilities available to tv. Now, it seems, everybody's doing it. Obviously, only the public gains by the increased competition. The picture is getting rosier all the time.

Just one question. Why doesn't VARIETY cover the local scene? Why isn't more space devoted to the area between New York and the Coast? Wherever there's a tv station, there's sure to be a copy of VARIETY. Everybody knows what's happening in Hollywood and New York. Every page has its quota of hard news, literate features, and items of general interest. Iowa knows all about us, but how much do we know about Iowa?

The activities of local stations is of vital interest to all of us who plan, create, and distribute tv entertainment. Don't you think we would benefit from a section devoted exclusively to information about local stations? I am not referring to the "From the Production Centers" columns which appear weekly, but to meaty, informative thinking taking place on the local scene. VARIETY talks about some of the trees—the big ones—but rarely views the whole forest. When it encompasses the whole, the printed tv picture will be complete.

NOBODY ASKED ME, BUT . . .

By MICHAEL M. SILLERMAN
(Exec V.P., Television Programs of America)

(With a large, deep bow, and apologies, to Jimmy Cannon of the New York Post.)

You're in trouble when your petite four tells you your newest pilot is lousy.

The new fall season will see 427 press releases announcing that every new series placed in syndication has been sold in 238 markets three weeks after going on sale.

Is network radio coming back, or did it just never go away? I think, like errant husbands, it just wasn't understood.

Was there ever a better satirical radio show than the "Itty Bitty Kiddy Hour," with Ward Wilson and the late and wonderful Perry Charles?

I don't think it makes a particle of difference to the average viewer whether a show is on live, film or tape.

I still think that tv directors covering baseball games don't give their viewers as close and intimate a coverage as is possible.

Film syndication will have a bigger year in 1957 than ever before. Total syndication sales should run around $60-70 million.

Next time you're in a Chinese restaurant, try dipping your roast pork (or fish or poultry) in a sauce made up of equal parts of soy sauce and white vinegar. Delicious.

Can you imagine New York City as a one-baseball-team town?

TV's next cycle will be amphibious westerns co-starring a boy, a dog, a handsome man and his beautiful wife, all of whom settle on a ranch purchased with their winnings from a giant jackpot quiz. The show's conflict elements will arise from their tussles with tax collectors.

Smartest tv promotion effort of the year was Westinghouse's public service conference in Boston.

I've yet to meet a reporter from the consumer press who had the vaguest notion of the philosophy or practicality of tv reruns.

The most exciting street in New York City these days is Third Ave.; the trashiest is 42nd St. between 7th and 8th Avenues, which I can remember as once having class.

Does anyone recognize the network schedules for next season?

I never see kids play hopscotch any more.

Will someone please expldin why that superb actor J. Carrol Naish, has played every conceivable kind of character from a bandit to Luigi to Charlie Chan, but never done an Irish role even though he's a New York born Irish feller?

I still can't take Hurricane Jackson seriously as a fighter.

Newspaper knocks at Milton Berle burn me. The guy's one of the all time great performers and did more to spread television than anyone else.

After all these years, the magic of film production still bedazzles me.

My idea of a funny, but underrated guy, is the Great Ballantyne.

These "Thimk," "Thwim," "Pemsez" signs you see around have really had it.

I'm always tempted, when a guy tells me that on a clear day he can see Jersey from his apartment window, to ask, "Why?"

Now that this column is completed, I am amazed at Jimmy Cannon's ability to write one, week in, week out.

CARTONS OF CARTOONS FOR TV

I'm Not Lonely Any More

By GORDON GRAY

(General Manager, WOR-TV, N.Y.)

My, my was I a lonely guy back in the summer of 1954. I was going "spot happy". As the general manager of one of the cellar clubs of the seven-channel league, I constantly looked in the mirror for spots on my face to justify why my former business associates and friends were avoiding me. At Channel 9, spot business was negligible. In fact, just about the only spots around were red ones and they were on the books, and, believe me, no one was confusing Channel 9 with Chanel No. 5.

But fortunately, in the spring of the year, Tom O'Neil had latched on to 30 fine Bank of America pictures which were soon to become the basis of our Million Dollar Movie. Things began to look a little better. After all, we had some fine feature product and about all the competition it had for feature film were some real, real old ones made in the U. S. A. and some foreign pictures, many of which couldn't break through the language barrier.

So we dished up the 16 showings per week concept and announced that we didn't care when people watched it as long as they watched Million Dollar Movie sometime during the week. We said: "Don't miss 'Your Show of Shows'. Don't miss your friend, Uncle Milty or the 'Colgate Comedy Hour'—see them, but also see Million Dollar Movie at your favorite time." (Say—whatever happened to those shows?"

Well, a lot of people took our advice—so many people that we began to get some real first-rate customers. And another thing happened, strangely enough, just about that time our personal popularity began to pick up. At business cocktail gatherings we no longer had to stand next to the serving table in order to get to talk to people —we went from the "small hello" stage to the "big hello" stage without even stopping at the "medium hello" stage.

Pretty soon we found people in the trade sidling up to us at meetings, conventions and even on the good old New York Central. The opening gambit? "Interesting formula you fellows have come up with; how does it work?" And you'd be surprised at the wide range of people who were doing the asking. Our status seemed to have changed from "sucker" to "sage" in less than 90 days.

'But What Comes Later?'

The next question we encountered went this way: "Okay, so you've got a hot property, but what are you going to do quality-wise when you've used up those 30 pictures?" We answered that question pretty promptly when we acquired another 56 pictures from Associated Artists, many of which were "Million Dollar Movie" caliber.

First thing you know, we had a nice little line of people in front of our office door, each of them with a package of feature films. They all wanted to get their product showcased on Million Dollar Movie because they found out that it was a lot easier to sell the package around the country if we at WOR-TV put our stamp of approval on it.

Then, big Tom O'Neil came through again with his buy of RKO, and we found ourselves in really great shape product-wise. But just to keep the competition on its toes, we went out and bought additional packages containing quite a few Selznicks, some Stanley Kramers and a number of good quality films.

You know what happened then? Everybody wanted to get into the act. The other independents were slotting feature pictures all over the place and the network outlets were programming them whenever they could get away with it.

And still Million Dollar Movie remains New York's top-rated program. And what's more, WOR-TV is showing a reassuring amount of black ink on the books. But this is surely no business in which to grow complacent. We think one of the big reasons for WOR-TV's current success is that we made our mistakes when practically no one was looking. We work with a great deal more assurance now.

Another reason might well be our flexibility. We tried feature films in our 9 to 10 p.m. slot, but when they didn't go well, we switched to some relatively inexpensive half-hour telefilms. Again we got a so-so reaction from viewers and sponsors alike. So we tried a couple of top-budget, first-run telefilms, "O. Henry" and "State Trooper." These have done so well that our fall lineup in the 9 to 10 p.m. slot will rely heavily on top quality telefilms. Among other shows, we will be using "Harbor Command", the new Martin Kane series, and some high-budget telefilms that didn't seem to get a proper break the first time around on the networks.

Our cartoon shows, both hosted by amiable Claude Kirchner, are

3,298 MAKING VIDEO ROUNDS

There are, by the best count of the moment, 3,298 fully-animated cartoons being sold to television stations across the country. In most cases, their impact on the audience has been terrific, usually downing the opposition wherever they have played on a regular basis. But the impact on advertisers is not always commensurate: There is a dearth of tv sponsors who are interested primarily in attracting juvenile lookers-in, yet, at the same time, out of necessity, many cartoon distributors have been able to point to a reasonable quotient of adults, to appeal to adult sponsors.

Exactly 1,533 cartoons have reached tv distributors in the past 24 months, 550 of those animations will break into the market between now and September of this year. Those include 130 from George Bagnall, somewhere in the vicinity of 175 from Metro, 104

Zippy Ziv Gears to Grab Off A Good Chunk of That '57 $125,000,000 Syndication Coin

By JOHN L. SINN

(President, Ziv Television Programs)

The past few tv seasons have taught us a major lesson—our planning and thinking, as telefilm producer-distributors, must grow as the industry grows, and be prepared to meet challenges we wouldn't have dreamed of a few years back.

In our role as "producer," our production budgets for the current year have been set at $12,000,000—the largest we've ever had—to cover both production series before the cameras or new properties we are developing or showcasing in pilot film form.

Telefilm has become a major outlet and an increasingly attractive field for top talent. We have written new contracts with, or renewed our contracts with such star players as Wendell Corey, Broderick Crawford, Barry Sullivan and others in order to provide sponsors with something that is increasingly in demand—star values in the telefilm programs they buy.

The scope of our production is constantly growing. When our tv operations started several years ago, we seldom strayed far from the studio gates. Now, in our "New Adventures of Martin Kane" series, 100% is being filmed in Europe, sometimes as far away from Hollywood as 8,000 miles. We are also going on location frequently all over the U.S. with other telefilm productions, such as "Harbor Command," "Scott Island" due to appear this fall on CBS-TV for R. J. Reynolds; a new western series on ABC-TV for Bristol-Myers, "Highway Patrol," and others. We pioneered in cross-country filming with "Men of Annapolis" and "West Point."

2,800 Client List

On the other side of the fence, in our role as "distributor," we must also keep raising our standards, setting new objectives of sales and service, and striving for better telefilm campaigns for the over 2,800 advertisers on our client list.

Telefilms are an integral, major segment of network advertising, and we will be represented on the major networks this fall with at least two major series—"Scott Island" series with Barry Sullivan, and a network western on ABC-TV.

There is evidence that multi-market film advertisers—primarily those in the near-national and major regional brackets—will be spending a total this year of over $125,000,000 for syndicated telefilms and time slots to house them, with millions more due to be spent by local advertisers for first-run telefilms by local advertisers seeking similar high-qualty programs. At least $25,000,000 is likely to be spent for participations in rerun films aired by local stations—many of which will be films purchased from our own Economee TV Division. So, as you can see, we will be active in all major phases of the telefilm industry, in the domestic field.

Of growing importance to the industry—and to us—is our overseas telefilm markets. Ziv TV shows, revoiced in foreign languages for the most part, are now playing wherever television is found outside the U. S. in Europe,, Central and South America and even in the Far East.

We have found that we must closely follow the latest consumer product developments in all leading fields, because from these often come outstanding new telefilm customers. In the past 24 months, we have had examples of newly launched products, often first appearing as regional advertisers, in such basic fields as foods, beverages, appliance products as well as in such fields as petroleum, retailing or meat packing.

At the same time, we have turned to the biggest advertisers in the country, offering them special assistance in organizing film campaigns to solve various special problems they may face—whether it be test-marketing a new brand, special regional support of other media, uniform-commercial campaigns to promote a special merchandising offering, and so on down a long list of "special" advertising activities.

'We Also Arrange Marriages'

With increases in television circulation have come increases in television costs, and many sponsors today buy their film programs on a co-sponsorship basis, as the industry well knows. Not so well known is how these "marriages" are ar-

Watch on The Rhine, Thames & the Seine

By GEO. T. SHUPERT

(V.P. in Charge of ABC Film Syndication)

Of late, many top men in film syndication have reported their high views of the foreign markets. I, too, am very bullish about the future possibilities as I have indicated in the past few years. but let's look at the situation realistically right now.

Practically all of us have sold in many of the markets opened to television, and I am pretty certain that we have shared common problems, from quotas on foreign product to frozen dollars, not to mention the problems caused by chauvinistic likes and dislikes, nor the political problems involved in some of the industry's product offerings, which we regard as nothing more than entertainment.

Each foreign market presents its own realism whether it be economic, nationalistic, or political. In England, for example, we are all faced with a quota on foreign production. Many Britains have told me that it is flexible according to the needs of British television, but any time it may be invoked as the strongest bit of sales resistance. It is almost like the time clearance problem in many of our own major markets and Canada. After the heavy selling in England in the summer and fall of 1955, the quota began to act as a clamp to create a buyers' rather than a sellers' market. Most of us found a way around this, namely by producing in England either through our own facilities or in co-production with a British company. Currently, we are producing a European background series based on true stories experienced by members of the Overseas Press Club entitled "Exclusive." Previously, we had done another most successful series in England in conjunction with Douglas Fairbanks Jr. which Rheingold Beer sponsored in many markets for four years.

We had previously sold some of our "The Playhouse" series in England, and most recently sold "Wyatt Earp" which has created quite a stir in the higher hierarchy of TAM and Nielson ratings over there.

Over on the continent, in France, the major problem appears to be an economic one. Economic because the market has not yet grown to a point which will support the heavy investment of dubbing. Here we are dealing with government people, or pseudo-government people, with specific budgets which, in most cases, are iron-clad. Our only solution is to select a series which we think will go over in all the French-speaking markets, dub a sample or two, and travel the Continental French-speaking markets proportioning our prices across France, Belgium, Luxembourg, Monaco and French Switzerland so that we can recoup our dubbing investment. Distribution costs and a slight profit would come from a French-Canadian sale. The future may hold another story when budgets are cut back for the expensive spectacle shows, and economically, the people who run French television will be more slanted in their concepts toward film. Right now, we plan to proceed slowly in this foreign market, keeping close watch on developments and investing carefully. Through our theatrical sale of "The Three Musketeers," we will soon have 26 pictures dubbed into French for sale throughout Europe and Canada. In fact, we have already contracted the television showings of this series in Belgium and the French colonies, and we are negotiating with the other French-speaking areas.

Unique Deal In July

In Italy, we have sold some of our "Playhouse" series where the licensee, RAI.TV, has paid us a fee over and above the cost of dubbing, and the Italian sound track belongs to us. I believe that this type of deal is the only type that any distributor has thus far made.

TV's a Wide, Wide World For U.S. Telepix; $14,000,000 Foreign Gross Looms For '57

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

From Bangkok to Toronto, virtually in every country where television exists, American telefilms are unreeling, reaping a growing harvest for U.S. telefilm companies. This year, only the fourth or fifth in which the foreign market looms importantly, U.S. telefilms distributed abroad are expected to gross a sizeable $14,000,000, the figure including the take from Canada.

With growing competition abroad, as each company recognizes the potential, the foreign field doesn't represent a gold mine waiting for exploitation. There are problems galore with dubbing costs, currency restrictions, quota systems, flat fees, limited telecasting hours, a different orientation on what is considered in the U.S. as commercial hits.

But these problems have not been, nor are they today, insurmountable. Attesting to that is the $14,000,000 estimated gross for '57, representing about 20% of the $60,000,000 ot $70,000,000 domestic gross seen for U.S. telefilm companies this current year. And this foreign gross is expected to increase over the years, with some execs confident that eventually, like the motion picture industry, the foreign take for U.S. telefilms will approximate over 40%—a percentage in the "blue sky" vein but indicative of the crystal-ball potential.

Features O'seas Too

In addition to the telefilm end, old features now are beginning to make themselves felt in the foreign tv field. Metro TV is eyeing the Canadian market as its first step into the world market with its pre-'48 backlog. Screen Gems has old Columbia and other pix playing in many Latin American markets. Associated Artists Productions is moving into the foreign field with its Warner product and likewise for National Telefilm Associates with some of its pix.

It's a wide, wide world, to borrow a title, and U.S. telefilms are finding their place in it, playing in over 36 countries abroad, three Commonwealth nations, 13 Latin American countries, 14 nations in Continental Europe, four in the Far East, as well as U.S. possessions such as Hawaii and Guam—and out of the way places such as Baghdad. Joining the trek—in countries with commercial tv facilities—are many U.S. sponsors, the Procters & Gambles, the Lever Bros., Esso, International General Electric and a host of others, riding on the half-hour product they are familiar with in the U.S.

The number one market, in terms of revenue, is the English-speaking one, the Canadian, English and Australian market, the Commonwealth nations. Of the $14,000,000 estimated for the year, Canada, considering both networked and syndicated properties, alone accounts for about $8,000,000. The remaining $6,000,000 principally comes from Britain and Australia, followed closely by the Latin American market, with the French-speaking market running a poor third.

The importance of the Commonwealth nations has sparked the rush of co-production deals, with Ziv, Television Programs of America, Official Films, ABC Film Syndication, Screen Gems Guild—all represented with production deals in the U.K. In fact, London has become the second telefilm capital of the world, ranking only behind, although well behind, Hollywood.

As to popular foreign tastes, they run along lines similar to those in the U.S., with some notable exceptions. Usually flagwaving skeins, and situation comedies are not big hits abroad. But there are no set rules, even among the exceptions. "I Love Lucy" is going strong from Venezuela to Japan. "Victory at Sea" has been sold in Belgium and Cyprus, to name two of the foreign markets. Westerns, action-adventures, mellers, many anthologies, the bread and butter type-shows popular in the U.S., find their niche abroad, too.

In the non-commercial areas of the world, where the telecasting accent is more on information and education rather than popular entertainment offered by the half-hours, the "Boston Blackies," the "Jungle Jims," et al, have a tougher time finding a berth and when they do, the price they often command isn't anything to boast about.

There are very few prestige-type, or informational U.S. tv shows put on film for export abroad. Programs such as those done by the NBC Opera Co., or a dramatic series sponsored by the Hallmark Hall of Fame, a situation which robs U.S. television of some of its rightful standing abroad. The exceptions in this field include "You Are There" limited foreign distribution of CBS, and in the realm of information, there's the Encyclopedia Britannica library films, the latter receiving world-wide tv exposure. Additionally, in the field of news, CBS' Khrushchev "Face the Nation" coup received wide foreign distribution abroad. CBS, too, is active abroad with its regular newsfilm service.

But some of the rough time being encountered by half-hour telefilms in the non-commercial areas of the Western world may diminish in the course of time, it's believed, especially with the Continent closely watching England's experience. The popular success of commercial telecasting in England is expected to spark similar steps on the Continent. Already, Italy and West Germany have instituted partial commercial telecasting and other countries with some exceptions are expected eventually to follow suit. Such a development would turn Continental Europe into a comparative good market for U.S. telefilms rather than a current poor one.

U.S. telefilm activity abroad has paced the increase in the number of tv sets in the foreign market, a set count which appears to be constantly climbing. In the Spansh-speaking market, some 1,000,000 sets are estimated. The run-down for western Europe is estimated as follows: England, 7,000,000, West Germany, 1,000,000; France, 550,000; Italy, 550,000; Belgium, 200,000; Holland, 100,000; Denmark, 76,000; Switzerland, 25,000; and Sweden, 25,000.

With live transcontinental television remaining to be realized the spool of telefilm in the meantime has served to link tv audiences around the globe.

The Fascinating Life & Times Of TV's Biggest Program-Slayer

By WILLIAM C. LACEY

(Manager, WCBS-TV Film Dept.)

February 16, 1951—a giant was born.

Today, nearly six and one-half years later, he is bigger and stronger than ever.

Today's colossus of local New York television, he has withstood in his long life time (by television standards) the onslaught of almost every type of competitive programming, local and/or network: live variety shows, live comedy, live discussions, live interviews, live sports, filmed musicals, other feature films and syndicated half-hour dramatic shows.

By now you must have guessed who I'm talking about. He's the alltime record holder as a program-slayer—WCBS-TV's "The Late Show."

It can be assumed right here and now that all other New York stations look upon "The Late Show" as some sort of an ogre. This is not hard to understand when it is pointed out that already this long-run feature film series has devoured 29 opposing programs and is about ready to bury another victim; this one, of network origin.

However, "The Late Show" has never been considered an ogre by its millions of New York viewers. Despite the many and varied attempts of the other stations to lure away those who constantly tune in "The Late Show," a simple study of the latest (April, 1957) Nielsen reveals that today more and more people are setting their dials at Channel 2 after 11:15 p.m. any night of the week. Nielsen puts "The Late Show's" weekly audience total at 9,760,945 viewers, far above its nearest competitor and a whopping 23.6% greater than it was a year ago April. And, what's more, the program's gross income for June will be an estimated 62% higher than it was last June.

It must be admitted that any type of competitive programming would have difficulty opposing feature films with such stars as Greta Garbo, Robert Taylor, Clark Gable, Bette Davis, Joan Crawford, Jimmy Stewart, etc., etc. It is also difficult for any local show or, for that matter, any network show to survive against a steady barrage of highly-budgeted, big star-name films with successful past track records.

Needless to say, many factors have been responsible for the rise of "The Late Show" as a program giant: good promotion, good advertising, good handling of the films, scheduling, and good "break" copy. But, most of all, a continual source of good feature films to satisfy the hunger of motion picture fans has made for six and a half years of rating—and financial—success for "The Late Show" and WCBS-TV.

As an example of the type of feature film product which in past years has garnered top ratings for WCBS-TV, the following list represents the highest rated pictures for their respective years of presentation:

1951

Repeat Performance—Louis Hayward-Joan Leslie.

The Hairy Ape—William Bendix-Susan Hayward.

Turnabout—Adolph Menjou-Carole Landis.

The Chase—Robert Cummings-Peter Lorre.

1952

Baron of Arizona—Vincent Price-Ellen Drew.

Captain Fury—Brian Aherne-Victor McLaglen.

And Then There Were None—Barry Fitzgerald-Walter Huston.

The Man in the Iron Mask—Louis Hayward-Joan Bennet.

Rocketship X-M—Lloyd Bridges-Osa Massen.

Impact — Brian Donlevy-Ella Raines.

Champagne for Caesar—Ronald Colman-Celeste Holm.

Sleep My Love—Claudette Colbert-Robert Cummnigs.

1954

Pitfall — Dick Powell-Lizbeth Scott.

Pygmalion — Leslie Howard-Wendy Hiller.

Whistle Stop—Ava Gardner-George Raft.

Black Magic—Orson Welles-Nancy Guild.

1955

Smash-Up—Susan Hayward-Lee Bowman.

Cry Danger — Dick Powell-Rhonda Fleming.

The Seventh Veil—James Mason-Ann Todd.

The Man on the Eiffel Tower—Charles Laughton-Franchot Tone.

1956

Command Decision — Clark Gable-Walter Pidgeon.

Random Harvest—Greer Garson-Ronald Colman.

Sahara—Humphrey Bogart-Dan Duryea.

Johnny Eager—Robert Taylor-Lana Turner.

1957 (Six Months)

Camille — Greta Garbo-Robert Taylor.

The Fountainhead—Gary Cooper-Patricia Neal.

30 Seconds Over Tokyo—Van Johnson-Spencer Tracy.

You'll Never Get Rich—Fred Astaire-Rita Hayworth.

Since last December, our giant has received an able assist from a roaring lion—the MGM Lion, that is. "When the Lion roared, the ratings soared" and have been on the upgrade ever since. "The Late Show" ratings, as noted before, have reached the highest point ever attained in the six-and-a-half-year history of the show.

WCBS-TV not only has the MGM feature film library, but also included in its vaults are over 152 top Warner Bros. films, 104 Columbia pictures, and a recently acquired package of 50 outstanding 20th-Fox films, bringing the total of feature films under contract to slightly over 1,200 pictures.

Obviously a tremendous investment is involved. However, it is an investment for leadership in the future. With a backlog of feature films from four major companies safely locked in its vaults, WCBS-TV has assured itself of years of top programming for the enjoyment of its viewers, and top programming as a substantial vehicle for its sponsors' messages.

Sing Sadly for the Comics

(Westerns will replace many comedy TV shows)

Sing sadly for the comics;
Once lords of all TV;
Their rise was meteoric—
The fall was bound to be.

But cause of this dethronement
Is really stop-press news;
Who'd ever dream our old pals
Would blow the royal fuse?

Yet that's the five-star story,
Their little hour is done:
Killed stone-cold dead in the Trendex—
By a man, a horse, and a gun!

Tom Weatherly.

John Nesbitt Exiting 'Telephone Time' Vidpix

Hollywood, July 30.

John Nesbitt, creator-narrator-writer of Hal Roach "Telephone Time" series, is bowing out of assignment this fall to develop other tv properties. Still up in the air is whether series reruns, tagged "Tales of John Nesbitt," will retain same title.

Meanwhile, producer Jerry Stagg of "Telephone Time" has set Ethel Barrymore and Billie Burke to co-star in a series stanza to roll next week. While friends for over 51 years, pair have never appeared together before.

SG Repacts Barry

Hollywood, July 30.

Wesley Barry has been set by Screen Gems to repeat his producer chores on Guy Madison-Andy Devine "Wild Bill Hickok" series, to bow on ABC-TV Sept. 9.

Barry performed same chores on series for William F. Broidy, who recently sold "Wild Bill" to Screen Gems.

Top Feature Films on TV

This compilation, covering a seven-month span of weekly ARB-Variety Feature Film Charts, shows those multi-market features which ranked among the top five in a particular market in the weekly rundown of the ten highest rated features. Coupled with this top five qualification is the dual requirement that the feature achieved a rating of 10.0 and above.

Those titles having that dual qualification in this listing are followed through for their rating performance in other market. Not included are features which were rated in less than three markets via ARB-Variety charts over the seven-month span. Features which may have won a rating of 10.0 or above, but were not among the top five in the weekly charts also were eliminated, for the same reasons of space limitations.

Basis of the compilation, covering Variety issues from Nov. 28, 1956, through July 3, 1957, is confined to the rundown of markets covered by the ARB-Variety published charts, thereby not reflecting titles and rating results unrecorded in the charts, titles and ratings which may have shown up as strong or stronger. But the accompanying chart serves as an index of those stronger features achieving wide exposure. Listed are 43 titles in alphabetical order and their rating history in three or more of the 31 markets tabulated during the period.

Charted in Three or More Markets—November thru July

TV FILM COMMERCIALS PRODUCED SINCE JAN. 1, 1957

Listed alphabetically are the names of a large majority of the companies across the United States engaged currently in the production of film commercials for video. A few firms are absent from the charts because it is their firm policy, they say, not to divulge what they feel to be inner-workings of their companies. By the same token, the firms herein represented offer important reflections of the tide of business —the who does what for whom and how often—and the manner and amount of sponsor product getting to exposure.

In 1956, it was reported, some $35,000,000 was spent in the making of telefilm commercials. There are indications that the figure, on the basis of these listings, will be higher in 1957.

Haircut-To-Fit-The-Face Approach To Programming

By C. ROBERT MANBY
Vice-President, RKO Television

Each day, for the past year, almost 9,000 new families joined America's growing television audience. By mid-summer, 1957, research tells us that the number of television homes in the U.S. will have soared to over 41,000,000—an increase of almost 8% over a year ago.

These are pretty powerful figures, but for the television producer, in many cases, the totals may not be too meaningful. For the simple reason that quantity of audience doesn't necessarily mean best audience for an advertiser.

Here at RKO, we have embarked on a businesslike method in tv film production which we are hopeful will stimulate different approaches and added vitality in television programming. We currently have 10 ideas for television series in development. Among these are included, "El Coyote Rides," to be produced by Ken Murray; "Mr. Big," by Paul MacNamara; "Malolo of the Seven Seas," by Jon Hall, and "Rails" and "Charter Pilot" by Ben Fox. Each is being designed, not as the best for the biggest, but with specific groups of advertisers in mind and specific appeals to the quality audiences these products will most benefit from.

We call our approach to television film production, "presentation-to-pilot." It is predicated on the belief that showbusiness is a business, one in which the use of familar tools like research, development and experience can be helpful in minimizing the huge money risks which seem to be part and parcel of television. Using this "haircut-to-fit-the-face" approach, we hope to avoid the pitfalls and money-waste of runaway pilot-making.

Four-Pronged Goal

The "presentation-to-pilot" method is interested in testing the legitimacy of an idea on the basis of 1) general interest in the subject, 2) special appeal for specific viewing groups, 3) story appeal to viewers, and 4) compatibility of series with specific types of products. Research—our own—and studies by the A. C. Nielsen, we expect will give us the answers to several of these questions, plus other characterisiics which can be most helpful in tailor-making programming. We are the first commercial program package producer to contract for full nationwide research and rating facilities for television, because it can be most helpful toward eliminating the intangibles that negate many pilot films of good show ideas.

Going on the assumption that a single pilot film provokes more questions than it answers, we are asking producers to provide us with two to three-page outlines for 39 episodes, and from these, a minimum of three complete shooting scripts. Story development by the actual writing of these scripts and outlines will certainly test any series' staying power on the story level. In other words, what we hope to do is approach a prospective client with an overall well-developed idea which was conceived with his type of product in mind; then invite him, if he is interested, to help us refine the series so that it will best serve his particular advertising needs and public relations philosophy. After all, since it is the advertiser's money which is involved, and since the investment is so great, is seems to us that this kind of producer-advertiser relationship be established as early as possible.

"Presentation-to-pilot" is no substitute for pilot-making, nor is it a devious way on RKO's part to avoid spending money. We expect to invest 15 to $20,000 in a presentation which, hopefully, will lead to a useable pilot.

This approach to television film production is nothing new or unique, granted. We do know that it is not generally being done, witness the hundred or more pilots going begging right now. We think this method will save time, minimize risk, reduce the current 50% mortality in television film shows, and above all, bring the viewer more interesting, better-conceived television fare.

STATIONS CHOOSE 50 OF BEST FREE FILMS FOR TV

The television stations contacted by VARIETY willingly submitted their favorite free films, because from the institutional-industrial groove comes some of the best vidfare around. Since VARIETY made no effort to exact a fixed number of recommendations from each station, on the theory that the respondents should be able to stop at five or go to 100 if they saw fit, there were returns of sometimes only 10 titles and once as many as 55. Behind this loosely divined philosophy these 50 pictures showed up the most in returns.

Some of them have been in release several years, others are only a few months old, but they all seem to have certain qualities in common, making them the best gratis material available. They—and approximately 40 other pictures which did not receive quite the same high number of votes and hence could not be listed due to the limited space available—apparently all are very high in quality and very low, if not totally lacking in, the commercialism that marks any number of free films for tv.

Only Hope For Indie—Make 'Em Different

By BERNARD L. SCHUBERT

(Chairman of the Board, Telestar Films, Inc.)

Those of us entrenched (Am I kidding? I mean tenuously established) in independent telepix production consider ourselves lucky. If we had to get a foothold in this business under conditions as they exist today, we wouldn't have a ghost of a chance. Perhaps I'll be accused of being dogmatic, but I strongly feel that the door has been shut for the entry of new independents into the field.

The key that shut the door tight was the wholesale plunge into telepix production by the networks and major Hollywood film companies. All with vast resources in money, talent and facilities, making pictures for television, how can a new company break in? Add to this formidable array of recognized telepix entrepeneurs—the deep-rooted independents which have become the majors of their field—and it's obvious that a new indie with limited resources has about as much chance of scoring, or for that matter even getting a hit, as did the Dodgers when Don Larsen pitched the perfect game in last year's World Series.

How then can an independent television film producer with an organization and a record of accomplishment continue to operate under such conditions? Must he close up his shop or can he find an area within the telepix business in which he can compete successfully?

Paradoxical as it may seem, that almost insurmountable wall of competition confronting the independent producer also provides him with some advantages. For one thing he doesn't follow the current trend. He gets off the track and seeks new ideas and subjects. What sense would it be for him to make situation comedies or westerns if everybody else is doing it?

Gotta Run Against The Mob

Take the current oater craze, for example. Any independent with a yen to expose footage on the wide open spaces should visit his nearest headshrinker. The major Hollywood studios and the networks can do it so much better that it would be foolhardy for an independent to go "thataway" unless he wants to wind up in the same prone position as a western villain.

An independent must be ready to take risks with unique and different ideas and he must have a ready source of risk capital. This is a gambling business and an indie unwilling to accept this state of affairs might as well call it quits right now. The indie's approach must be a bold one. To be in contention in an already-flooded telepix market, he must plan his programming at least a year ahead, a requirement that forces him to tie up a considerable amount of coin on what is nothing more than a guess or a hunch. He is constantly plagued with the thought "am I guessing right on what will be accepted a year from now?"

Just as the independent live packagers have been the innovators as evidenced by the big money quiz shows, so must the independent telepix producers be the pacesetters in their own field. While the mob runs in one direction, the independent must reverse the field or veer off in another direction.

Perhaps my own experience—which has been a moderately successful one—will serve as an example. During the heyday of the situation comedy saturation, we brought out "Topper." On the surface this may seem like another comedy series. Close examination, however, indicates that it had something different than the general run of telepix situation comedies. The added ingredient was fantasy, always a tough subject to sell to the American public. However, the gimmicks in "Topper" appeared to catch the public's fancy as evidenced by the high ratings the series has had since its debut. The most important plus for "Topper" was the fact that it appealed both to adult and children's audiences.

At the same time as the market

Gotta Be Flexible To Keep Pace With Changing Conditions

—By DAVID V. SUTTON—
(V.P. in Charge, MCA-TV)

"He who learns not today, knows not tomorrow."

If some wise man didn't say that a couple of thousand years ago, he should have. Because that thought expresses the importance of revising one's plans for the future in accordance with the experience of the past.

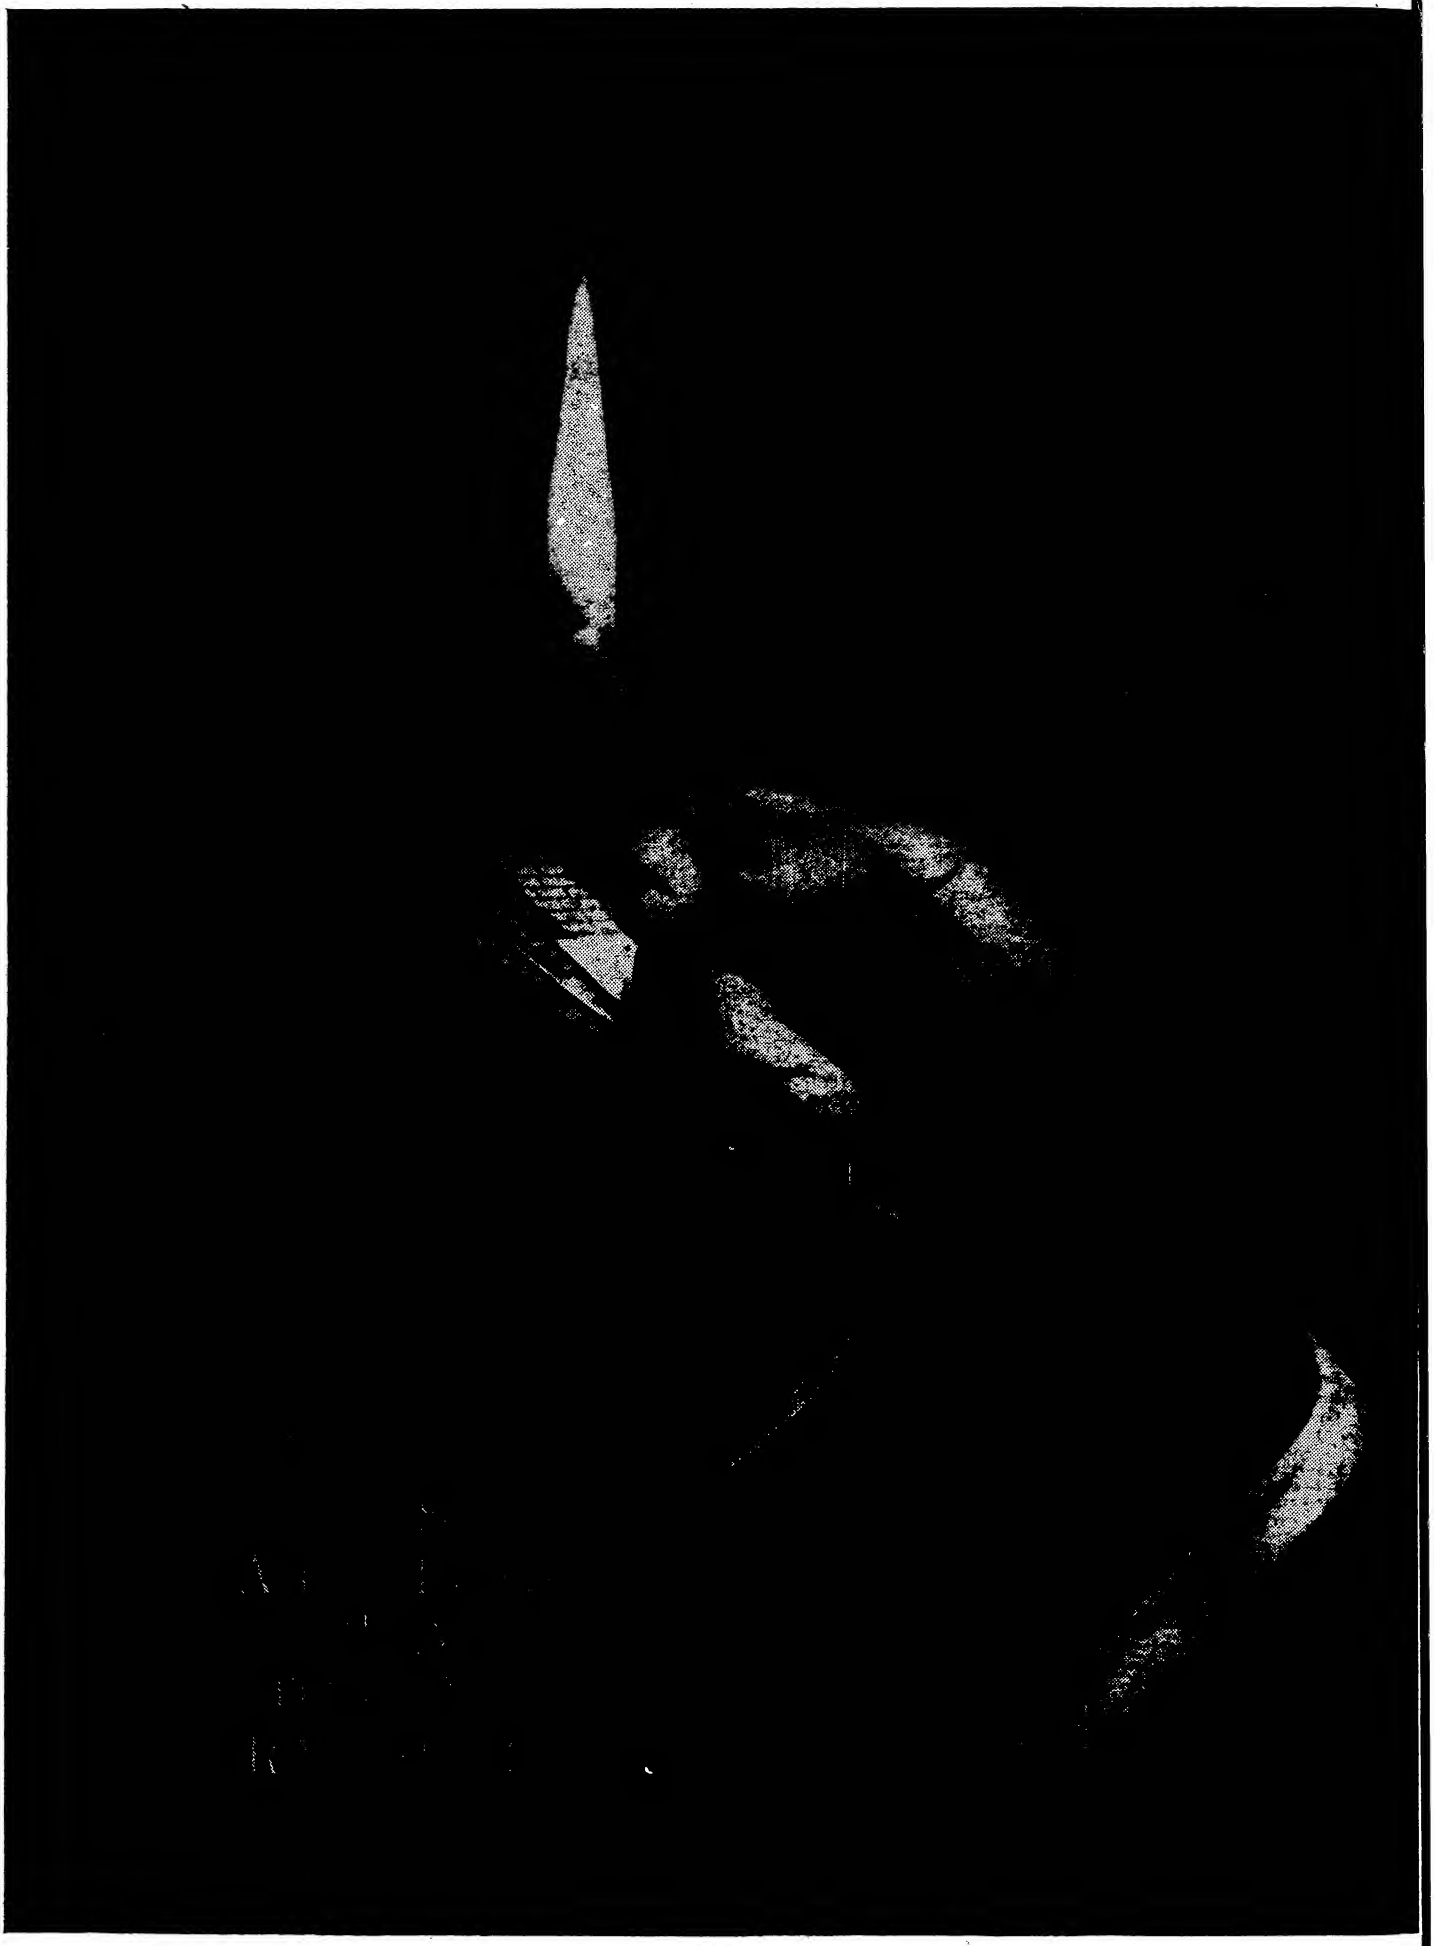
It is particularly appropriate to the film syndication industry because ours is a business of changing conditions and unless we keep ourselves so flexible that we can bend with the times, we are surely lost.

It is this very flexibility that is the chief advantage of syndication for the prospective advertiser and agency. Syndication today is better able than at any time in the past to fill the individual needs of advertisers who desire to supplement network programming, or who cannot use networks because of their own peculiar merchandising problems. Top national sponsors like Nestle's, P & G, Colgate, leading tobacco companies—in fact, virtually every leading national advertiser—are among those who have used syndication profitably, are now using it and will continue to use it.

To serve this vast market with up-to-dateness, with intelligence and with sufficient flexibility, MCA has spent a considerable amount of time in the past year devising ways and means to provide the advertisers with tailor-made service for their television advertising needs. Any advertising program, to be good, must present attractive cost-per-thousand; it must meet the basic needs of that advertiser in respect to his budget and his merchandising and distribution problems. It must be programming of the type and quality that stations are interested in to assure them of high circulation locally and the price must be such as to assure a worth-while relationship.

Our several plans, introduced during the past year, have satisfied these needs of many advertisers with good programming, desirable time periods and good circulation — all at realistic cost.

All of us in television still consider ourselves in a comparatively young industry. But there are certain basic facts which have become instantly apparent to the professional observer:



That a solid tv program must be built with a good script, well produced, fully programmed and merchandised. Surely the advertising agency will look first toward those producers who have proved themselves to be real professionals, for future product on which they can rely. New producers continue to emerge almost weekly, but they can be compared with the .150 hitter in baseball—he gets the ball off the ground once in a while, but he strikes out much too often;

That sponsorship of a good syndicated program offers the national, regional or local advertiser a prestige show, with veteran performers, in the markets of his choice, at a price within his ad budget;

That imaginative merchandising and promotion can help the advertiser take full advantage of his syndicated program by means of premium giveaways, point-of-purchase displays, contests, newspaper publicity and the 101 other ways in which to reap the fullest rewards of a successful television program;

That syndicated tv programming is growing bigger every year; that the quality and production values are improving at a rapid pace; that the extremely high number of renewals for second, third and fourth runs in the same market proves their continued potency as sales promoters.

So we look for increased activity in the film syndication industry, with better product, more exposure and most important of all — increased sales results for the fellows who pay the final bills.

To us, there's only one way to operate a train, and that's to get all the bugs out, ourselves, place it squarely on the tracks, turn on the lights and let 'er rip on a pre-established course.

Others seem to prefer starting out by putting a blueprint of a caboose before a hypothetical iron horse,

Then calling in a lot of potential ticket-buyers to suggest ways and means.

But the trouble is, what if some of them insist on square wheels and outside latrines?

That's why, even though our new syndicated series, "Boots and Saddles—the Story of the Fifth Cavalry," is just now released for sale, we're already deep into the actual production of "Union Pacific."*

It's not that we're ambitious to be flamboyantly prolific.

It's simply that "Union Pacific" passed all our own home-grown tests of what makes a fine show (and show is what we're in the business of) so we're makin' it.

And mind you, we not only don't have a customer for it, we don't even know when we'll go looking for one to purchase a stake in it.

The CNP method of running a railroad is to create entertainment and produce it on film at a pace that's at least steady,

And have it ready to go when the market is ready.

We like to think that over the long haul our ticket-buyers enjoy a ride with all lights showing;

That is, they have a reasonably accurate idea of what they're riding in and also where they're going.

Telefilms As America's Best Ambassadors

By ELIOT HYMAN
(Pres., A.A.P. Inc.)

On June 10 of this year, the first American feature motion picture was shown on commercial television in Great Britain. Just as Hollywood's product has travelled the entire world via theatres, now it is starting its second cycle via television. All of us should welcome this opportunity to exhibit part of our way of life through an exchange of arts. Art is a truly international medium of communication, and motion pictures represent native American art as much as our books, music, painting and other cultural endeavors.

Regardless of political boundaries, or differences in language or culture, films have long proved their universal appeal. If America is known in all parts of the world, it is thanks as much to our features as to any other factor. Conversely, Americans can benefit by having the chance to see films made in other parts of the world.

The picture that started this new television pattern in England was Warner Bros.' "The Maltese Falcon," released to Granada TV by A.A.P. It will be followed by hundreds of other features, cartoons, short subjects and half-hour series . . . not only in England, but on the continent and all the way to the Far East. In fact, a complete duplication of all motion picture, television and allied activities of A.A.P. in the United States is now being undertaken in the Eastern Hemisphere.

After three years of study of the foreign market, during which time Norman Katz, of our office, made two complete trips around the world, we are now embarking on a major expansion into world markets. Companies are being established in the various Eastern Hemisphere nations for this purpose. These foreign companies will not only sell our pictures, but will buy motion pictures made in the various countries for theatrical release in the United States, and will engage in the production and co-production of motion pictures there.

We intend to utilize to the fullest all the rights we acquired, along with the pictures themselves, in our Warner Bros. library purchase, including literary rights, music rights, live television and radio rights, certain merchandising rights, non-theatrical and television rights, and others. This applies to foreign countries as well as to domestic use. Investing some of our money in these activities abroad serves two important functions. It is welcomed by the countries involved, because it stimulates business and employment there. And it helps build our library for future use, to maintain continuity of operations here and abroad. Naturally, in all cases we will be selling all of our product, including the Popeye cartoons, our hundreds of major studio features, Westerns, half-hour series, and the Warner Bros. features, cartoons and short subjects.

Precedent for this type of operation has been set on this continent. A company similar to those described has been established for all of Latin America, which will soon be seeing our pictures, in theatres and on television. And we will be engaging in all of the described allied activities in Latin America: co-production, licensing of live radio and television rights, and all the rest. Australia, also, will soon be seeing our pictures. In fact, there are few places on earth where they will not be seen. Even behind the Iron Curtain, numbers of our theatrical pictures have been screened and selections made. Travellers may be unwelcome, but a little bit of America, on film, is getting to all people.

From our company's point of view we firmly anticipate making A.A.P. as important a factor in world markets as it is in this country. Furthermore, we sincerely believe that an open exchange of all forms of art and entertainment among all peoples of the world offers the best means of increasing our understanding of each other. We are glad to be contributing in some small measure to this goal.

Creativity: The New Battle In Film Com'ls

By WALTER LOWENDAHL
(Exec v.p., Transfilm Inc.)

They're at it again . . . the prophets of doom . . . this time ready to bury all independent producers of tv film commercials, especially the New York fraternity. The major Hollywood film companies have decided to extend their operations to include Madison Ave. as well as Wilshire Boulevard.

While we N.Y. producers waged our own private war, each boasting better production facilities than the next, Hollywood stepped in touting the biggest facilities of all. Then came the old game of economic attrition. Some of the majors began delivering spots at less than cost. Some smaller independents closed. Others are now feeling the squeeze.

We in N.Y. now realize that the battle of facilities is but a skirmish. The real battlefield is marked Creativity and Personalized Service. This is where we can outdo our West Coast competitors. We already have the definite advantage of being in a better geographical position to offer personalized service. The heart of American advertising is right here in N.Y. while 3,000 miles separate most agencies from the "Hollywood touch."

Creatively, few tv spots have risen above the commonplace. We believe that agencies are aware of this and are most eager for creative assistance from producers. Unfortunately, the price factor has reduced the highly creative staffs of many producers. Talent cannot be bought at cut rates and this ad agencies know best of all.

In those instances where producers have been given the widest creative latitude in the production of commercials, the results have been refreshing This practice will increase and once it is established competitive bidding among producers will disappear. The producer will no longer be comparable to a printer, a mere transferrer of storyboards to film. He will conceive as well as execute commercials.

We realize that advertising agencies will not make this move for us. If we prove that we can deliver creatively inspired commercials, our position will be strengthened. We at Transfilm made our first move when we reorganized our production setup for the express purpose of rebuilding our creative talent force. Now, as we add talent from the industry, we are also reaching out beyond the tv field to create opportunities for talent not now in the industry. The tv commercial is still very much the infant and can be developed beyond our most imaginative dreams as an advertising power.

Facilities Not the Issue

We believe that all producers will have to approach competition on this level. Extensive facilities, such as Hollywood boasts, are not really the issue. The facilities in New York have been more than adequate these many years and have been increasing steadily to meet future needs. Close examination of the great majority of commercials proves that massive stages are unnecessary and that the average N.Y. sound stage fills the bill. For the occasional "spectacular" commercial, which most of us have done, there are sufficient large rental stages available within taxi distance of Madison Ave.

Hollywood lays claim to great theatrical motion picture skills which abound there. Impressive? Yes. But, do tv commercials call for such theatrical skills? In most cases, no. The only similarity between a successful Hollywood motion picture and a tv spot is that both are on film. If we are to equate all motion picture technicians merely because they work with film, we must also equate all other artisans solely on the basis of the similarity of their tools, and not their skills.

Advertising on film is a distinct specialty. The N.Y. film producer who was experienced in the production of films for selling, train

—Lived Happily (With Features) Forever After

By OLIVER A. UNGER
(Executive V. P., National Telefilm Associates)

It won't be too long before the Hollywood film mills will be turning out most of the entertainment fare for television. The emergence of feature length motion pictures as a positive force in television programming has paved the way for a closer alliance between the motion picture studio and the television film producer and distributor.

For television, it was a natural development. For the motion picture producer, it was a welcome device to turn idle product into income producing property.

As tv increased its infiltration of the nation's living rooms, the need for diversified and exciting programming became more and more apparent. As a result the "live" big money "spectacular" came into being and tried to cut a niche for itself in the tv program spectrum. It didn't quite make the grade. The ratings didn't measure up to the rosy predictions. And considering the time, money and effort put into these extravaganzas they were costly failures.

At this time the top quality feature length motion pictures arrived on the scene to give a much needed "shot-in-the-arm" to the programming requirements of the nation's newest entertainment medium. The entertainment values in these Hollywood productions could not possibly be duplicated for the price that these film spectaculars could be brought to the television screen. The net result was that the feature film made a considerable dent in the "live" heavily budgeted shows.

The popularity of feature length motion pictures is brought into its proper perspective by a sampling of tv program schedules in some of the leading markets in the United States. A recent check of program logs reveals that Los Angeles leads the tv movie parade with a total of 198 features available for viewing during one week. New York City listed 138 features for the week. Other weekly film totals reached 101 for the Washington, D.C. area, 96 for the Pittsburgh area, 91 for San Francisco, 76 for Chicago, 67 for Miami and 56 for Philadelphia. Other markets have similar schedules.

Despite this heavy concentration of feature film programming, they still manage to command respectable ratings. From here, it looks as if the available films will be devoured by the insatiable demand of television before the viewers' appetites become jaded.

A Time For Reappraisal

With practically the entire backlog of pre-1948 films in tv distribution now and the relatively few post-1948 features to become available shortly, the time is approaching for a reappraisal of tomorrow's programming picture.

We can see that picture taking shape. The Hollywood studios are slowly but surely enlarging their scope of operations and getting their feet wet in television. As this trend develops we will eventually see a happy marriage between movies and television. Both media offer great possibilities and service to the public and should complement each other in bringing the best entertainment to the nation's living rooms.

Although feature films continue in heavy demand the ever-dwindling supply forces us to keep a weather eye peeled for the future. Heavy emphasis is now being placed on half-hour film shows. The story production and entertainment values must be on a par with the great entertainment offered by the motion picture studios to gain acceptance.

That will naturally lead to a closer relationship between the film studios and the television producers and distributors. As for National Telefilm Associates, we are working closely with 20th Century-Fox. Their Western Avenue studio on the West Coast currently is turning out for us two half-hour series based on their motion pictures "How To Marry A

The New Role Of the Com'l Producer

By ROBERT LAWRENCE
(Pres., Robert Lawrence Prod.)

One-stop service will dominate the filmed commercial field in the next decade. The far-sighted producers who take the plunge into the one-stop shop will dominate the business. And the development will effect a degree of stability hitherto unknown to the industry.

The one-stop shop may be defined as one capable of handling within its own organization every phase of production, every kind of production, anywhere. In our organization, it includes main headquarters and studios in New York, an animation affiliate on the Coast, a production company in Canada, a new animation studio in New York and a special effects and industrial division in New York.

This kind of operation is a gamble. To build it, the producer must pour hard-earned cash into his business without immediate returns. In our organization it has meant an investment of five years of work and profits. To sustain it, a steady volume of production must be maintained. The enlarged overhead does not permit a slackening of production activity. It is much more difficult to tighten up this kind of organization than a smaller one.

But this is the gamble that commercial producers must take—and few have ventured to take it thus far. Why run the risk of diversification, they argue, when business is good enough without it? Why compound the headaches and invariables involved in commercial production when there are enough complexities to worry about now? Why diversify when we can profit by specializing?

Enter—The New Era

The answer is that the commercial-making field is on the threshold of a new era. The first ten years of commercial production was characterized by the highly competitive atmosphere described by VARIETY earlier this year. An advertising agency works with a given producer, teaches his production team all about the product, alerts him to the do's and don'ts and then too frequently transfers his business elsewhere. "Elsewhere" is often a new company offering attractive prices in order to establish itself. Then the agency has to start again, in orienting the new producer with the product and problems involved. The time that should be devoted to creativity is devoted to mechanics, and, quite frequently, mediocrity results.

The alternative is the relaxation of the competitive bidding system, and more stable and closer agency-producer relations, which allows the producers' staff to work with the advertising agency people from the conception of the idea to the finished product. Such a change in the dynamics of commercial production is taking place right now. Agency-producer relations are settling down; more and more agencies are "going steady" with producers. To meet the trend, producers must be equipped to fill every possible need of agencies and their clients. Only the producer with one-stop service can do it and he will get the lion's share of the commercial film business in the era of stability.

The commercial film company of the future will be equipped to handle under its corporate roof not only television commercials but industrial and government films, in black and white, color and 3-D, live action and animation, scripts in English and French and other languages, and production anywhere in the United States, Canada and wherever clients' needs arise.

The establishment of this kind of one-stop service is not easy and the near-sighted will continue to be frightened away. It also takes a good deal of talent to man each facet of the operation. It takes knowhow in all phases of film production and in the intricacies of big business and international financing. But most important it takes foresight.

Clients too have resisted the French Look To 1960 for Tele's Coming of Age

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Paris.

France used to pride itself on being the first country to have regular television transmissions—in 1936 — and now boasts about having the best image quality in the world owing to its 819-line definition screens (highest, including the United States, among other countries is 625 lines). The French have not kept up with their head-start, due to the interruption of the war years and the nationalization of tv, and now rank fourth in Europe in the number of sets in operation (Great Britain has 200,000, Russia 1,300,000, West Germany 682,000 and France 500,000).

Actually over 500,000 receivers have been declared, in the annual payments of licenses ($6), with the inclusion of rural, publicly controlled sets, schools and tv clubs. There is also the hardcore sect of Gallic "bricoleurs," those who build their own, do not report it and even resort to ingenious camouflage for the antennas.

About three-fourths of France is now covered by tv emissions and a fullscale blanket operation is expected by 1960. Meanwhile there is one channel originating from Paris, with the various nationwide relays. There are 50 hours of reception per week with 60% live shows and 40% filmed. Some important areas are allowed an hour and half per week for local offerings.

Plus and Minus

Nationalization has one major plus factor in the absence of commercials, but this is allayed by the still rather lacklustre overall program calibre. Being a newcomer, tv is still under radio in the governmental Radiodiffusion-Television Francaise, and remains a Cinderella when it comes to financial handouts in spite of burgeoning sales. Things have eased somewhat this year and it is felt that tv will have its head come 1960 and the complete coverage of the country.

There are three periphery commercial stations on the borders of France (Tele-Monte Carlo, Tele-Sarre, Tele-Luxembourg), but the small areas covered are felt inconsequential. Since the sets have to be changed for their reception, they are of little import in the French television picture.

When tv was revived in 1945 there was only a minuscule studio in the Rue Cognacq-Jay which piped its output to the Eiffel Tower for transmission. There were only 414 lines in use then, with 819 in the experimental stage. A fire in the Tower gave the chance to convert completely to 819, for the few sets in operation were easily changed to the new linage.

Then tv forged ahead and now has 10 studios and is constructing a special centre to make the necessary tv films. There is also a private company, SOFIRA, controlled by the RTF, which has begun production on series for the RTF and also channels them into theatres and other French-speaking areas for both theatre and video usage. Not many American film packages are in evidence, for, as yet, the small rates paid do not entirely cover the heavy dubbing costs. Some, however, are now running such as "Rin Tin Tin" and "Sherlock Holmes." "Kit Carson" lost favor due to family pressure groups who reacted to the excessive violence. They prefer the French "musketeer" equivalent which they feel to be more romantic and thus more acceptable in spite of the corresponding mayhem.

Dubbed U.S. Pix

Many dubbed American films appear on French programs as well as fairly recent French pix. The mainstays are live presentations of full-length plays by the national and private repertory companies, various variety shows and the daily newsreels and newscasts. The recent political tensions and violent upheavals in Eastern Europe and North Africa have given television an immediacy and timeliness that could not be coped with by the slower theatre newsreels. Variety presentations are the most popular and many theatre owners feel that the Monday night program of

Yes, We Said 'Public Service'

By J. R. BINGHAM
(Pres. of Association Films, Inc.)

This summer some five million Americans will learn about one of the great men of God—and our times—Dr. John E. Ross, the "monganga," as they call him. This means "white doctor" and to the natives of Lotumbe, deep in the Belgian Congo, he is their spiritual leader, healer, counselor, friend, and comforter to the halt, the lame and the blind.

Smith, Kline & French Laboratories has made a motion picture about Dr. Ross, called "Monganga." It is an inspiring, deeply-moving account of the man's day-to-day activities in this rugged, remote country far up the Momboyo river. Camera crews have caught the power and meaning of Dr. Ross' work as he treats a leper, comforts a young mother-to-be, performs delicate surgery, leads his congregation in hymns (playing the organ himself), and shows a family how to build a durable home using stone and mortar.

It is one of the great documentary-biographies and one of the most important public service contributions a company has ever made. Through Smith, Kline & French, prints are being made available to TV stations, churches, clubs and other community organizations for free loan.

"Monganga" is probably the only hour-length medical documentary to be televised a second time on NBC-TV, due to the unanimous acclaim of critics and the thousands of phone calls, telegrams, letters and personal messages from viewers who requested that it be reshown. The film was presented both times on the award-winning "March of Medicine" series, sponsored by Smith, Kline & French in cooperation with the American Medical Association.

This story of a dedicated man is now being seen by additional millions of viewers on a station-to-station basis. Already 70 stations have scheduled it for the summer months, with WRCA-TV (NBC's flagship outlet in New York) scheduling it for another (its third) telecast on Aug. 17.

Untypical Pubservice

"Monganga" is a most un-typical public service film. It runs 56-minutes, an all but unheard-of length for sponsored films; it contains absolutely no product identification; and it deals with such subjects as disease, the triumph of faith over ignorance, and personal tragedy (Dr. Ross saw his four children die within one year—not in Africa, but in the United States from a rare malady).

This is just one of the hundreds of industry-sponsored films in distribution today. National advertisers, industrial associations, institutions of learning, resorts, large manufacturers, small businesses, utility companies, railroads, the airlines, bus companies—even foundations, use the medium.

For 46 years we have distributed films from industry on subjects ranging from accounting to zoology. The "show places," the community "theatres," if you will, have been the schoolhouses, the churches, the industrial plants, the clubrooms, boardrooms, grange halls, offices, department stores, lodge rooms, union halls and, for the past 10 years, America's living rooms, through tv.

The industry-sponsored film has become the most widely-used, widely-seen, and influential informational motion picture there is. It teaches, trains, enlightens, entertains, motivates, inspires, provokes (thought and action), and challenges the community and the individual. It is, without doubt, one of the great mediums of communications and, without exception, the most versatile.

What other instrument of communications can play in theaters, in classrooms, on tv, before club groups, in church rooms, in hospital wards, and in other "meeting places" too numerous to name?

In 1946, one of the first films we booked to a tv station was, by coincidence, also about Africa. Called "Liberia, Africa's Only Republic," it is still in active, wide distribution, doing handsomely even though two "successors" about us in Milwaukee

The scene hasn't changed . . . and the Warner Bros. features rating picture on Schlitz Playhouse is bright as ever. In fact, ARB for May gives WTMJ-TV a 31.3 — higher than the combined ratings for all three major studio feature films competing against it at the same time — 9:30-11 Sunday night.

This serves to point up the continuing pulling power of Warner Bros. features . . . confirming what J. Walter Thompson — agency for Schlitz Beer — determined through a special three-week survey some months ago. And now as then, all major studio feature films are scheduled at the same time on Sunday nights.

Milwaukee tastes pretty much typify the preferences of viewers everywhere. To capture audience and sales alike in your area, write or phone:

Millionaire" and "Mother Is A Freshman." Others will be forthcoming. We are also working closely with the Desilu studios. They are producing seven new half-hour series for NTA—"The Last Marshal," "Personal Reports," "Official Detective," "Rikki of the Islands," "This Is Alice," "Tonight in Havana" and "The Wildcatters."

As the flow of feature films to television diminishes, we will see increased activity on the part of film companies to get into television. Audiences have become accustomed to seeing good entertainment via feature films on their television screens. They will demand a continuity of good programming and the writers, producers, actors and technicians who possess the Hollywood "know-how" will be there to provide it.

TV films have also whetted the appetites of viewers for the big pictures now being released for theatres by Hollywood. Sypros Skouras, president of 20th Century-Fox, which is also a 50% co-owner of the NTA Film Network, recently told his stockholders that the success of television largely depends upon the top-quality entertainment supplied by features and that viewers have been accustomed to seeing fine entertainment in the form of motion pictures. The telecasting of motion pictures on tv has sharpened interest in the newer and better films now being produced, Skouras added.

We, at NTA, believe that the future of television lies in a close working relationship between Hollywood and tv. We have implemented that theory and are working with Hollywood to bring bigger and better film programming to television. We have no doubt that everyone concerned will benefit.

one-stop service idea. In our experiences, the problem at first was to destroy such misconceptions as the fear of "mass production" and "factory turnover." Once it was shown, however, that each phase of the one-stop shop's operation was an individual entity, each operated by top specialists in their field producing highly successful film products, the recalcitrants were won over.

Furthermore, agencies were shown that dealing with one producer for all film needs saved him substantial time, effort and money. There is no need to contract and sub-contract to a multiplicity of producers; one shop can do the entire job. In addition, that one shop can produce films in a series, effecting even greater economies for the client. And, to top it off, it allows the client to use the top creative talent that the producer has assembled, to help with the most important ingredient of films—ideas.

The producer who can do some things in some places at some times under certain conditions will be found wanting. The producer who can fill any bill will be very busy.

was flooded with comedies and whodunits, we took an even bolder step by offering the networks a religious series in "Crossroads." This series presented true life stories of clergymen of all faiths. The reception this series received via a network outing surpassed our most ambitious hopes.

And now a period when westerns appear to be the thing, we're heading in another direction. While our competitors are running all over the American West, we're shifting to Africa with an adventure series based on the true experiences of a white hunter.

These variations—while perhaps not revolutionary—are off the beaten path of the telepix herd and represent one method by which the independent can hope to survive in an era of giants. At any rate, it has proved to be a successful method of operation for us.

French Look to 1960

Jean Nohain, "36 Chandelles," actually cuts into their receipts.

Filmmakers have made television one of their main topics of conversation and feel that a modus vivendi should now be established before tv becomes a real menace. However recent statistics by the governmental film regulation organization the Centre National De La Cinematographie, blithely contend that tv had no effect on film boxoffice whatsoever in 1956. Theatre operators are quick to blame film quality for any falloff of admissions, while producers shout that it is television.

Jean D'Arcy, head of tv programming, states that film producers now get a good income from television and are even lobbying for a raise in license rates so as to get better prices for their films. D'Arcy feels that it is this threatened raise which is keeping tv out of bars, public centres and some schools. But it seems to boil down to the great French pastime of talk. A Gallic cafe with tv is unheard of and most impractical. The French are still a "going out" people in relaxation tastes and set sales would have to treble before it could begin to offer true competition to the other established entertainment branches.

High Price of Sets

Another problem is the still exorbitantly priced set which is out of the reach of the ordinary family. Prices range from $315 down to $200 and it is maintained that a cheap, all-purpose receiver has to be created before it can get its just sales. Plans are afoot to get out a $140 set.

Still another difficulty is the French aversion to credit buying. Rural areas and provincial sections are notoriously prudent in this respect, and a scheme is afoot to overcome this by installing tv sets in all new houses and taking out the costs through rent additions, but this is still in the talk stage.

D'Arcy says there will probably be a second channel started in 1960, but that there is little chance of its being commercialized. The government does not want a free business-run station, for it would probably put all the emphasis on entertainment and diversity and leave all public service and educational aspects to the government web. Though advertising may appear on the new station it would be under direct RTF control and share the necessary programs, plus giving some leeway for the much needed zest and activity to the new channel. Heavy pressures by public and governmental groups also lead to this type of solution.

Television is improving but still has a long way to go in polished production and more ambitious programming. Eurovision, grouping eight European countries (France, Great Britain, Italy, West Germany, Switzerland, Denmark, Belgium, Holland), already has been tried successfully and has yearly exchange setups. A future international hookup is being looked forward too. Large-screen theatre television was also demonstrated successfully and talk is now going on about toll-tv.

So television is here to stay, but it will take a long while before it can become the challenge it is in America. The colorful Parisian rooftops are still comparatively free of the antenna kite snares, but as tv improves it will eventually make its mark here and lead to the agonizing reappraisal by other show business facets as was the case in the United States and Great Britain.

It's Now 117 Markets For 'Harbor Command'

"Harbor Command," moving along at a rapid pace, now has been sold in 117 markets, with Ziv reporting a roster of new sales, including Kroger Co., which bought the Wendell Corey starrer in St. Louis on KSD-TV and in Nashville, WLAC-TV, and is planning additional buys in other markets.

In Buffalo, Hospital Service Corp. bought the show for airing on WGR-TV, and in Detroit, Household Finance and Squirt Beverages teamed up for the skein on WJBK. Station sales include KYW-TV, Cleveland; WDSU-TV, New Orleans; WKY-TV, Oklahoma City; WDAU-TV, Scranton-Wilkes Barre; and WTVT-TV, Tampa.

Private Industry Behind Move For 2d Italo TV Setup

Rome, July 30.

The possibility of opening a second television channel in Italy is currently the topic of the day here, even though the practical realization of the project may be a good ways off. It's known for-one that three different private industrial groups have definite hopes of starting a second station in each of three cities: Milan, Rome, and Naples.

Principal obstacle, aside from the financial question, which they claim they have generally licked, is the current monopolistic structure of the Italo telenet, RAI-TV, which has a government franchise (and subsidy) and which now covers over 95% of the national territory with several-hour-per-day telecasts. The companies have, with little success so far, tried to break the monopoly in court. Reports from Milan say that another attempt will be made in that city with the backing of a famed tv set manufacturer, who would put a low-priced set on the market (at a reported $90) in order to widen the audience for the second station, which would be financed by advertising alone.

Another hurdle is slowing down the controversial question: the availability of channels. Italy's irregular terrain currently requires all eight available channels for transmission of a single network telecast. When High Frequency installations become operational, another 60 channels will become available. But only 30 of these will go for tv, the rest being reserved for government services. And HF stations are known to have a limited range, hence more are required.

A further second channel possibility is that offered by the Vatican City setup, though here of course the political aspect takes the place of the commercial one. The Vati-

TV in Greece In 3 Years, Turkey In 5: Ruth Hagy

Ruth Geri Hagy, moderator of ABC-TV's "College News Conference," after five weeks on a North Atlantic Treaty Organization tour of Greece and Turkey, reported that commercial television in Greece is two to three years away. In Turkey, "by hook or by crook," there will be tv in five or six years, she estimated, though she admitted the market there is far from ripe for tv.

Miss Hagy and her investment counsellor husband Albert Brod, who made the trip with her at his own expense, have received an okay from Greek government officials to interest American investors in the country's video plans. Miss Hagy said this week that governmental and semi-governmental agencies (schools, etc.), are making an effort now to determine whether enough receivers could be sold in Greece to make it worthwhile for U.S. enterprise to back commercial tv there. One estimate is that in Athens, a city of 2,500,000 people, it would be no trouble at all selling 50,000 to 60,000 sets.

Another area of investigation, Miss Hagy said, was in the engineering problems created by the small nation's rocky, mountainous terrain.

Within a year, the country will have closed-circuit educational television, Miss Hagy said. The moderator of the Sunday afternoon ABC showcase, said that the country's officials seemed most interested in the educational impact of television rather than in the straight entertainment aspects of the medium. However, the cultural shows, or whatever, in the country's future will be available for commercial sponsorship.

In Turkey, where the interest in video was described as high by Miss Hagy, she said that the money exchange rate, being rather unstable, and other factors would deter tv's advent.

BARTER BECOMES VOGUE IN LIVE TV

• TELEVISION CLEARING HOUSE OPERATIONS EXPLAINED

• MANUFACTURERS WITH SLOW-MOVING ITEMS GET TIME

"MAN's oldest system of doing business—by barter—which during the past year has become so popular in the television film field, appears to be gaining a foothold in the live tv field as well. At least Television Clearing House Inc., New York, thinks so and finds the system so profitable its principals plan to expand operations into new and broader fields.

"TCH for 16 months has been acting as middleman between manufacturers with overloaded inventories (appliances and other goods) and tv stations which need items for gifts, contest prizes, and giveaways and for studio operations. A total of 139 tv stations throughout the U. S. have used TCH's services.

"TCH's letterheads identify the firm as Television Clearing House, Inc., consultants, 157 West 57th St., New York 19. N. Y. Telephone is JUdson 2-6300. Mr. Louis Jacques Dahlman is President and his associates include Mike Michaels, New York attorney and major home builder in Ft. Lauderdale, who is the principal financial backer of TCH; New York attorney Norman Dreyer, and Salvador Nelson, New York businessman having export-import interest.

TCH HAS TOP GOODS FOR TV SHOWS

"Mr. Dahlman's introductory letter to stations reads in part as follows:

"'The manufacturers have placed at our disposal hundreds of thousands of dollars of high calibre merchandise of all types to be used expressly by a television station in the following phases of its local programming: building promotions or contests on its existing program or for current sponsors; creating new programs, or aiding a sponsor who wants a topflight merchandising promotion; for building audience ratings; for retail merchandising tie-ins; for every type of participation activity, either studio or home audience; for children's, women's, teenage or interview programs; for live breaks in film shows as a novelty, and in any way your department deems useful. We can be a reliable year-round merchandising and advance time sale agent for you in markets throughout the country.

"'Merchandise will always be accompanied by ideas, based on your current or future programming. This means that we can gear our goods not only to fit your promotional thinking but also to enhance program content itself. We believe we have in our organization the finest combination of both programming and merchandising talent, whose experience will place at your disposition fresh approaches to your program and sales promotion problems.

"'The nature of the merchandise is unusually good both as to type and retail value. It would not normally be obtainable except through shopping the major merchandise marts. It consists of a wide range of goods—home furnishings of every description, furniture, fabrics, clothing, expensive toys, glassware, clocks, home appliances, bicycles, etc. None of these are premium items usually given as gifts. They represent a distinct move on the part of the manufacturer to sample independent television markets.' (Foreign goods also will be supplied.)

TCH ATTRACTS NEW TV SPONSORS

"Mr. Dahlman said his barter plan also has enabled stations to procure 'many required accessories such as scenery, furnishings, office equipment and other appurtenances.' He said he feels that this in turn has 'helped to upgrade local live programming, enabling local stations to produce shows they might otherwise never have attempted.'

"Another advantage to stations, he said, is that these barter advertisers, once exposed to television, may soon become 'buying advertisers.' He said that in 1956 various manufacturers who took the trade deals also bought about $400,000 in tv time although most had never bought time in the past.

"Television Clearing House, he said, also has been serving as an unofficial program consultant to stations, supplying them with live formats devised by 'the best brains in New York and Hollywood.' Mr. Dahlman personally had been an independent tv producer in New York from 1946-1950 and prior to that was in radio.

"Manufacturers are helped, he said, in that they can move distress inventories lying idle in warehouses. They also gain tv exposures and learn of the medium's effectiveness.

TCH NOT A TIME BROKER

"Mr. Dahlman emphasized that TCH has not functioned as a time broker. He stresses that he himself does not receive time credit on stations for his negotiation services, adding that he receives payment in merchandise from the manufacturer.

"Mr. Dahlman contended his transactions comply fully with station rate cards. The station, he said, allocates the supplier of the merchandise with spot announcements computed in the amount of the lowest spot rate on the card and based on the manufacturer's wholesale value of the merchandise. Mr. Dahlman said TCH buys at the lowest onetime rate and without frequency discounts because the barter itself constitutes the discount.

TOP AGENCIES WILL BARTER

"He reported 'more and more' agencies are coming into the negotiation picture, although in the past in most cases he has negotiated directly with the manufacturer who on occasion brought in his agency for guidance and copy preparation. Mr. Dahlman said his agency contacts now are including some of the 'top level' agencies."

"Liberia" tells of the rubber operations of Firestone Rubber in this democratic country, and of the progress its people have made in the past century. This story of enlightened enterprise and an industrious nation has been televised 840 times and shown in community organizations 57,231 times, to a combined audience of more than 66 million persons.

Why does industry use the sponsored film? Because it is the most dynamic vehicle for conveying an institutional or public relations message. Utilizing motion, sound and, in most cases, color, the sponsored film delivers undivided attention as its sponsor's "bonus." The darkened room, the large screen, the "educational" or "informational" atmosphere (in the case of a club or other community group) lend themselves to greater absorption, retention and, ultimately, action.

And, distributors and sponsors have found, there is a definite hungering for information on the part of tv viewers, sated, perhaps, from heady diets of panel shows, whodunits, westerns and vintage features. Here, then, is the welcome change of pace, attractively presented, technically superior, and downright "entertaining," too, as facts and ideas can and should be!

Industry, with its financial resources, production with its great pool of creative and technical talent, have made a unique team, out of which has come some highly-imaginative, almost daring, motion picture concepts.

Who knows, perhaps, from industrial films new art and communication forms will develop. Recent productions would seem to indicate a freshness and originality found nowhere else.

can is currently putting the finishing touches on one of the most powerful radio transmitters in the world a 200,000 watt setup near Lake Bracciano on the outskirts of Rome, and on "extra-territorial" ground. While the Vatican has itself never commented on reports, especially since a Vatican TV station would perforce, because of the physical setup involved, infringe on the RAI-TV monopoly, and perhaps create a church-state controversy of sorts, some observers here feel that nevertheless the Church is not underestimating the vast penetration and power of the new medium. (As with other entertainment mediums, the Vatican via its vicinity has also exerted an indirect form of censorship on Italo TV, which has often been criticised for its excessive censorial zeal).

One local report, finally, indicates the Republic of San Marino as a likely site for a powerful tv tertainment media, the Vatican or any other source. It's pointed out that San Marino lies atop a 512 metre high mountain with a clear field of vision all round. With current possibilities, telecasts could cover most of Italy as well as the Balkans and even as far as Soviet Russia's Kiev and Odessa. The political implications are obvious. Besides, San Marino, though in the heart of Italy, is an independent Republic possessing extra-territoriality, hence free of worries about monopolies, advertising restrictions, censorship, or political involvements.

WABC's 'Mohican' Sale

After being on the air since April, supported only by spot buyers, 50% of "Hawkeye and the Last of the Mohicans" was bought by Quaker City Chocolate on WABC-TV, New York. Confectioner has bought into 26 first-runs of the telefilm skein Sundays at 6:30 on the network flag.

Adrian Bauer & Allen Tripp agency handled the signing. Sponsor has also bought a 26-week spot sked on WABC-TV for fall.

ranged. Last year, we set up through the connections of our own sales force and leading agencies, no less than 865 of these "marriages" representing $22,000,000 in time and program billings in nearly 300 markets.

Then there is a not-well-known role of aiding the sales objectives of the tv stations who sign for new Ziv TV shows. In a nutshell, this is helping to sell shows they have bought from us, since we are in constant contact with major sponsors. Last year we "sold" (at no immediate gain to us, except for immeasurable station good will) over $3,000,000 worth of time and programs on behalf of stations who purchased Ziv telefilms.

These expanded horizons, of course, are only part of the new directions the film industry is likely to follow, and which we will follow, in order to continue to grow. As producers, we constantly explore every development of talent, technique, film processing and film creative people in our never-ending search for top-quality product with maximum production values. As distributors, we must also meet the ever-changing patterns of U.S. advertising media usage, and the needs and requirements of both new and old advertisers.

Such challenges continue, as they always will in this business.

But we are confident that Ziv TV will meet them, and that we will continue to grow in our service to the tv industry, and to our telefilm audiences.

Gordon Gray

really picking up steam (and sponsors). This might be attributed (over and above the quality of Terrytoons) to the fact that we follow a policy, as far as the competition is concerned, of "Hitting them where they ain't." We program one hour of cartoons from 2 to 3 p.m. when no other local station is using kid-fare, then from 7 to 7:30 p.m. we do it again when most of the competition is concentrating on news programs.

We also have a very successful live show from 3 to 6 p.m. Monday thru Friday called "Ted Steele's Variety Show" and "Ted Steele's Bandstand." These have been on the air for three years. The rating masters rate them from a minus zero to a plus three, but the sponsors who are mostly small business men with big cash registers don't seem to mind. Ted carried close to 200 different sponsors in his show last year.

But our big baby, of course, is "Million Dollar Movie" and the big secret there is consistent quality pictures—not just during rating week—but week in and week out. The public may not know why some stations are "hot" only one week out of every month but they have become wise, thank heavens, to the fact that Channel 9 offers a fine degree of consistency.

We don't claim to know all the answers, but it certainly is gratifying to have so many people ask questions about our operation, our formula and our future.

As I said, I'm not lonely any more.

NTA Names Tabakin To Head Up West Coast

Berne Tabakin, National Telefilm Associates director of national sales, has been named v.p. in charge of NTA's west coast division. Tabakin also is a v.p. of the NTA Film Network.

Tabakin's post was formerly filled by Edward M. Gray, now v.p. in charge of the newly-organized NTA division Famous Films-Programs, for Television, which is handling rerun sales from the NTA library. Tabakin's primary duty will be the company's west coast sales division which is responsible for a 13-western state area. He also will act as liaison with Desilu Productions and 20th-Fox studios, both of which are producing series for NTA.

ENOUGH OF THIS ONE-SIDED INTEREST!

A TV man can get pretty tired of "so-so" work on his important film processing. He sends out a job and it "just gets done"—often because the supplier doesn't share his interest in the job.

At PATHE, interest in the product is a two-way street. We figure this way: The man who sends us a job wants it fast . . . wants it right . . . wants it to come out the way he hoped it would. This takes creative, interested service . . . service that demands the most modern techniques . . . service that builds satisfied customers through the highest of standards in motion picture processing . . . 16mm or 35mm . . . color or B&W, commercials, television or theatrical film —you name it—every job's a special job at PATHE, the oldest motion picture processor in the country.

Today's the day to call PATHE—you might be surprised to find a film processor that cares as much about your work as you do.

for fast pick-up and delivery for color developing—24 hours for rushes (color or B&W)—24 hours for precision animation stand work for the finest opticals anywhere for cutting room facilities available for your own use for newly expanded customer service force, to bring you . . . highest quality at the lowest cost . . .

East European Pix for U.S. TV?

Berlin.

A number of Behind-the-Iron-Curtain pix have reportedly been bought by western filmites with the purpose of showing them as German products via sponsored stateside tv shows. Pix in question have allegedly been purchased for relatively little money but are nevertheless of artistically high quality. (Fairytale and puppet films of Russian, Czech, Polish and other satellite origin—reportedly excellent merchandise).

Bulk of these pix is said to be on its way to the U.S. The fact that the buyers of these items are hiding their nationality easily leads to the conclusion that they fear they would run into trouble or at least considerable difficulties if they sell them under their original label. Involved in the negotiations are said to be a well-known West German composer and pic producer and an American who's the son of a wealthy department store owner in the U. S.

Scratches on Film

Irritate Audiences

Scratches are havens for dirt, and refract light improperly. On the screen, they mar the picture and may distract attention. If on the sound track, they produce offensive crackling.

Fortunately, scratches can almost always be removed — without loss of light, density, color quality, sound quality, or sharpness.

Cartons of Cartoons

from Onyx Pictures, 52 from Screen Gems (cartoons made for CBS-TV's "Captain Kangaroo" and being prepped now for syndication), and 92 from Sterling Television. Sterling, incidentally, is expected to add another 50 or so new cartoons in the next couple of months.

Few Specifically For TV

Most every one of the cartoons that tv can lay its hands on these days was made first for theatrical release, and there is no strong indication that matters will change in the foreseeable future; market conditions, it has been said, don't encourage fully-animated cartoons made specifically for video. However, there are 466 of the over 3,000 cartoons around which were made for television, George Bagnall's distribution company having the biggest lot, the durable "Crusader Rabbits" and the new "Here Comes Pokey," for 325. Then there are the 52 "Adventures of Pow Wow," the Screen Gems pix mentioned before as "Captain Kangaroo" network material, which were made for tv, plus 89 'Cartoon Classics" from Sterling. The 104 untitled cartoons owned by Sam Lake's Onyx Pictures might in a way qualify as tv productions, since the European-made pix will have had their first U.S. appearance on tv.

There are 14 different distributors in the tv field with cartoons. The largest, in terms of numbers and the forerunner of the present-day cartoon "revolution," is Associated Artists, which, particularly behind the "opeye" theatricals, has amassed a strong rating record.

National Telefilm Associates has 475 and Guild Films 370, most of which, in both instances, were released for tv in 1954 or 1955. George Bagnall has 325. Screen Gems has a mixture of new and veteran cartoon product, for a total of 386 pieces. Sterling has 159, new and rerun, Onyx 104, Metro 175 and CBS Film 156. The smallest number known to be held by a single distributor is 11, that being out of the Governor TV camp. Others are Commonwealth with 400, Cinema-Vue with 150, RKO and Goodman with 13 each.

Filler Dillers

Until "Popeye" and "Looney Tunes," cartoons were invariably used as filler for established kidvid, both locally and on network. Trade recollections are clear about how well the material did pre-"Popeye." WATV, Newark, for instance, the first station in New York and one of the first in the country to use cartoons, brought an otherwise weak lineup right up to the top of the seven-station afternoon heap on the basis of "Junior Frolics," which showcased animations. This kind of filler stuff brought a good, steady rating and since there was a limited number of juve-slanted programs two and three years ago, a hefty number of sponsors.

While many of the cartoons for video are as old as the Fred Sayles show on WATV, a wide contention nevertheless is that the kid audience is unlike the adult market, in that product for the juve has recurring, periodic strength. Three or four years, perhaps a little more, the cartoon material that has played again and again in a short span of time and theoretically worn itself out for the moppet mart has in time a new market to play for. So far the theory hasn't proved out in syndicated sales, but if it does in time it will help alleviate the relative shortage of animated material for tv.

Bonus Audience

About a month ago, Associated Artists, distributor of "Popeye," released the findings of a research study indicative to some degree of the whole cartoon field. Company disclosed a "bonus" adult audience of at least 20% in ARB surveys for cartoon shows. Cartoons for years previously had been popular with the grownups in theatres, so, argued AAP, why shouldn't they be via tv?

AAP went on to say that when cartoons were slotted favorably—competition and timewise—they attracted as much as a 30 and 40% adult share and even "an exceptionally fine" 50% adult audience. An example was a recent 7:30-9 p. m. cartoon "carnival" on WFIL-TV, Philadelphia, when the 50-50 audience was achieved, and this against the Ed Sullivan-Steve Allen competition, and Jack Benny-"Circus Boy."

Nearly every tv market in the United States has its cartoons, sometimes through the networks (as with CBS' "Kangaroo"), but usually via the syndication route, with the product as often as not integrated into a favorable local kid format. It's hard finding a local rating for the integrated cartoon, but the "Popeyes," "Looney Tunes," "Terrytoons," which are so frequently slotted in tailor-made local tv formats provide a representative sampling of the strength of cartoon product recently released to video.

AAP, on the basis of a 29-market ARB average, reports that "Popeye" pulled a 16.3 against an average competition of 8.9. That's for all markets studied by ARB since December, 1956. "Popeye" kept pace with ABC's afternoon strip by Walt Disney, "Mickey Mouse Club," beating it as often as it lost, but in either event the margin of difference in ratings was minute. ("Popeye" is currently sold to 71 stations.)

A 19-market average for AAP's Warner Bros. cartoons, a package including the "Looney Tunes" ("Bugs Bunny," etc.), was 14.0 against a collective competitive average of 10.6. (The Warner animations are inked on 53 outlets.)

CBS Film reported a series of "success stories," from among the 47 station deals it has made since starting sales. Again with the ARB's, distrib shows that "Terrytoons" on WOR-TV, New York, jacked the anchorage's returns 68% over last year, when Gene Autry and Roy Rogers features were shown. Packages, too, runs neck-and-neck with "MMC," instances being Buffalo and Providence.

RKO's 'El Coyote Rides'

RKO Television, working on the announced policy of research and story development rather than potshot pilot making, has completed its presentation on "El Coyote Rides" for a look-see by the agencies.

Presentation, produced by vet showman Ken Murray in conjunction with RKO Television, is the first to be given the agency exposure under RKO's new program.

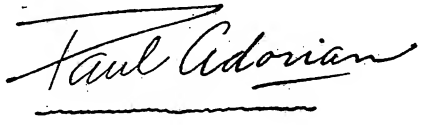
the LAB which COOPERATES with theatrical and television PRODUCERS



On 23rd September, 1957, we at Associated-Rediffusion Limited celebrate the second anniversary of our first transmissions, which launched Commercial Television in England.

By the nature of its operation Associated-Rediffusion is the largest and most up-to-date commercial television plant in the United Kingdom with studios, outside broadcast equipment and remote microwave receiving points of the latest types. Using all these facilities and a keen and competent team, we have in the first instance concentrated on making television into an advertising medium in the United Kingdom where previously there was no commercial sound or vision broadcasting.

We think that during the two years of our operation we have learned how to operate our station profitably, transmitting good programmes commanding big audiences which in turn attract the right volume of advertising.

Being a commercial operation our measure of success is profit that we make for our stockholders in addition to the contribution that we make to the community by the standard of our programmes in the entertainment, information and educational fields.

We are now proposing to increase our interest in television film production and we are pleased to announce that, jointly with Television Programs of America, Inc., we are producing a new series of television films, "THE ADVENTURES OF TUGBOAT ANNIE." Other co-productions now in negotiation will soon be announced.

ing, promotion, public relations, etc., made a natural transition to tv commercials. Because these producers knew much about the filming of products, ad agencies turned to them for creative and production help when tv commercials were first needed. If these agencies had turned to Hollywood some 11 years ago, they would have gotten little more than the cold shoulder. Then, Hollywood refused to recognize the threatening tv medium.

Together the ad agency and the N.Y. producer acquired new skills, sometimes painfully, but always growing. A strong alliance developed. Then from the ranks of these N.Y. producers came many of the agency producers who now guide agency tv departments. This integration of talent resulted in a complete mutuality of understanding and, in effect, the independent producer became a creative extension of the advertising agency.

As agencies learned more about production, there was less dependency upon the outside producer for creative help. That producer became more and more a printer on film. Stripped of all but the elemental labors of putting images on film, the independent producer could rarely rise above mediocrity. Ad agencies, almost as in the beginning, renewed their search for the elusive touch of originality. Hollywood's beckoning call, to many agencies, looked like the ready answer.

Strictly Economics

The challenge is upon us now. The cycle is completing itself and advertising agencies are once again extending their hand for more of the great creative contributions made by the independent N.Y. producer during the growth of television. But, we must reach out and grasp this hand because Hollywood will not sustain the hand they have extended. The crux of the New York vs. Hollywood situation is an economic one.

Hollywood has been notorious for jumping on bandwagons. Several years ago, for the first time, figures were revealed pointing to a $25,000,000 annual gross for all producers of tv film spots, Hollywood facilities were somewhat idled because of decreased production so, one by one, the majors got into the tv spot business.

Let us be realistic. Is Hollywood prepared to live with the rigors of tv spot production, or are tv commercials just their latest flirtation? Are they prepared to cater to a prima donna presently worth some $35,000,000 when they are so involved with the $2¼ billion worldwide boxoffice for U.S. theatrical films? The answers should be obvious.

N.Y. producers, on the other hand, chose to be a part of the tv industry long before there were assurances of a justifiable remuneration. The future looked hopeful and that was what counted. Now, the N.Y. producer must reaffirm his position if he is to survive in television. He must prove once again, as he did in the early years, that he is truly the creative ally to advertising agencies.

If, in this transitory period, some agencies succumb to the Hollywood overtures, I can predict that most of them will return. The television commercial is a possessive, high-strung, impetuous, exasperating, pampered, wondrous child of tv. It demands attention, not as a stepchild, but as a full-fledged member of the producer's household. We in N.Y. have already proven our devotion.

Official Films in Major Revamp Of Sales Division; Reed Exec V.P.

Official Films, going whole hog into the first-run syndication field, is in the process of reorganizing its sales division into two departments, as well as taking on new account execs.

Prez Hal Hackett, in outlining the company's syndication expansion, paid tribute to the station groups and indies for sparking new product on the market. He pointed to the prior production sales of $1,350,000 on "Sword of Freedom," "Decoy" and "The Big Story," sales which approximate a good share of the $3,200,000 production nut for the three skeins.

Under the new setup Wells Bruen will head the division called Station Sales, a six-man division similar to Ziv's Economee, and Ray Junkin will head up a division of 18 men who will deal with agencies, sponsors and stations.

Seymour Reed, treasurer, meanwhile, has been elected as exec v.p. of the company. The new board of directors include Hackett, as chairman, Reed, Lee Mosel, Leonard Fisher, a partner in the Wall Street firm of John H. Kaplan, Stanley Mitchell, Robert Birnheim, of Urban Realty. Mitchell replaces Herman Rush, sales v.p. who resigned. Moving up as secretary for the company is Grace Sullivan, formerly assistant secretary.

In addition, Official has "Robin Hood" set to run its third year on network, and although "Sir Lancelot" and "The Buccaneers" were axed after one outing on network, reruns have been inked for an ABC-TV adventure strip, with Kelloggs and Sweets Corp. picking up the tab.

Besides the three previously mentioned first-run syndication properties, Official has "Vagabond" and many markets of "Errol Flynn Theatre," latter having been sold via barter in about 30 markets before Official's distribution takeover. The five shows give Official 182 half-hours for first-run and a library of over 825 half-hours for reruns, the "Margie," "Stu Erwin," "Foreign Intrigue" and "Star Performance" packages.

NTA's Big Spread On Shirley Temple

NTA Film Network will present four Shirley Temple features as "holiday specials" around the Christmas season Sunday afternoons, with Ideal Toy Co., via Grey Advertising, picking up one-third sponsorship.

Schedule calls for one film to be aired in October, two in November, and the fourth in December. Titles will be selected from the 20th-Fox Shirley Temple roster of "Little Colonel," "Stowaway," "Stand Up and Cheer," "Captain January," "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "Heidi" and "Little Miss Broadway." Deal comes on the heels of plans to network the now grown up Mrs. Charles Alden Black (former Miss Temple) as host to a fairy tale series.

NTA aims to lineup as many of the 134 station affiliates of its "Premiere Performance" as possible. Ideal Toy has held exclusive rights to manufacture "Shirley Temple" dolls since the actress first zoomed to stardom.

In New York, WPIX has slotted the first "holiday special" for Oct. 20, between 3 and 4:30 p.m.

Derel's Hickman Series

Having completed production on the first films of the half-hour "Herman Hickman Sports Adventures" series, Derel Producing Associates laid plans to produce a second series involving Hickman. Latter will be a 12 and a half minute telefilmed football-forecast show titled "On the Line with Herman Hickman.

Format of new show calls for Hickman to pick the winners of each week's standout college games across the country. Rod Warren will handle the production reins for Derel.

WPIX Inks Gen. Cigar For 'Public Defender'

WPIX, N.Y., has inked General Cigar for alternate sponsorship of "Public Defender" Monday nights, while Nationwide Insurance has bought alternate sponsorship of its "Mama" series, to debut in the fall on Fridays.

In the new property department, the indie, which is heavily programmed with telefilms, bought "Tomahawk," a series aired by the Canadian Broadcasting Corp., and distributed by Lakeside Television. It also bought "The Gray Ghost" from CBS Television Film Sales.

Vidpix Buys Spark KTLA 'Gold Rush' Campaign for Fall

Hollywood, July 30.

With the sale of KTLA to Du-Mont Broadcasting System definitely off, station has launched a vigorous campaign to regain top spot among local indies. Paramount TV Production toppers have upped his programming budget considerably and have spent over $1,000,000 on new programming during the past month, KLTA v.p.-general manager Lew Arnold disclosed over weekend.

Station is overhauling its programming for fall, with heavy emphasis on first-run syndication product. Million dollar figure represents new syndication buys over and above normal programs, according to Arnold. However, station is still in the market, and is looking for new feature packages and live programming, besides. KLTA is also prepping big-scale promotion campaign, built around theme, "The Gold Rush on Channel Five," for fall.

Among syndication series buys for fall as NTA-Desilu "Official Detective"; Bernard L. Schubert's "White Hunter"; British-filmed "Sword of Freedom"; new version of "Big Story," starring Burgess Meredith; and "Treasures Unlimited," travelog series revolving around lost treasures. "Citizen Soldier," new skein to be lensed by recently-formed Ohio outfit, will start in January.

Besides these, KLTA has purchased second runs of "Dr. Christian" series and "If I had a Million" (Don Fedderson's "The Millionaire"), Arnold discloses. However, "we're putting on more fresh product than any other local independent," he underlines.

Feature programming also will undergo revamping. One scheme will bow shortly on Tuesday nights, and will be program of horror pix under title of "Nightmare."

Phillip Marlowe Pilot on G-T Sked

Goodson- Todman has acquired rights to the Phillip Marlowe character from Raymond Chandler and plans to shoot a pilot film in the next month or so on the hard-boiled detective character. Deal was set with Chandler, who initiated the hard-boiled cycle in detective fiction with the half-dozen books featuring Marlowe.

Character was the subject of several films, variously featuring Humphrey Bogart, Dick Powell and Robert Montgomery in the lead roles. It was also a radio series at one time. Goodson-Todman hasn't assigned a producer or director to the show yet, but if Matthew Rapf completes his work on "The Web" in time, he'll probably take over the producer post. G-T is currently working on a script and casting.

Pilot, when completed, will be pitched for January sale. Another G-T pilot due for a January effort is "The Quill and the Gun," the Walter Brown Newman series about a western journalist, which is due to go before the cameras within the next couple of weeks.

Rank Org Going Into Com'l TV, Will Program for Isle of Wight

London, July 30.

The Rank Organization is going into commercial tv. The Independent Television Authority states that it has decided to accept, subject to contract, the application of a group formed by the Rank Organization, Associated Newspapers and the Amalgamated Press to provide all programs from its Southern station.

The new outlet will be based on the Isle of Wight, and will probably begin operating commercially in the summer of 1958.

The Rank outfit has, to date, declined to enter commercial tv, and has turned down invitations from the ITA over the past couple of years to take an active pioneering role in television programming. They refused to put in a bid as weekend programmers in Midlands and the North, the outlet now operated by the Associated British Picture Corp.

Associated Newspapers, who originally had a substantial holding in Associated-Rediffusion, the London weekday programmers, have now cut its investment to between eight and 10%, and their entry into a new commercial tv setup occasioned some surprise.

The new outlet will, it's expected, play only a comparatively minor creative role in commercial tv production. In view of the limitations of the territory it will need to depend substantially on networking arrangements with the major commercial tv webs. There will, however, be scope for programs of local appeal, local shopping magazines, etc.

Atlantic TV Acquires 'Valor' for Syndication

Atlantic Television Corp., which has specialized in the distribution of feature films, has taken on its first syndication property, making a deal for "Uncommon Valor" with Executive Productions.

Skein, previously distributed by RKO Teleradio, has been sold in many markets, but was turned back to Executive Productions in the wake of RKO's deemphasis of its syndication arm.

Rival 'Bush Pilot' Telepix Series On Canada Location

Two "Bush Pilot" telefilm series, both produced in Canada, will be on the market next fall, if the plans of rival production companies come off as scheduled. Following by two weeks the information that Canadian producer Bernard van Marken is starting "Bush Pilot" next month on locations north of the border comes word from another Canadian producer, Jack Bordley, that he will start "Sandy Savage—Bush Pilot" by the end of August, also on location.

Bordley, who was reached in New York last week, said that he had been working on the series idea for a "long time." He said Bush Pilot Ltd. had been formed with the backing of Ottawa theatre owner Morris Berlin and the legal representation of Michael Greenberg. Bordley added that in addition to Berlin several other Ottawa business men are involved in the project.

Basing the series, designed for syndication, on his own material, Bordley will begin lensing on locations at Yellowknife and Lac La Ronge in the Northwest Territories.

Van Marken, for his series, is said to have hired a 75-mile tract elsewhere in Canada for location shooting.

Lewis Foster Tapped For Zorro TV Series

Hollywood, July 30.

Lewis R. Foster will direct four stanzas of Walt Disney's "Zorro" series starting next week, on alternate basis with Norman Foster (no relation).

Meanwhile, "Zorro" troupe locations at Mission San Luis Rey, near Oceanside, Calif., for 10 days, starting this week. Guy Williams toplines series.

'Tugboat Annie' Rolls in Canada

Toronto, July 30,

With the noises of the adjacent island airport and Toronto harbor activities competing, filming has got under way on the 39-week tv "Tugboat Annie" series, based on Norman Reilly Raine's Saturday Evening Post short stories. "Annie" series is being filmed by Normandie Productions Company Ltd., with Sigmund Neufeld supervising. Director is Leslie Goodwins. Title role has been assigned to Minerva Urecal; the rival Captain Bullwinkle is played by Walter Sande. On lower costs, five Canadians take principal roles, with seven other Canucks in the cast. Two Toronto tugboats and crews have been hired for the 39-week series and renamed—with painted designations on the bows—"The "Narcissus" and "The Salamander."

"Tugboat Annie" is the second series undertaken by Normandie Productions, the first being "Last of the Mohicans," starring Lon Chaney Jr. and John Hart, with both 39-week programs being partly financed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corp., plus distribution on the CBC trans-Dominion network. The State-owned CBC will commence the 30-mins "Mohican" series on Sept. 27, with the Indians-whites adventures into the Friday 8-8:30 p.m. slot, though earlier episodes have already appeared in the U.S. The "Tugboat Annie" half-hour series is skedded to start Oct. 7 in the Monday 9-9:30 p.m. segment for trans-Canada coverage; with earlier installments to be shown before the series is completed, with latter on six-months' filming time.

Telefilm Followups

Dr. Christian

Though he lacks the folksy bedside manner of his radio "uncle," Dr. Mark Christian (MacDonald Carey) is every bit as wise, as understanding and as Christian as was Jean Hersholt, and he's handsome to boot. Carey is smooth as the young doctor who not only cures his patients medically but helps them solve their personal problems besides.

A re-run, caught for followup here, was a mature half-hour play which had the doctor helping a mental patient to rehabilitate himself domestically after he had been in a sanitarium two years. It becomes a story when the husband logically misunderstands a hushed conversation between his wife and best friend and suspects them of having been disloyal to him. This nearly sets back his progress, until Dr. Christian steps in to bring to light the innocent and protective nature of the incident. By the show's end, the fellow was never happier.

The play unspools in eight brisk scenes, giving the story a feeling of action, which it doesn't have inherently. The dialog, too, up to the final love scene, is commendable for its avoidance of the cliche and its economy, although it's not professional for the doctor in this day and age to refer to his patient's illness as a "nervous breakdown." Under Henry S. Kesler's direction, the camera work is varied and interesting, and the performances of Peter Hanson, Susan Cummings, and Tom Brown in the featured roles are all workmanlike. Les.

Mark Saber

Already screened in the States, this Danziger Brps.' production of a series of telefilms about the cases of one armed private detective, Mark Saber, has been slotted into a 10:30 p.m. Thursday spot on British commercial tv. Starring Donald Gray, who lost an arm during the war, the series has notched a fairly good weekly audience. Production is good and stories are convincingly put over.

The episode seen was about a boxer told to throw a championship fight by a bunch of toughies who'd staked a hefty roll on the other man. The mother of the contender for the championship is held hostage by the hoods to make sure he toes the line. Saber intervenes, rescues the mother and the boy makes a comeback in the sixth round to k.o. the champ, while the gangsters are rounded up by the police. It's an old story, but good direction backed up by suitable acting packs plenty of tension into the plot. Bary.

Salkow to 'Fury'

Hollywood, July 30.

With Desilu's "This Is Alice" series temporarily shelved, producer-director Sidney Salkow is taking a "leave of absence," to direct "Fury" skein for TPA.

He's slated to resume with "Alice" in winter, for January airing.

Krasne Back From Africa

Mutual's New Modus Operandi

tors, Liggett & Meyers, Pontiac Motors and others.

Besides Hauser, the new group includes Armand Hammer, industrialist and prez of Occidental Petroleum Corp., Los Angles, and Roy Roberts, of Ojai, Cal., realtor and oil operator, no relation to prez Paul Roberts. Figuring importantly in the negotiations was Abe Schechter, a former v.p. and news director for Mutual, who now heads up his own public relations firm. The Schechter firm has been retained by the new management group for p.r. work.

Frieda Hennock's Role

Industrialist Hammer (who also operates a N. Y. art gallery), is reported to have put up $850,000 in the network takeover, with $250,000 of this amount to be used in paying off O'Neil debts. Initially realtor-legit producer Roger L. Stevens figured prominently in swinging the Mutual deal, but he's now out of the picture.

Frieda Hennock, the ex-FCC Commissioner, has played a prominent part in effecting the Mutual purchase, in return for which, it's reported, she emerges with a block of stock. She'll represent the network in Washington as counsel.

With the net owning no station facilities, MBS has worked out an arrangement for broadcasting from RKO o&o's in New York and Washington. The six RKO o&o's in New York, Boston, Memphis, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Washington, have a firm two-year contract with the net, bringing along also the affiliation of the Yankee and Don Lee regional networks.

Thomas F. O'Neil, in making the announcement of the sale, expressed continued confidence in network radio, adding though that "we intend to concentrate on our own individual radio and tv stations" rather than national network service. Bowing out as prez is John Poor who will continue though to function in the RKO family as a v.p.

Brad Simpson, current program director, is due to resign. Other shifts and additions also are expected.

Radio Reviews

LIFE AND THE WORLD
With Frank Blair, others
Producer-Writer: Charles Speer
15 Mins., Mon.-thru-Fri., 7:45 p.m.
Participating
NBC, from New York (transcribed)

Life magazine is getting a healthy promotion out of NBC Radio. But it is not all at the network's expense, since the magazine is lending its important name and one one-minute spot a night to the new "Life and the World. Program began Monday (29) at 7:45.

The network, in the quarter-hour strip, does a few feature stories, based on the current issue of Life. On the premiere, the yarns were about heavyweights, babysitters and bullfights. Frank Blair, guided by the slick script writing of Charles Speer, gave a choice account of himself as the interviewer of the various tape-recorded guests. The interviews although maybe mite more clever than most, could easily be characterized among typical radio documentary sounds.

Life, bankrolling one of the three nightly spot participations on the show, has its name forefronted. And NBC has the right to Life name and the novelty that goes with doing an audio takeoff on a printed picture story. The audience has a little fun. Art.

JACK'S THE BOY
With Jack Milroy, Dargie Quintet, Margo Henderson, Brian Douglas, Glen Michael, BBC Scottish Variety orch, under Jack Leon
Producer: Iain MacFadyen
Writer: Stan Mars
30 Mins., Tues. 7 p.m.
BBC, from Glasgow

This new Auld Lang Syne package, into the Tuesday night slotting for a nine-weeks summer stint on BBC airwaves, shapes as a friendly homely show geared for local dialers. Opening effort was bright enough.

It serves as useful buildup for talents of Jack Milroy, climbing Scot funster with fast delivery pace and no pretensions toward sophistication. Comedian, gabbing in naturally Scotch dialect, offers familiar but pleasant fun-fodder, garnering yocks from sympathetic studio audience.

Margo Henderson, thrush with impressionistic flair, accompanies herself at ivories while offering neat travesties in song of Jerry Lewis, English comedienne Beryl Reid, an Ulster (North of Ireland) femme, and British tv patter comedian Chic Murray. Distaffer is a sure bet for tv and a series of her own in that field.

The Dargie Quintet, Australian male singing group, gave out with cheerful tunes. Brian Douglas, young baritone, has vocal prowess. Glen Michael, as foil to Milroy, contrasted with latter via ultra-Londonised speech but clipped it too much.

The BBC Scottish Variety orch backstops under Jack Leon's baton. Stan Mars, freelance scripter, attends adequately to the continuity humor. Package is neatly trimmed by producer Iain MacFadyen, who will share megging chores in series with Eddie Fraser, senior radio producer here. Gord.

would also be on hand. To top the credit list, Cates is looking for "someone like James Mason" to narrate the show.

The concert portion would consist of two suites of famous Armstrong performances, one being the "Spiritual Suite" comprising "Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen," "Lonesome Road," "Shadrack" and "When the Saints Come Marchin' In" and the other "Variations on Armstrong Themes," including "West End Blues," "Mahogany Hall Stomp" and "Struttin' With Some Barbecue," all to symphonic backing.

No sponsorship set yet, but Cates is going ahead with the preparations as a potential NBC-TV entry next season.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

Both tv stations in the DuMont Broadcasting chain have begun carrying four-and-a-half hours a day of the Senate Rackets Investigating Committee hearings which started yesterday (Tues.) in Washington. WTTG, the Washington owned & operated station in DuMont, is feeding the televised hearings from 10 to 12:30 and from 2 to 5 on Mondays through Fridays.

WABD, in New York, carrying the same sked, is taking the D.C. feed. A DuMont spokesman in New York said that the two stations will air the hearings for the next two to three weeks. Nat Warren, WTTG White House correspondent, and Clark Mollenhoff, Look mag labor reporter, will handle the background accounts.

The Jim McKay-Dave Dugan combinaiton on the WCBS; N.Y., "This Is New York" came up with three hot stories in a row last week just before each of them broke on the front pages of the N.Y. dailies. First was an interview with public relations man Sydney S. Baron on his first deal with the Dominican Republic the night before that same deal got him in hot water with Tammany Hall and made him resign the account. Second was a beep-phone talk last Wednesday (24) night with Tommy Manville, with Dugan reading him the statements of No. 10 who had just broken with him. Third was a taped interview with the N.Y. cabbie who found $11,000 in cash in his taxi, with the interview on the air just as the morning papers were hitting the stands with the story.

Eight FM stations in major eastern markets and the seven-station Western FM Network all have signed with a new FM sales rep house bannered as FM Unlimited, Inc. In addition to sales representation, Chicago company is providing promotional and programming services for its stations.

New company is headed by Charles W. Kline, commercial manager of WNIB, a Chi FM station.

Emil Mogul is one ad agency topper who has dedicated himself to the "overplug evil on radio and tv."

He is particularly incensed against those three-to-six spot commercials sandwiched in between station breaks on tv, the plenitude of "hard sell" on disk jockey radio shows, and the like, on the theory "it must kill the goose."

'Court of Last Resort' Tackles Sheppard Story

Story of Dr. Sam Sheppard, the Clevaland doctor who was convicted for the murder of his wife but whose case was reopened last week because of a confession to a Cleveland murder by a hobo, may be dramatized in the fall on NBC-TV's "Court of Last Resort." The series, which concerns the activities of the unofficial "court" headed by Erle Stanley Gardner, is considering the Sheppard story because Gardner and his associates have been active in the case, trying to obtain permission to give Sheppard a lie detector test.

There's no script on the Sheppard story yet, but Lennen & Newell radio-tv v.p. Nick Keesely and script editor Max Wylie, representing Old Gold, sponsor of the show, plane to the Coast this week for conferences with Jules Goldstone and his Walden Productions, which will film the series.

Typical TV Station to Show 170G Profit in '57; More Competition

Washington, July 30.

More stations fighting for the advertising dollar will prevent the typical tv outlet from registering a big gain in earnings this year, but it will still show record profits, according to a survey by the National Assn. of Radio and TV Broadcasters.

The typical station (based on size of market) will make a profit (before taxes) of $170,000 this year, NARTB estimates, as compared with $145,000 in 1956 and $50,000 in 1955. This will mean a profit margin on sales of 17.7% as compared to 15.9% last year and 9.4% in 1955.

The typical tv operator, according to the study, expects his total sales to approximate $960,000 this year, up 4.5% over 1956. He estimates his expenses at $790,000, up 2.2% from last year.

NARTB finds that the typical tv station did a business of $920,700 last year. The typical station in markets of more than a million population had sales of slightly over $3,000,000 while in markets of less than 25,000 the sales figure was $331,000.

The typical station operator received 47 cents out of every sales dollar from national and regional advertisers, 30 cents from local advertisers and 23 cents from network sopnsors.

Programming took 37 cents out of each expense dollar, general and administrative expense costs took 33 cents, technical operations accounted for 18 cents, and sales took 12 cents.

Survey shows that the proportion of the sales dollar derived from national and regional advertisers (non-networks) does not vary substantially by size of market. The portion of revenue obtained from networks, however, is greater in larger markets while the proportion from local advertisers is greater in smaller markets.

The estimates are based on a financial survey being distributed to NARTB members to help management evaluate its respective operations. A similar survey for radio stations will be released next week.

The tv survey was based on questionnaire returns from 218 out of 391 stations—a 56% sample.

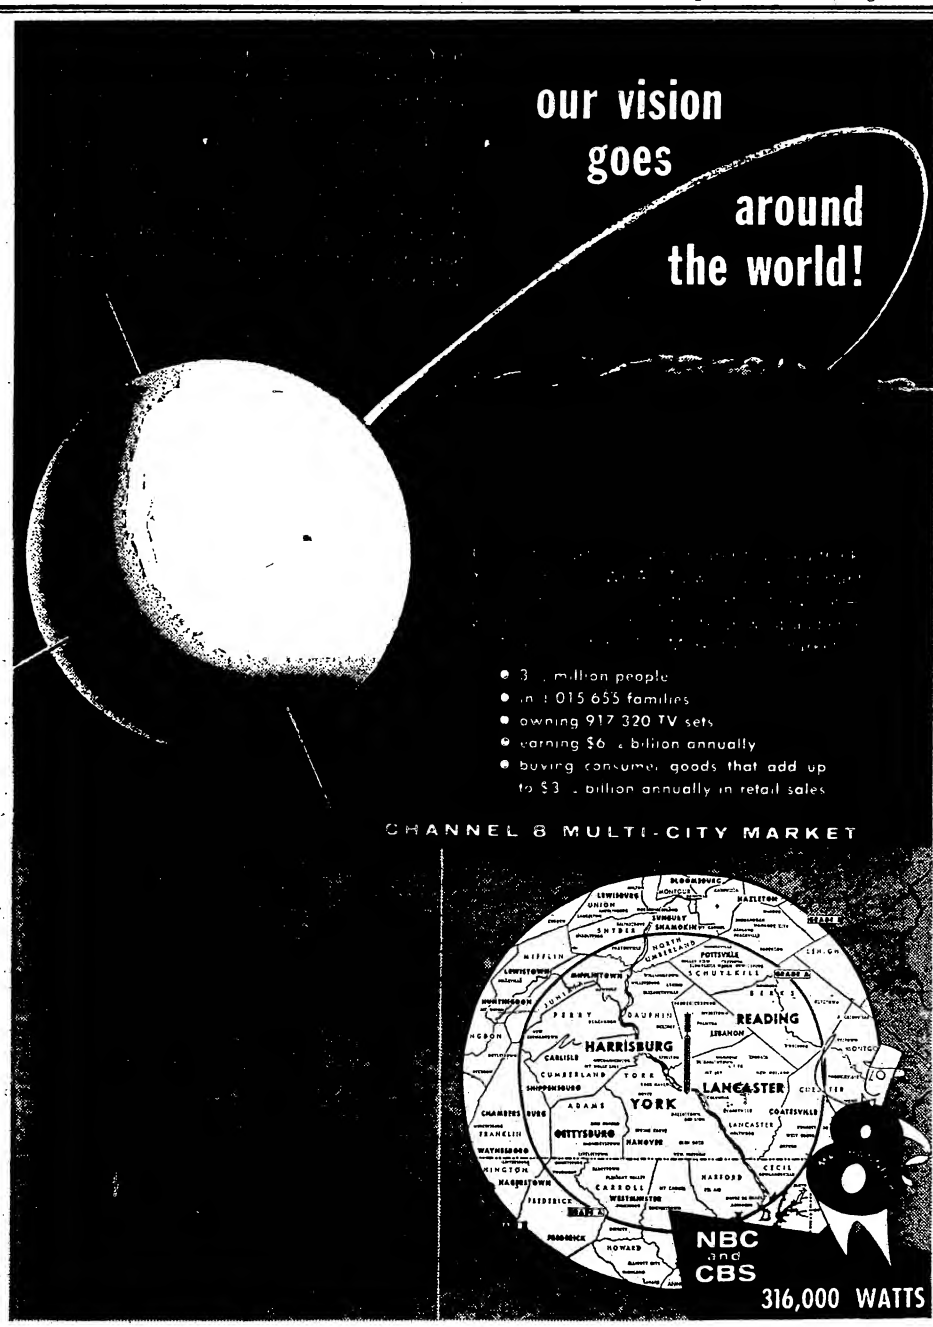
Tint Stake RCA's Top Concern, Sez Burns; '57 Make-or-Break Year?

The color tv problem, stemming from RCA's huge investment in the tinted medium, totaling more than $100,000,000 to date, is one of the principal concerns of the electronic - entertainment company's new prez John L. Burns, according to an article in the current issue of Fortune magazine.

The article, titled "RCA Organizes for Profit," and penned by William B. Harris, is an analysis of the company's management team, the firm's multiple enterprises, its earning picture, problems and its relation to the electronic industry.



According to the article, "color tv is more a symbol than a cause of the problems confronting RCA —and nearly all the 4,000 manufacturers in the $11.2-billion electronic industry, the country's biggest new growth business. At the bottom of most of the problems of the electronic industry is the fact that the marketing, financing, and management of electronics have not moved as fast as a truly fabulous technology."

Quoting Burns, who came from the management consultant firm of Booz, Allen & Hamilton where he was a senior partner, the article states Burns' views on his present job. "One, to get color off our backs; two, institute a major internal profit improvement program; three, plan where we go from here."

General David Sarnoff, RCA's chief executive officer and board chairman, answers his critics in the article, critcisms contending that Sarnoff is more interested in earning money to spend on advanced technology than in earning to enhance the corporation's securities. Sarnoff is quoted as saying that "this is simply not true. The best evidence is the fact that 80% of RCA's present business is in products that did not exist 12 years ago, and which came out of researc hexpenditures."

On color, the article states: "For RCA's whole color gamble, 1957 could be the make-or-break year. Up to 1957, about 130,000 color sets had been sold, 110,000 by RCA. If 225,000 sets are sold by the industry this year; and if a healthy percentage of them move into homes, it would require only modest sales increases over the next three years to give the country one million sets in use sometime in 1960.

"The million mark is probably close to the magic figure that is big enough to attract advertisers and thus force the broadcasters into nearly full color programming, which in turn would have a tremendous impact on color-TV sales."

Chi's TV Strategy

riety, and sports film, in that order during the hour. WBBM-TV countered with 15-minute segments of news and weather, variety, local news features, and an interview show.

The June '53 ARB gave the WBBM-TV hour a 2.9 Monday-Friday average for the entire hour against WNBQ's leading 16.2. With no major changes in personnel or design, ARB results this past June scored WBBM-TV an 8.6 for the hour and WNBQ a 5.6. Latter went from first to last in the field of four Chicago stations. WGN-TV, with a nightly feature film, leads the hour with an overall 14.5 ARB.

The shift in rank between the NBC and CBS stations are shown in best relief in the 10-10:15 segment. WNBQ's longrunning weather and women's combo, with Clint Youle and Dorsey Connors, held a 26.0 ARB in June 1953. WBBM-TV's "Standard News and Weather Roundup," with Fahey Flynn, started with a 4.0. A few months later, P. J. Hoff was added as the WBBM-TV weatherman to attempt breaking through Youle's weather monopoly, and the following June found the show making inroads.

With each succeeding year the Flynn-Hoff show gained ground while the Youle-Connors combo slipped. Last year, the June ARB gave the former a 13.9 and the latter a 15.7. Latest ARB completes the table-turning, with WBBM-TV posting a 20.7 (high for the segment) and the WNBQ shows an 11.8 (third). By this time, WNBQ had shifted the Dorsey Connors feature to the second quarter and slotted Morgan Beatty's news strip in tandem with Youle's weather.

Oddly enough, the other two stations approximately have held the line over the four-year period, although WGN-TV has advanced in position for the whole hour. In 1953, ABC's WBKB, like the other two network stations, had a something-for-everyone strip too but abandoned it the following year for two syndicated features. By 1955, the station was on a steady motion picture diet like WGN-TV. WBKB ratings have shifted from a 6.9 five-day average for the hour (in 1953) to an 8.3 today. WGN-TV went from a 13.4 in June 1953 to 14.5 in June 1957, showing little dramatic change in the strength of old Hollywood films.

Comparative ARB ratings also point up a mass switchoff of sets at 10:15, after the news and weather shows. In the second quarter-hour, WBBM-TV skids from a 20.7 to a 6.7, while WNBQ drops from an 11.8 to 6.4.

The other two stations, meanwhile, register slight gains with their feature films in the second quarter, and then taper off in decimal amounts in the final half-hour. WBKB goes up from 8.0 to 8.5 at 10:15, and WGN-TV gains from 13.5 to 14.9 in the same segment. In 1953, the ratings show, the loss of sets in use was not as abrupt, nor did the feature films register such gains after the competing news and weather telecasts.

One further point reveals itself from the comparative ratings: while the something-for-everyone formulas can often be stronger than feature films, they're seldom as safe.

Gould Vs. Webs

al impression left by Gould that the webs have their back against the wall. Hylan quoted PIB figures to the effect that CBS was 11.1% ahead of 1956 for the January-May period, and also cited the spectaculars to which sponsors are committed; Treyz quoted similar figures for all three networks and declared that "network television sales are at an alltime high, and in the fall, will exceed — by wide margins — any level ever attained in this industry."

Both Treyz and TvB's national sales director, Halsey Barrett, attacked the Times story with reference to newspaper lineage and circulation. Treyz pointed out that newspaper advertising lineage is down about 7% from last year, and declared that "just as newspaper advertising lineage is decreasing in line with newspaper circulation, so television advertising appropriations will grow in proportion to increased audience."

Barrett particularized: "We wonder why if tv business is front page newspaper news, the fact that general advertising in newspapers has fallen 16 million lines in five months (Media Records Measurements) is not also front page news. And how about the news value of the 19% decline in New York nighttime newspaper circulation (ABC) this spring vs, last... or the 4% decline in circulation of just the two N.Y. morning papers with published figures available? And why are not the New York Times circulation figures available for the period following March 30?"

Barrett also pointed out that Gould "overlooked almost a third of network revenues which comes from daytime television" and "overlooked station/spot television which accounts for half of tv's total revenue."

Actually, the networks weren't overly concerned about the Gould piece insofar as its effects on advertisers were concerned, but were unhappy about it in its possible effect on the business community (particularly Wall St.) and the general public. Webs felt an immediate reply was mandatory, not so much to reply on a point-by-point basis as to overcome the impression that tv was facing tough times. It was also felt — by some more strongly than others — that this was a case of a competitive media throwing in an unwarranted dig at television.

NBC refrained from issuing any statement on the Times story, but at a press conference Monday (29) devoted to NBC's lineup of specials, prexy Bob Sarnoff replied to a question on the situation by stating that he expects NBC to be sold out at night by fall.

Shari's 'Hi, Mom' As Ayem Strip

WRCA-TV, NBC's New York flagship, is going back into the morning programming business as of Aug. 15, when it drops the local-only broadcast of the "Today" midwest repeat and inaugurates a new 9-10 a.m. strip titled "Hi, Mom."

New program, aimed at housewives and kids, will star Shari Lewis (who does the flapship's Saturday morning "Shariland" show) as femcee, registered nurse Jane Warren and cooking expert Josephine McCarthy. Miss Lewis will sing and perform overall femcee chores; Miss Warren will do a 15-minute baby care segment, featuring films produced in conjunction with the American Medical Assn.; and Miss McCarthy will do a five-minute culinary strip.

For the past several months, WRCA-TV had failed to program the 9 to 10 a.m. period, even though it's station time, and instead had carried a third hour of "Today." This hour was the repeat feed of the 7 to 8 a.m. hour to the midwest stations. "Today" pattern is such that the 7 to 8 segment is carried live only in the east; 8 to 9 is carried live both in the east and midwest, and a live repeat of the first segment is done at 9 for the midwest. It was this repeat which WRCA carried.

Station is also making some changes in its five-minute "Today" inserts. Bill Ryan will do a local news capsule at 7:25; Lynn Dollar will do an outdoor weather show at 7:55; Leon Pearson will handle a commentary segment at 8:25 and Ken Banghart is slated to do another local news wrapup at 8:55.

SCIENCE SPECS IN SHIFT TO NBC-TV

American Telephone & Telegraph is moving its science spectaculars — four of them — from CBS-TV to NBC-TV come the fall, with the first of the quartet due to be shown on Oct. 25 in the Friday 9 to 10 p.m. series. Series bowed on CBS last season, but Columbia couldn't find a spot for the four new ones in its fall schedule and AT&T thereupon moved to NBC.

Series, which had been produced by Frank Capra, is now being shot at Warner Bros., but one or two Capra pix remain to be shown. The first two Capra entries, shown on CBS-TV, were "Our Mr. Sun" and "Hemo the Magnificent."

Jerry Adler Joins Coast Ashley-Steiner Agency

Hollywood, July 30.

Reflecting the upbeat in Coast-originating dramas and the lush tv field for Hollywood writers, the Ashley-Steiner writer agenting division continues on a major expansion.

A-S writer division now boasts a complement of, five men, with Jerry Adler the latest to be wooed over (he was with MCA's literati dept. for three years). A-S is still on the prowl for additional personnel.

patrons should welcome both the information and the broadcasting material," during the length of the FM broadcasts. Exact hours for broadcasting have not been established.

Protests by newspapers, editorially, also were poo-pooed by Turk who said the papers are "anti-radio, anti-television." As to protests from other stations, Turk said "this is only an experiment. If we decide to do this on a permanent basis, then the CTS board will determine whether all FM stations will be permitted to come in on a rotating monthly basis. It might be advantageous for our riders to hear a varied program of disk jockeys, news shows, etc. Meanwhile, he added, "we are going ahead with a special series of FM programs planned by Richard Klaus, general manager of WERE."

CTS, Turk maintained, will not receive any additional funds when commercials are played. The transit company has a contract with Mitchell, McCandless & Klaus, car card firm embracing advertising at rapid transit stations. WERE's general manager, Richard Klaus, son of Mayo Klaus of the car card firm, maintained there is no connection between the two programs.

Possibility also exists that special FM programming, to be heard at the station platforms, might be piped into rapid cars, but this step will await outcome of success of present enterprise.

Neither CTS nor WERE feels recent Supreme Court decision on transit broadcasting affects Cleveland operations.

mental agency to the end the regulatory powers be employed so that the interests of all people be best promoted and protected."

Some Factions Want It

It's known that there were factions in the Chicago, Los Angeles and Frisco locals, at least, who favored pay-tv, and it's known that Los Angeles delegate Jack Edwards made a strong speech on the subject which didn't agree with the violent Conaway-Nelson set against pay-tv.

"Personally," said Conaway after the vote, "I don't think the public is familiar with the issue . . . we certainly think will bring more enlightenment to it."

The convention also:

1) Heard a report on educational tv to the effect that AFTRA was giving NBC special rates on its educational programs;

2) Heard actuary Martin A. Siegel in a resume, followed by q-and-a period, of the union's pension and welfare plan;

3) Instructed the national board to negotiate rates, still an open question in its code, on commercial cutins on magnetic tape — Conaway earlier asserted that there was no question of tape jurisdiction, that AFTRA "thinks the utilization of an electronic device is the dermining factor";

4) Heard that membership had increased 393 in a year;

5) Heard of a number of pension-welfare benefit increases;

6) Studied a pension-welfare program for AFTRA's 55 employees;

7) Heard that $786,973 for 7,308 members in 12 locals was collected in the past year for contract violations.

night Josephine." The echo effect used throughout his renderings proved to be disconcerting, and badly balanced. Excellent accompaniments by the Geraldo orch, often came close to drowning out the singer.

Ugo Fradiani, a French juggler performed some pretty intricate tricks and earned himself a hefty ovation, and three Italians, Los Olivers, raised quite a lot of laughs with their antics on parralel bars. George Carden Dancers were up to their usual high standard, but Bill Lyon-Show's production and direction lacked imagination.

TV Sooths Disturbed

Edinburgh, July 30.

Television has top value in helping mentally-deranged types. That's the conclusion of the General Board of Control for Scotland, a body responsible for the nation's 35 mental hospitals.

Board's annual report says that tv has "a marked therapeutic value."

Television sets are now in general use in mental hospitals here, providing a source of entertainment and interest to patients.

Dennis James Dickers Client Deals on New TV Network Entries

Dennis James planed into New York for a quickie weekend (27-28) business trip revolving around one, and possibly two, television programs now in the works for which he is being dickered by sponsors. The names of the latter were under "diplomatic wraps" by the emcee-host-salesman.

James came in from Chicago, where he's in the midst of winding up a sixmonth stint heading the NBC-TV "Club 60" show emanating from there. He is quitting "Club 60" as of Aug. 16 with Chi disk jockey-personality Howard Miller stepping into the spot. The daytime variety hour, riding co-op in the 1:30 to 2:30 slot, got a new lease on life when it was renewed for another cycle (into November) after "proof positive" of an overwhelming mail response against ratings of 3's and 4's. But James, though lauding the Chi NBC studio, the technicians and the talent as "wonderful in facilities and cooperation," had meanwhile resigned the chore, with his Gotham visit aimed at returning him to network originations from what has been his home base for some 17 years in tv.

Before returning to N. Y. permanently, James will be part of a troupe playing a Sunday (Aug. 17) date at the Illinois State Fair in Springfield.

Polly Bergen

available due to the CBS commitment.

After trying other stars, without success or agreement among the parties, NBC and the two sponsors came back to MCA with a suggestion that the agency make a try at prying Miss Bergen loose from the CBS pact. MCA agreed, and intimated there was a good chance of succeeding, and con-contracts were written (but not signed) for a deal conditional upon her availability in September. When word got out, CBS hit the roof, presumably because MCA had allowed the negotiations to proceed so far without consulting the web. MCA and CBS huddled virtually throughout the day and every day since last Wednesday (24) when VARIETY broke the story on the deal, right through this week, but MCA was unable to budge CBS from its position.

As far as NBC and the sponsors are concerned, they are simply marking time to allow MCA to try to straighten out the situation. If Miss Bergen can't be pried loose, then the search will start again.

for again, we are dealing with a governmental or pseudo-governmental monopolistic situation where precedents are very meaningful and where a buyers' market exists. However, Italy opened television to commercial advertising on a very limited basis this year. The history of commercial television everywhere portends that the future in Italy will be very bright, especially when RAI-TV opens a second service in competition with itself. According to Italian law, they have another 19 years of guaranteed manopoly, but here are industrial influences afoot bringing pressure on high governmental authorities to make some changes in this sphere.

Germany is a centralized-decentralized governmental network operation. Commercial television has alread spread in its half-hour magazine-type advertising program from Munich to Berlin, and again, the future looks very promising. We have not broached this market as yet because of the lack of foreseeable profit over and above the dubbing investment. Some of our competition has done business in the market, and we appreciate their pioneering efforts. We will be in there soon.

The most bullish of all the markets in foreign language areas is Latin-America where television is much as we know it. Even the government-controlled operations in Argentina and Colombia are either all, or in part, commercial. But once again, we run into currency problems which must be solved through barter. Recently, the governmental change in Colombia would appear to be encouraging news. ABC Film Syndication has cracked seven markets in Latin-America thus far with two Spanish-dubbed shows, "Passport to Danger" and "Racket Squad," both very well received by the public and advertisers. We look forward to much more rapid development this year and next throughout Latin-America, keeping in tune with the blossoming economies in most countries, but we must keep our finger on the differences in each market. To this end, we have created an International Bulletin with primary emphasis on Latin-America which we send out monthly to nearly a thousand people in advertising agencies, sponsors and stations. Not too long ago, as a special report, we made what we believed to be a very strong case for the use of dubbed film series with our analysis of what is happening in the Puerto Rican market using a recent Telepulse report as our source.

The future in all markets looms promising. However, I believe the industry should get together in an organization similar to the MPEA to negotiate frozen money situations, quotas, labor exchanges and other such matters of freedom of entry and exit of product and programming. The future will need such an organization just as it was needed in the Motion Picture business. In fact, we need it now.

I also believe that in the future it will be feasible to acquire foreign product for distribution in other foreign areas through well-established sales organizations.

With these various thoughts in mind, we are making our expansion plans for representation in every key area of the world, and we are currently investigating suitable product to add to our own for exclusive foreign distribution.

Wherever American film shows have been sold, they have been almost without exception successful which has sort of spread the economic gospel to the advertiser on the benefits of a film show, rather than spending the additional money necessary to achieve a local live production of the same quality.

Money will eventually be made by television film distributors selling abroad, but it all takes time and careful planning, which we here at ABC film find extremely fascinating and challenging.

Kansas City—Jack Jackson, Director of Agriculture for KCMO-Radio and KCMO-TV, is resigning effective Oct. 1 to accept the position of Director of Information for the National Grange, Washington, D.C., according to E. K. Hartenbower, general manager of KCMO Broadcasting. Jackson has headed the station's farm department since it was organized in 1947.

N. Y. Times Nixes Ad On 'Finder's Keepers,' Salves Telephone Co.

The New York Times took the unusual step last week of refusing to accept an advertisement from WRCA, the N.Y. flagship of NBC Radio. Ad was a teaser on the station's "Finder's Keepers" contest, in which the station's "Pulse" show broadcasts clues as to the whereabouts of $1,000 which the finder keeps.

Teaser ads showed a telephone booth and suggested that the loot could be found there. A station spokesman said the N.Y. Telephone Co. requested the Times not to run the ad anymore because some people were beginning to damage phone booths in looking for the loot. The Times had reason to sympathize with the phone company, for last year when the station ran the same kind of contest, listeners mobbed the Times offices when a clue suggested the money could be found in a Times want ad box.

WRCA moreover this week put a new wrinkle on the contest by inaugurating a special competition for ad agency personnel. Anybody working in an agency who doesn't have time to look for the money but who has an idea where it is can write the location in on a post-card.

CALIF.'S 5% BITE ON TV-AM BOUTS

Sacramento, Cal., July 30.

California Gov. Goodwin J. Knight has signed a bill imposing a 5% tax on fight promoters' receipts from radio-tv rights to boxing and wrestling matches.

State now levies a 5% tax on gross gate receipts of each match.

The legislation was introduced at the request of the State Athletic Commission, which complained it needed additional revenue to police California boxing and wrestling adequately.

Commission chairman Dan Kilroy said the commission was supported entirely by boxing and wrestling tax revenue and that the attendance drop had left the group without enough money to do its job.

"We were convinced," he said, "that a large part of the gate decrease was due to tv and we felt the only way to get more revenue was to tax the promoters' share of tv and radio rights."

An accurate estimate on how much the new tax may bring in is impossible, he added, but "educated guesses are that it might run from $10,000 to $20,000 a year." The 1956-57 revenue from the gate tax was about $108,000.

Chi Discarding Tabus

WBBM-TV Is No Longer Afraid to Tackle Subject Of Unwed Motherhood

Chicago, July 30.

Now that the ice has been broken, several long standing broadcasting tabus are being sidestepped by individual stations with quiet nonchalance. Though tv started gingerly with the subject of dope addiction, for instance, it's now being discussed as freely as if it had never been verboten. WNBQ here, for one, is in the midst of a 13-week documentary series on narcotics, "Shadows of the City," conducted by Cook County Sheriff Joseph Lohman.

Latest tabu to be ditched is that on unwed motherhood. Without fanfare, WBBM-TV devoted the past entire week of the Lee Phillip daytimer, "Shopping with Miss Lee," to films made at the Chicago Foundling Home, a refuge for unmarried expectant mothers. Lensed by the station's Public Affairs department, the films depict all the procedures at the home, from admittance to rehabilitation, and include interviews with several of the unwed mothers, who are shown only by the backs of their heads.

Foundling home coverage coincides with the institution's current fund-raising drive (it's supported only by donation, and even the adoptions are gratis), although WBBM-TV will make no overt pitch for charity contributions. Participating sponsors of the show have given their blessings to the project, and the station says it has also received approbation from Father John S. Banahan, newly appointed overseer of radio and tv for the Chicago archdiocese.

SIGN CLAUDE RAINS FOR TV 'PIED PIPER'

Hollywood, July 30.

With the signing of Claude Rains to play the evil mayor, major casting has been completed for the tv film spectacular "Pied Piper of Hamelin," and it goes before the cameras at California Studios Aug 19. It will be produced independently by Hal Stanley under the Starstan banner, for Liggett & Myers sponsorship.

Van Johnson and Kay Starr previously had been set for top roles with Lori Nelson featured in the musical adaptation of the tale which haven't yet been placed in the network schedule.

Spec lineup represents an increase of 15% in the number of shows over last season; total time is 117 hours, 21% over last year; 26 shows of the 100, constituting 35 hours, will be televised in color. Some of the schedule, reflecting the irregular preemption pattern, will occur in bunches—in the 12-day period between Nov. 16 and 27, web will air no less than eight specials.

Lineup constitutes such previously announced "series" as "Hallmark Hall of Fame," with Maurice Evans set for "Dial 'M' for Murder" and a Shakespearean comedy, plus an original by James Costigan for an Easter show; the six Bob Hope, six Jerry Lewis and two Dean Martin shows; three Las Vegas originations; the 16 Henry Jaffe-produced, Shirley Temple-hosted fairy tale series, with Miss Temple starring in the "Beauty and the Beast" kickoffer, this to be followed by "Legend of Sleepy Hollow" and in April by a two-part musical version of "Robinson Crusoe"; the four NBC Opera entries, along with a Christmas presentation of "Amahl and the Night Visitors"; plus single shows like "Annie Get Your Gun," "Pinocchio," "The Pied Piper," "Texaco Command Appearance," the General Motors 50th anni show, the Standard Oil of N. J. 7th anni segment and the Emmy and Oscar Awards.

On the public affairs side, web has set (but not yet scheduled) five "Conversations with Elder Wise Men" shows with Pablo Picasso, Igor Stravinsky, Ruth St. Denis and Ted Shawn, David Ben-Gurion and Vannevar Bush; a Frank Capra science show on cosmic rays for Bell Telephone; two "Project 20" segments, "The Innocent Years" and "Back in the Thirties"; "Assignment: Southeast Asia"; "Eleven Against the Ice"; and a pair of "March of Medicine" specials. Not included in the lineup are a pair of "in-depth" news series featuring Martin Agronsky along with one-shots comprising a Chet Huntley interview with Tunisian President Habib Bourguiba; a three-parter on life in Poland; a Dave Brinkley report based on a tour of the U. S. and a special report on segregation in Great Britain. Additionally, not included in the lineup, are some 265 hours of sport pickups and such special events as the Rose Bowl and Thanksgiving Day Parades.

Conspicuous by their absence from the roster of spec producers were Fred Coe and Sol Hurok. Coe, Kintner said, has been taken off his fairy tales assignment and is negotiating a new deal with the web for a "major" spec series. Hurok's name didn't come up at the press conference, but an NBC veep said privately that he hadn't come up with any hot properties and so wasn't included.

Seattle Channel Finally Resolved

Washington, July 30.

By a 3-2 vote, the Federal Communications Commission last week finally decided one of the oldest cases before it—the contest for channel 7 in Seattle, Wash. Decision went to Queen City Broadcasting Co. (KIRO), in which Saul Haas, at one time Collector of Customs of the Port of Seattle, is the majority owner, and Chairman Warren G. Magnuson (D-Wash.) of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee holds a 3.2% interest.

Hearings on the contest were completed more than three years ago and the examiner's recommendation, favoring KIRO, was issued more than two years ago. In the Spring of last year, the Commission remanded the case to the examiner for further testimony on the editorial policies of a newspaper in which Haas was partial owner some 30 years ago. A supplemental decision was issued by the examiner a year ago affirming his original recommendation.

Competing for the channel were radio station KXA, headed by Wesley I. Dumm, and Puget Sound Broadcasting Co. (KVI), owned by Mrs. Laura M. Doernbecher and her two daughters, Mrs. Earl T. Irwin and Mrs. Charles P. Butler.

Chairman John C. Doerfer dissented from the majority decision, Comr. Robert E. Lee also dissented, favoring another reopening of the hearings. The third Republican member, Comr. Rosel Hyde, did not participate.

The decision was made possible by the votes of all three Democratic members. The Commission presently has only six members.

Pitt's Ch. 4 Okayed

Washington, July 30.

Pittsburgh, last of the big markets with only two VHF authorizations, got its third last week when the Federal Communications Commission granted channel 4 (allocated to Irwin, Pa.) to a company formed by a merger of WCAE (Hearst newspapers) and KQV. The merger company, Television City, Inc., will be required to dispose of KQV to conform with FCC duopoly rules.

Three other applicants in the proceedings agreed to accept $50,000 each as partial reimbursement for expenses in connection with the hearings.

NBC 'Club 60' to Get The Grand Treatment

Chicago, July 30.

Evidently encouraged by the substantial response to "Club 60's" recent call for mail, NBC-TV not only has consented to renew the Chicago origination but has promised not to treat it any longer as a stepchild.

In promising full promotional support, web is setting up press interviews in New York and Philadelphia for the show's new host, Howard Miller, who flies in on Aug. 5. In addition, the net is making an attempt to showcase "60" principals—Nancy Wright, Mike Douglas, and the Mello-Larks—on other network shows. Mello-Larks are now set for a one-shot on the Nov. 4 Jerry Lewis show.

Huntley, Brinkley's Earlier N.Y. Feed

When NBC-TV moves its Chet Huntley-Dave Brinkley "NBC News" strip to 7:15 in the fall, the news segment will be carried by the web's New York flagship at 6:45 to 7 p.m. WRCA-TV will pick up the 6:45 feed instead of the 7:15 repeat, in order to preserve its strip of half-hour syndicated shows at 7 to 7:30. Thus, the NBC news segment will precede all competitive evening network newscasts in N. Y., since WCBS-TV uses the 7:15 feed of "Douglas Edwards With the News" and WABC-TV carries the single 7:15 John Daly newscast at that time.

Both NBC-TV and CBS-TV, incidentally, are hoping—without too much prospect of success—to extend their respective evening newscasts to six days a week via a Saturday show. CBS-TV is putting the Saturday Doug Edwards newscast on sale, but even if it finds a client is pessimistic on the station clearance for the Saturday segment. It's tough enough to clear the weekday feeds, the network finds. NBC is mulling a Saturday telecast, but it first must firm up weekday sponsorship. Web this week finally tied down Glidden Paint to alternate Wednesdays on the show, but still has a long way to go before it can post the weekday SRO sign.

NBC is planning its double feed pattern on the show weekdays in order to accommodate affiliates with a choice of time periods. WRCA-TV is already programming news at 6:45, and will take this 15-minute local news bloc and move it down to 6:30, cutting away part of its "Movie 4." At 7, station has its most prosperous single strip of time, filled solidly with syndicated shows, and station prefers to back up local news with network news to disturbing the syndicated strip.

WSB-TV Unveils First In Ambitious Series On Reclaimed Humans

Atlanta, July 30.

WSB-TV last week unveiled at a special preview the first in a projected series of six half-hour documentaries dealing with the reclamation of human beings trapped by tragedies.

No. 1 in the series, titled "The Road Back," deals with prisoner rehabilitation. It is an expansion of segments filmed at the Atlanta Penitentiary shown previously on WSB-TV's Newsroom, nightly half-hour show. It will be used to lead off the series Sunday, Aug. 4, subsequent releases are scheduled to follow at three-month intervals.

Ray Moore, station's spieler, narrates "The Road Back." He spent some 120 hours in preparing "The Road Back." This does not take into account the time put into show by WSB-TV cameraman Joe Fain and his assistant, Jay Durham.

WSB-TV is underwriting the cost of this series, an unusual and searching look into rehabilitation. Other areas to be surveyed are the mentally ill, speech school for teaching deaf children, alcoholism, unwed mothers and juvenile delinquency. Locale for all the programs will be Georgia.

Keeping step with its "voice," WSB Radio, NBC affiliate, staged the first in a new radio series titled "Witness."

I Married a Bear

and said that, to carry the precious message of his snake-oil, he wanted a filmed vehicle with the following characteristics:

1. Its basic dramatic conflict must have overtones of international significance.
2. It must in some way incorporate the unquestioned universal appeal of animals.
3. It must have a solid core of constructive Americanism.
4. It must have a poignant inspirational quality.

Within two days, the soothsayer returned with flip-flop presentation for a show called, "I Married a Bear."

The advertiser acknowledged that it effectively met his first two requirements, but the other essential ingredients would have to be supplied before he could consider the proposal.

Shortly, a revised presentation offered a series called, "I Married a Bear for the FBI."

The advertiser was deeply gratified by the incorporation of his third requirement, but asserted that no show could achieve a top rating without carrying an effective inspirational message.

The flexible film fakir promptly proposed a show entitled, "I Married a Bear for the FBI and Found Spiritual Peace."

At last report, they were having trouble finding a non-controversial lady bear.

In the green eyeshaded precincts of the industry's business offices the watchword that has evolved is "cross collateralization." It is hard on the bridgework and an accurate definition is as elusive as the meaning of net producer's share or the distinction between pari passu and pari mutuel, but it is said to be highly desirable. One of the versions of the game is played something like this: one cross-collateralizes a mediocre "property" with a financial commitment from a few affluent independent stations and something good may confidently be expected to happen. No one is quite sure what will eventuate, but it's a formula—and if you have a "property" and a formula, it is generally agreed that one is in an impregnable recoupment position, whatever it is. A logical extension of this would indicate that a merger between the Bankers Trust Co. and the Book of the Month Club could dominate the industry.

It seems time for the deep thinkers of the industry to remind themselves that when you cross-collateralize a horse and a donkey, you get a sterile jackass.

You'd Never Guess That Blanche Was Running A One-Woman Office

Blanche Gaines, the "one woman office"— only other employee is a secretary-assistant — is having a windfall on script sales to television and radio, in repping her writers for Hollywood stints, and in the book field.

In tv, here's the Gaines graph; "Studio One Summer Theatre," Helen Cotton's "The Unmentionable Blues"; regular "Studio One," opening the 1957-58 season, "The Night America Trembled" by Nelson Bond, and subsequently a pair of Jerome Ross plays, "Please Report Any Odd Characters" and "Act of Mercy"; "Kraft TV Theatre," Joseph Cochran's "Vengeance" and Bill Barrett's "Run With the Lion"; "Playhouse 90," Rod Serling's play for next season's skein, "A Passage for Trumpet"; "Matinee Theatre," two originals, "The Fawn" by Lucile Duffy, coming up tomorrow (Thurs.), and "Hand Me Down" by Helen Cotton; two adaptations by George Lowther, "Where Angels Fear to Tread" and "Women Have Ways" (two originals and five of his adaptations already have been produced this summer on the series); three writers on the new Screen Gems "Ivanhoe" series, Joseph Cochran, Shirl Hendryx, Irving Richin; for NBC-TV's new "Court of Last Resort" series, Frank Gilroy's "The Darlene Fitzgerald Case."

In radio, three scripts by Carol Warner Gluck for the CBS "City Hospital."

Four of Mrs. Gaines' writers are operating in the Hollywood scenario marts, John Gay with Hecht-Hill-Lancaster on "Run Silent, Run Deep" starring Clark Gable; Frank Gilroy, who's just completed "The Transfer" from his original short story for producers Norman Panama and Melvin Frank and starring William Holden (for Paramount release); James Blumgarten, who recently finished "Mr. Rock 'n' Roll" for Frederick Productions; and Serling's "Company of Cowards" for Metro.

Three in the Gaines stable have been included in "best tv plays" anthologies: Ballantine Books, "Best of TV," edited by Florence Britton, with entries by John Gay ("The Sentry," given on "Alcoa Hour"), and Frank Gilroy's adaptation of "A Matter of Pride" ("U. S. Steel") from John Langdon's prizewinning story; and Harcourt-Brace's "Best TV Plays of 1957," edited by Bill Kaufman, encompassing Serling's "Requiem for a Heavyweight" out of "Playhouse 90." (This was credited in error to the Ashley-Steiner office last week.) In addition, Mrs. Gaines set the deal for Simon & Schuster's publication of "Patterns," a collection of teleplays by Serling titled from his work originally done on Kraft. It will be issued in September.

Storer Nixed On Shifting to Hub

Washington, July 30.

Plans of Storer Broadcasting Co. to enter the Boston market via purchase and relocation of WMUR-TV in Manchester, N.H., were finally dropped last week when the Federal Communications Commission dismissed the transfer applications at the request of the parties.

Automatically killed by the action was the deal by which the Washington, D.C., Post was to purchase WAGE-TV in Atlanta, Ga., which Storer had sold contingent on approval of the Manchester transaction to conform to FCC multiple ownership rules.

Storer's Boston plans ran into several snags which would have meant long and involved hearings. New Hampshire groups bitterly opposed relocation of the Manchester station on grounds it would leave the area without local programming. Boston stations also objected on grounds of economic injury. Finally, an application was filed by a local group for the channel on which WMUR operates, which may have required a hearing on the renewal of license.

Decca Records is hitting the fall market with the biggest album release in its history—40 sets covering all markets from country & western to classical. Backing up the package splash, Decca is offering special discounts to dealers, ranging from 5 to 10%, and a major promotion campaign comprising consumer booklets, samplers, display material for dealers and a new catalog containing full-color album illustrations.

Topping the Decca fall release is the four-LP "Satchmo—A Musical Autobiography of Louis Armstrong," which has been tagged at $19.50. Bound in a de luxe box, the package contains a profile of Armstrong by Louis Untermeyer; "an appreciation" by Gilbert Millstein; a photo series; and discographical notes tracing the original versions of the 48 Armstrong "classics."

Decca is also putting out a new album by Al Jolson titled "Among My Souvenirs," containing selections originally taped for the "Kraft Music Hall" broadcasts. Another set is "Club Durant," with Jimmy Durante and guests, including Ethel Barrymore, Bing Crosby, Eddie Cantor, Al Jolson, Sophie Tucker and others. Crosby also has one album titled "New Tricks."

Virtually the full Decca talent roster is represented in the release with other packages by Bill Haley & His Comets, Sammy Davis Jr., singing with Carmen McRae, Burl Ives, Mills Bros., Wayne King, Roberta Sherwood and others.

The jazz sector includes sets by Ralph Burns, Wingy Manone, John Grass and the Amram-Barrow Quartet, while the classical series is being augmented by releases featuring Segovia, Carmen Amaya, Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau and Jorg Demus, plus two albums of "Grand Opera Highlights."

Decca has been presenting the program to dealers at a series of meeting and cocktail parties, winding up in New York today (Wed.). Decca sales v.p. Syd Goldberg and sales manager Claude Brennan have been touring Decca branches to spark the campaign among the company's sales personnel.

Gayles Sues Jack Gale, Jos. Diamond to Retain Stake in United Music

Juggy Gayles, in a fight to maintain his interest in United Music, filed suit in N. Y. Supreme Court last week against his former partner, Jack Gale, and Joseph Diamond, who held a promissory note of $10,050 from Gayles. Suit stemmed from the fact that Gayles had put his 50 shares of stock in the Mutual company for the loan.

According to the complaint, Gayles executed a one-year promissory note to Diamond on May 29, 1956. Using an alleged grace period, he claims he planned to redeem the stock on June 20, 1957. Gayles charged that his partner, Gale, redeemed the 50 shares on June 13, 1957. Immediately thereafter, it was charged that Gale notified Gayles that the latter no longer had any interest in Mutual.

Gayles, who said that he confided in Gale about the loan, charged the latter with violating a "fiduciary relationship" in allegedly redeeming the stock without his knowledge. The complaint asks that the promissory note to Diamond be declared illegal and void; that Diamond be directed to return to Gayles or Gale the $10,050 paid in redemption of the United stock that Gayles put up as collateral; that Gale be enjoined from assigning to anyone else the promissory note which he redeemed for his own benefit; and that Gayles be declared the legal owner of the 50 shares in Mutual. Gayles claims that the 50 shares in Mutual are worth $50,000.

At the present time, Gayles is working on the sales promotion staff of Jubilee Records in New York.

Kennys' Boone Boom

Nick Kenny, N. Y. Daily Mirror columnist, and his brother, Charles, are making it two oldies in a row with Pat Boone on Dot Records. The Kennys, who wrote the click "Love Letters in the Sand," with J. Fred Coots, now riding with the Boone release, "Goldmine in the Sky," a 1930s hit by Bing Crosby.

Both "Love Letters" and "Goldmine" are Bourne Music publications.

Coral in Major Spree on Sets

Decca's subsid, Coral Records, is readying a major fall splash themed to the slogan of "The World's Finest Music," which is the title of a Lawrence Welk package for the label. That will be one of 43 albums to be released by Coral in the fall in addition to seven EPs. All of Coral's artists will be represented in the releases.

Like Decca (see separate story), Coral is also offering a dealer discount plan ranging from 5 to 10%, in addition to supplying display material, one unit of which is designed as a permanent merchandiser for Welk albums. Coral has also prepared a disk jockey "sampler" package with selections from 22 of the albums included on two LPS for broadcast purposes. Also for radio stations, Coral has inaugurated an LP subscription service at $50 a year covering the costs of monthly shipments of albums.

Norm Weinstroer, Coral general sales manager, presented the program to his sales staff over last weekend.

LONDON RECORDS GOES BACK TO $4.98 ON LPS

London Records, which cut the prices of its LPs to $3.98 a couple of years ago along with the major companies, is now raising its prices back to $4.98 on a series of its albums. London execs ascribed the move to increased recording and overhead costs.

In the last year, several indie labels have also hiked their LP prices for the same reason, proceeding on the theory that if a customer wants a particular album, the price differential won't matter.

Robbins Music's Themes From Metro's 'Raintree'

Hollywood, July 30.

For the first time in the studio's history, a folio of music will be published from the main themes of a feature production.

Film is "Raintree County," Metro's $5,400,000 entry which goes into roadshow release in the fall. Robbins Music, a Loew's subsidiary, is publishing a folio of the main themes under the title of "Melodies from Raintree County."

In addition, Robbins will publish sheet music copies of "The Song of Raintree County" and "Never Till Now," from the film. Johnny Green composed the score; lyrics to the two numbers were added by Paul Francis Webster.

David Rose's Coral Set

Hollywood, July 30.

David Rose, a longtime stalwart on the MGM Records label, makes a rare excursion into another diskery next week.

Rose has been assigned to arrange and conduct an album which Erin O'Brien will cut for Coral. Label's a&r chief Bob Thiele is expected on the Coast to supervise the sessions.

DISK INDUSTRY IN A GOLD AGE

By HERM SCHOENFELD

The disk industry is moving ahead to unprecedented grosses this year. All fears that the boom of the past few years is heading for a bust have been brushed aside in the continued acceleration of the disk biz.

Industry execs believe that the full potential of the disk biz will not be tapped for years to come. For the past several years, it has been growing at a rate of about 20% per year and everything points to a continuing growth at the same pace. With the disk gross now at around $300,000,000 per year, the $500,000,000 gross level is now looming as a reality for 1960.

Concern over a possible glut in the packaged goods market, which was expressed by several execs last year, has now apparently vanished. The upbeat in the number of album releases, which now totals over 160 per month, shows no signs of slackening. The absorption power of the market, as far as new albums is concerned, is as healthy as ever.

Optimistic outlook of the disk industry is indicated by the big splashes being made this fall by

House Panel OK's Lowering Tax For Music Publishers

Washington, July 30.

Relief from a severe tax threat under which the music publishing industry has been operating for the past few years has been okayed in the House Ways and Means Committee. The proposed tax bill, introduced by Rep. Eugene Keogh (D., Brooklyn), would kill a ruling by Internal Revenue that many publishers are now subject to taxes as personal holding companies because a majority of their income derives from royalties.

With personal holding company taxes ranging up to 93% as against a 52% corporation tax maximum, many publishers are faced a murderous tax squeeze because of conditions not under their own control. For the past several years, royalties from performing rights societies and disks have been growing while income from sheet music has been waning. As a result, income from royalties for many publishers, now exceeds revenue from the "normal" publishing operation.

The Music Publishers Protective Assn. brought the predicament of the music publishers to the attention of Congress last year and has been vigorously backing the Keogh legislation.

Other bills given the greenlight by the House Ways and Means Committee, where all tax legislation originates, would (1) cut the 20% bite on nitery tabs to 10%, and (2) wipe out the manufacturers' excise on children's disks selling for 25c. or less.

RCA'S TALENT SPREE AT MILWAUKEE GALA

RCA is spreading another talent layout next Tuesday (6) at the Temple of Music in Washington Park, Milwaukee, in an affair marking the Milwaukee Journal's 75th and the park commission's 50th anni. The al fresco show will include Hugo Winterhalter conducting the local orch and singers Julius LaRosa, Pat O'Day, Chet Atkins & The Rhythm Rockers and the Lane Bros.

Jack Burgess, Victor singles chief, and Jack Dunn, promotion manager, will fly from New York for the show. All seats are going for 50c. In the past, these concerts have mainly featured classical and semi-classical artists.

Multiple Innovations Unveiled By Col in Fla. Preview of 'Hi Fi for Fun'

Miami Beach, July 30.

Under the slogan of "Hi Fi for Fun," Columbia Records unveiled its multi-pronged fall merchandising campaign before some 700 distribs and dealers at its annual sales convention at the Americana Hotel here over the weekend (26-28).

The program includes several innovations for Columbia, embracing the entry into the stereophonic tape market; the introduction of a new low-priced label, Harmony Records; a new two-volume pop LP series at a $6.98 price; a single standard series plus a renovated "Hall of Fame" LP series.

In the tape field, Col will start off with 10 sterec package releases in both the pop and longhair idioms at prices ranging from $12.95 to $19.95. For the dealer, Col has come up with a theft-proof display in which the tape packages lock into the box.

Harmony's 50 Pop Sets

The new Harmony series, with a price tag of $1.98 for the 12-inch, LPs, is kicking off with 50 pop albums, most of them taken from previously released albums. Three of the albums, however, were newly recorded to highlight the series. Harmony is due to become an across-the-board label with 12 classical sets to be released next month. In October, a regular release schedule of five or six packages monthly will be launched.

Col is aiming the low-priced label at the chain stores and the rack jobbers, in addition to dealers who have been accenting other low-priced labels. In the last couple of years, the low-priced LPs have been growing into big business, particularly via the exposure in the supermarkets, drug stores, etc.

From Aug. 1 to Sept 28, when the fall orders are being written, Col distributors are offering a merchandise "dividend" to retailers, amounting to 10% of the Band Honors US Composer

London, July 30.

Frank Perkins, the U.S. conductor-composer, now visiting London, went to Buckingham Palace last week to see the changing of the Guard, and the military band, as a personal tribute to him, played his Fandango in the palace courtyard.

The Irish Guards Band was conducted by Captain C. H. Jaeger, who, himself, will shortly be visiting the U.S. on a countrywide tour.

RCA's 'Tailored For Teens' EPs

RCA Victor is going after the teenagers to push its EP line. Label is expanding its EP program with platters cut by teenagers for teenagers.

According to Ed Heller, of Victor's artists & repertoire staff, a larger share of the teenage market can be captured if the EPs are tailor-made for their audience. He points out that in the past most EPs have been taken from LPs or a combination of single disks. The success of Victor's "Teenagers Dance The Honky Tonk" and "Teenagers Dance The Hop-A-Do," both featuring a trio of juves known as The Kids, has sparked the company's new teenage stress.

Victor already has doubled the number of its EP releases, issuing them twice instead of once a month. Other records in the "teenage tailored" EP series to be released soon include disks by 17-year-old Janis Martin, The Twintones, two 16-year-old boys, and 19-year-old Nick Venet.

Since many of the releases in this EP program will be pegged on dance step lines, Heller is scouting for new dance angles.

COL SETS $1,000,000 AD PUSH FOR PHONOS

Mimai Beach, July 30.

Columbia Records this fall will market the largest phonograph line in its five-year history in that field. The phonos encompass the full range from low to luxury priced sets, the latter group reflecting the national trend toward quality products. The top-priced $1,995 combination acquired from Bell & Howell, is creating as much interest among the distribs and dealers as the minimum priced models ranging from $29.95.

With strongest accent on pushing the $200 bracket sets, in line with the upped stress on quality product sales, it was announced that the company will back up its hi-fi phono push with a $1,000,000 national advertising campaign in all media beginning in mid-September. According to Arthur Schwartz, ad-sales promotion director, there will be 38 models offered.

Styne's Stratford Music On Film-Legitune Push

Composer Jule Styne is keeping his Stratford Music firm jumping. Slated for a publishing push this fall are the tunes he's writing for the film version of "Auntie Mame" and the legiters "Say Darling" and "Gypsy." Betty Comden and Adolph Green will pen the lyrics to the Styne melodies.

The Stratford operation is managed by Buddy Robbins and uses Chappell as selling agent.

Col's Talent Roster Stages In-Person 'Spec' For Disk Sales Meet

Miami Beach, July 30.

Parade of its top talent roster Sunday (28) by Columbia Records for the 700 sales execs and distributors and their wives climaxed the company's successful conclave here, topper being the introduction of Rhonda Fleming by prexy Goddard Lieberson.

The Bal Masque of the Americana Hotel made the perfect setting for the talent parade, smoothly introed by Lieberson. It added up to an over three-hour song-instrumental spectacular that offered every phase and facet of vocal and orchestral styles, with Les Elgart's orch providing excellent show-backing.

Leonard Bernstein, Mitch Miller, Percy Faith, Paul Weston and Andre Kostelanitz were on hand for the batoneering section; Frankie Laine belted away at his frenetic best to lead the pop division with Don Cherry, Johnny Mathis and the Hi-Lo's adding more zing.

The distaffers, primed for this all-important shot at the distributors who'll push their platters, included Miss Fleming and upcomers Jerri Adams and a sleek, Eileen Rodgers projecting a more subdued, effective style.

Country & western segment had Marty Robbins heading a contingent which included Ray Price, Carl Smith and Mel Tillis, as well as Van Howard, George Morgan and Bobby Lord.

Interesting note was presences of reps from the top hotel-cafes in the audience, gandering the talent roster with view to bookings for the future. Laine is already skedded for the Americana, with absent Vic Damone another Columbian regular along the circuit here. Johnny Mathis is also pacted for anappearance and Miss Fleming is getting bids.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By HERM SCHOENFELD

Sarah Vaughan (Mercury): "BAND OF ANGELS" (Witmark*), title tune of the Warner Bros. pic, is a big ballad with big chances via this excellent rendition by Miss Vaughan. "PLEASE, MR. BROWN" (Leeds*) is a so-so humorous ballad with a Latin beat.

Pat Boone (Dot): "GOLDMINE IN THE SKY" (Bourne*), the oldie, gets a highly pleasing slice with a light western flavor. "REMEMBER YOU'RE MINE" (Lowe-Tray*) is a good teenage-slanted ballad.

Julius LaRosa (RCA Victor): "FAMOUS LAST WORDS" (Quintet†), a very clever entry with a definite beat, should put Julius LaRosa back into the disk money, even though the I.Q. of this tune is higher than average. "WORLDS APART" (Coliseum†) is a lilting ballad with an interesting, even if somewhat familiar, idea.

Leroy Anderson Orch (Decca): "FORGOTTEN DREAMS" (Mills*), revived out of a two-year old album, is a sparkling instrumental by Leroy Anderson which should take its place in his string of hits. "THE BLUEBELLS OF SCOTLAND" (Mills*), Anderson adaptation of the folksong, has charm.

Guitar Slim (Atco): "IF I SHOULD LOSE YOU" (Progressive†), a blues ballad, is belted in gripping style by Guitar Slim who infuses a gospel-singing quality into the lyric. Could go all the way. "IT HURTS TO LOVE SOMEONE" (Progressive†) is more routine material.

Lena Horne (RCA Victor): "SWEET THING" (Famous*), a swinging ballad with a good lyric, gets one of Lena Horne's socko deliveries. It's one of those show biz mysteries why a songstress of Miss Horne's calibre hasn't come up with a disk smash in recent years. "THAT OLD FEELING" (Feist*), is the standard another standout side.

The Hi-Lo's (Columbia): "WHEN PAMELA THROWS A PARTY" (Korwin*), a swinging number with a single lyric line, gets a highly infectious workover from the Hi-Lo's and this version could get into the money. "A SHINE ON YOUR SHOES" (Harms*), the oldie, gets a fancy arrangement that loses some of the point.

Edmundo Ros Orch (London): "MELODIE D'AMOUR" (Raytent†), an entry in the whilom calypso cycle, is still a winning entry as vocalled in an easy way by Edmundo Ros. "THE CARNATION GIRL" is an okay Latin-styled instrumental patterned after a Greek melody.

Burt Bacharach (Cabot): "SEARCHING WIND" (Famous*) is given a plush instrumental setting by Burt Bacharach's piano and Marion Evans' orch. Highly listenable after repeated spins: "ROSANNE" (ABC*) is given a similar treatment.

Ginny Gibson (MGM): "IF THAT WOULD BRING YOU BACK TO ME" (Remick*), a class ballad, handled in lucid style by Ginny Gibson and should pick up lotsa spins. "THE PLACES I'VE BEEN" (Mutual*) is another adult piece of material nicely phrased.

Ray Martin Orch (Capitol): "MANHATTAN TANGO" (Zodiac†), a fine instrumental by Ray Martin, gets a colorful, slickly arranged performance by a large orch. "HELADERO" (Zodiac†) is another lush-sounding instrumental with a lilting melodic strain.

Ray Conniff (Brunswick): "SUPER CHIEF" (Regent†), a driving instrumental with a locomotive motif, gets an all-out workover by Ray Conniff's combo. "BEANIE BOY BOOGIE" (Regent†) is an even more frantic side.

Betty Johnson (Bally†): "THE SONG YOU HEARD WHEN YOU FELL IN LOVE" (Trinity†), a pretty ballad, is handled with a clear, simple approach by Betty Johnson and chorus. "I'M BEGINNING TO WONDER" (Towne*), is another pleasing item done with multiple-track vocals.

Joseph Gershenson Orch (Coral): "MAIN TITLE" (Skinner*), theme of the U pic, "Interdude," is an elaborately embroidered instrumental with a melodic theme for the commercial market. "END TITLE" (Skinner*) is another part of the same soundtrack.

Merv Griffin (Decca): "I KEEP RUNNING AWAY FROM YOU" (Berlin*), a swinging Irving Berlin number, is belted in neat commercial style by Merv Griffin. "WILL I FIND MY LOVE TODAY" (Robert*) is a fine ballad also handled effectively.

Johnny Janis (ABC-Paramount): "LATER BABY" (T.C.†), a bouncing rhythm item, gets a typical rockabilly slice by Johnny Janis. "ALL THE TIME" (Pamco†) is in the same groove.

Buck Ram Orch (RCA Camden): "CRAZY LIPS," one of four rock 'n' roll Buck Ram compositions in this EP, is a solid rhythm number vocalled in bluesy style by Don Wyatt who also handles "ANY HOUR," a slower-tempoed entry. "HEY OPERATOR," another bounce item, is delivered in typical rocking style by Eddie Williams. "THAT'S A LOTTA BRASS" is an instrumental more in the swing than the r'n'r groove.

Gogi Grant (RCA Victor): "IT'S A WONDERFUL THING TO BE LOVED" (Granmore*), a ballad with a showtune quality, shapes up as excellent material for Gogi Grant's open-voiced belting style. "THAT'S THE LIFE FOR ME" (DeVorzon-Traymore†) is an okay rhythm ballad.

Laura K. Bryant (Cameo): "THE KISS I NEVER HAD" (Lowe-Jungnickel*), a slow blues tune, gets a potent reading by this rock 'n' roll songstress. It could stir some noise. "I DON'T HURT ANYMORE" (Hill & Range†) is in a more conventional pattern.

Johnny Wells (Penguin): "MISS PONY TAIL" (Beatrice*) is a bright rocking number with a boogie beat and a teenage lyric that doesn't exactly blaze any trails. Johnny Wells' vocal is okay. "CAN I HELP IT." (J.M.†) is even more cliched.

Tommy Panto (Ken): "I BELIEVE IN ANGELS" (Time†) is a so-so ballad delivered by an okay tenor, Tommy Panto. "PURPLE MOUNTAIN" (Time†) is a rockabilly item with an inappropriate lyric.

Otis Williams (De Luxe): "ROLLING HOME" (R-T†), a solid rock 'n' roll entry, has impact via an authentic-sounding workover by Otis Williams and The Charms. "DO BE YOU" (Lois†) is one of those nonsense-syllable ballads which goes nowhere.

Joyce Taylor (Liberty): "DEAR DIARY" (Apollo*), another teenage-slanted tear-jerking item with a familiar beat, gets an effective rendition by Joyce Taylor. "HOW WILL I KNOW" (United*) has a more intricate and interesting rhythmic pattern.

Tutti Camerata Orch (Disneyland): "TRUMPETER'S PRAYER" (Disney*), a lilting instrumental, showcases Conrad Gozzo's trumpet and a wordless choral ensemble. A pretty sound. "BOY MEETS HORN" (Disney*) is a more swinging number with Shorty Sherock's horn in the forefront.

Billy Maxted (Cadence): "TWO FINGER BLUES" (Scherer†) is an excellent blue instrumental played to the hilt by Billy Maxted's crew. "STRANGE CARGO" (Robbins*), an oldie, also gets attractive, offbeat slide.

Johnny Dee (Colonial: "1,000 CONCRETE BLOCKS" (Bentley†) is another pleasing country-type jailhouse member written and sung by Johnny Dee. "IN MY SIMPLE WAY" (Bentley†) is more Dee material adequately described by the title.

Album Reviews

Roberta Sherwood: "Gotta Right To Sing" (Decca). Roberta Sherwood's potent song-belting pyrotechnics get another showcase in this bundle of standards. Teeing off with "I've Gotta Right To Sing The Blues," Miss Sherwood tears into such oldies as "Who Did You Fool, After All," "Georgia On My Mind," "Mississippi Mud," "Cheatin' On Me" and "Baby Face," among others. The Jack Pleis orch backs up solidly.

Frank Fay: "Be Frank With Fay" (Bally). Veteran performer Frank Fay, who has not been too active of late, revives his vaude-days break-up song deliveries in which he interpolates explanatory gags into the lyrics of pop standards. As represented in this collection, the routine is strictly a nostalgic item for oldtimers. The patter is somewhat aged and the gags are historical. Adam Carroll accomps Fay at the piano.

"Scrapbook: The Voices of Walter Schumann" (RCA Victor). Walter Schumann's highly polished choral ensemble turns up in this set with an attractive program of tunes in a variety of tempos and moods. Included in the repertory are such numbers as "Autumn Nocturne," "I'll Remember April," "Blue Moon," "Bells of St. Mary's," and the Scherzo from Tchaikowsky's Fifth Symphony, which is done without words for an unusual choral effect. Another offbeat entry is Ravel's "Chanson Epique," done in serious style.

Vernon Duke: "Souvenir de Monte Carlo"; Robert Colbert: "Mediterranean Suite" (MGM). Written almost 10 years ago, "Souvenir de Monte Carlo" is the work of the serious composer, Vladimir Dukelsky, in the days when he used the nom de clef of Vernon Duke only for his pop output. It's an atmospheric ballet score comprised of seven sections and containing several attractive passages as conducted by Carlos Surinach. On the other side, Robert Cobert, who also writes pop material, including the recent "Frankie and Johnny" musical drama on the MGM label, is represented as composer and conductor of the "Mediterranean Suite," a colorful work in five parts.

Mel Torme's "California Suite" (Bethlehem). Mel Torme, a fine song stylist as well as composer, has come up with a paean to California. It has several good parts amidst some musical sentimentality which may be okay in a pop song but becomes glaring in a work of this pretension. Torme himself furnishes the high spots with his vocals of some of the individual tunes, such as "Got The Gate On The Golden Gate" and "Poor Little Extra Girl." Marty Paich arranged and conducted the orch and chorus.

"Johnny Tremain" (Disneyland). From the Walt Disney pic, "Johnny Tremain," the score contains some instrumentals and a couple of juve-slanted historical songs which are very much in the groove of "Davy Crockett," which was written by the same team, George Bruns & Tom Blackburn. Also included in this set is a group of U.S. soldier songs from the Revolutionary War to the Second World War.

Harry Breuer & His Quintet; "Mallet Magic" (Audio Fidelity). A combo of mallet instruments, including vibes, the marimba and the glockenspiel, generates some sparkling sounds on this crisply recorded disk. Set contains a fresh collection of instrumentals including "Mosquito's Parade March," "Chinese Doll," "Maxixe Mambo," "Bumble Bee Bolero," "Clockenspiel Gavotte" and "Samba Macabre," among others.

Bill Haley & His Comets: "Rockin' The Oldies" (Decca). Although there's no shortage of new material, the rock 'n' rollers are now accenting the oldies with their contemporary beat. In this collection, Bill Haley and his combo work over a dozen standards, including some ballads like "In Apple Blossom Time," "Miss You," "Moon Over Miami," with their familiar arrangements. The musical gamut of this crew isn't very wide and a quality of monotony creeps into the zestful attack, but it's a commercial entry for the juves who go for this sort of thing, even 12 numbers at one sitting.

Coleman Hawkins: "The Hawk Flies High" (Riverside). The originator of the jazz tenor sax style some 30 years ago, Coleman (The Hawk) Hawkins is still blowing in beautiful style. In this newly recorded set, Hawkins plays with a small, nicely integrated modern combo in which his horn supplies the drive and the color. Of the six tunes, only one standard, "Laura," is included. An eye-catching photo of a hawk on a tenor sax is on the jacket.

Other recent issues of note in the jazz groove include the Oscar Peterson Trio's "At The Stratford Shakespearean Festival" on the Verve label; Thad Jones' "Mad Thad" set for Period with five ensemble work with some top jazz instrumentalists; the Amram-Barrow Quartet in the Decca "Jazz Studio" series and the Phil Woods-Gene Quill Sextet in the RCA Victor [illegible] ... Symphony Orchs Blow Hot & Cold; Mpls. in Danger, Ft. Worth Reprise

Minneapolis, July 30.

The Minneapolis Orchestral Assn. was told by its president, P. W. Pillsbury, that unless the Minneapolis Symphony can build a wider, permanent basis and rely on minimum $320,000 annual donations "we will not have an orchestra."

Despite a $350,000 income for the fiscal year ending June 30, an all-time high, the orchestra incurred a $19,131 deficit for the year along with its $38,000 carry-over deficit from past years, he revealed.

Major causes of the 1956-57 deficit, he said, were salary increases, tour expenses and recording costs.

There were record ticket sales during the season, particularly for regular Friday night concerts and on tours, but the Minneapolis Symphony has the lowest number of contributors of any major such group in the U.S., according to Pillsbury.

It's this base which must be expanded, he said, putting the blame for its narrowness on apathy and the widespread feeling that "the same group will always come through to pay up the bills."

The Minneapolis orchestra is one of the nation's oldest and highest ranking.

Ist In 2 Decades

Fort Worth, July 30.

Although official announcement is still lacking, there will be a Fort Worth Symphony Orchestra next season, the first in about two decades. It plans to play at the Will Rogers Auditorium, and thus get before the entire town, it does not snort with "death and destruction" toward the Dallas Symphony, which has given in the same place a Fort Worth subscription series and ' children's concerts with regularity since 1945.

The coming Fort Worth Symphony is projecting only three concerts for 1957-58, each "qualitative" and with a handpicked personnel, determinedly local, of 60 players. The entire season will cost $15,000, of which more than $10,000 has been raised already in maintenance fund pledges.

Robert Hull, now dean of music at Texas Christian U., will be the conductor. Auditions are now being held to select members for the orchestra.

Calvert's recording "O Mein Papa" has been a big seller since 1953.

Clink Gospel Singer On Moonshine Rap

Greensboro, N.C., July 30.

A member of the Gospel Five, a religious singing group, was arrested and jailed at Roanoke Rapids, N.C. on charges of possessing moonshine liquor and apparatus for its manufacture.

The singer, Benjamin F. Whitaker of nearby Scotland Neck, lustily sang a chorus of "So Many Years Have I Lived in Sin" while being taken to jail.

Officials said they found 11 gallons of moonshine liquor at Whitaker's home and 50 small rigs used for distilling whiskey in the trunk of his car.

Berlin's Return As Songplugger

For the first time in many years, Irving Berlin has turned out three pop songs that are separate and apart from a filmusical or legit score which has been his wont for over a decade. One of the trio is really a thematic for the William Goetz indie, "Sayonara," based on the James A. Michener book which Berlin originally wanted to write and coproduce with Joshua Logan as a stage musical.

The other two pops are titled "I Keep Running Away From You" and "You Can't Lose the Blues With Colors." All have been recorded and Berlin, who has been under the weather in recent months from a bad attack of shingles, says he "feels like the old songplugging days trying to put over a pop song."

Leslie-Liberty $200,000 Suits and Countersuits On Distribution Setup

Leslie Distributors and Liberty Records launched suits and countersuits in N. Y. Supreme Court last week involving over $200,000 in damages.

In its suit, Leslie claims it had an agreement with Liberty to be the label's exclusive distributor for Connecticut and Massachusetts. The Leslie complaint charges that the diskery failed to ship as ordered and in July of last year, notified Leslie that the distrib contract was cancelled. As a result, Leslie claims a loss of $14,478 in profits.

In its countersuit, Liberty claims Leslie failed to maintain an effective sales program and hence resulted in $100,000 lost benefits for the diskery. Latter also claims that Leslie sold the Liberty line outside of its territory and at prices lower than the market price, thus interfering with Liberty distribs in other areas. For this, Liberty is asking for another $100,000.

Liberty is a Coast outfit operated by Cy Waronecker.

Fred Pizzuto is featured as percussionist with a strawhat package of "Brigadoon," for which Harry E. Lowell is advance director.

The "Flying Saucer" kids, Bill Buchanan & Bob Goodman, are at it again. Just when the publishers thought they had settled the whole question of "montage" disks in which snatches of hit songs are used as a basis for a disk, Buchanan and Goodman, whose Luniverse platter, "The Flying Saucer," sparked the initial hassle last year, have popped up with "The Second Flying Saucer."

Like the original edition, the latter disk has picked up fragments of hit songs without the permission of the publishers. After the release of the disk, B&G approached publishers for a quarter-cent royalty rate, as against the regular 2c. rate. The publishers, who have been irked by B&G's perfunctory attitude towards their copyrights, have turned down the quarter-cent offer.

B&G operated the same way with their initial "Flying Saucer" disk and made a settlement with Harry Fox, publishers' agent and trustee, for rates ranging from one-quarter to one-half cent. The first "Saucer" disk, however, was already a big hit when the deal was made and the publishers figured to salvage some royalties out of the platter. "The Second Flying Saucer," however, has not taken off in anywhere near the same manner and the publishers figure on asking for the full rate to establish their rights in such cases.

Only a few days ago, Fox through attorney Julian T. Abeles, wrapped up a case involving a similar-type disk issued on the Cosmic label last year. Diskery, which issued the platter, "Marty On The Planet Mars," agreed to pay a stipulated sum to the publishers for use of their tunes without a license.

O'seas Deals Up Output of Big 3

Augmented by deals with overseas publishing firms, the Big Three (Robbins, Feist & Miller) is doubling its production of new standard and educational material as compared to last year. According to E. J. McCauley, chief of the firm's educational department, move is being made to meet stepped-up demands from dealers and schools for new material, as evidenced by the response at the various music conventions.

Included among the new Big Three productions will be material from the catalogs of Francis, Day & Hunter of England which the Big Three bought into recently, the Hans Gerig company of Germany, Reuter & Reuter of Sweden, and Gordon V. Thompson of Canada. These deals, as well as one with the Edizioni Curci of Italy, were set up as part of the foreign expansion program mapped by Mickey Scopp, v.p. and general manager of the Big Three companies.

The Big Three currently has in the works a new band composition, "Themes and Moods," comprised of selections from Miklos Rozsa's film scores. For the first time, Ferde Grofe's "Grand Canyon Suite" for concert orchestra and his "Death Valley Suite" for symphonic band, formerly available only on a rental basis, are being offered for sale. In addition, top instrumental soloists are prepping arrangements of Big Three's top standards for the fall market.

Cadence's 'Sunday' Punch

Archie Bleyer's Cadence Records has picked up the master of Rita Raines' "Sleepy Sunday Afternoon" from the indie Jamie label.

Cadence moved in for one of its few master-buys after the disk began making some noise in the Philadelphia area.

Hefti's Film Chore

Bandleader Neal Hefti, who also composes and arranges, has been pacted by Vanguard Productions, indie filmmakers, as a musical conductor.

His first assignment will be to write and conduct the score for a pic titled "Jamboree."

Retailer Urges Disk & Phono Mfrs. To Set Standards, End Buyer Beefs

Arlington, Mass.

Editor, VARIETY:

Experience of 25 years in the retail record business enables us to recognize a pressing problem in public relations. An increasing number of customers are bringing back records with the complaint that they are "defective" because "they skip" or are "scratched and keep repeating."

When this happens here, we immediately put the record on one of our players, and it plays perfectly. Some of them will then realize that perhaps their own player can be corrected to also play it properly. But the majority are unconvinced because "the other side plays all right" and "it's a HI-FI and I know that nothing could be wrong with it." Also "all my other records play all right."

These obdurate individuals want one action only, and no talk or explanation. They want "a new, fresh record." We know from experience that giving it to them is no solution. For if it is, (and the record with its groove walls broken down on their players is put back into stock to resell as new, or returned to the distributor as defective — both vicious dodges) they find that this record also "repeats" in exactly the same places.

This exasperates them to the opinion that we sell "only worn out records." Worse, these potential purchasers in their frustration may stop buying records. This is detrimental to the entire industry.

Who is responsible for the state of mind of these customers and the conditions which cause it? Is it the manufacturer of the records, the players, the cartridges, the tone arm or the stylus?

The answer is that an incoordinated industry is selling some incompatible articles to the public and the retail dealer gets the resulting enmity and often vituperation. This is a rotten situation — entirely unnecessary.

For the benefit of both the public and the industry, I ask that adequate standards of relationship between records and the devices sold to reproduce them be established and thoroughly publicized.

I ask the record industry to support its product with such measures as are necessary to protect the retail dealer from this abuse. And this it is possible to do, by vigorously defending a product that is relatively uniform, made to close tolerance, and which will perform properly on the majority of players.

No "check your needle" operations, but an intelligently investigated and planned program to recognize the real cause of the trouble and to correct it once and for all.

Meyer Davis' Daughter's Longhair & Other Dates

Ginia (Ginny) Davis, daughter of maestro Meyer Davis now vacationing in Maine, is set to return to Paris in the fall to record a set of American folk songs for children for the Chants du Monde label. Following, Miss Davis will sing the Chants Populaire Hebraique, by Milhaud, with the Strasbourg orchestra to be directed by Charles Bruck which will be followed by production of "The Ventriloquist" at two-character opera.

Miss Davis, now living in Europe, is the translator of "The Ventriloquist" which has already had 135 performances in France. It will probably be presented by the After Dinner Opera in its English form. Miss Davis also has been invited to Ankara in January to sing with the Presidential Philharmonic, under direction of Robert Lawrence, former quizmaster of the Met Opera broadcasts.

Discourse on Disks

Col's Lieberson and Victor's Marek Take the Stump In N.Y. Times and Harper's Mag

Goddard Lieberson and George E. Marek, the chief execs of Columbia Records and RCA Victor, respectively, currently have something to say about the disk biz in the public prints. Lieberson, under his byline in the Sunday Times magazine section (28), puts the spotlight on hillbilly music, while Marek, the subject of a Harper's mag piece by Oscar Berger, relates some of the problems in running the "giant of the recording industry."

Taking off from the recent click of the country tune, "Singing The Blues," Lieberson describes the country music genre as "a marvelously eclectic mixture of the old Elizabethan madrigal, the Scottish and Irish folksong, the American cowboy song, the spiritual or gospel song and the backhill country song." The real heart of country music, according to Lieberson, is its lyric content. The lyrics, he quotes another expert, are written "with the writer's guts." He terms the attempt of the "outlanders," i.e., the Tin Pan Alley writers, to duplicate the "alloy of heart and rhythm produced by the country alchemists" as unsuccessful.

However, it was inevitable, according to Lieberson, that "some Tin Pan Alley pundit would discover the charm of a country song. That happened several years ago when Mitch Miller put a pop vocalist, Tony Bennett, on a song "Cold, Cold Heart," written by a top country writer, the late Hank Williams.

In Harper's, Marek's problems and responsibilities as the head of Victor gets the focus in an article titled "Mr. Marek's Elephant." The "elephant" refers to Marek's characterization of his company. "Victor," he said, "is an elephant. You must not expect an elephant to behave like a gazelle."

When Marek moved over from the J. D. Tarcher ad agency to Victor in 1950, he was a firm champion of the longplay disk (which was developed by Columbia) for the classical repertory. His first move was to concentrate on LPs in this field rather that the 45rpm speed, which was being championed by Victor for all repertory.

Surveying the current situation, Marek says that an average classical disk must sell around 15,000 copies to make money. Not every LP, however, has a 15,000 potential. At the outset, he laid down the rule that for every two disks which the artists & repertoire department wanted to issue on its own hook, there had to be eight records of "what the public wants."

"Of course," Marek is quoted as saying," I make a lot of music I hate. Everybody does. But when you can sell 300,000 copies of Beethoven's Ninth. . . ."

NBOA Sept. Meet 1st for N.Y.; Seek Ways to Hypo B.O.

Des Moines, July 30.

The National Ballroom Operators Assn., which usually holds its conventions in Chicago, is coming east for the first time this fall for its annual conclave at the Park Sheraton Hotel, N. Y., Sept. 23-25. NBOA prexy Vic Sloan, operator of the Pla-Mor Ballroom in Lincoln, Neb., said the convention would be coming east with an eye to hypoing business by finding out new promotions, new bands and new dance styles.

One of the N. Y. convention nights will be thrown open for bandleaders, bookers and others to formulate ideas to spark the ballroom biz. Sloan pointed out that the small operator, who uses only local bands, is now in serious condition, as is the larger operator, and that the answer must be found for the whole industry. One of the problems the industry faces, Sloan said, is how to get the kids back into the ballrooms after they're finished with rock 'n' roll.

Lester Lanin's $3,850 In R. I., 1st Dancehall Date

Cranston, R. I., July 30.

Lester Lanin, playing his first public ballrom date at Meyer Stanzler's Rhodes on the Pawtuxet here Saturday (27), drew 22,000 at $1.75 plus tax. The date, on which Lanin was in on guarantee against 50%, went into percentage with a $3,850 net.

Stanzler said it was his "best dance party in history," and pointed out that the previous week, Bill Haley & Comets drew only 800. Lanin's appearance was exploited by a disk jock campaign of plays of his album, "Dance to the Music of Lester Lanin."

Jazz With and Under The Stars in Strong Bid at Central Park

With al fresco jive now a definite part of the musical scene via the flock of jazz festivals from one end of the country to the other, "Jazz Under the Stars," at the N.Y. Central Park Wollman Memorial Theatre, is right in the summer groove. With the New York Skyline as a backdrop, jazz has a beautiful setting here and should draw. In any case, good evening turnouts indicate that jazz will furnish the Michael P. Grace-Chris F. Anderson operation in Central Park the best gross of any of the presentations offered this summer to date. Initial week's b.o. topped $41,000.

The jazz program, produced by Monte Kaye and Pete Kameron, is an excellent layout of top names.

For the cool set, the Gerry Mulligan Quartet, with Bob Brookmeyer featured on trombone, turns in another highly satisfying performance. Mulligan's baritone sax and the valve trombone combine for some of the best jazz sounds now around. This group, incidentally, rolls perfectly with the limitations of the sound system. Also in a progressive vein is the George Shearing combo, which has consistently maintained its position over the past 10 years or so as one of the top groups in the field.

Another potent performer on the show is Erroll Garner whose pianistic technique has developed a tremendous following. In his half-dozen numbers, Garner runs the keyboard gamut from swing to sweet.

Dramatic highlight of the show is Billie Holiday who, by the logic of the N.Y. Police Dept. regulations, can play anywhere except in clubs because of her record. Whatever the current quality of her pipes, Miss Holiday still projects with an intensity that sets her above from and beyond most song purveyors.

Also on the bill are a couple of informal combos, one featurig Miles Davis on trumpet and Sonny Stitt on tenor and the other having Lester Young on tenor and Jo Jones on drums. Thrown in for good measure opening night was some nifty tap-terping by Conn & Mann against a rhythm background.

Al (Jazzbo) Collins emcees the first half of the show in pleasing style while Jean Shepherd dishes up some amusing gab during his stint in the second half. On the whole, however, there is very little gab between the acts.

Originally booked in for two weeks, the jazz layouts are being extended with new namesg?g em added to the bill and others dropping out. Playing this week will be the Kai Winding Septet, the Modeern Jazz Quartet, Stan Getz, Dinah Washington and Buddy Rich. The Gerry Mulligan Quartet and Billie Holiday are holding over from the first week's program.

Crosby Rap Vs. BMI's 'Trashy Music' Gets a Loud Radio Echo in Dallas

Dallas, July 30.

Bing Crosby's recent blast against Broadcast Music Inc. and "trashy music" and the counter-blast from KLIF station owner Gordon McLendon has had some repercussions here. Among the results was the resignation of Bill Morgan, McLendon's righthand man. Lee Segall, owner of KIXL here, immediately appointed him manager of his station. KIXL does not play rock 'n' roll or jazz. On Thursday (1), KIXL is devoting its entire day to playing Crosby disks.

The buildup of the feul stems from McLendon's crack that Crosby's blast against BMI and the music it licenses was a case of "sour grapes." McLendon stated that "except for his disk. 'True Love,' which he made with Grace Kelly, he (Crosby) hasn't had a hit in years." McLendon stated that "the stations don't care if (songs) are licensed by ASCAP, BMI or Groucho Marx. Whenever a really good piece of music comes along, like '80 Days Around the World,' it immediately finds a place on every station."

Tony Zoppl, of the Dallas Morning News, took up Crosby's defense and blamed the current platter styles on the "low music tastes" of the disk jockeys. McLendon then recorded a five-minute editorial blast against Zoppi which was played 18 times in one day. He said: "People who live in tin houses should not throw can openers." He admonished the Morning News for its liquor ads and sexy motion picture layouts.

Victor Veeps Parsons

C. F. Parsons, director of sales for the RCA Victor Distributing Corp., has been promoted to vice-prexy over sales.

He will headquarter in Chicago and will supervise sales activities of the corporation which has branches in Buffalo, Detroit, Chicago, Davenport, Kansas City, Wichita and Los Angeles.

Another Nail In 78s Coffin Via Decca Price Hike

Following the recent move by RCA Victor, Decca Records and its subsid, Coral Records, are hiking their 78rpm disk prices to $1.15 starting next Monday (5). Boost from the current 98c level was dictated by the falloff of sales in the 78rpm speed and the consequent rise in production costs. Dealer cost for the 78s will be 71c, including Federal excise taxes.

At the current time, the 78rpm disks have all but faded out of the pop market, although the oldstyle speed is still used in some markets, particularly for country & western. Price differential between the 89c 45rpm disks and the $1.15 78s is expected to hasten the demise of the 78s and establish a two-speed industry with the 45s for singles and the 33rpm LPs for the packaged market.

Melody Trails Music Vs. Peter Maurice on 'Train'

An infringement action involving the hit tune, "Freight Train," was filed in N. Y. Federal Court last week by Melody Trails Music, a Howie Richmond subsid, against Peter Maurice Music, which received publisher credit on the hit Chic disk sung by the Charlie McDevitt skiffle group and Nancy Whiskey.

The complaint alleges that Elizabeth Cotton wrote the music and lyrics to a tune called "Freight Train," which she assigned to Melody Trails for copyright on July 8. The plaintiffs claim that the Peter Maurice tune, credited to Paul James and Fred Williams, was copied from Miss Cotton's tune. James and Williams are British writers.

Suit asks for an injunction against the Maurice firm, an accounting of the profits and damages.

Decatur Watch Out— 'Smoky' Is Coming In With Country Stuff

Fort Wayne, Ind., July 30.

Charles (Smoky) Montgomery, guitar-player and drug salesman who organized the Country Music Festival presented annually since 1952 by the Fort Wayne board of park commissioners, has been promoted to division sales manager for Lincoln Laboratories Inc., pharmaceutical firm, and is moving to Decatur, Ill., effective Aug. 1. This means he has to turn down an offer of a tv show of his own in Fort Wayne, but observers predict that he is likely to make the citizens of Decatur as country music-conscious as he has those in Fort Wayne.

The Country Music Festival has been a free feature of the Franke Park Outdoor Theatre every year since Montgomery started it, filling the 2,000-seat auditorium with an overflow crowd. It is designed to locate and present talented amateurs in the country music field. The fifth annual event was held recently.

Montgomery is credited with bringing about a "peaceful revolution" in local music circles, by getting the competitive country music bands to donate their time to audition the amateurs and furnish background music for the show. The formerly hostile bands united to form the Association of Country Musicians and Entertainers, with Montgomery as President.

Smoky, a native of Cleveland, Tenn., staged his first country musicians amateur contest, drawing 5,000 to a hillside park, in Austin, Tex., where he was assistant recreation director, setting the pattern for his accomplishments in Fort Wayne. His promotion of country music has upped such disk sales in this area, and also resulted in employment of country musicians for numerous functions where they formerly were scorned.

'Air Force Airs'

William Wallrich is author of a forthcoming Duell, Sloan & Pierce book titled "Air Force Airs." Tech Sgt. Wallrich has been collecting these for the past 16 years.

Volume contains 170 songs, ballads and parodies—not the official USAF songbook but a representative collection of the ditties the airman really sings.

Joni James, MGM songstress, booked for series of dates in South America starting Aug. 3.

Sheraton Hotel's 5-Day Music Fete For French Lick

Indianapolis, July 30.

Plans for French Lick Music Festival at French-Lick Sheraton Hotel that eventually are expected to put it into a class with Tanglewood and Aspen were unveiled by Joseph M. Curry, Sheraton's central regional manager, at press conference with newspaper, radio and tv reps from Indianapolis, Louisville and Cincinnati.

First series at famous southern Indiana spa, on comparatively modest basis because of late start of project, will be held nightly from August 28 to Sept. 1.

Robert Whitney will conduct the Louisville Orchestra in all-Gershwin program with Eugene List as soloist Aug. 30. Skitch Henderson will lead pop concert, using Louisville orch Aug. 31. Izler Solomon, conductor of Indianapolis Symphony, will direct Festival Orchestra, composed of Indianapolis and Louisville symphonists, in finale, an all-Tchaikovsky program, Sept. 1.

Idea is to expand festival to 10 or 12-week season in future, Curry said. Sheraton has given old French Lick Springs Hotel multimillion dollar facelifting since taking it over two years ago. Resort hotel is in picturesque southern Indiana hill country.

Paris: (1) Pathe, (2) Philips In Disk Sales Race

Paris, July 23.

Philips rates second only to Pathe-Marconi here in actual disk sales. It has also gained ground this year in pop music names on its roster. A survey of its month's disk bestsellers gives a good cross-section of the type of songs and personalities appealing to record buyers here today.

Of a list, communicated to VARIETY, of 19 there were only two Yanks presented, Doris Day with "Que Sera Sera" and Norman Maine in a Calypso "Cindy." Rest were French names and mainly French numbers with a few Italo cleffed songs also showing. In order the toppers were Dario Moreno a belter, Henri Salvador a song stylist, and Jacqueline Francois, Patachou, Georges Brassens, Miguel Amador, a charm singer from Mexico, Zizi Jeanmaire, Jo Boyer orch and Magali Noel.

Columbia, Decca and its subsid, Coral (see separate stories), with Capitol having previously disclosed its program and RCA Victor planning to do so in a couple of weeks. Confidence in an expanding market is at the heart of all the various disk company projects.

On the retail level, the situation is now sounder than ever. Whereas a few years ago, a great number of retailers were in a shaky state, today, the number of outlets is increasing at a steady and healthy rate, keeping pace with the industry's overall expansion. Despite the competition of the chain store racks, discount houses and the disk clubs, the take for the individual retailer is now limited only by his merchandising savvy and aggressiveness.

order placed. The dealer can make his own choice of the "dividend" packages.

Col has also developed a number of dealer aids, including a Masterworks' "theme finder," a disk designed to teach clerks how to identify 24 of the most popular symphonies. Col is also making available a motor-driven revolving unit holding 24 covers plus a flasher section spotlighting promotion messages.

Gift Gimmicks

Columbia also unwrapped a complete gift-wrap program for disks to boost the records-for-gifts concept. In a Col-designed wood browser unit for LPs and 45s there's space for special holiday streamers and gift-envelopes, gift tags and colored ribbons in addition to dividers holding regular cards for various occasions.

The new twin LP series, selling at $6.98, will start off with four instrumental collections, including George Gershwin played by Percy Faith, Jerome Kern Played by Paul Weston, Richard Rodgers played by Andre Kostelanetz, and Cole Porter played by Michel LeGrand.

One of the promotional highlights in the fall program is the soundtrack set from the Warner Bros. film, "Pajama Game," starring Doris Day. Col is providing dealers with promotional material to tie in with the film's release in September.

An open letter to Rev. Billy Graham

July 30, 1957.

Dear Reverend Graham,

We read with surprise last week your statement thanking BMI "for providing a haven for composers and authors of religious music for all faiths." It seems to us that you have been misled. BMI is not a haven for composers and authors. It is a corporation wholly owned by the broadcasting industry, which we believe has been using it as an instrument of discrimination against thousands of writers not associated with it. Through its power, it has deprived the American public of a free choice of music.

On June 10th, 1957, the Anti-Trust Committee of Congress issued a report on the activities of BMI, and asked the Department of Justice to investigate. The Committee found that BMI's avowed intention to discriminate against the works of other composers was stated in BMI's own words:

> "The public chooses its favorites from the music which it hears, and does not miss what it does not hear."

The Committee found that Carl Haverlin, president of BMI, had signed an agreement with a BMI publisher in which suppression of non-BMI music was specifically contracted for. At the hearing, when Mr. Haverlin was confronted with this contract and denied that it was discriminatory, Congressman Kenneth Keating, member of the Committee, stated:

> "Mr. Haverlin, your testimony has been singularly free from frankness."

The Committee found that BMI had subsidized a publishing firm of Martin Block, a disc jockey, with guarantees of thousands of dollars. Block was then employed to write a column in a BMI periodical. In this column he urged all radio stations and personnel to play BMI music. He also warned against playing non-BMI music. These are his words:

> "I warn you, however, to watch the backing of Cugat's Amor. It is not BMI."

The Anti-Trust Committee found many other devices by which BMI has prevented the public from hearing all the music being written.

But Congress is not alone in its condemnation of BMI. Last month, the General Federation of Women's Clubs, with a membership of 5,000,000, told Attorney-General Brownell:

> "We feel that if the Department of Justice thoroughly investigates the situation and takes the proper action the public may once more hear all the music being written, instead of just that portion owned and controlled by the broadcasting industry."

The National Federation of Music Clubs, with 600,000 members, made a similar statement to Mr. Brownell:

> "An extensive investigation into the intolerable combination of broadcasting interests which determine whose music shall be heard and how often, will help reestablish conditions of freedom for music in America."

Bing Crosby told Senator Warren G. Magnuson:

> "The monopolistic trend is certainly apparent enough. I think it is the result of pressures exerted by BMI. It just galls me exceedingly to see so much trash on our airlanes and TV screens while the work of talented, dedicated song-writers is crowded out of the picture."

The undersigned are members of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, an organization which since 1914 has been the true haven of all writers of musical works. Its catalogue contains thousands of religious compositions by the world's most famous composers. Among them are: George Bennard ("The Old Rugged Cross"), Ernest Bloch ("Schelomo"), Benjamin Britten ("A Ceremony of Carols"), John Alden Carpenter ("Song of Freedom"), Claude Debussy ("Martyre de St. Sebastion"), Frederick Delius ("Mass of Life"), Norman Dello Joio ("Jubilant Song"), Isadore Freed ("Prophecy of Micah"), Richard Hageman ("Christ Went Up Into the Hills"), Gustav Holst ("Hymn of Jesus"), Hall Johnson ("My Good Lord Done Been Here"), J. Rosamond Johnson ("Where Shall I Go to Ease My Tremblin' Mind"), Horatio Parker ("The Dream of Mary"), Giacomo Puccini ("Messa Di Gloria"), Roy Ringwald ("The Song of Easter"), Homer Rodeheaver ("When Jesus Came"), Igor Stravinsky ("Symphony of Psalms"), Ralph Vaughan-Williams ("Mass in G Minor").

The electric success of your crusade is not only a tribute to your spiritual gifts. It is also a tribute to your integrity. We feel that you could never knowingly abet the publicity campaign of commercial interests which have been dictating the musical diet of our people.

We have therefore taken this opportunity to acquaint you with facts you did not know when you met with the officials of BMI.

Respectfully yours,

Howard Hanson

Inside Stuff—Vaude

General Artists Corp. is discovering that it's bad to monkey around with cast, Rigoletto Bros. & Aimee had been set to open on the Tivoli circuit, Australia, but that isn't likely now since Aimee refuses to be separated from a pet monkey. Australian regulations will not permit a monkey to land from a plane. However, a monkey can walk off without challenge if it comes off a boat. Difference lies in the time the animal is quarantined aboard ship.

Hamish Menzies, singing pianist with a Scot brogue, is turning nitery impresario and settling down in Cleveland to catch up on lost sleep. Nitery entertainer bought his way into downtown intimate Patio Club, becoming Frank Stutz's partner as holder of 50% of stock. His second investment was a $1,400 baby grand for his own use during room's cocktail sessions.

"I became tired of not getting to bed before daybreak, year after year," said Menzies, in explaining why he turned nitery owner. "Now I can call it quits at midnight, have more time for song composing or recording work, and have more leisure." Spot will be renamed the Rogue Room by Hamish, who plans to tour only about six months each year hereafter.

DEATHWATCH ON LIVE ACTS

Arenas Caught Between Tall Coin On Promotions and Municipal Tabus

One of the major facts of life facing arena operators, especially municipalities, lies in discovery that the big money in arena operation stems from promotions. Since many towns owning their own show plants have regulations forbidding the city to gamble on any event, whether show business or sporting, some are now facing up to the fact that arenas will either be run for mere marginal profits or at a loss.

As many arenas have concluded, it's virtually impossible to make the investment of the arena return sizable sums to the city treasury unless they take chances on the various shows. It's been found in certain areas for example, that it's difficult to charge a rental that will put the operation in the black. Most arenas have computed that the average spot gets 200 events annually. Thus, in order to compute net costs, they would have to figure the costs of operation, divide by 200 and then come up with the rock-bottom cost of renting out the arena for one event. In some cases, the net rental is too high to entice bookings.

These spots are also handicapped by the fact that they have given the boxing concession to one set of promoters, the hockey and basketball rights to another, and wrestling to still another set. The municipalities have frequently found that this group gets the profits out of the venture.

As is often the case, the various shows that become available have to be self-promoted in many situations. Thus, the show producers either stand to lose or make a bundle, depending upon the gate. As a result of this situation, a new crop of show biz promoters has come to the fore. For example, the Feld Bros., of Washington, D.C., have taken Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus in several cities. They have also been promoting their own rock 'n' roller in towns where no localites could handle the show. The Gale Agency has also taken on the self-promotion of various touring shows, with varied results.

In some cases, the municipalities' inability to promote has been a blessing since it absolved the city from taking any losses. However, the various townships have begun to adopt a policy of a guaranteed rental against a percentage of the gross. In some cases, they're having trouble getting the percentage without reducing the guarantee. But, it's seen that both will be needed if the arena isn't to remain a patsy in the show biz field.

Oakland, Cal., July 30.

Pete De Cenzie's defunct El Rey Burlesque, now being wrecked to make way for a new freeway, is going down bravely. On its marquee are these words:

"The Greatest Strip of Them All."

Eye Cafe Circuit Of N.Y.-Miami LQ's And Coast's Moulin

Plans are in the works to form a nitery circuit out of the Latin Quarters in New York and Miami Beach plus the Moulin Rouge, Hollywood. Frank Sennes, operator of the Moulin Rouge, was in New York last week conferring with E. M. Loew and Eddie Risman, Latin Quarter operator and general manager, respectively, on the possibilities of booking all three spots as a circuit which could give some acts more than a full year of consecutive work.

Sennes also books the Desert Inn, Las Vegas, and other niteries, but these wouldn't be included on the loop.

Sennes previously agented Donn Arden, who produces the shows at the Moulin Rouge, to act in a similar capacity for the N.Y. L. Q His first full-fledged effort in the N.Y. spot will take place in January.

Coincident with the Arden booking at the Latin Quarter had been a report that some alterations would be made in the N.Y. spot to permit the Moulin Rouge production numbers to be utilized. However, it's not considered feasible to alter the LQ along the lines of the Moulin Rouge stage. Sennes said that, at this time, the only exchange would be in ideas and costumes.

Op of Ex-Burley House In and Out of Oakland Jail; Challenge Obscenity Law

Oakland, Cal., July 30.

Pete De Cenzie, operator of the now-defunct El Rey Burlesque, spent an hour in Oakland city prison last week for staging an indecent show last fall.

He was freed on $100 bail when his lawyer, Nate Cohn, challenged constitutionality of the city obscenity law under which he, stripper Evelyn West and four others were convicted last winter.

Oakland Municipal Judge Charles W. Fisher sentenced De Cenzie to five days in jail, and Miss West and her maanger, Al Charles, to 45 days apiece, plus $500 fines, though they have been out of California since before the trial.

De Cenzie was also fined $500 and given 175 days suspended.

Cohn in his habeas corpus petition to the State District Court of Appeal in Frisco contended Oakland's obscenity code was illegal because it was "vague and uncertain" and duplicated the state's obscenity law.

The three other defendants—two baggypants comics and a dancer—were fined $500 apiece, but weren't given jail sentences.

Miss West and her manager can't be extradited from another state because their offense is a misdemeanor.

Roger L. Alley has been named manager of the Cork Club, Houston.

Ex-Vaudev Maud Kimball Living as Recluse at 80

Chicago, July 30.

Former vaudevillian Maud Kimball was found living as a recluse in a condemned building in Terre Haute, Ind. The 80-year-old Miss Kimball revealed her identity to the press and local police there last week.

Police also found $20,000 in her belongings in the empty building.

From the 'Variety' Files

A check of VARIETY's New Act files shows a July 19, 1912, entry on Maud Kimball & Co. (1) playing a New York vaudeville house with an 18-minute "farcical sketch." The reviewer, Jolo (the late Joshua Lowe, who later became chief of this publication's London office), was "notorious" in the trade for his ultra-brief appraisals. There's a legend—not necessarily untrue—that he once reviewed a horse act called Napoleon this way: "Giddyap, Napoleon, small-time bound." Jolo was more liberal with Maud Kimball act, giving it six lines as follows:

"From the stilted speeches and such ejaculations as 'Gad, madam,' the sketch bears the earmarks of an English playlet of ancient vintage. Sketch is not any too well played, either. Small-time act."

PALACE CLOSING AS THE TIPOFF

By JOE COHEN

Closing of vaude at the Palace, N.Y., now definite for Aug. 8, points up anew the fact that some live forms of show biz are in an era of attrition. There's a scarcity not only of headliners, which closed the bigtime theatres and is now responsible for the shuttering of niteries, but a frightening shortage of non-headline acts.

It's difficult to get suitable acts in any category, and little wonder, say the insiders, since the incubation fields such as burlesqueries, cafes such as the old Leon & Eddie's, and the family time vaude are now a thing of the past.

For many years, according to showmen, vaude and niteries, and television to a major extent, have been living off the talent developed during the days when there were lots of spots "in which an act could be lousy," to repeat the phrase by George Jessel and others. Most fields of show biz have been thriving on that diet.

Unfortunately, the acts and headliners developed during that period are either getting old or have been used up by repeated showings in video.

Talent's % Gravy At Cocoanut Grove

Los Angeles, July 30.

Unprecedented business for the first 13 weeks of operation of the "new" Cocoanut Grove has put performers into the percentage bracket each week, according to entertainment director Gus Lampe. In the three months since its opening, the Grove has paid out a total of around $30,000 in percentages to performers.

Tony Martin opened the room and was followed by the McGuire Sisters, Anna Maria Alberghetti and Lena Horne. Nat King Cole is current. Each has gone into percentage.

Payoffs, Lampe said, insure continuation of the room's policy of booking talent at a high guarantee with an override on the covers.

"It's the fairest way for both sides," he commented. "We are willing to make our guarantees ample and satisfactory and are more than willing to provide a percentage arrangement for talent that brings in additional business."

In each case, he noted, performers have not only drawn a hefty number of covers but have attracted a big-spending audience.

London Hilton Hotel Project Gets Ribbing

London, July 30.

The Hilton hotel project in Park Lane, overlooking Hyde Park, which has already been approved by the Westminster City Council, came in for some gentle ribbing in the House of Lords recently. Lord Blackford, protesting that the 378-foot hostelry would be 13 feet higher than St. Paul's Cathedral, said it would overpower people wherever they were. Citizens would see to the east St. Paul's—a lovely structure symbolizing Almighty God—and to the west a massive structure symbolizing the almighty dollar.

On the other hand, Lord Strabolgi thought the hotel, with accommodation for 1,200 persons, would be a great advantage and he reckoned it would bring in $30,000,000 a year. The project still needs the endorsement of the London County Council, and the government is proposing to hold a public inquiry before reaching a final decision.

Is The Wildwood Bubble Bursting On Inflation? Laine, Ted Lewis Cases

The big-act policy in Wildwood-by-the-Sea, N.J., is floundering at the moment. First indications that all is not well came with the dropping of acts at the Diamond Beach Lodge, which is currently going with a dance policy in the main room and a couple of cocktail acts in the lounge. According to a management spokesman, the spot is still desirous of resuming acts, and may do so.

However, it will try to renegotiate outstanding talent contracts on the basis of one-show nightly, and thus will press for a reduction in salaries to which it is committed.

The blowoff came when the check for the "Calypso Carnival" revue was stopped on the basis that a renegotiation was necessary. The management said it was dissatisfied with the turn. The headliner on that session was Ted Lewis who was paid off, but business during that week was way off, according to the management.

However, it is freely admitted that the major difficulty that the Diamond Beach Lodge found itself in came as a result of a previous booking, Frankie Laine, who was set at $42,000 for 11 nights. This is more than Laine had obtained in any other engagement in recent times with the possible exception of Las Vegas. Laine was paid off, but it's been stated that the financial strain was such that the operators had a financial relapse.

At that, a spokesman for the Lodge declared that had the booking come later in the season, there was a good chance that even this huge investment would have paid off.

As it is, the other spots haven't done too well as yet. Oscar Garrigues' Manor House didn't come out ahead with the sojourns of Tony Martin and Joni James.

The Laine booking raised eyebrows throughout the industry, especially when it was reported that the singer's pact was even an issue within General Artists Corp., which made the deal. There was one faction that held that neither the office nor the performer should accept the date at that price, since it was inevitable that disaster would be one of the end results. However, that minority lost out. Majority had felt that the price was arrived at legitimately, since the other cafes in the area were bidding up the prices of names beyond the point that would be paid in an area of more knowledgeable competition.

There were elements in all agencies that held that the Wildwood boom would bust in a hurry, since they believed that there wasn't that kind of money floating around the N.J. resort.

Leonidoff and Jack Cole Jockeying for Cuban Cafe

The Havana-Riviera, Havana, is set to open in December and will have a show to be masterminded by either Leon Leonidoff, senior producer at New York's Radio City Music Hall, or dancer-choreographer Jack Cole. Both are laying out prospectuses for consideration.

Owner spokesmen already have announced that the spot will field a line of girls, the number to be determined by the production plan accepted.

U. S. Groups Pull Sock 140G in B.A. To Nab 2d Tour

Buenos Aires, July 30.

South America, particularly Argentina, has become a new frontier for U.S. show biz. This is reflected in the two-week gross of the show at the Gran Teatro Opera here, with the Platters and the June Taylor Girls, who drew an unheard of $140,000 at a $5 top. As a result, options have been picked up which extended the bookings in Argentina for a total of 12 weeks, plus a six-week tour in Uruguay, Brazil and Venezuela.

Francisco Lococo is the promoter for the Argentine stand of this show. Theatre does two shows shows nightly.

The path for the success of this show has been paved by disks and films. The Platters have been on Mercury disks and have appeared in a rock 'n' roll film. As far as the June Taylor line is concerned, they are a natural draw in this part of the country.

Sol Lerner, manager of the Taylor line, returned to the U.S. last week, and Buck Ram, managing the Platters, came in this week to confer with Joe Glaser, prexy of Associated Booking Corp. The Platters pact calls for $12,000 weekly plus eight roundtrip fares.

Mass. Drought Ups Biz In the Great Outdoors; Cape Cod's Mark-Buster

Boston, July 30.

The two-month drought in Massachusetts has upped biz in fun spots and resorts 25% over last year in many cases, and 1956 was a banner year, according to Commissioner John T. Burke of the state's Dept. of Commerce.

While the hot, dry spell has been tough on the farmers, with an estimated $8,000,000 crop loss in the state, it has been boff for the beaches, parks, other al fresco entertainment and resort biz.

From Old Orchard Beach, Me., to the tip of Cape Cod, summer ops report figures way ahead of last year. Robert Van Sant of the Cape Cod Chamber of Commerce said figures for June were far ahead of last year. Cape ops said this season shapes as a record-breaker.

North Shore operators said trade is up 10 to 12% over a year ago. Tourist and travel agencies reported requests for info are up 15%. Most regions did a better biz during June as compared to a year ago—notably Plymouth, where large crowds gathered to welcome the arrival of the Mayflower II.

Old Sturbridge Village played host to more tourists during June, with July attendance pushing the total still higher than a year ago.

Judge Seals Testimony In Liberace Ohio Suit

Youngtown, O., July 30.

Testimony taken in an attorney's office last fall in the court case between pianist Liberace and two Youngstown promoters has been locked in a safe in the county clerk's office, following an oral application by attorneys from both sides.

Judge Erskine Maiden Jr. of Mahoning County Common Pleas Court last week ordered the depositions of Frank Gorgie and Frank J. Shea Jr. sealed away. The Gorgie deposition was taken Oct. 29, 1956, on behalf of Liberace, plaintiff in the suit against Gorgie and Dave McComb, who promoted the appearance of Liberace and his brother, George, in the Akron Rubber Bowl July 4, 1956.

The Liberaces sued for a total of $17,799 they claimed was due them on the contract with the promoters. Judge Maiden emphatically said the depositions were in no way related to a libel suit brought by Liberace against Confidential magazine.

Ice Show Review

Holiday On Ice
(MULTNOMAH, PORT.)

Portland, Ore., July 25.

Morris Chalfen's "Holiday On Ice of 1957", produced & directed by George & Ruth Tyson; choreography & staging, Chester Hale; costumes, Robert Mackintosh; orchestrations, Paul Summey; props & scenery, Robert Fletcher; lighting, Doug Morris with Hayes Alan Jenkins, Joan Hyldoft, Pat Gregory, Bill Blocker, Bobby Blake, Farrar & Carter, Don Watson, Percelly Bros. (2), Phil Hiser & Gina Rubaki, Joe Jackson Jr., Weber & Deeley, Percelly Kids (3), John La-Due, June Stevenson, Glamour Icers (24), Ice Squires (12), James Rowe, John Berkman Orch (15); at Multnomah Stadium, July 24-31, '57, top.

The 12th edition of "Holiday On Ice" is preeming here and will set out for the midwest and a nationwide tour following. This new layout is loaded with spectacle, talent and entertainment. This is the third year that "HOI" has played here and this round should grab more coin than previous takes.

Word has gotten around that this is a giant show and not just a small tanker. Advance sale was $60,000 and from all indications the take for the eight days should exceed $125,000. Outfit worked here 10 days before but had to cut two days due to prior booking of the stadium.

The 60x40 portable tank is more than ample space for the skaters to show off their skills. Olympic and world's figure skating champ Hayes Alan Jenkins is on in two spots. The guy easily demonstrates why he is entitled to the crown. Joan Hyldoft and Pat Gregory wow the customers with their grace, skill and showmanship. Both are lookers and score big. Orb-filler June Stevenson steals the show from the stars with her solo "slave" number and as distaffer with John LaDue. Comics Harvey Weber & Ted Deeley get solid returns for their comedy shenanigans a la Frick & Frack. James Carter & Alice Farrar please with some nifty adagio stuff. Speedsters Bill Blocker & Bobby Blade do a top job as soloists and when they team up with femme partners.

Ener-jet-ic Don Watson grabs "ohs" and "ahs" for his daring twists and turns. Phil Hiser & Gina Rubaki get the customers off their mitts with their waltzes down memory lane. The three Percelly Kids stop the show with their acro work on the freeze. The little girl is put through her paces with assists from her older sister and brother. Joe Jackson Jr. keeps the stubholders in stitches with his pantomime work and bike stint. The Percelly Bros. (2) are champs without skates. They move up and down a 15-foot ladder while balancing head to head, foot to head, and one handstand on head. Duo garner heavy mitting. The 24 Glamour Icers and 12 Ice Squires are on for some terrific production numbers. The group is well disciplined, work with precision and move well about the ice.

The production numbers are big-time all the way. Best are "The Nutcracker," "Cavalcade of Show Biz," "Festival of Bacchus" and "Cheerio! Good Luck!" The 24 events made the two hour and 45 minutes pass too quickly with its fast pace.

"Holiday" is strictly major league. The dubbing and sound, choreography and lighting and sets and costumes are superlative. This 12th edition is packed with variety and change of pace. John Berkman and his band play a tough show in fine style. Over 11,000 attended opening night ('24), against 15,000 capacity. Feve.

Circus Review

Circus Sarrasani
(BERLIN FUNKTURM)

Berlin, July 22.

With Williams, Animals, Duo Courty, 3 Soranis, Camilio Mayer & Co., Donatha's Bears, Richard Hardner, McSovereign, Walter Galetti & Little Paul, Cocker Ossy, Osker Fischer's Elephants (3), Togare's Berber Lions (6), 2 Bress, Moeser-Jose, Jean Albert Hoppe's Swine Circus, Elsane, Timenon's Orignal Rif-Kabylan. Direction by Ernest Nauti, Music, Rolf Reichart Orch. (12), Opened June 27, 1957, at Berlin Funkturm; $1.50 top.

Circus Sarrasani was once Germany's most famous big top. Founded in 1901 and headquartered in Dresden, where since 1912 it has owned a huge 5,000-seater of stone, the gigantic enterprise was destroyed by an Allied air raid in February, 1945. It took Fritz Mey, once trustee and close friend of Sarrasani (who died in 1934) and now director of Sarrasani, more than 10 years to bring this circus on its feet again. The new Sarrasani is now headquartered in Mannheim, West Germany.

The Berlin appearance of Circus Sarrasani—the first one after an absence of 14 years—turned out to be a fine prestige success for this enterprise and it looks as though it is right on its way to regain its former reputation.

A remarkable thing about this four-pole 3,500-seater tent is that it's technically first-rate and equipped with all the modern trappings. Unlike several other circuses which came to town and often looked shabby, this one makes a very clean and neat impression.

Current program is neither a mammoth nor a big-scale international show, but it is expertly balanced and staged. Program consists of 23 numbers which are teed off with the entry of all participating artists for an eye-filling view.

Most of the numbers belong to the animal department. Here, in particular, the horses are a highlight. Moeser-Jose, a matador of the Spanish riding school whose reputation dates back several decades, is tops along this line. Winner of the Gold Medal of Societe Hyppique Francaise, he proves that he is still a special attraction for every circus.

Spontaneous applause also for Donatha's Bears which, among other capers, also ride bikes. Jean Albert Hoppe's so-called "swine circus" also commands attention. Trained pigs have hardly ever been seen in Berlin before. Williams' "exotic medley," a presentation of lamas, ponies, zebras and guanacos, is also a masterful training job. Williams also comes along with Sarrasani's Norwegian horses, a bunch of beautifully built four-leggers who garner justified applause. Oskar Fischer's elephant group, which brings to a close the first part of this three-hour program, is strictly on the positive side, too. These huge but good-natured pachyderms do all sorts of tricks. Togare's Berber Lions, opening up the second part of the show, are not so impressive. This cage act could be more substantial.

In the artists' department, "the mysterious ball" rates special attention. This act, performed by Richard Hardner, has to do with a spiral line on which a huge metallic ball containing Hardner is slowly driven up. The fact that the ball is going up and down its way without any mechanism that is apparent gives this act a sensational frame.

Elsane, labeled as the star of Casino de Paris, does a number of breathtaking trapeze stunts and she too scores. Same goes for two Bress who do several daredevil stunts under the circus cupola. Of outstanding calibre also is Camilio Mayer's high-wire troupe. Camilio, an agile 66, bakes a cake on the cable.

In the comedy department, Cocker Ossy performing the high "C" of the musical clowns easily walk off with the lion's share of applause, the more so as there is not much comedy competition here. This trio skillfully handles various musical instruments and has a number of fine gags.

Others in the program include Walter Galetti & Little Paul who do some clowning between the intervals; Duo Courty, marimbaphonists; McSovereign, a master of the diabolo; three Soranis, teeterboardists; Timenon's Original Rif-Kabylians, a group of mostly young whirlwind acrobats from North Africa. The next and last act, incidentally, takes place outside the circus tent. Here, a "despiser of death," a member of the Camilio Mayer troupe, does some nerve-tingling stints on a high steel pole—acrobatics plus trumpet blowing.

Direction by Ernest Nauti is fast moving, while the background music by Rolf Reichart and his 12-piece orch is very catchy.

Biz was very poor during the first days (for which, however, the murderous heat was primarily to blame) and has now reached the point where it can be called very satisfactory. Press notices were very good. There are two performances daily.

Circuses are having a rather tough time in Germany and regular "protection groups" have already been set up to help domestic big tops. It's to be hoped that the newly opened Circus Sarrasani gets over the next rounds. It deserves it, particularly in view of the fact that it looks back on such a long and outstanding tradition. Hans.

Deathwatch for Acts

has been worn out by weekly showings on video, and when newcomers failed to come up to supplant names such as Milton Berle, Jackie Gleason, Red Buttons, George Gobel and others, comedians generally became a drug on the market. They feel that the same will apply to singers currently popular, and it's possible that all variety entertainment will go because of the inability of the field to develop headliners in sufficent numbers.

In spots such as the Palace, it wasn't a question of getting names, which it didn't need and couldn't afford, but one of getting the mill-run of acts to fill up the weekly eight-turn bill.

Those Familiar Acts

Necessity of repeating the turns caused a dwindling of audiences until the major portion of Palace fans were the oldtimers who devoted a portion of their social security check for Palace visits. The preponderance of the geriatric set made it difficult to showchase a more modern type of talent, which wasn't being developed in sufficient numbers anyway.

The artistic difficulties of the Palace reflected, on a smaller scale, the ailments of show biz in general, and could be an object lesson to fields such as video which say the showman seems to be using up piecemeal all that the variety field has developed. Now that comics have worn out, the vaudeo field is on a singing kick. It's predicted that this too will wear out, and the only staple that they can turn to, aside from films, will be dramatic shows. For many reasons, principally because of the plentitude of developing grounds, there are lots of good young actors around. But for the song-and-dance fields, there are only prophecies of doom, when even the famed Palace couldn't sustain a budget that rarely exceeded $3,500 weekly.

Chicago, July 30.

Stageshows are due back at the Chicago Theatre Aug. 23. The Loop's last stage billings were at the same theatre in November of 1955. Headliner on the one-week show will be Eydie Gorme, who just finished an engagement at the Palmer House here. Also signed is the Billy Williams Quartet.

It was earlier hinted by Nate Platt, Balaban & Katz circuit v.p., that stageshows would return to the Chicago if business warranted it. In recent weeks that house has had Jack Webb and Jerry Lewis, each on two-day personal appearances which did sock-business, although the films they were promoting, "D.I" and "Delicate Delinquent," did only moderate b.o.'s during the remainder of their playdates in that house. Film to run during Miss Gorme's stand has not been announced yet.

Arg. Agents and Acts Both Unionized; Say Exhibs Sabotage Vaudeville

Buenos Aires, July 23.

Union Gremial Argentina de Agentes de Espectaculos (Union of Entertainment Agents) has recently signed an agreement with the Variety Artists' Union designed to regulate regulations between performers and agents. They hope to link up with similar unions in the United States and Europe, and would like performers to have unionized agents.

They believe this would help to eliminate unscrupulous anglers likely to leave their clients stranded when far from home, and would represent security to foreign talent interested in booking for this part of the world, that agents who are members of the Union, are the most likely to be trusted.

So far the Union has not indicated that local agents or entertainment managers have joined the Union, if any.

The Union is also working on a draft law in conjunction with the Labor Ministry, to regulate relations between talent and the percenters and also perpetuate the law making vaudeville turns obligatory in film theatres. The Union contends that this law is unpopular with audiences, only because the turns presented so far in no wise represent the best that Argentine vaudeville has to offer. No big-name talent has consented to accept bookings in the film-theatres, and the quality of the turns is frequently amateurish.

The Union blames this on the film exhibitors, whom they claim have tried to sabotage the vaudeville law by booking poor talent, to ensure that public reaction against this law would be unfavorable.

Audiences have entirely changed their film attending habits here, often arriving in time to avoid vaudeville turns.

Law 14,226 (Vaudeville Law) is for benefit of Vaudeville Workers' Union's 12,000 members.

CNE Starts Rehearsals On 'Canadiana '57' In Show Starring Bob Hope

Toronto, July 30.

With Bob Hope headlining, Jack Arthur, producer of the 24,000-seater night grandstand show at the Canadian National Exhibition here, has finally inked all his acts. Rehearsals started today (Tues.) but with Hope due in later.

The three-hour grandstand stint, with Hope bringing his own package to carry the second half, will be presented from Aug. 23 to Sept. 7 at $3 top, plus a 75c admission to the CNE grounds. For the grandstand matinees Aug. 26-31 Arthur will have Ringling Bros., Barnum & Bailey Circus. This will be $2 top plus grounds entrance.

With Hope to do 40 minutes, acts signed for the night show include Geoffrey Holder & Co. (8), D'Arco & Gee, Martha Ann Bentley, Paul Kofler, Jo, Jac & Joni, the Alcattis, Wally Koster & Phyllis Marshall, Shari McKim, Velyn & La Verne French, Gerry the Giraffe. Show is tagged "Canadiana '57," with settings and costumes by Stuart MacKay, 60-piece orch conducted by Howard Cable; dances by Alan & Blanche, Lunds and Midge Arthur, original lyrics and music by Cable and Stanley Daniels. Entire production will be under Arthur's direction.

MCA Folds Pitt Office; Mgr. Claire to Go on Own

Pittsburgh, July 30.

Music Corp. of America has decided to close its local office after giving it a year's try, and will handle its business in future out of New York headquarters. Manager George Claire was offered a spot at either Minneapolis or Detroit but turned it down, preferring to remain here and reactivate his old agency.

Claire, ex-vaude hoofer, had an agency here for years before closing down to go to Miami Beach with the Vagabonds. MCA brought him into the fold first in Cleveland, and then here. Arnold Felsher, MCA telepix rep locally, will stay on but in smaller quarters.

Canny Scot

Glasgow, July 30

How to succeed on the vaude stage, as told by Jimmy Logan, Auld Lang Syne comedian, to the city's Rotary Club in a talk-session on humor:

"Psycho-analyze your audience, say what you have to say, and 'get oot quick' when they've had enough."

Marciano In Show Biz Bow

Chicago, July 30.

Annual community entertainment events have, like other industries, spread from metropolitan Chicago to its suburbs. One of the newer affairs is the yearly "Italian Festival," held just beyond Chicago's western limits. The open-air lineup of carny attractions and booths rented by local merchants makes its main attraction an evening-stageshow. The two-week fair offers two bills of one week each.

Topping this year's first show (July 24-Aug. 9) was Rocky Marciano whose appearance marks the Chicago debut for the former fighter. Marciano is favored with a crowd that pays its 50c chiefly to see him. His 10 minutes onstage, with the support of emcee Billy Falbo, is devoted to autobiographical anecdotes. Still unseasoned in public performance, Marciano has little polish to contribute to his turn. Timing, vocal projection and stage presence were all inadequate to keep the enthusiasm of the crowd, which had been standing through 45 minutes of preliminary numbers. Personality factors, which presumably are intended to supply Marciano's real punch onstage, didn't quite come through.

Singer Carl Ravazza, originally following Marciano but later preceding him on the program, delivers his songalog with sufficient force to regain some of the enthusiasm of his foot-weary listeners.

Falbo brings his night club routine of a poolroom panto and assorted quips to the platform stage for a hearty response. His emcee chore is handled with plenty of savvy and serves to knit the show together without letdown.

Nicki & Noel are a terp team who work with highly stylized choreography that makes for a pleasant 10 minutes, but their heavyweight response comes on a dancehall skit that makes good use of their comic talents as well as their terping.

Show openers are the three Di Mara sisters. While Italian accents probably wouldn't hurt their act in this setting, the Dixieland numbers might sound a bit funny to most ears. On their treatment of Italian folksongs and standard ballads, they handle themselves well and make for pleasant listening. Henry Brandon's 10-piece ensemble comes through this show with flying colors, despite the usual subversion of outdoor performances such as windblown scores and cumbersome audito wiring.

Staging, lighting and sound on this show are all outstanding and contribute to the ease of performers and audience alike. However, an hour and a half is too long for most viewers to remain standing. Show is booked by United Attractions Inc. and funds are used for local Italian charities.

Second week (July 30-Aug. 4) includes the Vagabonds, Tanya & Beagh, Lenore Sutton Dancers and the Brandon orch. Lewa.

Sherman Adams Likes Ike And N. E. Tourist Pitch

Boston, July 30.

Sherman Adams of New Hampshire, President Eisenhower's chief aide, has endorsed Yankee Homecoming's tourist-industrial project aimed to bring 2,000,000 additional visitors to New England next year.

Jack Frost, prexy of the enterprise, said Adams has agreed to serve as a member of the Yankee Homecoming Founder's Council for his state. He is a former N.H. governor.

Frost is kicking off the 1957 tourist promosh with a preview on the Cape in August.

K.C.'s Hotel President Names Geo. Bowles PR

Kansas City, July 30.

George Bowles has been appointed director of public relations for the Hotel President here, it was announced last week by Frank Dean, president. Bowles has been serving the hotel for a number of year, handling it on an account basis and also serving as entertainment buyer.

In his new post Bowles will devote himself to hotel work, continuing as entertainment buyer, and going in more strongly for sales promotion and publicity activities.

Entertainment buying has been principally for the Drum Room, the hotel's deluxe dinner-dancing spot where musical combos have been the rule lately and where in the past a floorshow policy prevailed. Recently dancing was eliminated in the room, while the hotel mulls the possibility of remodeling and other changes. Room continues to have music with Harold Cowan at the organ.

With N.Y. So Near, Wildwood Lures Names Eyeing TV

Wildwood, N.J., July 30.

The close proximity of this resort's night clubs to the New York television centres is allowing local bonifaces to obtain choice bookings that might not be possible at a more distant location. The Garden State Parkway makes the resort an easy three-hour drive from Gotham.

Georgia Gibbs was able to sandwich an eight-day appearance at the Manor Hotel supper club around her "Million Record" tv show. Boniface Oscar Garrigues permitted the chirper to take Monday off so that she might commute to N.Y. for her NBC show. In return, most performers are anxious to give hefty tv plugs to the clubs.

Ted Lewis was able to accept a 10-day date at the Beach Club of Diamond Beach Lodge because boniface George James greenlighted him for his Sunday (21) appearance on the Ed Sullivan show.

Frankie Laine was able to fulfill video engagements immediately preceding and following his Beach Club showing. Many agents are taking advantage of this feature to lure some of the names east from Hollywood.

The Andrews Sisters, currently at Ben Martin's Club Bolero, were another of the west coast acts to kill two birds with one stone. Similar arrangements are pending for many others due here for appearances. These include Tony Bennett, Eydie Gorme, Martha Raye, Four Aces, Eartha Kitt, McGuire Sisters, Nat King Cole, Jerry Lewis, Liberace, Fats Domino, Teresa Brewer, and scores of others.

Mimi Benzell Bleats For A&P, But No Sing

Albany, July 30.

Mimi Benzell will appear at an outdoor dance and officiate at a car drawing at the A&P Central Ave. Supermarket in Albany Thursday (1) night. Miss Benzell, who will not sing, is scheduled to be at the dance in the store's parking lot, for Pepsi-Cola Bottling Co. She will also present the keys to the winner of an A&P weekly automobile contest.

Tommy Ippolito's orch (local) will play for dancing.

'Highlights' in Fast Fold

The Central Theatre, N. Y., which took on the Negro unit "Highlights" on a quick booking, is now back to a film policy. House is now showing strip pix.

Theatre booked the unit out of the shuttered Paradise Club, Atlantic City. There was little time to advertise or exploit the Central's entry into stageshows. The grosses didn't warrant continuation after 10 days of stagers.

Names' 30-Day Cancellation Clause A Dirty Name to Cafes; %'ers Would Scrap 'Out' for Higher Client Fees

'No Dogs Allowed'

Baudy's Greyhounds are at the Bellevue Casino here.

The chorus girls' poodles are out for the duration of the two-week date, by order of owners Harry Holmok and Jack Suz.

A.C.'s July Boff; 500 Club's Names

Atlantic City, July 30.

One of the best Julys in the resort's history draws to a close as a month of almost perfect weather, with little rain. The town has been packed with vacationists and metropolitan area residents escaping the inland heatwave.

Business in all hotel, amusement and restaurant spots is better than average. Without weekend reservations, it's no dice in night clubs, hotels, while long lines await their turns in the top eateries.

Jerry Lewis comes into Paul (Skinny) D'Amato's plush club Thursday (1) night. Lewis follows Liberace, who has been doing turnaway biz the week he has been playing the 500 Club, 1,000-seater. D'Amato brings in Nat King Cole, Will Mastin Trio starring Sammy Davis Jr., McGuire Sisters and Frank Sinatra (the latter if picture and other commitments will permit) in August.

Frank Parker will come into Steel Pier vaude for week starting Sunday (4). Gil Lamb will appear with him. Leo Elgart orch will be in Marine ballroom until Aug. 8 when Ralph Marterie takes over.

Charles Master and trio started at Ritz Carlton's new Calypso Carousel room Friday (26).

Max Roach Quintet into Cotton Club with Duke Ellington coming in tonight (Tues.).

"Ice Capades" in Convention hall is doing good business as John Harris gets his new show in shape for the New York opening. In the airconditioned ballroom of the hall, wrestling is a Saturday night draw.

SCOTS LAUD MOSCOW STATE VAUDE GROUP

Glasgow, July 30.

Artists of the Moscow State Variety Theatre received socko a reception when they played for one week at the King's Theatre, normally a legit house. Scot crix gave unusually good reviews to the layout, which opened July 22. A selection of acts from the Moscow combo will be seen on BBC-TV Aug. 4.

Scottish Daily Mail critic Gordon Reed described it as "unique, startling and at times quite baffling. A show not to be missed." Robins Millar, vet critic of the Scottish Daily Express, singled out petite dancer Galya Izmailova as "a firefly in movement."

The Russian group included folk dancers, singers, instrumentalists, acrobats, whistlers, puppeteers, conjurors and xylophonists.

Police Prowl Houston In 1G Crescendo Heist

Houston, July 30.

Police are still hunting the confident, well-dressed bandit who made off with $1,000 in cash during a daylight holdup Tuesday (23) at the Crescendo Club, a plush privatery here.

Joe Edward Smith, 20-year-old manager of the supper club, said he'd just walked into his office at 8 a.m. when he realized that someone had followed him and he was standing on the dance floor.

The man produced a small revolver and demanded the cash. He had Smith unlock a desk drawer and became angry and threatening when he found it empty. Smith finally gave the man a cash box from the filing cabinet containing $1,000.

Nitery owners are now pressing anew to kill the 30-day clause in nitery contracts. In previous years, bonifaces have found it difficult to book under the contingency that choice headliners could bow out of their spot on 30 days' notice if they got a television show or film. The repeal of the 30-day clause is becoming mandatory, they say, now that advance bookings are needed to sew up important banquet and party dates in a nitery.

Stanley Blinstrub, operator of Blinstrub's, Boston, has been in the vanguard of such opposition to the 30-day cancellation clause. He has told agencies that he has lost more than $250,000 worth of business by having headliners fall way from him on the "can't play" route. He's telling agencies that he can no longer afford to permit acts the luxury of that clause if he's to remain in a position to buy headliners.

Agencies recognize the difficulty of the club owner's position in this kind of situation, but haven't been able to do much about it in the case of some of the top headliners. However, the path to higher salaries has been opened to them by Ben Maksik, operator of the Town & Country Club, Brooklyn, who is not likely to get any cancellations at his nitery because of the premium fees he's paying the name acts. It's likely that the percenters will cut out the 30-day clause in return for additional compensation.

Maksik, although closed for the summer, is still running periodic ads listing his roster of completed bookings, in order to entice organization shindigs, anniversary parties, etc.

The 30-day clause has long been a source of dispute among the talent buyers, going back to the old days of vaudeville. Among the present-day vaude buyers, Al Rickard, who books the Steel Pier, Atlantic City, lays out the bills several months ahead of the opening. Once an act is signed to Rickard, it stays signed, and nothing less than an order from the Pier's operator, George A. Hamid, an officer of GAC-Hamid, can get a turn out of a stand at the Steel Pier. It's understood that Hamid had to lay down the law and promise another date in order to release Pat Boone, a GAC turn, from a date at the Steel Pier, so that the singer could do a film for 20th-Fox.

The 30-day cancellation clause has frequently left many niteries high and dry in the matter of getting suitable talent. Names, being always in demand, are generaly not available on short notice, and non-drawing acts frequently have to substitute. The agencies are very sympathetic and are listening closely to the operators' beefs in this matter, but they indicate that unless prices zoom up to the Town & Country level, there's little that they can do about it. Attitude may indicate a second set of prices in return for insured bookings.

MCA Shifts Jim Breyley From Chi to BevHills

Chicago, July 30.

Music Corp. of America has upped v.p. Jim Breyley from head of its Chi bands and acts department to work with its Beverly Hills bureau on live tv bookings.

Breyley's Chicago job is being taken over by Bill Richards, who handled bands from here. Indie agent Tommy Mallow was recently added to MCA's staff here, and no cutback on the Chi staff has resulted.

Holder's N. Y. Concert

Geoffrey Holder, who recently made several vaude stands as head of a calypso unit, will attempt a concert style presentation in a N.Y. legit house in September. Dancer will head a troupe of 18 at the National Theatre.

Holder will precede that stand with a date at the Canadian National Exhibition, Toronto, with the same troupe. Bob Hope is heading that layout.

Jerry Lewis All-Star Show

(CARTER BARRON, D.C.)

Washinton, July 27.

Jerry Lewis, Step Bros. (4), Skylarks (5), Wiere Bros. (2), Augie & Margo, Amazing Mr. Ballantine, Dick Humphreys, Lou Spencer, Hal Bell; $3.85 top.

In the open-air summer amphitheatres, it is often rain which separates the men from the boys among the name entertainers. The question, when a downpour starts: Will he go on like a real trouper, and can he hold the audience there with him?

The answer is "yes" on both counts for Jerry Lewis. The Saturday (28) show at Carter Barron Amphitheatre drew an SRO house of over 4,500. Program was following the usual format — group of vaude acts in the first half, with Lewis to take over after intermission. As the storm clouds piled up and the weather bureau indicated the probability of rain before the evening was over, the Feld Bros., operators of the theatre, put in a hurried call for Lewis to come on out earlier than expected . . . or the show might wash out before his arrival.

Last two acts of the first half were ditched temporarily and the comic was rushed into the breach.

Within a few minutes the rain began—a drizzle, and then big, slow, fat drops of water. The audience started to get uneasy and move up the aisle toward the rear.

"I've got a job and I'm going to keep on working," Lewis announced loudly. The audience applauded. Some remained in their seats; some took shelter in the rear of the amphitheatre; the rest packed along the wings of the big stage. Almost none left.

Lewis kept going through the downpour, for more than an hour. His tuxedo and shoes were soaked. But he told stories; he danced on the wet, slippery stage. With his mike on a long cable he interviewed the audience and led it in group singing.

The 16-piece house orchestra that was playing on stage fled to shelter. Lewis couldn't coax them back, so he brought out his own pianist, his drummer, and the others in his troupe. He never left the stage and his enthusiasm never flagged as he delivered the full measure of show for which he had been signed.

The audience stayed with him to the end, just as they had done last summer with Danny Kaye under similar circumstances.

Jerry Lewis never went better and never got a bigger, more heartfelt hand. It's the unique Oscar that outdoor audience reserve for only the great troupers.

As for the rest of the bill, not so much can be said. The five preliminary acts were not up to the level of the surrounding bill offered by Jimmy Durante who had preceded Lewis into Carter Barron.

The Step Bros. were good but seemed a little lost on the big stage. The Wiere Bros. did a very condensed version of their act in the falling rain, and failed to come off as well as usual. The Amazing Mr. Ballantine offered his usual quick-moving burlesque of a vaude magician; and the Skylarks were an adequate singing aggregation. Augie & Margo showed fine dancing style but the intricate choreography, though flashy, doesn't add up to very much. Lowe.

Ak-Sar-Ben Family Show

(A-S-B FIELD, OMAHA)

Omaha, July 24.

Ernie Young production, with Sky-Tones (3), Eric Badington & Collette, Rich & Gibson, Adaros (3), Darlene & Jinx, George & Peter Bauer, Walton & Sina, Billy Papon, Billie & Gene Lambart, Marcelli & Janis, Benny Sharpe Orch (14); at Ak-Sar-Ben Field, Omaha, July 22-24, '57.

Ak-Sar-Ben's annual Family Show, aimed for moppet trade with members bringing up to three kids free, was again produced by Chicagoan Ernie Young of the GAC-Hamid office and lured more than 20,000 for the three nights.

Although all 10 acts were strong and well received, the package was topheavy with muscle turns, no less than five being of the acro type. However, a fine windup by the Sky-Tones on the high wire, followed by a dazzling fireworks display by Thearle-Duffield, sent the crowds home happy.

Sky-Tones, Bill Atterbury act out of Dakota City, Neb., consist of male and two femmes, both striking blondes. Human wheelbarrow and bike bit with gals doing single trap acts off the spokes are highlights of 10-minute display that is flashy and attractively lighted.

Also popular with kids was Darlene and the tv chimp, Jinx. Animal, highly spirited, puts on a fast inning topped by his impresh of Liberace and fancy wire walking. Marcelli & Janis are still another wire act, opening the show with a zippy offering that has male doing juggling on the strand and his eye-filling distaffer on a high unicycle.

In the acro vein are Billie & Gene Lambart, with gal serving as understander in the difficult tricks; Walton & Sina, perch act utilizing several novel riggings; George & Peter Bauer, father-son risley in which 14-year-old does a full twisting back somersault; Adaros, head balancers with daughter Mickey accomplishing a two-high bottle stand atop her dad's head; and Eric Badington & Collette, roly-boly, with male doing four-high ta' handstand on the cylinder.

Billy Papon is an okay harmonica player with fair patter who works hard as an emcee and keeps the show moving. Rich & Gibson's musical presentation is under New Acts.

Next Ak-Sar-Ben show for members is Aug. 6-7, featuring Ben Blue. Dick Contino and Vernon Bumpy & Co. Trump.

Aquatennial Star Night

(AUDITORIUM, MPLS.)

Minneapolis, July 27.

James Stewart, Jayne Mansfield, Eddie Fisher, Sid Lippman, Mike Connolly, James Bonn, Roosevelt Rockettes (14), Visitng Beauty Contest Winners (18), Aquatennial Queen Contestants (40), Doc Evans Dixieland Band (7), By-Line Band (11), Keesler Air Force Chorus (40), U. S. Marine Corps Band (45), Gordie Bowen Orch (17), Cedric Adams, George Grim; presented by Minneapolis Star-Tribune Newspapers Charities; producer, Robert Weed; director, Don Stolz; at Minneapolis Auditorum July 26, '57; $3.50 top.

Woven about the revelation of the winner of the 1957-58 queen contest winner from among the 40 lovelies, representing various northwest communities and business concerns, and her coronation, this annual Star-Tribune Newspapers Charities' show, always one of the highlights and a climactic event of the local 10-day Aquatennial, summer mardi gras, far outdistanced its notable predecessors in every way.

It was easily the series' most star-studded, glittering and successful. Staged indoors for the first time, it drew an overflow house in the 10,000-seat Minneapolis Auditorium.

There's always intense interest in the Aquatennial Queen contest because each candidate has the backing of a large following and, with such rewards as a European trip and other honors and prizes for the winner during her 12-month reign, it's a much coveted title. But on this occasion the pull was stimulated by the presence of more and bigger luminaries to be seen in the flesh.

Jimmy Stewart, Jayne Mansfield and Eddie Fisher, of course, spelled the principal star-name power. For local draw there were newspaper columnists, radio and tv aces Cedric Adams and George Grim along with Mike Connolly.

Previous such shows outdoors in the 20,000-seat Municipal Stadium have attracted larger audiences, but this indoor presentation's lesser costs put it more healthily over the nut.

Especially in view of the fact that the performers drew no compensation, kuddos go to producer Robert Weed of the newspapers' promotion department for lining up such a varied and impressive bill with so much top-drawer entertainment. An orchid is due, too, to director Don Stolz, otherwise Old Log summer theatre head, who paced the layout briskly. Stewart and Miss Mansfield appearances were tied up with their current pictures opening here.

Fisher, coming here, sans remuneration (like the others), at one-time hometowner Mike Todd's urging, liberally plugged "Around the World in 80 Days" now at the local Academy. So everybody was happy.

Swapping clever and amusing ad libs and an expertly written script's repartee with Stewart, Connolly and Miss Mansfield, Adams and Grim engineered the abundant comedy.

With Miss Mansfield, 18 feminine beauty contest winners from throughout the nation, 40 Aquatennial Queen candidates and 14 well-trained, pretty highschool Rockettes decorating the stage, glamor glistened frequently.

Fisher, songwriter Sid Lippman and the 30 Keesler Air Force choristers did nobly by song, while music of every variety had a big inning, too, thanks to the U. S. Marine Corps band, the local Doc Evans Dixieland Band and Gordie Bowen orch playing the show.

Night's yock hit was a music battle between the Evans band and an 11-piece orch drummed up from among the newspapers' byliners.

Example of the pro showmanship, always in evidence, was the spotlighted entrance for 200 feet down the centre aisle of the well-upholstered Miss Mansfield, dragging a pink stole. For her interview with Adams she affected a sexy little girl voice. Windup was a hilarious waist-measuring contest between the rather corpulent 52-year-old Adams and the slender 18-year-old (according to the script) screen star.

Pianist-cleffer Lippman, a native Minneapolitan, played and sang his own compositions. His act looks like a good night club bet.

Laconic and cheerful, Stewart brought a change of pace in his interview with Grim and earned one of the evening's biggest mitts.

Closing the show, Fisher came on a la a sheriff's posse and reaped an ovation with 25 minutes of singing, yarning and occasional dance steps.

This best of all the Star Night shows, both artistically and financially, proved such a stupendous draw that even seats in the vast Auditorium's upper stage-end corners were sold, despite boxoffice warnings to ticket purchasers that they couldn't see anything. Murf.

Aqua Follies of 1957

(WIRTH POOL, MPLS.)

Minneapolis, July 27.

Pat McCormick, Joaquin Capilla, Johnny Bower & Jmmy Goodhead, Patty Robinson (2), Hobie Billingsley, Charlie Diehl, Bruce Harlan, Orwin Harvey, Al Coffey, Jimmy Carroll, Marilyn Delaney, Charles Dunn, Ming & Ling, Water Ballet (25), Stage Ballet (18), Verne Rooney Orch (15); staged by Al Sheehan; swimming & water ballet director, Helen Starr; choreography, Marie Kuhlman; arrangements & music director, James McLeod; stage & property designs, Fred Smith; lighting, Jack Higgins; head wardrobe mistress, Marie Gauthier; fireworks, Thearle-Duffield; at Wirth Pool, Mpls., July 17-28, '57; $3.50 top.

Producer Al Sheehan's claim that his "Aqua Follies" is tops among all such shows probably would admit of little dispute. That's mainly because it always enlists the finest of all swimming and diving talent. But what also helps to carry it to the head of the class is the skillful manner in which it's produced to blend water and stage entertainment. It is mounted for a maximum of fun, excitement, thrills, glamor, spectacle and color in an action-packed two-and-a-half-hours.

In this current 18th edition, outstanding feature of the local Aquatennial, Sheehan again has come up with a tremendous show of its kind. In this instance, the appraisal as "best yet" undoubtedly would be deserved if only because of the presence of newcomers Joaquin Capilla, world high boards champion; the whammo British trick and comedy diving team of Johnny Bower & Jimmy Goodhead; and Olympic Games' feminine "double double" winner Pat McCormick, making her professional bow.

Sensational and amazing comedy, high, trick and every other variety of diving, some of it with new and different twists, is always the "Follies" piece-de-resistance. This year, with the aforementioned stars to augment such perennial favorites as Hobie Billingsley, Charlie Diehl, Orwin Harvey and Al Coffey, it hits a new peak. And in particular the Bower & Goodhead comedy act and the entire crew's maniacal shenanigans when all of the boys go whacky at the same time give funnybones their greatest workout.

The show's fans also undoubtedly find it a pleasure to welcome back ace swimmer Patty Robinson, absent since 1948, who brings along her 13-year-old daughter, a budding aqua star.

In Jimmy Carroll the show has a top-drawer emcee and singer. Also scintillating on the vocal end are Marilyn Delaney, Charles

House Reviews

Palace, N. Y.

Ted & Flo Vallett, Bunny Briggs, Joe Morris & Barbara Barry, Ted Morell, Bensen & Ryan, Themis & Emilio, Roger Ray, Ivan Jensen & Tove; Nick Francis House Orch; "The Young Don't Cry" (Col), reviewed in VARIETY July 24, '57.

The melancholy days approach for the vaude acts landbased in New York. The Palace is presently going through the next-to-closing bill. Next week the house finales as a stageshow entity after an eight-year run and goes into a first-run film policy, with bookings that tee off with "Man of a Thousand Faces." A house that issued more than 400 contracts annually bites the dust. It's probably the last orthodox vaude house in America.

The present layout has its moments with Roger Ray hitting the entertainment peak in the next-to-closing slot. His comedy gab and vibe playing get the desired results. Another act of note is Bunny Briggs, the Negro tapster, who knocks off a lengthy non-stop session with ease and charm. There are only a few moments in which his cleats move more than a few inches off the ground, but his work is equally as relaxing on the audience as it seems to be on the dancer.

There's a lot of comedy in this show. Joe Morris & Barbara Barry brought in a few lines that were new for them. Morris in the box and Miss Barry onstage did much better than usual in this instance. Irving Benson has a new partner and is now billed as Benson & Ryan. So while there's a new straightman, it's still the same act and they get the normally good results.

The openers are Ted & Flo Vallett, the vet baton twirlers and jugglers who work rapidly to warm up the house. Ivan Jensen & Tove, closing the show, worked unevenly on show caught. Jensen juggles while balancing on a log, and winds up with an excellent trick of going through a hoop while on his perch.

New Acts this session are Ted Morell and Themis & Emilio. Nick Francis orch showbacks smartly. Jose.

North Pier, Blackpool

Blackpool, Eng., July 30.

Bernard Delfont presentation, with Ruby Murray, Tommy Cooper, Ken Platt, 4 Jones Boys, Morton Fraser's Harmonica Gang (7), Patricia & Neil Delrina, Munk Twins, 16 Voices of Vernons, 12 Showtime Lovelies, Orch under Paul Burnett; staged by Ernest Maxin.

The North Pier Pavilion at this British summer resort has rounded up a bevy of likeable, individually talented performers for a varied presentation, stronger in its first-half segment than in latter stages.

Ruby Murray, Irish thrush whose marquee value has dropped recently through lack of disk hits, offers fairly pleasing song spot, despite most of her tunes being geared in same strain. Her repertoire ranges from "Mr. Wonderful" to "Irish Eyes Are Smiling" and "Galway Bay."

Tommy Cooper, six-foot-three comedian, is a laughing, stumbling magician who garners almost continuous yocks with deliberate errors in magic, an infectious semi-mad chuckle, and a sock assortment of magico gags. Ken Platt shares further comedy slottings with local-flavored humor, but at show caught descended into some lavatory-style gags.

The Four Jones Boys, youthful and fresh harmony quartet, click with impressions of other singing foursomes such as Smith Boys, Aces, Platters, et al. The Morton Fraser Harmonica Gang, comedy-and-music septet, also extract approval with well-planned harmonica routines and some fun byplay with diminutive member of all-male group.

Patricia & Neil Delrina, terping duo recently returned to vaude from blade-show chores, contribute stylish dancing in scenas for maximum results. The Munks Twins, rosy-cheeked gals, aid as customers in a "Mixed Doubles" sketch, but otherwise get little to do. Vocal showbacking is by the 16 Voices of Vernons, and the 12 Show Time Lovelies shape as an attractive line.

Ernest Maxin stages briskly for London impresario Bernard Delfont, now taking the place of Lawrence Wright, longtime resident backer on this pier. Paul Burnett batons the 14-piece orch. Gord.

Hippodrome, London

London, July 23.

Shirley Bassey (with Johnny Roberts and David Jacobs), Norman Evans, Hedley Ward Trio (3), Arthur Worsley, Murio & Sheila, Rey Overbury & Suzette, Pierre Bel, Les Mallini (2), Reg Cole Orch.

Shirley Bassey, topping her first West End vaude bill, is making sure that it's a success to notch up alongside her other achievements in her comparatively short show biz career. But the supporting bill ranks among the weakest presented by Val Parnell in the West End, and could possibly result in only moderate b.o. during the show's two-week run.

After a hefty buildup, with an introduction by disk jockey David Jacobs reading press cuttings about Miss Bassey's success in America, and screens daubed with luminous paint which acclaim her as "fabulous," being raised one after the other, the star makes her entrance to a hearty reception. She wears a snugly fitting low-cut gown. Her first entry, a beat version of "From This Moment On," is a good warmer, and paves the way for the rest of her songalog, which is heavily angled at sex. Her gestures and facial expressions, teamed up with her vibrant voice, stamp her as probably the hottest songstress produced by this country in years. Notable offerings are "I've Got You Under My Skin," "Sex," "My Body's More Important Than My Mind," and a powerful closer, "Who Are We?" She goes off to cheers.

Norman Evans, a broad north of England comedian, fills two spots in the show. His first, a sketch about going to the dentist, raises a few laughs, and the other, a portrait of a north country housewife gossiping over her garden fence, relies purely on localized humor and female ills. He rates a moderate hand from the earthy members of the audience.

The Hedley Ward Trio, a vocal-instrumental combo comprising bass, guitar and piano, make pleasant noises and sprinkle their routine with comedy to catch a warm response. Ventriloquist Arthur Worsley is a fine performer. His spiel consists mainly of making easy work of words and phrases other vents steer clear of. The act is smoothly paced and laced with comedy, and audience reaction is good. Murio & Sheila, a couple of fancy dancers, add a pleasing spot to the bill. Rey Overbury & Suzette play instruments and dance, but miss with their comedy. Juggler Pierre Bel is a good first-half warmer with a snappy routine, and Les Mallini, two Continental artists with a fast knockabout routine, are fair entertainment. Reg Cole's orch supplies some good accompaniments. Bary.

Southern Solons

Jolson. What would he sing?" said Haley bitterly to the House. "It means that the songs of the beloved Stephen Foster, the only composer in the history of our nation to be elected to the Hall of Fame, cannot be played over the major networks unless his lyrics are edited."

Watts has introduced a resolution for a congressional investigation of the network action. He and Chelf particularly objected to changes in "My Old Kentucky Home."

"For over 100 years," Chelf told the House, "people all over the world have loved, respected and enjoyed Foster's delightful melodies. At no time has anybody ever dared to say that he intended these songs to be a detriment, a reflection, an affront, a vilification or an abuse to the colored race or any other race.

"He meant to honor our colored folks and he did so with all the artistic ability at his command. If we follow the same logic and reasoning of the networks in banning 'Suwanee River' and 'My Old Kentucky Home' from the air, then we may have to change the name of the White House because this might conceivably be classified as discrimination . . . To tell you the truth, these three networks must scare mighty easily."

Chez Paree, Chi

Chicago, July 25.

Will Mastin Trio starrng Sammy Davis Jr., Louis Gomez & Beatrice, Chez Paree Adorables (6) with Benny Nichols, Ted Fio Rito Orch. (15); $1.95 cover, $4.95 minimum.

There's no better testimony to the drawing power of Sammy Davis Jr. than the contrast of his nearly full opening night at the Chez with the rows of untouched tablecloths that have shown at this summer's previous Chez Paree shows.

His solid, fast moving amalgam of song, dance, quips and impersonations runs as fresh and smoothly as ever. The chief changes are the variations in songalog. Besides a little special material, he rides through Cole Porter, "Riding on Moon," "Something's Gotta Give" and "This is My Beloved," all without a decline in impact.

The impressions of Jerry Lewis, Nat Cole and an assortment of vocalists are still a neatly received part of the act, as are the Will Mastin Trio's terp routines. Davis Sr. and Mastin acquit themselves well on the softshoe turns. The show winds up with an Elvis Presley takeoff which still draws howls as Davis Jr. renders it.

Dance team of Luis Gomez & Beatrice handles set of varied and well-segued maneuvers with smoothness. Numbers include excerpts from "Cinderella," "My Fair Lady" and "Bolero." Only thing missing from this act is something to differentiate it from other competent dance pairs currently on the nitery circuit. Otherwise it shapes as a pleasant opening act.

The Chez Paree Adorables, recast recently with more of the longstemmed variety, handle themselves with the smiles and swivels looked for in the house line.

Ted Fio Rito's 12 men supplemented for the backup chores with three of Davis Jr.'s own crew, George Rose at thse keyboard, Red Rodney on trumpet and clarinetist Mort Stein conducting. The orchestrial timing on this show was perfect on the first show and the dansapation more than adequate.

Will Mastin Trio remains through Aug. 20 but no booking between that time and Pearl Bailey's opening on Sept. 10 has been set. Leva.

500 Club, A. C.

Atlantic City, July 25.

Liberace, George Liberace, Jean Fenn, Sid Krofft, Lee Henderson Girls (8), Pete Miller orch directed by Joe Frasetto; $3 minimum, $5 weekends.

It's Liberace with brother George, opera singer Jean Fenn and Sid Krofft and his puppets at Paul "Skinny" D'Amato's plush supper-club this week, with ropes up for all shows as the cafe circuits most-sought pianist for the first time produces and directs this offering.

This is also the first time Liberace has appeared in Atlantic City during the 26 years he has been in show business. The 90 minutes are jammed with music, with Liberace at the special Baldwin concert grand brought in for him, and Miss Fenn offering operatic as well as popular selections in her fine soprano voice. House orchestra is backed by four violins and cello.

Liberace liberally mixes patter with piano and vocal offerings. He works on customers' stageside, shows his jewelry, jokes about his bathrooms in his California home, and wins over the dubious with his graciousness.

His costumes are outstanding. One, an open front white shirt, slim black trousers and wide red leather belt, shows off the trim figure he now has after losing 40 pounds. Others include a dinner jacket in beaded navy blue black brocade, and evening clothes of white brocade, black metallic and sequin trimmed white satin. All draw ahs and ohs from the audience, liberally filled with women.

Liberace plays scores of the numbers, old and new, which have been identified with him on his tv shows and Columbia Records. So quickly do they follow one another that it's difficult to tell when one ends and a new one begins. From his opening "Last Time I Saw Paris" through nostalgic "Tenderly" and "Starlight" with bits from "My Fair Lady," when Miss Fenn supplies the lyrics, he is in complete control of the situation. He even works in a softshoe dance bit which scores.

Miss Fenn, tall, blonde and one of the best lookers on the 500 Club stage in many a night, works nicely with Liberace in the patter bits, and sings beautifully from "Madam Butterfly" the number, "One Fine Day." "Cribribin" follows, with Liberace accompanying both her numbers. She is a decided asset.

George Liberace again demonstrates his ability to play violin in more than one way and is the foil for his brother's jokes.

Sid Krofft is one of the finest puppeteers to appear here in many a moon. He makes them do everything, dance, light and smoke cigarets, take off their clothes, and prance about in lifelike fashion. Krofft at times works three puppets. His most effective bit is the skeleton which comes apart, only to reassemble at his bidding. Some of the effect of his act is lost because he is confined to the low stage, where many cannot see the puppets.

Henderson Girls give with nice production number. Well-knit show is backed ably by Joe Frasetto directing the Pete Miller band. Walk.

Fontainebleau, M. B'ch

Miami Beach, July 29.

Buddy Hackett, Trude Adams, Norah Kovach & Istvan Rabovsky, Murray Schlamm, Sacasas Orch; $3.50 beverage minimum.

This "height of summer" show is worthy of a midwinter slotting, containing as diversified a combo of talents as yet displayed in this smart hospice and serving up talented new faces to buttress the draw power of a Buddy Hackett in this area. Result is big boxoffice and happy customers.

Hackett is a regular in the La Ronde who, with each outing, seems to acquire more polish and ease, with the assurance of a vet laughmaker who knows he's got it made. Basics of his act rely on the gab department. Personalizing the waggery, he spins out limes on married life, the wooing period, the recall of an infant's first week. It's prime stuff that sparks howl reaction through the universal self-identification angles contained. Smooth timing and handling add to overall impact to win him the pounding that requires reprise of his standard Chinese waiter bit.

Trude Adams (see New Acts) is new to this sector and made the Hackett entry a well-warmed one, thanks to a smartly devised act that brings her into big click aura. The management picked up her option fast after first-night intro bit. Ditto the well publicized Hungarian ballet team of Kovach & Rabovsky. The Iron Curtain escapees present a cafe-slanted stint, tailored for the medium and commercial all the way, with the attractive femme working out jazz angled toe-spins while Rabovsky displays his Nijinsky recalls in legit ballet leaps and whirls. Encore segment has a gay, fast moving folk dance to wrap matters up. Murray Schlamm, house emcee, introes in literate manner while Sacasas and his musickers showback adeptly. Entries this week are Mafa & Hari, Dominique, and Sonny King.

Statler, L. A.

Los Angeles, July 23.

Dave Barry, Merry Macs, Eddie Bergman Orch (11); $2-$2.50 cover.

Dave Barry has been around the nitery beat as often as the Merry Macs have been absent. Paired off as the current dual attraction at the town's surviving downtown club, the Statler's Terrace Room, the balance is fairly proportioned for the peregrinating public and the receptive mood of Thursday night's (18) three-week opener was strictly upper register. The chemistry was just right for music and comedy and the spirits high, all adding up to a great big plus for the performers.

It has been 25 years since the Macs first matched their voices in radio and while three of the originals have been replaced, it is still a worthwhile singing group working in much the same manner of other mixed ensembles. But it's Barry who rates the larger type because of his frequency and recognizance among the traveling revelers. His impressions of Godfrey, Liberace and Churchill are always surefire, his storytelling and witticisms on ground level with an affable approach that sets well with the sitters and tipplers. His bit in defense of drunk drivers may not be in the best taste but the laughs roll nonetheless.

The Macs are a lively lot and rarely immobilized. The girl member works well with her three male partners and all are formally frocked to give the act a dressy look. Their rock 'n' roller, a fast run-through of "Bluesville, USA," and other numbers they've recorded for Capitol give the turn a good musical framing. The sitters might have been spared the delay in photographing the group around their 25th birthday cake.

Helm.

Desert Inn, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, July 25.

Gordon MacRae, Rudy Cardenas, Sheila MacRae, Gina Genardi, Art Johnson, Donn Arden Dancers (12), Carlton Hayes Orch (17); $2 minimum.

Gordon MacRae's new act, a generous and delightful hunk of w.k. songs, plus some very funny impreshes, is teamed with the speedy juggler, Rudy Cardenas, and a couple of fresh production numbers to give the DI a solid show for the next four weeks.

MacRae's booming voice socks "If I Loved You," "Begin The Beguine" and most of the songs from "Oklahoma!" He preems his latest album of film title songology—"Singin' In The Rain," "Cabin In The Sky," "Easy To Love" and "Flirtation Walk"—with top effectiveness. He throws comedy and emotion into the soliloquy from "Carousel," and gets yocks with his takeoffs on Cagney (as Curly in "Oklahoma!"), Godfrey (as Yul Brynner), Nat King Cole, and Mortimer Snerd. MacRae admits he's more talented as a singer than a mimic, but the impreshes serve as a happy balance to the act.

Wife Sheila adds strength to the package with her devastating mimes of Katie Hepburn, Zsa Zsa Gabor, Tallulah Bankhead and Lena Horne. Van Alexander smoothly batons the Carlton Hayes orch (17) for MacRae, who is introed as "appearing through the courtesy of the Federal Bureau of Internal Revenue."

Cardenas breezes through his turn with many stunts that leave some members of the audience gasping in amazement.

Curtain-raiser is a new Donn Arden "little spectacular" called by a familiar title, "From Vaude To Video." Subtitled "A Tribute to the Show Biz Greats," it features Art Johnson capably miming the greasepaint immortals. Making her Vegas bow in the skit is 19-year-old Gina Genardi, a pretty and peppy chirper who has no trouble living up to her intro as "Miss Personality." Miss Genardi was coached by former singing star Aileen Stanley, who has injected strong song savvy into the potential headliner.

The other production piece, also nicely decorated by the dancers (12) and featuring the voices of Johnson and Miss Genardi, is handsomely mounted. Duke.

Moulin Rouge, H'wood

(FOLLOWUP)

Hollywood, July 23.

Margaret Whiting and the Happy Jesters have taken over the key positions in the "C'est La Vie" revue which has been running at the Moulin Rouge for many months, and the prospects are for continued good business. For Miss Whiting it's her first local nitery date in a considerable period (about five years) and she's a stronger draw than ever, thanks to her recent television action. Too, she's peddling her wares with ease to make this her best local showcasing.

Her 35-minute stint is an ingratiating songalog that covers a vast assortment of tune material, including a sock medley of songs cleffed by her late father, Richard Whiting. That medley alone would stand up as strong nitery fare, comprising as it does such tunes as "My Ideal," "Guilty," "Breezin' Along with the Breeze," "Too Marvelous for Words," "Blue Horizon" and others that rate among all-time top entries. They're sung with feeling and delivered with an eye to top audience response. She also includes some of her disclicks, like "Moonlight in Vermont," "Slippin Around" and "Might as Well Be Spring," interspersing them with patter that is light and humorous.

The Happy Jesters peddle a good blend of harmony and humor in their tune. It's the type of act which has become a strong lounge attraction in recent years; spotted midway in a series of lavish productions, they fit the bill effectively. Vocal imitations of musical instruments for a "Disk Parade" routine are among the offerings that stir interest. Kap.

Bellevue Casino, Mont'l

Montreal, July 24.

Baudy's Greyhounds, Sanger, Ross & Andree, The Roberts (2), Guy Dennis, Casino Lovelies (10), Bix Belair Orch (11), Buddy Clayton Trio; $1 admission.

Tourist biz is giving most local niteries a boost and the Bellevue Casino is attracting a good part of the spenders with its current layout, lavish and visually strong.

Producer Craig Daye brings in three new productions with extravagant gowns by Madame Bertha and the talented nony line makes fine showcasing for rest of layout. Baudy's Greyhounds take the headline slot and like most animal acts, splits the house receptionwise. If one likes this type of an act, then Baudy's hounds and monkeys are top-drawer entertainment; the dogs are well-trained, pacing is good and routines varied.

Comedy hit is the hoofing antics of Sanger, Ross & Andree, last seen in this room about five years ago. A sock sight offering, trio garner plaudits throughout with femme of group (a handsome gal who stands better than six) contrasting amusingly with her partners, a gent of normal size and a midget. The Roberts open show and the acrobatics of this male duo are well above average.

Singing and emcee chores are ably handled by Guy Dennis, a newcomer in these parts, and the big Bix Belair orch does show music in usual fashion with the Clayton combo in the interlude spot. The Craig Daye production hold for the next two weeks with new feature acts slated for an Aug. 1 opening. Newt.

Eddys', K. C.

Kansas City, July 26.

Helen Boice, Georgie Shaw, Tony DiPardo Orch (8); $1.50 cover.

Floorshow in the Eddy establishment this fortnight rates as strong entertainment with a return date by Helen Boice, who was pleasing in a stand here last fall, and Georgie Shaw of the Decca singing stable. They work up 45 minutes, well paced and combining songs and comedy suitably.

In his first appearance here, Shaw shows plenty of ability in a full-voiced style. As a Decca waxer, he had had spotty successes, his "No Arms Can Hold You" went well up the lists. A sock platter could make him a real bet for clubs and hotels, as he has the the singing know-how. He testifies to this on a string of numbers running through standards and current pops and the established "Sorrento" in Italian. Lad has looks enough and works hard at his calling, as evidenced by a hearty reception throughout.

Just a few months ago, Miss Boice had a whirl here, and now is back for an even stronger bid for laughs and approval. She has bolstered her routine with a couple of new songs and some new patter, heightened by her infectious jollity. She kids about golf, daning, her old man, her weight and age and sundry other items, and rolls out songs in the Sophie Tucker manner, keeping a steady toll of laughs and hearty audience response. Both acts are a click here and likely to be back.

Next up are the Hilltoppers, due in Aug. 9 for two weeks, with another act yet to be named.

Adolphus, Dallas

Dallas, July 23.

Nick Lucas, Jean Shannon & Brooks Bros. (2), Vincent Bragale Orch (6); $1.50-$2 cover.

The old pros still know their way around the bistro belt. Vet Nick Lucas stepped on the Century Room floor Thursday (18) and confidently took charge of the near-capacity audience—and kept thde crowd with a nostalgic rundown.

His 30-minute begoff turn opens with "Love Letters In the Sand," done in the 1931 version with between-bars throaway lines. Strumming guitar, Lucas doesn't offer a single new lyric; he doesn't have to for his hefty score. Aside from "Around the World in 80 Days" he runs through a batch of evergreens ("Tiptoe Through the Tulips," with an inserted "Sounds like 'Hound Dog,' and "My Blue Heaven" are clinchers), but added fillips bring tablers to life. Lucas pipes "Sorrento" in Italian, tosses between-tunes comedy lines and, a la Tony Martin, gets off easily by taking the bandstand and singing while the terping begins.

Openers, blonde Jean Shannon & Brooks Bros., are a pintsized edition of Kay Thompson & Williams Bros. Lotsa woodshedding is evident and the choreography—abetting the fine vocaling—is top-notch. Gal does a slick semi-strip onstage, and the pace never falters. Act headlined in a rival bistro earlier this year, and will bring fans during this date. Best items are the calypso number, "Woman Is Smarter Than Man," and a fracturing Charleston number (with 1920 costumes). This can headline at almost any nitery.

Vincent Bragale's orch provides neat backing and fills the floor for dancing. Bragale bows each show with violin solos that click in this room.

Act winds July 31; singer Judy Scott opens a fortnight on Aug. 1. Bark.

Bimbo's 365 Club, S. F.

San Francisco, July 25.

Richiardi Jr. & Co. (4), The Valenos (2), Fran Jeffries, Dorothy Dorben Dancers (10), Al Wallace Orch (9), Alan Cole; $1-$1.50 cover.

Richiardi Jr. is a crowd-pleasing magician who uses considerable showmanship in performing a half-dozen complicated tricks. Fine illusion of having a girl hang horizontally from an upright broom, a broom with no visible means of support, rates a big hand, but theatrically, best trick of all is taking audience into his confidence, showing how a simple trick is done by stuffing handkerchief into hallowed egg, then cracking egg—with inevitable result.

The Valenos' acrobatic dances are tricks of contortion by female member of team. They do their stuff expertly, though some of the contortions tend to be hard for more squeamish members of audience to take.

Fran Jeffries is a goodlooking, well-shaped chanteuse who really needs a more intimate room for "Let Me Love You," "Lady Is a Tramp," "Free and Easy" and other sexy songs. Either that or she should move closer to mike, belt a bit harder. Stef.

Statler-Hilton, Dallas

Dallas, July 26.

Larry Storch, Chuck Cabot Orch (9); $2-$2.50 cover.

Larry Storch reaches a new high in hilarity with socko routines. At his capacity Empire Room opening 23) he fractured the tab pickers without inserting new bits for him. Evidently the patrons never saw his impressions before, or else they caught the full business last summer when Storch paraded his skits on network tv and loved 'em enough to see him in person.

Either way, comic had 'em in hand all the way and couldn't have been better. Reprising his British fight announcer, Russian baseball scores, cowboy parody, Indian chief, Japanese impresh and throw-away gags, Storch keeps the big mitting. He coasts with a bit on a bad tv set, a riotous sesh as a barroom dame and has to beg off—after being carried off—with his w.k. yogi leg-folding stint. His full 50-minute show is top comedy effort.

Chuck Cabot's orch, aside from neat showbacking, pulls the terpers for floor-filing dance sessions.

Act winds Aug. 7, with banjoist Eddie Peabody due Aug. 8.

Gatineau, Ottawa

Ottawa, July 26.

Zeniths (4), Ann Nichols, Barry Dale, Craig Daye Dancers (6), Champ Champagne Orch (8); $1 admission.

The difference between the Zeniths and any top-rank chant foursome is the same as the difference between a player piano and a piano player: naturalness. Made up of two femmes and two males, Zeniths, currently billtopping the Gatineau Club show, are nicely staged, dressed and trained. Their pipes and arrangements are okay. But there's a sameness throughout, not relieved by a stilted item designed to be an aping of Pearl Bailey which drops as flat as a tear on a rug. Stint needs an injection of originality.

Held over are socko terper Ann Nichols whose keyboarding and warbling while she taps draw heavy mitting Gorm.

Fack's II, San Francisco

San Francisco, July 25.

Frances Faye with Vido Musso Orch (5), Don Sherwood with George Cerruti, Mel Young; $1.50 admission.

Frances Faye, "not pretty, but odd," as she herself says, is a smash hit in George Andros' intimate nitery. Whether she's playing and singing (in her coarse, strong voice), Gershwin tunes or dialect material she rates a tremendous hand and quite literally leaves audience hanging on the ropes.

Biggest hit is a scat song stringing dozens of names together, but every number is done to a 'T', with obvious forethought, rehearsal, planning. One of act's best facets is close cooperation with Vido Musso's sax and rest of band, all of whom are excellent.

Don Sherwood, Frisco radio-tv personality, does 15-minute warm-up before Miss Faye appears, tells jokes, sings a bit in imitation of pops singers such as Tony Bennett and Tony Martin. He's relaxed, personable, perfect counter-poise for Miss Faye's frenetic act. Mel Young's a pleasant emcee. Show's booked for five weeks. Stef.

Foreign Films

ing tide of complaints about the low quality of film ads, particularly for the imports, which have become more suggestive and spicy in the recent past. Some American films also are said to have run into objections from the Times.

That's in tune with what is happening out-of-town, where rejection of ad copy by some of the larger papers has become a quite frequent occurrence.

The Hollywood product isn't affected anywhere near as much as the indie films since it's channeled via the Advertising Code at the Motion Picture Assn. of America, where Gordon White gives the ads the o.o. for acceptability.

Policies Differ

The indie distribs say the papers' lack of uniform standards is costly in terms of both time and money, since different ads on occasion have to be made up for different papers. It has happened on several occasions that the Times will reject an ad which later runs in The News. Latter in turn may nix an ad which the Times has carried.

Times reportedly is eager to clean up not only the visual but also the text part of ads, with the elimination of certain words. Among others, the Times wants to banish the term "sex" from the ad banner lines.

It's happened that the Times has refused to carry quotes from other papers' critics when it didn't like the terminology used. There's Times concern also over the out-of-context quotations used in the film ads, and the fairly frequent misrepresentation. The most recent complaints in that area concerned the ads for "Prince and the Showgirl."

Indies say their ads on imports as a rule are aimed at the sophisticates and frequently are of the "cute" variety that can be offensive only to those who lack a sense of humor. On the other hand, the ads of late have blossomed out with a plethora of leg art and exposed bosoms, with racy text to accompany the art.

3,500 Actor Jobs

154 summer theatres have been bonded by Equity.

The fact that employment of one-third of the membership constitutes a high mark again accentuates the unemployment problem for actors in legit. However, it's recognized that most of the Equity members also belong to other affiliate performer unions in order to work in other show biz media, particularly television.

As of the last March 31 annual report of Equity's recording secretary, the union's total membership (including chorus) was 9,661, a boost of 443 over the previous year's tally, which was the first to combine principals and chorus following the merger of Actors Equity and Chorus Equity.

New Acts

CHRISTINE NELSON
Songs
15 Mins.
Ye Little Club, Beverly Hills

Christine Nelson, a pixieish blonde, looks like an okay bet for the intime circuit. She's been around (viz., the Ray Bolger show on tv), knows how to handle herself and is using a style and material that attracts.

Routining intermix pops, standards and special material to good effect and it's all sold with a savvy and ease that overcomes some slight vocal deficiencies. A sly sense of humor is a vast asset and she knows how to get the most out of lyrics, enabling her to swing easily from a tune like "I Wanna Get Married" to the poignant "Party's Over" without stripping her gears. She's best, vocally, on uptempo stuff like "Them There Eyes," and blends these with items like the "I'm the Before Before the After" that develop strong laughter and attention. Kap.

PAULA LANE
Singer
7 Mins.
Copacabana, Montreal

Long-prosperous midtown Copacabana Club is the only spot in Montreal with daily afternoon (half-hour) shows, at 3:30 and 5:30. Different bill is used at night, and cocktail bill usually comprises either tryouts or acts filling in between regular dates.

Paula Lane, a svelte, attractive honey-blonde in her 20s, is obviously no tryout. She has poise, class and a strong, flexible contralto, not overly rich but more than adequate. When caught, she did three songs in English and a long one in excellent French. Former included "Baby to a Dixie Melody" and "'S Wonderful," both handled with zip and savvy. Extremely well received. She could easily be groomed for class spots. Gard.

MISS MABEL
Dancer
10 Mins.
Copacabana, Montreal

Primly-named Miss Mabel, one of the Copacabana's tryout acts, is exceptional because of her unusual beauty and freshness. A slim, youthful, large-eyed blonde, she has a smile of genuine, almost little-girlish pleasure that is very fetching. Her wide-eyed innocence contrasts engagingly with the occasional flirtatious glances she darts at ringsiders, who give her their absorbed attention.

Her terping is semi-acro, and she seems to be turning toward straight. In one of her two numbers (she opens and closes half-hour show) she does little acro, but can-can kicks. Costumes are colorful but not too flashy, and her figure is very good. She could be built into a real attraction for any visual medium. Gard.

THEMIS & EMILIO
Flamenco
10 Mins.
Palace, N.Y.

Themis & Emilio are excellently costumed Spanish dancers who work in the flamenco vein. However, their attempts to concertize this medium results in a dilution of their work. It's not as potent as it could be had they retained the wild gypsy strains. For example, their music included Lecuona and Rimsky-Korsakov, which may frequently simulate the flamenco beat, but with more civilizing influences.

Boy-and-girl team are good dancers and know their Iberian terps, but the paler dimension in which they work robs them of excitement. They are colorfully garbed and otherwise make an excellent appearance. Jose.

RICH & GIBSON
Musical
12 Mins.
Ak-Sar-Ben, Omaha

Rich & Gibson are a good-looking man-and-wife duo that has possibilities in practically all phases of show biz. Talent and looks are a tough parlay to beat, and young couple possess both.

Pair open with some okay xylophone work, then the flame-haired distaffer sheds skirt and both turn to taps. Next comes their top offering, in which they use strobe lites and puppets on their xylophone mallets for a clever illusion. A rock 'n' roll xylo-and-tap number sets 'em up for the windup, in which male does an outstanding buck-and-wing. Trump.

TRUDE ADAMS
Songs
25 Mins.
Fontainebleau, Miami Beach

Tall, slender, appealing Trude Adams has obviously gone through a long prepping period for her entry into the big cafe circuit and makes the stop with strong impact in a class room that has played the best in all schools of thrushing. The act staged for Miss Adams is a shrewdly devised one that serves her varied stylings to bring out a simple, tongue-in-cheek approach on her specials; captures the full range of a throaty contralto and, overall, projects a shrewdly self-effacing manner that heightens the sum effect on her auditors. The build is a constant one, raising clamorous payoff and bring-back demands.

Miss Adams handles the pops in her book adroitly, applying an intelligent phrasing and enunciation, to get the most out of a lyric line. On the comedy-specials she applies a fluid hand-arm delivery to heighten the laugh provoking, sharp timing abetting in getting the most out of satires on males and on a guy named "Alfred."

The comedy injects point up versatility, while topper is a belter in which she essays straight version of the "Largo al factotum" from "The Barber of Seville." It's an unexpected insert that pays off in optimum plaudits. Intro patter and general stage deportment in the easy approach, keeps her a winner all the way. She's a bet for the class spots and a natural for the video-guesting route. Lary.

TED MORELL
Songs
10 Mins.
Palace, N.Y.

Ted Morell, a firstimer at the Palace, is a pleasant singer who does best when essaying songs that have a happy content. He seems to be more at home in items that have a lot of melody and an easy gait. Tune such as "Sayonara" seems too involved for him, especially with heavy concentration on the lyrics which have narrative content.

Morell has an easy personality but a more distinguishing repertoire could widen his employment roster. Jose.

Unit Review

Dunn and Mitchell May. Ming & Lung, "Chinese Hillbillies," providing the one stage act, score with their funmaking, songs, music and impressions.

Three production stunners, encompassing both stage and water, utilize the 25-girl precision swimmers and the 18 dancing and showgirls to good advantage and give the "Follies" the proportions and tone of an elaborate spectacle and Broadway revue with dazzling costumes and effects. In "Aqua-circus" the water ballet performs as aerialists, big top animals and clowns with red noses that light up. The "Aqua Orientale" employs a sumptuous water set, a floating reproduction of the Taj Mahal, that, for a finale, is set off by a myriad of high spouting fountains.

The show has particularly intriguing musical embroidering. It winds up in a blaze of fireworks. From here, before ending its brief career, the "Follies" goes to Seattle and Detroit, for fortnight engagements. It's too bad the show isn't taken into New York to reveal to Broadwaytes what the midwest can achieve in the way of bigtime entertainment that is unsurpassed in its class. Rees.

Film Producers

to get some concessions for film producers in New York, met yesterday with Leo A. Larkin, corporation counsel. They brought up the "Whalen" matter for his consideration. Larkin was appointed to look into the film situation in the city, after complaints from Harold Wondsel, head of FPA.

A decision on Wondsel's requests for greater city cooperation, easing fire restrictions, etc., will be given by Wagner after an investigation by Larkin.

Republic's Douglas Yates was also involved in the request for a man of stature as a regular city Commissioner to get the industry the "recognition it deserves."

QUANTITY ASSURED BROADWAY

Gone Are the Off-Broadway Days Of Low Budgets and Offbeat Plays

By JESSE GROSS

Off-Broadway experimentation, once mostly a matter of doing unorthodox plays on shoestring budgets, now tends to take the form of substantial financing and multiple-angle management.

The varied formula theme is the peg for, at least, four projected ventures. Restaurants and other side activities figure in three of those, while the other takes in a four-way production spread. The proposed operations range from two in Greenwich Village to one in the Murray Hill sector and the fourth farther uptown at the Carnegie Hall Playhouse.

These ventures also represent peak financing for off-Broadway. That's exclusive of the Phoenix Theatre. The larger-seater is classified off-Broadway because of its lower eastside location. Of the four setups, one is going after $40,000 financing and another $60,000. The proposed financial outlay for the remaining two hasn't been revealed.

The $60,000 is the capitalization target of Philip Posner and John Main for a Cabaret Theatre in the Village. As indicated by the name, the operation would present legit

Anna Wiman, Wanamaker Form Prod. Partnership Take Liverpool Theatre

London, July 23.

A new theatrical firm, W.W. Productions Ltd., has been launched by U.S.-born producer Anna Deere Wiman and ex-Broadway actor-director Sam Wanamaker. Miss Wiman is chairman of the new setup and Wanamaker is its managing director. First project under way by the new company is the take-over of Liverpool's Pigalle Theatre, which will be run as a theatre club.

The initial production there will be Arthur Miller's "A View From the Bridge," opening Sept. 24. The play was a hit in London last winter in a private-club presentation at the Comedy Theatre. The drama has been banned by the Lord Chamberlain for public performance.

W.W. Productions will work in cooperation with the New Watergate Theatre Club and the English Stage Co. to present productions prior to London or after the conclusion of their London runs. It will also be the Company's policy to present new plays and revivals of past successes with headline actors in lead roles. In addition, it will put on shows like "At the Drop of a Hat" and Victor Borge's one-man show "Comedy in Music," which had a socko run at London's Palace Theatre recently.

Foreign troupes, such as the Madeleine Renaud & Jean Louis Barrault company from Paris, the Brecht Theatre from East Berlin,

Jack Keating Quits Cue; Emory Lewis Succeeding

John Keating has resigned as editor and drama critic of Cue magazine, effective this week. He's held both posts since 1952, when he succeeded the late Gilbert W. Gabriel as aisleSitter and Ralph Major as editor. Emory Lewis, who succeeded Keating as feature editor and has been a Cue staffer for the past 11 years, will fill the double vacancy.

Keating is considering joining the entertainment section of another publication, but not as drama critic. Meanwhile, he'll vacation in the Hamptons, Long Island, and then undergo minor surgery.

Actor Charlie Stewart and Steve Gottlieb, of Harvard U., won the Hudson Valley Men's Doubles Tennis Championship at Newburgh, N.Y., last Sunday (28). Stewart is a former U. of Southern California tennis player.

Cape Strawhat Offering Commuter Show Fridays

A Friday night "Commuter's Curtain" has been initiated by Cross Right Stage, Falmouth, Mass. The strawhat outfit, operating at the Highfield Theatre, has set back its usual 8:30 p.m. curtain on Friday nights to 9:45 p.m. The move is designed to give more leisure time to potential Boston & Maine rail commuter patrons.

The air-conditioned spot, which has a new subscription plan this season offering nine plays for the price of eight, also puts on kiddie programs at 2:30 p.m. every Thursday and Friday.

Equity and AGVA Settle Coverage Of Industrials

Actors Equity and the American Guild of Variety Artists have reached an agreement covering performer jurisdiction over industrial shows. The two unions had been deadlocked for some time on the question.

The accord breaks the industrial shows into four categories. The division takes in straight variety productions, which automatically fall under AGVA jurisdiction; musical comedies and dramatic productions, which automatically fall under Equity jurisdiction, and revues, which may come under the jurisdiction of either union according to a prescribed formula.

The agreement also calls for the unions to adopt a principle of mutual recognition of each other's cards on the basis of specifically outlined qualifications.

COSTUME FIRMS-UNION CONFAB ON CONTRACT

Substantial wage increases and various fringe benefits are being demanded for theatrical costume workers in New York. That's the crux of a proposed three-year contract submitted recently to New York manufacturing and rental costumers by the Theatrical Costume Workers Union, I.L.G.W.U. Local 124. The present pact between the costumers and the union expires Sept. 15.

Highlights of the union demands are as follows: a 10% wage increase beginning next Sept. 15, a tightening up of overtime regulations, the establishment of a retirement fund financed by employer contributions of 4% of the total weekly payrolls, a hike to 3½% in employer contributions to the Health & Welfare Fund and an automatic wage boost of $4 per week at the end of each year of the pact.

The demand would also place a limitation on the amount of work proprietors and supervisors could do in place of subordinates. There's also a provision for $10 weekly increase in the minimum wages for different categories of workers. This is figured to be mainly for the establishment of a more realistic bottom salary, since the costumers are understood to pay substantially more than the minimum requirements.

The costumers generally claim that the demands are exorbitant and are seeking a compromise. Meanwhile, they're losing one of their top sources of revenue in the swingover of television production to the Coast, besides tv's increased accent on panel and quiz shows where costumes aren't usually necessary. The loss of this one-time lucrative tv market has already caused some costume firms to pare staffs and trim salaries.

BUT VET STORY TELLERS AWAY

By HOBE MORRISON

Broadway is in for a busy season during 1957-58. The prospective quality of the shows is uncertain, however.

According to the advance lineup of scheduled opening, this will be a busy autumn for first-nighters. The premiere calendar is so full, in fact, that the relative availability of theatres may be a factor in the season's volume of productions. (See separate story in the Legit Section on the theatre shortage.)

At the moment, there are 11 new musicals more or less definitely set for production during the season, plus 35 straight plays, a transfer from off-Broadway and a return engagement of a revised old revue. In addition, there are two possible new musicals and 24 straight plays. As always, too, there are dozens, perhaps even hundreds of proposed shows, a handful of which may ultimately reach actual production.

As last year at this time, there are not many exciting hit prospects among the probable and possible new shows. Unlike last year, there is not a likelihood of distinguished new works or revivals of past authors (last year it was chiefly Eugene O'Neill and G. B. Shaw). If the season follows precedent, however, there will be a number of sleeper hits among the modest-

Franco-American Plays Leap Lingo

Paris, July 30.

This coming legit season in Paris should see flush of American plays transferred to the French boards. And, vice versa, plenty of Paris origins will be on Broadway.

Paris will give belated recognition to Eugene O'Neill with mountings of his "Long Day's Journey Into Night" and "A Moon for the Misbegotten." Also skedded are Gore Vidal's "Visit to a Small Planet," "Janus," "No Time for Sergeants," "Inherit the Wind" and probably at long last a Paris try at a sophisticated U. S. musical with "Pal Joey." A version of Graham Greene's "The Potting Shed" is also on th agenda.

French shows heading for the U. S. are Marcel Achard's "Patate," "The Dazzling Hour," "L'Oeuf" (The Egg), the musical "Irma La Douce" with Zizi Jeanmaire or Line Renaud, and Jean Anouilh's "Leocadia" to be known as "Time Remembered."

OLIVIER-'ENTERTAINER' TO REPEAT IN LONDON

London, July 30.

Laurence Olivier, currently starring in a limited-engagement revival of "Titus Andronicus" at the Stoll Theatre, may make a return appearance this fall in the title role in "The Entertainer," John Osborne's backstage drama about an egocentric, third-rate vaudeville performer.

The show, produced originally last spring at the Royal Court Theatre by the English Stage Society, will be presented at a regular West End theatre.

Latter Day Saints' 20th Anni Religioso Show

The Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter-Day Saints tomorrow (Thurs.) through Saturday (3) its annual dramatic and musical pageant, "America's Witness for Christ," at Hill Cumorah near Palmyra, N. Y. Last year, the session drew 70,000 gratis guests.

There are 250 Mormon actors in the show cast and another 80 church members in the crew. Dr. Crawford Gates, on the faculty of Brigham Young U., composed the music for the spectacle, which this year has its 20th anniversary.

What, Another Theatre Shortage? Yup, And Probably the Worst Ever

The Broadway theatre shortage this season is evidently going to be the worst ever. Already, more than a month before Labor Day, the traditional start of the busy fall period, only a single house is without a firm commitment. Several are already doubling up with interim bookings.

At the moment, the only Broadway theatre not booked for the fall is the Alvin. General manager Herman Bernstein, operating it for the owner, the Columbia Broadcasting System, is being courted by a half-dozen or so producers with prospective new shows and no theatre to house them. Meanwhile, several current productions are hanging on only until scheduled new entries force them out.

The regular "Scheduled N. Y. Openings" listing elsewhere in this section indicates the situation, specifying 25 incoming shows booked to arrive through Dec. 26, plus eight with announced premiere dates but without theatres. That is in addition to such longrun current entries as "Bells Are Ringing," "Li'l Abner," "My Fair Lady," "New Girl in Town," probably "Visit to a Small Planet" and the due-to-reopen smashes, "Auntie Mame" and "Long Day's Journey Into Night."

On the basis of firm future bookings, at least three current shows that might otherwise continue indefinitely, despite reduced

Livingston-Evans May Do Songs for 'Captain'

Tunes for the projected Broadway musical version of "Captain's Paradise" may be provided by the film songwriting team of Jay Livingston and Ray Evans. If so, it'll mark their entry into the legit field.

Donald Coleman, head of the Theatre Corp. of America, which has the property under option, reveals that Livingston and Evans are interested in taking on the assignment, but that contracts have not been signed. Coleman denied a previous report that the songs would be turned out by Sammy Cahn and Jimmy Van Heusen.

Al Morgan and Jose Ferrer are writing the book for the musical, which has been announced to preem on Broadway next Jan. 28.

Deficit and Tax Troubles Plague Starlight in K. C.

Kansas City, July 30.

Financial and admissions tax troubles have hit the non-profit Starlight Theatre here.

A cumulative deficit of around $88,000 spurred a recent vote by the executive committee of the al fresco operation to call up $91,000 previously pledged by 720 businessmen-guarantors. The coin shortage is attributed mainly to losses last season and a budget increase of about $89,000 this year.

The guarantors had originally put up approximately $111,000 to get the outdoor project underway. Thus far this season, grosses have been only moderate for the presentations at Swope Park. To date, the spot has had Liberace's unit for one week, "South Pacific" for a fortnight and "High Button Shoes" and "Can-Can" for a week each.

The admissions tax problem stems from a recent edict by the Bureau of Internal Revenue that the Starlight productions, other than opera, light opera and concerts, would be subject to the tariff. The tax, therefore, is applicable to musical comedies, which make up about 90% of the productions offered.

The Bureau is allowing the operation to continue this season without the tax levy, but has notified the management that it goes on next year. A regulation requiring that such taxes be levied by non-profit civic organizations was actually issued in 1953 and reaffirmed in 1955, according to a representative of the Internal Revenue Department.

PLAN LEGIT MUSICAL BASED ON 'HIGH NOON'

Hollywood, July 30.

A deal is in the works for a Broadway musical version of the 1952 film smash, "High Noon." Production of the legittuner is planned by Dimitri Tiomkin, who won an Academy Award for his musical score for the picture and his collaboration on the title song.

The rights to the property are owned by Cyrno Corp., which took over the various titles when the original Stanley Kramer production firm dissolved. The Kramer outfit produced "Noon," which was distributed by United Artists. If the rights can be cleared, the legit edition will be called "Tin Star," the title of John Cunningham's original Colliers mag story on which the film was based.

Legit pressagent Karl Bernstein is due back Aug. 11 from a European jaunt.

Wrecked by Rainstorm, Chi's Drury Lane Will Reopen in Restaurant

Chicago, July 30.

Drury Lane Theatre, which folded recently when a severe rainstorm wrecked its tent, is being revived Aug. 13 in the air-conditioned basement of the adjacent Martinique Restaurant. Strawhatter is being salvaged by a new corporation headed by Tony DeSantis, owner of the Martinique and previously operator of the summer tent.

Although the theatre is absolved of the original slate of future bookings under the "Act of God" clause in the Equity contracts, the new management has re-pacted Tom Duggan in "Seven Year Itch" to open the second half of the season in the new quarters. It's the only show booked so far. And while it's not in contract form as yet, there's likelihood that DeSantis will employ the tent's previous operators, James Monos and King Page, to keep their season from being a total washout. He has already retained the original pressagent, Bob Howe.

Tentatively, the theatre will continue to be called Drury Lane but, though the new corporation isn't liable for the losses of its predecessor, it may decide to change the name to skirt possible legal difficulties. The new management is extending the season into September (originally it was to have closed Sept. 1) to help make up for lost time, and there's even a chance that, if successful, it will continue into the fall.

Enormous basement of the Martinique can seat 700 and is in excellent repair (management had planned to use it for big parties and special events this winter). Tent operation had its dressing rooms in the Martinique lower level anyway, so that won't present a problem. DeSantis, who owns the property, had leased the summer theatre to Monos at the season's start.

Plan New Barn in Vermont

Burlington, July 30.

An outdoor summer theatre is included in plans for a $178,000 long-range development project for Burlington's Municipal (North) Beach, according to Mayor C. Douglas Cairns.

The improved North Beach will serve the Greater Burlington area.

Legit Followup

Fanny
(CURRAN, SAN FRANCISCO)

San Francisco, July 16.

This Civic Light Opera revival of "Fanny," in a five-week run at the Curran, raises the question of how the show lasted two years on Broadway.

The current Edwin Lester production is lavish, the performances are acceptable, and the idea of the original Marcel Pagnol triology is touching and tender. But the production overwhelm's the personal drama. Also, the S. N. Behrman-Joshua Logan book seems witless, Harold Rome's music and lyrics are weak and Albert Marre's direction is slow and stilted.

The show is an uncomfortable hodge-podge which misses the moving quality of the Marseilles story of the middleaged sailmaker's love for his young wife, and her son by another man. The rich, subtle humor and precise character delineations are blunted and these faults of the book and score are not rectified in Lester's production and Marre's staging.

The principles give decent accounts of themselves, however, and the show's few bright moments occur when they are on stage alone, without dancing girls, alleged comics and heavy-handed production intruding on the intimate quality of their relationships. In the title part, Doretta Morrow is a looker; sings like a bird and plays in the muted key necessary to a girl whose young lover has run away to sea leaving her pregnant and forced to marry a middleaged man she is fond of but does not love.

As the middleaged Panisse, Claude Dauphin is charming, understanding and pleasant and also sings well. It may be, in fact, that he is too charming, not earthy enough for this role. It should be harder for Fanny to accept him as a husband. Jack Washburn is Marius, the young scamp who runs off to the sea. His tenor voice is good and his looks fetching. But, again, sufficient conflict between his twin passions, Fanny and the sea, does not seem to build up.

Italo Tajo is a fine Cesar, father of Marius and friend of Panisse. He's forceful and stagey, and his opera-trained basso far outruns the rest of the cast's singing. Tajo's speaking and singing voice, indeed, presents a problem to the CLO, because the stage is equipped with five microphones which Tajo obviously doesn't need. The resulting reverberations are painful.

Augusta Merigha, as Fanny's mother, is doing virtually a Molly Goldberg caricature. She fluffs lines and injects very little sympathy or humor into what becomes a low-comedy role. As friends of Panisse, Percy Helton seems very warm-hearted, and Sig Arno overly Germanic, but Johnny Silver is good as a cracked waterfront rat, Van Dyke Parks is satisfactory as the little boy about whom all the fuss is made.

Eugene Loring's choreography is uninspired, almost as if he realized this is one show that could get along very well without monster production numbers. The Alvin Colt-Tom Peirce costumes are spangled with equal parts of Graustark and an expensive MGM Technicolor film. Jo Mielziner's scenery, with additional sets by Harvey Warren, are good. Pembroke Davenport's musical direction is excellent, as is Edith Gordon's choral direction (but why a chorus in the first place?). Stef.

Can't Duck Critics

Actor - playwright Joseph Julian, whose "The Gimmick" was tried out last year at the Westport (Conn.) Country Playhouse, wanted to avoid Broadway-wise audiences and scribes when he had rewritten version tested this summer. So he arranged for the play to be produced at Elitch's Gardens, Denver.

It's opening next Monday (5) and Julian has just learned that Columbia is premiereing a new picture in Denver the same night, and has arranged for approximately 100 junketing critics and editors to attend his play Tuesday (6).

Theatre Shortage

grosses, will have to take to the road or fold. They are "Happy Hunting," "Most Happy Fella" and "Tunnel of Love."

Although the Alvin Theatre is still not booked for fall, following the scheduled departure of "No Time for Sergeants," indications are that it may take "Nude with Violin," tentatively set for the week of Nov. 11. The Noel Coward comedy, with the author as star, will play a limited engagement, probably 12 weeks. That would allow time to pick and choose a likely booking for next spring.

An indication of the severity of the theatre shortage, even this early in the season, is a situation that occurred last week. It's understood that Kermit Bloomgarden and Roger L. Stevens had been promised the Belasco for their production of the new Horton Foote play, "The Indian Fighter." However, "Compulsion," the Michael Myerberg-Leonard Gruenberg production of Meyer Levin's best-seller, reportedly has more than 60 theatre parties booked, so the Shuberts signed a contract for it to go into the Belasco, opening Oct. 1.

Presumably the Shuberts know that the "Compulsion" is still being rewritten (the number of scenes, including insets, is now said to be down to 12), and the script is not available to prospective investors. But those heavy party bookings made the show too attractive to risk losing.

Ronnie Welsh will appear with Anne Jeffreys and Robert Sterling in "Anniversary Waltz" at the Oakdale Musical Tent, Wallingford, Conn., and the Warwick (R.I.) Musical Theatre the weeks of Aug. 5 and 12, respectively.

With Respect to Joey

Westport, Conn., July 22.

Westport Country Playhouse presentation of comedy-drama by Ernest Pendrell. Staged by Darren McGavin. Starr Martin Balsam, Jacob Ben-Ami, Berta Gersten; features Frank Silvera. Settings, Marvin Reiss. At Westport (Conn.) Country Playhouse, July 22, '57.

Martin Balsam may be the most appealing performer to appear at Westport since Julie Harris. They both had small parts in "Sundown Beach," Bessie Poor's play which brought attention to the Actors' Studio upon the same stage a decade ago. If "With Respect to Joey" gets to Broadway proper, which isn't too likely, look for a player of charm, sensitivity, gentle, articulate speech and a special respect for tradition that is not common these days.

As an ineffectual sweatshop foreman who dreams of becoming a policeman, Balsam had his audience thumbing through its programs to inspect his credits. It isn't easy to be a stepchild in industry today, but the actor is much beset as Joey, the foreman in author Ernest Pendrell's Brooklyn factory. His assistant is pilfering their air-conditioning products and selling them all over town. His superiors hound him for more work hours. No one respects him.

At home things are not much better. He cannot provide a flat for his wife and kids and they live with her family. But an appointment as a flatfoot will guarantee them an apartment, which is certainly a plug for public service over industrial rewards. He flunks his exams.

Even for those who like industrial plays, "With Respect to Joey" is only moderately effective. But Darren McGavin, its director, gives it some vitality now and then, especially when pal Joey turns upon his crooked assistant with one of the most believable stage uppercuts ever seen north of Stillman's Gym.

The author should learn much from such present associates as Balsam, Jacob Ben-Ami, Gerta Gersten and Frank Silvera in his central roles. Indeed, some of the younger players, notably Zohra Alton as Joey's flailing wife, might pick up some acting pointers by watching Ben-Ami from time to time.

Christina Crawford, eldest daughter of Joan Crawford, makes her stage debut in a brief appearance as a factory worker and decorously obeys the director's instructions. Doul.

Trouble With Girls

Charles Miller's "Trouble With Girls" is a topical piece on an ageless subject, the battle of the sexes. Three-acter comedy pitch is that women use their new freedom to the detriment of men.

"Trouble" is a rough-hewn, loosely directed, casually acted divertissement. If the series of dialogs, gags and hoke could be properly blended, it might muster acceptance as light entertainment. Given skillful rewrite and proper presentation, it might suffice for both legit and films.

Story deals with a non-conformist highschool youth who upsets the equilibrium of his home, school, town and finally the press with his analysis of the Kinsey report on women. The boy's father, a teacher in the school, also contributes a weekly column to the local gazette, and the grandfather switches manuscripts.

"Trouble" is reminiscent of "The Certain Age," also authored by Miller and tried out at Litchfield two years ago. As the father, Roy Monsell is adequate, while Billy M. Greene as the grandfather, Robert Shawley as the boy, Marion Myser as the mother, Ray Newcomer as romantic interest and Lee Moore as the board of education president, are competent. Eck.

Opera Review

The Twilight Heron

Zurick, July 23.

Opera houses on the lookout for something new and unusual might find the answer in this Japanese one-acter of approximately 90 minutes' length. It poses little staging problems, requiring only one set, four singers and a small children's choir. The music by Japanese composer Ikuma Dan, though decidely Japanese in style and harmony, uses the Western technique of instrumentation and therefore is not too hard or "offbeat" on the ears. The book, from an ancient legend, is simple and understandable, with an enchantingly poetic quality rarely found in contemporary operas. The somewhat leisurely pace is quickly overcome once the listener gets carried away by the work's exotic charm.

Story concerns a peasant married to a lovely girl who is the incarnation of a heron he once saved from death. She secretly weaves beautiful cloth out of her own feathers. Later, the man is prompted by greedy friends to sell the cloth for profit. The girl, who has no sense for material values, reluctantly consents, but makes him promise not to watch her weaving. He breaks the promise, and the girl, now a heron again, flies away forever.

One thing becomes evident when listening to this score: that the Japanese flavor in Puccini's "Butterfly" comes surprisingly close to the real thing. There is a certain resemblance here, but by far no copy.

As presented in Zurich production's major asset is Japanese singer Michiko Sunahara, from the Paris Opera Comique, as the girl-heron. She is a real find. Singing the part in German, she highly impresses both by her excellently trained, brilliant lyric soprano as well as superb acting. Rudolf Fiebelkorn as her husband is adequate, Charles Gillig and Willi Ferenz as the two friends are very good vocally and acting-wise.

Since "Heron" is too short for a full evening, it was complemented by two ballets here. Mezo.

Jim Miller, currently company manager of the Pittsburgh Civic Light Opera, will have a similar assignment for the fall Broadway musical, "Rumple."

Anyway, They Talk to the Press

Michael P. Grace and Chris F. Anderson, co-producers of Theatre Under the Stars, in Central Park, N.Y., are silent partners—literally. They aren't speaking.

That was divulged last Friday (26) in the New York Post by drama editor Frances Herridge. In a byline piece, covering interviews with Grace and Anderson, Miss Herridge quoted the latter as saying he wants it understood that he has had nothing to do with the "haphazard shows" put on up till now.

Anderson asserted in the interview that he originally went to Grace for financing and that before he knew what was happening, Grace had put all the money and a contract that gave him "paramount control." Anderson then commented, "Even with paramount control, I thought I'd have some say, but he (Grace) didn't consult me on anything. We don't even speak to each other now."

Grace's attitude on his association with Anderson was expressed thusly, "He shows up for board meetnigs, but I don't think his heart is in it. When he objected to something, I told him to put up or shut up. After all, I raised the money."

Gretch Wyler $47,500 With 'Yankees' in Pitt

Pittsburgh, July 30.

"Damn Yankees," the next-to-closing production of the Civic Light Opera Co. at the Pittsburgh Stadium, grossed $47,500 last week for the top take of the season thus far. San Francisco, July 30.

Legit continues to boom here, with three of four theatres doing sellout or near-sellout last week and total gross zooming over the $200,000 mark.

Third week of "My Fair Lady" at the Opera House again broke its own record, and "Fanny" at the Curran had only a few gallery seats available. "No Time for Sergeants" remains potent, and even "The Reluctant Debutante" showed a pickup, though it's still slim.

Estimates for Last Week

Fanny, Curran (2d wk) ($5.50-$5.90; 1,756; $57,000) (Claude Dauphin, Doretta Morrow, Italo Tajo). Great $54,000; previous week, $52,000; CLO subscription cuts house potential slightly.

No Time for Sergeants, Geary (4th wk) ($4.40-$4.95; 1,550; $36,000) (James Holden). Strong $31,900; previous week, $34,000.

Reluctant Debutante, Alcazar (3d wk) ($3.85; 1,147; $27,341) (Reginald Gardiner, Brenda Forbes). Improved $9,700; previous week, $9,100.

Slezak in 'Angels' $11,300 At Edgewater Beach, Chi

Chicago, July 30.

"My Three Angels," starring Walter Slezac, grossed $11,300 last week at the Edgewater Beach Playhouse here. The comedy, in for a fortnight's run, continues this frame. The gross for the previous stanza, covering the second lap of a two-week tryout of "The Circus of Dr. Lao," starring Burgess Meredith, was $15,900. It was overquoted at $17,000 in last week's issue.

"Angels" winds up next Sunday (4), with "Father of the Bride," starring Henry Morgan, booked for the following week. "Affairs of Anatol," with Uta Hagen and Herbert Berghof, is skedded for Aug. 12-25 and Gertrude Berg in "Matchmaker" the following fortnight. The weekly potential capacity gross at the house is $20,000.

Stratford (Ont.) Fest Notches Record $57,475

Stratford, Ont., July 30.

Shakespeare Festival receipts in third week of fifth season hit an all-time high, $57,475, or 93% capacity in new 2,200-seat hardtop. Three-week take exceeded $150,000. "Hamlet" and "Twelfth Night" drew 16,260 persons, two-week film festival 3,300.

Plays, starring Christopher Plummer, Siobhan McKenna, Douglas Campbell and Frances Hyland, run through Sept. 7.

Ruth Hussey's 'Desk Set' Nifty $14,000 in Philly

Philadelphia, July 30.

"Desk Set," starring Ruth Hussey, gave the Playhouse in the Park a spiffy gross, almost $14,000, last week. Since the William Marchant comedy had previously been seen here both on stage and screen, the draw was apparently the star.

This week's show, "Chalk Garden," co-starring Viveca Lindfors and Cathleen Nesbitt, also looks promising.

Inside Stuff—Legit

Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne have not agreed to star this season in "The Old Lady's Visit," as reported in last week's issue. They discussed the proposition with Maurice Valency, who is adapting the Friederich Durenmatt drama from the original German, but will not make a decision until they see the completed script and in any case, not until September, acoording to their attorney, Don Sewell. It is still not absolutely certain, the lawyer says, that the couple will not appear in London this winter in "The Great Sebastians," the Howard Lindsay-Russel Crouse play in which they starred on Broadway in 1955-56 and on tour last season.

The Lunts are spending the summer in Paris, where the actor, an enthusiastic amateur chef, is attending the Cordon Bleu cooking school and his actress-wife is studying languages at the Berlitz school.

Edwige Feuillere's French group and the Bolshoi Ballet from Moscow will be imported. Other productions being lined up include "The Rainmaker," "Tea and Sympathy," "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof," "The Rose Tattoo" (starring Diana Dors) and "The Threepenny Opera."

Fraser New GM

Lovat Fraser, formerly associated with the St. James's Theatre, London, had been named general manager of the theatre operation and Donaud Neville-Willing, who was general manager of the Cafe de Paris and responsible for its importation of top international talent, has taken over management of the theatre club and bars.

The Pigalle, which will be renamed, was originally the Shakespeare and played a vaude policy, until becoming the Pigalle Theatre Club last August. With a membership of about 7,000, it went into voluntary liquidation last month. Under the new policy the public will be admitted, but the club setup will be retained. In addition to the full membership there will be associated members who will be eligible to attend unlicensed plays.

W.W. Productions will operate the house for a trial period of undisclosed length, after which it has an option to buy the existing lease, which has 35 years to run.

"Speak, Lucinda" is the new title for the Robert Wright-George Forrest musical version of Moliere's "The Doctor in Spite of Himself."

N. Y. Times' S.A. Shift

Beginning July 21, the N. Y. Times changed its daily International Edition for South America to a weekly, but will continue its daily edition printed in Amsterdam for distribution in Europe, Africa and the Middle East.

The South American edition was being printed in Lima, Peru, where the N. Y. Times Weekly review, containing a summary of the week's news, interpretive articles, editorials of books, plays, concerts, films and art shows, will continue to be printed.

In explaining suspension of the daily, the Times stated in its South American edition that "the change from daily to weekly publication in South America has been made necessary by rising costs and by the difficulty of maintaining fast, regular deliveries of a daily newspaper over the long distances separating the major South American cities.

During World War II, the Times published its Weekly Review in Santiago, Chile, for distribution through the Office of the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs.

Fancy-Priced Books

Rinehart's editor-in-chief and trade department veepee Ted Amussen has just produced two costly volumes, Rex Smith's anthology on the Latin national pastime titled "Biography of the Bulls," at $7.50, and an oversized $15 book on "The Age of Steam (A Classic Album of American Railroading)" by Lucius Beebe and Charles Clegg. Latter are as well-known as historians of American railroading as for their epicurean predilections.

Amussen says that sales figures support the costly investments because such "special" editions are not only the obvious gift items for which they are intended but can achieve peak sales, as both have on their advance orders alone. The Beebe-Clegg book has not been reviewed as yet but Smith's has achieved an extraordinarily good press.

When not gallavanting to food & wine doings or travelling in their own private railroad car Beebe and Clegg are respectively the publisher and editor of The Territorial Enterprise, Nevada's oldest newspaper, which they own. Beebe is also VARIETY correspondent in Virginia City, Nev.

On the subject of fancy-priced books, another bullfight anthology is Barnaby Conrad's "Gates of Fear" (Crowell; $7.50), due in October, with excerpts from Hemingway, Havelock Ellis, Cornelia Otis Skinner, Herb Caen, Kenneth Tynan and others. Among the illustrations are sketches by Pablo Picasso, Ruano Llopis, Roberto Domingo and Francisco Coll.

3 Sundays and Out

Because of high production costs, plus a disappointing circulation and advertising response, the Sunday edition of The Toronto Telegram ends Aug. 3, according to John Bassett, publisher. Only Sunday issue of the three Toronto dailies, The Telegram made its appearance March 17, sold for 15c.

The Saturday issue will henceforth contain some of the Sunday features; has been upped from a nickel to a dime.

In the show idiom, also via Doubleday, are N. Y. Daily News drama critic John Chapman's "Broadway's Best 1957," a continuation of the Burns Mantle yearbooks; "The Concert-Goer's Annual," edited by Evan Senior; "International Theatre Annual," edited by Harold Hobson.

A Doubleday autobiog is "Forbidden Childhood," concert pianist Ruth Slenczynska's frank story, in collaboration with Louis Biancolli, N. Y. World Telegram music critic who has worked on a number of opera diva and kindred memoirs. Portions of this book will be published in October McCalls, almost coincidental with the full-length book publication.

Bowater's Awards

Fred Poland of the Montreal Star and Allen Kent of the Toronto Telegram each get $1,000 from the annual Bowater Awards for Journalism, it was announced by James Nelson, president of Canada's parliamentary press gallery in Ottawa, award custodians.

Poland scored on the social and cultural category with a series of medical stories on "tension," and Kent won in the economic grouping with a Trans-Canada Air Lines series. Awards are bankrolled by the Bowater Corp., Canadian newsprint company.

Books on Eroticism

A bulky 600-page book called "Amour-Erotisme Et Cinema" (Love-Eroticism and Films), which recently appeared in France, displays a love-hate attitue towards the U. S. motion picture. Author is Odo Kyrou.

Written by a Gallic highbrow film critic, the tome maintains that America (Hollywood) is still making the greatest films in the world, but then lashes out at the puritanical cult of the woman inherent in Stateside pix.

Another book, "L'Erotisme Dans Le Cinema," by Lo Duca, is mainly a series of daring stills from sensational and torrid pix with some witty captions and analyses, but it is mainly a picture book. Also an okay library addition, for ogling primarily.

Both books have one thing in common, they stress the fact that the film is one of the greatest mediums ever created for the expression of human love, and that should be its main preoccupation.

owner and operator of Britton's Theatre in Tampa, Fla.

According to Todd-AO, Britton was planning to play Mike Todd's "Around the World in 80 Days" in a 35m printdown version, in violation of an agreement between Todd-AO and Britton for the installation of the Todd-AO equipment. Tom Whitaker, Britton's attorney, told the Court that the theatreman was under no obligation, by reason any deal he might have made with Todd-AO for equipment, to show the film via Todd-AO projection equipment.

"80 Days" is being successfully shown in at least two towns in the printdown version, but it is not from the Todd-AO negative. Todd shot a second version, also wide gauge, but at a different speed.

Whitaker also charged that "the Todd-AO Corporation is attempting to use the Federal District Court to coerce other exhibitors in the United States to buy their equipment, to create in them the the fear that if they don't buy this equipment and exhibit this film on this equipment they are going to be faced with a lawsuit."

It's understood that there is no clause in the licensing contract between Todd-AO and any producer that would force the latter to have the picture shown over Todd-AO facilities.

Court found that, in bringing suit, Todd-AO was violating a contract it had made with the Michael Todd Co. and with United Artists, under which Todd-AO had agreed not to bring any legal or other action against any exhibitor showing "80 Days" in 35m.

minutes that an audience should see." His own opinion is that if the picture runs more than three hours it should be shown with an intermission, but this to has yet to be decided.

Hammerstein paid tribute to 20th production chief Buddy Adler who is producing and to Josh Logan, who is directing. Film, he reported, will have considerably more action than the original musical; scenes only discussed on stage (like the 'diversion" created by Luther Bilis while DeBecque and Cable are being landed on a Japheld island) will actually be filmed. Production is getting 'great cooperation from the Navy and work is proceeding on sets, which will be a $500,000 item in the budget.

Hammerstein declined to discuss details of the deal with 20th, beyond saying it was "the best deal ever made for a property."

Exploitation plans for the film call for junkets to Hawaiian locations by 40-50 newspapermen, plus special Todd-AO trailers to be screened in advance of openings.

Shooting schedule, he reported, hasn't been firmed yet.

"I'm trying hard to get it from the assistant director," he said with a grin. "As a matter of fact, he's given me an I.O.U. for it."

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Oslo, July 30.

First thing one has to learn about entertainment in Norway is that the Shurlock code or the Johnston office does not mean a thing, but promptness does. If you're not on time, you're dead. Even neighborhood houses will not seat a customer after the show has staretd. Thus the old gag, "Let's go, this is where we came in" has no meaning in Arctic social circles.

Shows are sandwiched in between meals, and sandwiches, incidentally, have a bread base but no top. Ski-jumpers eat four times a day—8, noon, 4 and 8. They are not big meals and in sum total do not exceed the calories of an average Americano's diet, but they all require a lot of silverware, linen and dishes, and preparing and cleaning up these meals does take time.

Pictures are skedded to fit in between these repasts. Shows start promptly at 4:45, 7 and 9:15. The only exception is the newsreel house. There you can bust in any time for a krone, 14c. But for first-runs and repeats, both plainly advertised as such, you must buy your tickets in advance. You can do this for most houses from a central agency. Unless, however, you are on time when the show starts you can kick only yourself because you're not going to be allowed to stumble to your seat over other people's feet in the dark.

Because picture houses, particularly in the nabes, are as inconspicuous as if they were speakeasies, it is sometimes hard to find them so as to be on time. Few marquees mar the tranquility of the area. "Baby Doll," for instance, was playing down the street. The theatre is in a high class apartment house but you wouldn't know it was there except for the queues which line up at 4:45, 7 and 9:15 to see sex as presumably practiced among the white trash of the southern states.

Whether this marquee modesty will continue when television tears apart the country's eating, sleeping and entertainment habits is now being debated in the Storting, the nation's parliament. There is a potent minority that does not want the thing at all. But over their protests tv will probably be introduced in Oslo within the year and be going full blast up and down the fjords within three years. It will, of course, be a state monopoly as even pallid conservatives favor creeping socialism in communication and art over commercial sponsors who in most cases would have to be foreigners anyway.

There is precious little urgency about the innovation, as street-parking of cars around kino houses still leaves plenty of space for those with cars who want to visit in the same neighborhood, and baby-sitters are cheap for those who want a night out at a picture house Due to this lack of congestion there are no parking meters for cars or lots putting the bite on those who can't find a place to park in the street.

The choice of pictures is fairly wide. French, English, German and American being among the current product. Of 10 first-run houses, six were featuring Hollywood product, though in the nabes we are trailing, 6 to 4. The term "first-run" has a broad base. "The Treasure of Sierra Madre," for instance, is in a premiere house and "Baby Doll" in a repeat house. Some titles are a bit bafflingo. One translates back from Norwegian to English as "My Disturbed Daughter." Among psychiatrists "disturbed" is slang for plain nuts.

The only daughters seemingly disturbed in this tranquil land are those having drivers' licenses and they certainly are no madder than men behind a wheel. Only recently the town passed an ordinance giving pedestrians, most of whom are between 70 and 94, some rights. But not at intersections for drivers taking a right turn. Cars tear around such corners as if pursued by Sgt. Friday. There are a few traffic lights in the centre of town but no stop-signs anywhere, and the population is now 500,000.

Go On Red Light, Maybe

According to the new regulations, where there are traffic lights a pedestrian may cross against the light if he can see no oncoming car within 200 feet. But since these drivers, used in winter to the speed of ski-jumping, have already learned to pick up speed when they see a green light turning to yellow, the peasant on foot has to be faster than Bannister to get to a safety zone without having his tail clipped. It would be just as logical to say drivers could go tarough a red light provided no pedestrian was crossing at the time.

Hackers are somewhat more careful than piker (girls). Cabs are hard to distinguish from private cars, except that they are cleaner and more deluxe-looking than chauffeur-driven Imperials or Eldorados in Washington. They are hard to flag down as they have nothing except the word "drosje" to tell they are cabs and this is part of the license plate. The rates are 50c a mile, modest considering ethyl runs to $1.10 a gal. Barring a little sports car called Troll, which sells for $2,000 and is turned out two a week, all cars are imports.

Not having so many tourists as to be pestered by their bad manners, all Norwegians are exceedingly polite to foreigners. The day after we arrived we went shopping to rent a typewriter. Three places were distressed to report they had none in stock at the moment. We were rubber-necking around for a fourth outlet when I looked up and saw two whole floors advertising Burroughs adding machines and the name Ivar Eide. Lawrence Britt, retired prez of Burroughs, was a neighbor of ours in Palm Springs.

"Let's see if these people can help us," I said.

Explaining we had just come from America, we asked for Mr. Eide as it's always best to start at the top and work down.

"Herr Direktor Eide"

We nodded in agreement.

Meet The Prez Without Credentials

She got him on the intercom, said he was in conference and would be free soon. Instead of this being a brushoff, we were ushered into his suite before we could sit down. We had not shown any credentials or even mentioned the name of Lawrence Britt and we were already in the prez's office!

When he heard we had just planed in the day before he said he himself had arrived from New York a few days before.

"But by boat," he added sadly. He wanted to know how I had won my wife into flying. He liked planes. His wife liked ships. It was the old vaude gag all over again. They compromised on her choice.

As this seemed to be a typical American problem but one that never bothered me, I cut to the chase and asked him if he could help me solve my pdoblem. I wanted to rent a typewriter. Maybe he had an inside track in the trade and could help He wanted to know whether we were looking for a Norwegian or English keyboard.

"What's the difference?"

"Well, Norwegian keyboards have 29 letters and a lot of marks like § ÷ £ ! + = å æ and ö."

"I'll take anything as long as it runs."

He called into the intercom and within a few minutes a spanking new machine was brought into his office.

We sought to find out what it would cost for a month but he brushed aside such commercial dialog. It was his beau geste to a transatlantique. Though there were dozens of hired hands at his command, he offered to carry the machine to the tram which was enjoying our modest trade This, I insisted, was not necessary. My Lady Alice had grown strong and beautiful lugging the professional props of her knight for 27 years. So why spoil her in her homeland?

He looked at me with envy. I thought I had played the scene of the masterly male very well and if Kirk Douglas needs a replacement for the lead in "The Viking," which he is shooting around Bergen. I might consider it if the price is right. He, Tony Curtis, Janet Leigh and Ernest Borgnine have been clowning around in student caps and getting nice publicity, but it takes more than that to make a Viking. A henna rinse and I could play Eric the Red right now.

in a cafe atmosphere. The productions, to be performed by a permanent company, would be geared along repertory lines.

The plan calls for an admission tab of $3.50 per person, to include coffee, tea and light refreshments. The spot will also operate as a restaurant from 11 a.m. until 8 p.m. and as a cabaret from about 11.30 p.m. to 2 a.m. The post-performance switch to a nitery motif was recently employed at the Seventh Ave. South Theatre prior to its reverting to regular club activity as Lower Basin Street.

Posner and Main estimate their pre-production costs will total $21,645, with the cost of individual subsequent productions running $1,600. The weekly operating expense is figured at $2,328. Under the terms of their limited partnership agreement, they can get the project underway once $45,000 is raised.

The $40,000 tab represents Banner Productions' planned capitalization on a multiple program for the Carnegie Hall Playhouse. The group plans presenting four different productions a week, a straight play on a regular eight-performance sked, a weekend children's show, Friday and Saturday night variety bills and Monday evening staged readings of "works-in-progress."

The combined budget on the quartet of offerings is figured at $27,000 The production outfit incidentally, was organized by Arnold Perl, Howard Da Silva, Sanford Friedman and Myron Weinberg, the latter two also operating the theatre. The initial regular play slated to open next Sept. 16, will be "Tevya and His Daughters," adapted by Perl from stories by Sholom Aleichem. Da Silva will direct.

The operation contemplated for the Murray Hill area is the Seven Arts Center, to include two proscenium houses, a theatre-in-the-round and other activities. It will be operated by the Murray Hill Academy of Theatre & Art, a corporate firm headed by realtor Walter Cohen, Oscar Lerman and Martin Cohen. The latter two were formerly represented on Broadway as co-producers, with Alexander Carson of "The Vamp."

The remaining spot is a village nitery being converted into an off-Broadway theatre. Making the switch from acts to actors is Jimmy Kelly's, which has been taken over on a 10-year lease by Lee Paton and David Long. They plan a three-way operation, including theatre, restaurant and drama school.

The first production scheduled by Miss Paton and Long is a new version with songs of the English oldie, "Sweeney Todd, the Demon Barber of Fleet Street." It's slated to open Aug. 27 under the direction of Michael Casey, formerly Tyrone Guthrie's assistant at the London Old Vic.

Although not exactly in the multiple-project vein, but definitely off-beat, is Alexander H. Cohen's planned Nine O'Clock Theatre on the eastside. In addition to going in for unusual presentations, the producer also plans to serve customers after-dinner coffee and cuffo drinks during intermission.

OBITUARIES

SACHA GUITRY

Sacha Guitry, 72, French playwright-actor, died July 24 in Paris after a long illness. Actor, author, producer and humorist, he was one of the leading French legit-film figures, and the son of the late Lucien Guitry, a leading French actor.

Author of 115 plays, Guitry wrote the dialog and scenarios for 29 films as well as several books. He made his debut when he was 5 years old in a pantomime, written by his father and the Russian actor Davidoff. He performed this before Czar Alexander III. At 16, he wrote a one-act play. This first work, called "Le Page," was turned into a comic opera.

After several unsuccessful attempts at acting, Guitry again began to write. In 1905 came his first success, "Nono," a comedy in which he made his first London appearance via a 1920 revival. Others include "Beranger," "Je T'Aime," "Mon Pere Avait Raison," "Tel Pere," "Tel Fils" and "Un Miracle." In 1927 he appeared in New York in a musical play, "Mozart," with his first wife, Yvonne Printemps, in the title role. They did it first in Paris.

Turning to films in 1935, he produced "Pearls of the Crown," "Story of a Cheat," "Champs Elysees" and "Nine Bachelors." Guitry often chose history as the basis for his film material, and early this year brought out "A Royal Affair in Versailles," in which he played Louis XIV. Among other lives he portrayed were those of Pasteur, de la Fontaine, Moliere, Napoleon, Louis XI, Richelieu, Franklin, Francois I and Talleyrand.

Suspected of sympathies with the enemy during the occupation of France in World War II, Guitry was arrested without warrant at the liberation and imprisoned for two months before being cleared of all charges against him. He told of his wartime experiences in two books, "Quatre Ans d'Occupation" and "Soixante Jours de Prison."

tic market is a blockbuster. "80 Days" and "Commandments," for all their loot, have not even shifted into high in exhibition.

"Seven Wonders" has built-in tricky economics because of the unique manner of marketing—theatres taken on lease and equipped with the required three projectors and treble-panel screen. But these are more or less the mechanics; the fact is that the public is still buying it at the continuing tall tariff. It's in its 67th week at the Warner Theatre, New York, at a $3.50 top and commensurate money-making runs have been established around the country. The weekly gross at the Warner continues at over $30,000.

Long Staying

Part of the sell for these productions is the sell itself. A picture takes on an immediate aura of bigness when it goes two or three a day at advanced scales. And the longer the run the deeper the publicity penetration. "In Gotham, "Commandments" goes into its 37th week tomorrow (Thurs.) and "80 Days" is in its 41st.

It seems a cinch that either of these two could have brought in heavy money at a faster clip via fullscale national release in somewhat of the standard manner. But in view of the long-haul potential, no one's doubting the wisdom of the roadshow policy.

Leading to another factor. There's some Monday morning quarterbacking around town (N.Y.) that "Pride and Passion," which Stanley Kramer made as a United Artists release, might have fared even better via the two-a-day. It's big now and whether it could have been bigger can only be a matter of guesswork.

But producers of the future epics doubtless are to be influenced by the b.o. behavior of the roadshow policy as it now obtains (with such upbeat results) with "Seven Wonders," "Commandments" and "Eighty Days."

version of "Life With Father" must await a suggested treatment from Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse, authors of the original play.

He and composer Rodgers are not considering the idea of doing a show for toll-television, Hammerstein revealed. It poses far too many payoff problems as the moment, he explained. "They talk about making $1,000,000 in one night," he commented, "but that's the last thing you'd want to do.

"What you want is to spread any $1,000,000 payoff over a period of time—otherwise you don't keep any of it. Besides, there's the problem of what to do about the actors. They might lose a year's pay for the sake of a one-night stand."

Washed-Out Tales

aware neither film deals with a topical subject, and said he never suggested all pix should be topical. "I was merely trying to point out a direction for picture makers that I feel has been unfortunately neglected of late, a direction that writers, on their own, might attempt to explore more often with profitable results.

"It seems to me that too many screenwriters lack the courage to go out and develop an original piece of material on their own; they are nearly all looking for an idea to be thrown in their laps and the guaranty of a weekly salary; yet every good novel and play is the result of a writer's faith in an idea and his lonely effort to bring it to fruitation.

"In bringing this up I do not mean to insult the writers, who have made enormous contributions to the motion picture industry; I simply hope to stimulate thinking along unexplored areas. My criticism is a plea for the kind of material the industry needs so desperately at the present time. I am positive our writers have it in them if they'll accept the creative challenge the contemporary scene offers. It requires courage, and a lot of 'blood, sweat and tears' must be poured into any attempt."
